Then Mrs. Spurgeon tells that she bethought herself of a hoard of half-crowns which at different times she had heestlessly placed in a different times she had heestlessly placed in a drawer in her bedroom. She ran and brought them, and it was found that the total amount drawer in her bedroom. She ran and brought them, and it was found that the total amount would just suffice to print a hundred copies of the "Lectures." It was with regret, Mrs. Spurgeon confesses, that she parted with her treasures, but they were forgotten when the pleasure came of sending the books to those most in need of them. This was the beginning of the "Book Fund" which in nine years enabled Mrs. Spurgeon to send 71,000 volumes of sermons, scriptural history and theological teaching to necessitous preachers of every denomination in nearly all parts of the world. In the last seven years the number has been almost as large, and the annual income of the "Fund" has nearly reached ten thousand dollars. The amount of work that its personal superintendence imposes upon a woman who is often an invalid can be easily understood. All applications for books are sent direct to Mrs. Spurgeon, and her foreign mail is therefore larger than that which comes to any other woman in London.

When her husband is addressing his immense congregation of 5,000 people, or when he stands before his 2,000 Sunday-school scholars—to whom Mrs. Spurgeon occasionally addresses a few words herself—her pride in her husband's character is no less pronounced. If you go to the Tabernacle at Newington addresses a few words herself—her pride in her husband's character is no less pronounced. If you go to the Tabernacle at Newington Butts any Sunday morning when Mr. Spur-geon is in the pulpit, you will see her, the sole occupant of a pew, while every other is filled, listening with mpt attention to the words falling from his lips. The well-rounded face, on which physical suffering has scarcely left a mark, and to which a mass of dark hair oftinger oddly arranged gives a rather quaint left a mark, and to which a mass of dark hair offtimes oddly arranged gives a rather quaint and old-fashioned appearance, is aglow with animation, and the bright, eager eyes eloquently respond to every thought of the speaker. And the preacher reciprocates this devotion with equal intensity. In 1866, Mr. Spurgeon when on a visit to Yorkshire, inscribed to his absent wife a poem on "Wedded Lore," of which the following verse may be given—for the sentiment, if not for the poetry:

"Beyond and above wedlock's the Our union to Christ we feel; Uniting bonds which were made on high Shall hold us when earth shall reef,"

Mrs. Spurgeon has had three children—twin Mrs. Spurgeon has had three children—twin sons and a daughter. The twins were born early in her married life and it was her hardest affliction that owing to her ill health she could not fully give them a mother's care. Charles and Thomas spent their boyhood at Camden House School, Brighton, which they left when eighteen years old, the one to enter an office in London, the other to pursue the occupation of an engraver. Neither Charles nor Thomas felt prepared to study for the ministry, and Mrs. Spurgeon was at one with her husband in thinking it unwise to press them in the Mrs. Spurgeon was at one with her husband in thinking it unwise to press them in the matter. After a voyage to Australia for the benefit of his health, however, Thomas re-solved, to his mother's delight, to give up business, and adopt the church. The English climate was dangerous in its severity to his life, and he necepted a pastorate at Auckland, New Zealand. Charles soon followed his twin brother's example by studying for several years in the Pastors' College, which their father had established, and accepted a call at Greenwich, quite "near house," as Mrs. Spur-

Greenwich, quite "near house," as Mrs. Spur-geon no doubt joyfully reflected.

Apart from her intense piety and great energy, Mrs. Spurgeon is a woman of some accomplishments. She has something of the poet's faculty, and although very rarely rend-ing any work of fiction, has told her friends innumerable little anecdotes indicating the brightness of her imagination. She will relate, for instance, how walking one day with her husband in their grounds at Norwood, they came across a skylark's nest in the thick grass, much to their delight. Next day she went to the field to again look at the bird and its tiny eggs. What was her distress to find went to the field to again look at the bird and its tiny eggs. What was her distress to find that the cows had been let loose into the field. "Sarely," she thought, "the little nest will be trampled upon and destroy the young." Approaching the spot with trepidation, Mrs. Spurgeon was overjoyed to find that the test was unburt; the cows had caten the grass all around, but as if with some divine instinct had left this spot unburched. Upon such an incident Mrs. Spurgeon would have a sermon as powerful in its way as those of her husband's. Then in her reports of the "Book Fund," in miscellaneous contributions to the "Sword and Trowel," Mrs. Spurgeon has shown some literary gift, scarcely less marked. shown some literary gift, scarcely less marked than the homely taste, the modest art with which she has made the inside of Westwood as heautiful as its outside, and its surroundings as beautiful as to all ber bushand's adherents appears the character of its mistress.

THE LOST STAR BY SAMUEL ABBOTT

LITTLE star, a single spark, A Had lost his way among the clouds,
And, weeping, shed his tiny light
Adown the mist of rainy shrouds.
He saw no pathway in the dark;
He turned to left, he turned to right,
Along the highway of the night, Along the highway of the night.

gentle wind, from off the sea Came whispering up the distant vales, And told a story to the rain. The vapors spread their humid sails, And proudly traveled to the lea. Glad little star, with might and main He joins his glittering host again.

IV.—HORACE GREELEY'S DAUGHTER

BY FRANCES M. SMITH

ABRIELLE Greeley Clen-denin, wife of the Rev. Frank M. Glendenin, and daughter of Horace Gree-ley, was born in New York City, but her childhood days were spent at Chap-paqua, on the farm which was so dear to her father.

pagan, on the farm which was so dear to her father, "Mother's land," as he called it, because Mrs. Greeley particularly loved the place. When a mere slip of a girl, Gubrielle was sent away to boarding-school, and it was only during the past right or nine years that she made her home at Chappaqua.

MRS. CLENDENIN

Until her marriage last April, when she re-moved to her husband's parish, she was the "Lady Bountiful" of Chappaqua, her many and continuous kindly deeds proving her just right to such a title. The motto of her life seems to be, "I shall not pass this way again; any good, therefore, that I can do, let me do it at one."

For this life of devotion to others she gave up a social one of much brilliancy. Perhaps no girl in America ever had a better claim to social recognition, both at home and abroad, social recognition, both at home and abroad, than Gabrielle Greeley. She was the belle for two seasons in London.

To go back to her school days. With her sister Ida she was first sent to the Convent of the Sacred Heart at Manhattanville. After a time her father was quite desirous that she should return home and attend the Quaker Institute at Chappaqua. "It is my wish, my dear," he wrote to her, "that you come home and graduate from our good Quaker school; if you will, you shall have a little pony to ride to and from the Institute." Gabrielle, however, had been forming alons of her own reever, had been forming plans of her own re-garding a new school. She had heard of one garding a new school. She had beard of one —St. Gabriel's. The name appealed to her fancy, and she begged her father to send her there. So, hand in hand, dear Papa and I there. "So, hand in hand, dear Papa and I called at St. Gabriel's to make inquiries." Finding St. Mary's School in New York City was under the management of the same sisterhood, she entered there as a pupil and re-mained until slee graduated,

As a schoolgirl she asked awkward ques-tions, and was not to be put off with commonplace solutions of difficulties. She wanted things to hang together, and liked to know how if this were true, that could be true also. Of her early struggles with orthography she She wanted tells some amusing stories. For instance, in writing to a friend whom she wished to liken to a celestial being with wings, she wound up her letter with the rather startling an-nouncement, "You are a perfect angle." Then before she had successfully grappled with the total depravity inherent in that apparently innocent word—cotillion—she was called upon at a little dance to write the name on a card. She afterward confessed to a friend that she put an "a" instead of an "o" in the last syllable, but being somewhat in doubt about it "I scrummaged it."

*In this series of pen-particula of "Clover Daughters of Clover Men," commenced in the November, 1881, Journal, the following, each accompanied with per-ical, have been printed:

January 1802

RACHEL SHEEMS "WINNE" DAVI ETHEL INGALLS Any of those back numbers can be hadnt 30 cents each by writing to the Juruscat.

After finishing school she traveled abroad with her sister, and upon her return to America she settled at Chappaqua. Her life here seemed rather a lonely one, although she always said she was too busy to be lonely. Her days were spent for others, with no thought of self. Of her income she used personally only what was absolutely required for her needs. She dressed with such Quaker simplicity that an old neighbor, whose attire was also usually of the plainest, once said to her, with his broad, good-natured drawit." Wa'll, Miss Greeley, anyone to see you and me wouldn't think we were worth a cent."

With her faithful collic for companion she took long walks about the country, thinking nothing of walking five or six miles a day. In sun, rain, or snow she walked from her home to the church at Pleasantville—a distance of about two miles—twice every Sunday, collecting, as she passed from house to house, the children of the neighborhood to take with her.

In the summer the "grove meetings," as her.

In the summer the "grove meetings," as they were called, were quite a feature at Chappaqua, beginning with very few and ending with a goodly number regularly. These meetings were held every Sunday afternoon in the pine grove—a beautiful place on her farm, with rows of pine trees which Mr. Greeley himself set out. These meetings were not held especially for religious instruction, but for entertainment and possibly to keep some of the young people out of mischief. They were resorted to, however, by old as well as young. A temperance club composed of the women from the village and neighborhood was one of the enterprises of which she was the leading spirit.

spirit.

About two years ago the cottage she was occupying at Chappaqua was destroyed by fire. This was the second house on her property which had met a similar fate. A few years previously her "house in the woods," as it was called, was also burned. With this latter house, however, Mrs. Clendenin had few associations beyond a three-months' sojourn in it, when she and her mother were there entirely alone. "Oh, solitude, how sweet are thy charms," was a remark she often overheard from her mother, and one which she echoed plaintively.

Last year, after the fire, she moved into her farmer's house, which happened to be vacant at the time. She went courageously to work to make an abiding place of this rather uncompromising structure, and soon her taste and refinement wrought wonders.

and refinement wrought wonders.

Here she lived with her cousin, their family consisting of a maid, one cat—Lord Edward by name—and a goodly retinue of dogs. Of the latter, one, Prince, was more usually styled the "Prince of Darkness," a title called forth by his unprepossessing appearance and somewhat hasty temper. The Prince of Darkness was a very useful, if not ornamental, member of the family, however, as the house stond what hasty temper. The Prince of Darkness was a very useful, if not ornamental, member of the family, however, as the house stood quite by itself, and he was needed for protection. War, Pestilence and Famine were the "pet" names for her other dogs. It was while living in this modest home "in an obscurity of gentle thoughts and well-doing," that the Rev. Frank M. Cleudenin found Miss Greeley, and here it was that he won her. Her many friends at Chappaqua found it hard to part with her, but they are consoled somewhat by the promise that Mr. and Mrs. Cleudenin are to spend their vacations at the "stone tarm." This stone barn, completed by Horace Greeley just before his death, is now being changed into a model country house.

In her new home at Westchester, New York, Mrs, Gendenin finds her sphere of usefulness somewhat enlarged, as her husband is rector of the ancient parish of "the Episcopal clurch of Saint Peter," a parish which has any number of guilds and organizations for charitable work, the problem to meet of holding in one beautiful church all classes and conditions of wealth and poverty, and the great city near it fast coming to its boundaries.

While Mrs. Clendeuin enjoys luncheons and disnor parties and all social functions, she is also perfectly happy and satisfied in the quieter duties of her home life. She is found of reading, although she seldom reads a newspaper, and says that she never takes up a book for more than an hour at a time. Kingsley, James and Thackeray are her favoritie novellsts. There is a tradition that she learned to read in the works of Thackeray, spelling out the words of "Henry Exmond." Scott, Keble, Tennyson and Robert Browning are her especial favorites among the poets, and Dr. Neale and Baring-Gould among religious westers. "Loke Instances" is her as the rest terms. are her especial favorites among the poets, and Dr. Neale and Baring-Gould among religious writers, "John Inglesant" is her pet charac-Her instes are artistic and cultured. She has some charming sketches—her own work— notably an etching on wood of Saint Elimbeth of Hungary, who, by the way, is her favorite character in history. Of the great artists she prefers the works of Fra Angelico, Corregio and Andrea del Sarto.

Mrs. Cleudenin is a woman of medium beight; she has dark-brown bair, eyes which it is bard to tell just what color they are, for at times they seem hazel, and at other moments black as jet, then in a tender mood they look a melting brown. The mouth is they look a melting brown. The mouth is firm and sweet, and the poise of the head and neck that in which an artist would delight. She usually has a brilliant color. Not only is Mrs. Clendenin a remarkably handsome woman, but she is possessed, in addition, of a charm of manner which attracts all who may meet her, so full is it of cordial warmth and graceful vivacity. She is delightful in con-versation, and, what is often more charming, a sympathetic listener, for having the tender heart of her father, she feels with the great Roman that "nothing human can be alien to pertrait, have been printed:

*In this series of pen-portraits of "Unknown Wives of Well-Known Mes." commenced in the January, 1801, Journals, the following, each accompanied with pertrait, have been printed:

Mass. Thomas A. Eddson
Mass. P. T. Barnus
Mass. T. Barnus
Mass. T. De West Talmade
Mass. T. De West Talmade
Mass. The West Talmade
Mass. Charlecery M. Defew
Lady Macdenald
Mass. John Charlecery Harris
Lady Texnysos
Mass. Willa Carleton
Mass. Willa Carleton
Mass. Willa Carleton
Mass. Willa Carleton
Mass. Wallad McKinlay
Mass. Max O'Rell
The Pernuss Bomanic
Mass. John Wanarah
Mass. Lecand Strangon
Any of these back numbers can January February
March
Auril
May June
July August
Seplember
Oxober
November
January
February

Any of these back numbers can be had at 10 couts each by writing to the Journal.

Mr. Beecher As I Knew Him

By Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher

IN NINE PAPERS

FIFTH PAPER

R. BEECHER'S coming to Brooklyn was, as I said was, as I said of the close of my last article, fraught with perplexities. A perfect flood of warnings and criticisms came to him before

came to him before his first sermon. It was right, he was told, for a clergyman to fight evil, but he should fight more prudently —contine laimself to generalities, and not venture on particulars. There were evils that he ought not to meddle with. The pulpit was no place for politics. He would find New York would not tolerate liberties in the pulpit.
Boubtless all these carnines determined Mr.

Doubtless all these warnings determined Mr. Beecher more than night else that the people of his new church should fully understand before he was installed what course he was likely to pursue. He told me that if Plymouth Church decided to instal him, it would do so with its eyes wide open.

HIS FIRST BROOKLYN SERMON

HIS FIRST BROOKLYN SERMON

If was upon the evening of Sanday, October 10th, 1847. He sat quietly on the puipit while the choir was singing. His eyes scanned the concourse of people before him, but it was the look of confidence that I saw. Knowing as I did something of what he intended to say, I could not but think, "Will these people accept the bold course he has marked out for his work from one so young looking?" For his ten years of labor at the West had not rubbed the youth from his face. I noticed the almost contemptions looks of the strangers present as they watched his face. As he rose to read the Scriptures a death-like sileace pervaled the great charch. But not a tremor was visible in the voice that spoke. With that mellow voice which the Brooklyn public learned so well to know, he read the lesson of the evening as if he were before his Lawrenceburg audience. Then as he uttered the first low sentence of his prayer, as his beart rose heavenward, the effect of the preacher became visible on his congregation, and be brought his hearers chose to the mercy-seat. All was changed. An almost breathless solemnity pervaded the church, and tears were on many faces. I never heard him pray with such expressness.

The youthful look vanished and did not re-pray with such carnestness.

The youthful look vanished and did not repray with such carnestness.

The youthful look vanished and did not return as, in his sermon, he plainly, and with great solemnity, showed his hearers the course duty called him to pursue. As he said of these remarks years after: "I lifted up the banner and blew the trumpet in the application of Christianity to intemperance, to slavery, and all other great national sins. I said to those present, "If I remain here and you come to this church, it must, at the common cement, be distinctly understood that I wear no fetters, that I will be bound by no precedent, and that I will preach the Gospel as I apprehend it, whether men will hear or whether they will forbear, and I will apply it sharply and strongly to the overthrow of every evil, and to the upbuilding of all that is good."

After the close of the sermon many came to counsel Mr. Beecher. They were actuated by kindness to him and anxiety for the church. Such bold, plain speaking they did not understand. They had never been used to it. It would overthrow this young church.

"Don't ally yourself to unpopular men or unpopular causes," they told him. "There is no call for it. You will only injure yourself and break up this claurch."

After preaching a mouth in Plymouth church, he was installed as paster on Novem-

After preaching a month in Plymouth church, he was installed as paster on November 11th, 1817.

But I have never forgotten that first Sabbath erening of Henry Ward Beecher in Brooklyn.

OUR FIRST YEAR IN THE EAST

WE were destined to have our first year in WE were destined to have our first year in Brooklyn result in being far from a cheerful one. During the installation services of Mr. Beecher I had remained at home to care for a Buston friend who had come on for the occasion and had been taken ill. Our little Katie had not been well, and I asked the doctor to look at her while he was in the house. He partly dispelled my fears, but when Mr. Beecher returned from his installation I tob! him I was not easy about little Katie. I had hardly finished speaking when the child went into convulsions, and after six days of illness God took her to join little fleargie who left us two years before. It was but a little time after this affliction that our son fell from the front stoop into the area out a lette time after this affection that our sou fell from the front stoop into the area below, and before all danger was passed with inm Mr. Beecher was laid up with his first attack of quinzy and did not preach for two or three weeks. Mr. Beecher had hardly gotten well before our little boy broke his arm, and as a result of this accident he became. Ill with pleurisy. Then both of our children contracted whooping-cough, and so weeks and months passed with constant sickness in the family. The doctor's carriage seemed always before the door. And so passed our first two years—trying in themselves, yet what opportunities they presented to bear witness to Mr. Beecher's character!

COLUMN TO SERVICE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY O

HIS HOME LIFE AMID AFFLICTIONS

MR. BEECHER'S removal from the West MR. BEECHER'S removal from the West to Brooklyn had nade no change in his home life and character. But never was his uniform gentleness and patience with the sick, and singular efficiency, more noticeable. He had left the West and come to this large city to take charge of a church, small at first, but with such toundation elements as usually insures rapid growth and success. He had made this change solely on account of his family's health, fully recognizing how heavy and responsible must be the work he had accepted, but with the prospect, as he supposed, of less auxiety to his family, he entered upon it full of zeal and courage. Instead of release from the former anxiety, however, he found himself more beavily taxed than ever before. In a comparatively strange land, with these increasing discomforts and anxieties, many men—if I mistake not—and particularly professional men, would have felt so homeless and discouraged as to be occasionally impatient and irritable. But he never was. Attending to all church duties faithfully, every spare moment was given to his family, relieving me in every possible way, ready even to take his turn in the night-watchings—which in those months were very frequent—if I would have permitted it. But knowing his ing me in every possible way, ready even to take his turn in the night-watchings—which in those months were very frequent—if I would have permitted it. But knowing his sleep must not be given up if he would keep a clear head for his own special work, unless when absolute danger threatened, it was never interrupted by watching.

Ever attentive, Mr. Beecher's presence in a sick-room filled it with sunshine and hopefulness. He never entered with a sad look, and even the children felt their father's influence the moment he appeared. Of course, in later years, through the rapid growth of his church and the increasing demands of the public on his time, his family were naturally obliged to yield up much of the care and attention they had always been accustomed to, and which, with many other choice blessings, a public man's family are, after a time, obliged to forego. But in Mr. Beecher's case his interest in his children was never so far intermitted that they did not always know that in his heart they were held as closely as ever.

Even If there had been no sickness, the change from our Western home life to that which grew up about us in Brooklyn, from greatly multiplied duties, could not full to bring some homesick hours to those who, for ten years, had lived much more closely together than is usual. Was it strange that the easy, daily communication between that little kitchen table and the study table should, at times, be sadly missed by both? The food for thought and progress thus carried into the rougher work of the kitchen often bunished for thought and progress thus carried into the for thought and progress thus carried into the rougher work of the kitchen often banished all source of fatigue and controlled pain by the pleasure of knowing that we had the same subject between us in common.

THE FIRST HOME SEPARATION

A S in Indianapolis, we found it difficult for the first year to rent a house in Brooklyn, and Mr. Beecher was obliged to use a room in the church for a study. It may be difficult for some to fully understand what a trial this was to us. But when you recall the ten years' life that had passed, years when our work had always been done together, then put yourself in the same place and I think you will not say that the pain felt by us was nitogether childish.

Often in the early Brooklyn life, when after us was nitogether childish.

Often in the early Brooklyn life, when after breakfast and morning prayers Mr. Beccier left for the study in the church, it would be difficult to describe or explain the feeling of bereavement and loneliness I feit. It was impossible to reason away the sense of trouble or alienation between us. I had no lack of work up to the very limit of my strength, but it did not dispel this strange impression. It seemed to me a daily separation.

In an hour or two, perhaps, my husband.

In an hour or two, perhaps, my husband would return and instantly detect a look of What's the matter?" he would ask.

"Nothing, dear; just a little nonsense,"
"But what is it? I must know," he would but west is fer I muse know, he wanted persist.

"Well, I hardly know myself. It all seems strange—our life here. I know you will call me foolish, but when you have your study at the clurch we seem so separated. I half feel that we have quarreled."

With one of his real old-time, hearty laughs he would reply: "I imagine we are both foolish, then, for that's just the way I was feeling, and ran round to find out if we really had quarreled! I don't appear to know how to work without calling to you from that little kitchen, now and then. It will take us some time to get accustomed to this new way of thinking and working separately, and it is not pleasant to think of. But we must conquer this childishness—and we will, I know. Yet, I am not quite sure if it is childishness. Our lives and work have been so close together this childishness—and we will, I know. Yet, I am not quite sure if it is childishness. Our lives and work have been so close together—and they always shall be. But though our new duties here must compel some change, they will never change our trust and confidence in each other."

How faithfully he fulfilled that promise during the remainder of his life—God knows! The few last years of his life drew us more closely together than ever—for "Age upon the heart can never creep."

heart can never creep.

ENTERING UPON HIS PUBLIC CAREER

A S the church grew in strength under Mr.
Beecher's ministration, his labors naturally increased, and as he became more and more a public man his family saw less and less of him. Pressing calls came from every side. The anti-slavery cause was rapidly coming to the front, and Mr. Beecher entered into the work, giving all his strength, undisturbed by opposition, abuse, or reviling. But his labors in that cause, his work during the war, are well known, and as a part of his public life have all been discussed, told and re-told, and need no repetition. However, in all he did connected with slavery, or the war, he was brought into closer companionship S the church grew in strength under Mr. he was brought into closer companionship with his family than at any time before in Brooklyn. He had always been in the habit of talking freely at home on all topics of interof talking freely at home on all topics of interset that were gathered from the papers, or in his work outside. But on these two topics he led us to think and work with him, as far as possible, more truly than ever before. But privacy of home life had consed to be, Mr.
Beecher was becoming one of the famous men of his day, and his family knew it best. We were never alone with him. Callers were innumerable, and reporters seemed to be a part of our household. Every one of his spare moments was occupied. We rarely sat down to table by ourselves. Some one would come in and Mr. Beecher would say, "Come and lunch with us," or "Dine with me and tell me your errand over the table; I have no other time I can give you." And so we saw but little of him by ourselves.

HIS FAVORITE TWIN BOYS

MR. BEECHER'S fondness for children was remarkable and well known, and M R. BERGHER'S followes for chimical was remarkable and well known, and when, in 1852, our bone was filled with jor by the birth of twin boys, how happy was their father none can imagine. His "riches," as he called them, were exhibited to every one who called when he was in, and for nearly two years home was made doubly precious by their presence. Was our love tending toward idolatry? On the 4th of July, 1853, our little ones—always so perfectly well—were taken from us. This, the most severe sornw of our lives, left a shade of sadness with their father never seen before, and never quite obliterated. He would not talk of or iscention them at home or elsewhere, and seeing the effect on him their names were never spoken in his presence, or, if anyone calling referred to them, he quickly left the room. Except on some occasions, in the room. Except on some occasions, in the pulpit, when the fervor of his utterances in earnest appeal took him quite out of his own individual troubles, he did not allude to them for years. About three years after this great sorrow Mr. Beecher was absent for some days, sorrow Mr. Beecher was absent for some days, and I had the photographs of Alfred and Arther pat into one frame. Hoping when be came back it might induce him to speak of our babies, I put the frame on the burean in our room. On his return he ran up stairs like a boy to need me. As he cutered the room these pictures were the first things he saw. Shall I ever forget the agony in his face—but a moment before so bright and glad for his home-coming? He turned and left the room instantly, and I put the photographs away.

Six or eight years before he went up to join our children above, Mr. Beecher came in one evening, when it strangely happened that there was no one about but myself, and drawing me to him said, "E——how long is it since our habies left us?"

"Twenty-eight years," I replied.

"And how long since our first little boy?"
I told him.

"And Georgie and Vatic?"

I told him.

And Georgie and Katie?"

"And Georgie and Katie?"
A moment's silence after being told, then be said: "What a flock we should have had about us if God had spared them. But, 'He doeth all things well,' though when the loss is so heavy it may be long before we become reconciled to it." Another pause, then:

"You may hang their pictures here if you wish it, dear."

Then a few tender words, never formatter.

ish it, ocar.

Then a few tender words, never forgotten,

the standard of forgoniet walk." he said→

Then a few tender words, never forgotten, and he went out "for a quiet walk," he said—a walk which I well knew would bring him very near to his Moster. I hang the photographs by the side of his father's bust, where they remained while their father was with us. After that Mr. Beecher would speak of "the twins" and "our babies" as he always called them. This change was a great comfort to me, but only once he alluded to what be had been suffering, saying: "It was not wise for me to shrink as I have done at God's dealings. He knew that through it I should be letter prepared to aid those in distress, and speak words of sympathy and comfort to the broken-bearted.

FARMING AND LOVE OF CROOUET

THE next year Mr. Beecher rented a place in the country for the summer, and sent us all off early, that his sore might learn to work as well as play. He came to us as often as he could before his vacation, and with him as a co-worker and companion the plan proved pleasant as well as beneficial. Under proved pleasant as well as beneficial. Under his supervision his young sons did well with the planting, boring, weeding, and care of the horses and cows, and when his vacution came they could show a good garden, well cared for, and in those six happy weeks, they found with their work they could also secure plenty of time for any amusement, in which be was of time for any amusement, in which he was always ready to join them, playing croquet, nutting, fishing, etc. Of all out-door games there was none which Mr. Beecher more thoroughly enjoyed than a good game of croquet, for in it we were all expected to join. He was an expert player, having the faculty of gauging the line which the ball should take with singular accuracy. The out-door exercise and excitement of the game, and the amusement he invariably found in this united competition of skill, with his inexhaustible store of wit and deallery music the concent-wound. wit and drollery, made the croquet-ground a favorine resort.

LOOKING FOR A COUNTRY PLACE

N 1854 Mr. Beecher bought a beautiful farm In Lenox, Massachusetts. It was in per-fect accord with his taster, and he looked upon Lin Lenox, Massachusetts. It was in perfect accord with his taster, and he looked upon it as a permanent summer home for us all.
But fond as he was of it, he soon found that it was too far from Brooklyn, and he could only be with us during his vacation. He keenly felt the deprivation of his children while in the city during the early summer. Then we received, while both Mr. Beecher and I were in Brooklyn one day, a dispatch, saying that our little Herbert was dying. It was Saturday, and Mr. Beecher was to preach the following day, and he must remain. I repaired to Lenox immediately and being unable to communicate with the anxious father in the city on Sunday, he knew nothing of his child's condition until he arrived in Lenox Monday night. Mr. Beecher decided to self the place after this, feeling he could never again have his family so far away, and the following spring a place in Mattawan, near Fishkill, overlooking the Hudson, was rented. Here we were more often together, and Mr. Beecher enjoyed the place greatly. But he could not be induced to bur it his Lancy avactions. we were more often together, and Mr. Beecher enjoyed the place greatly. But he could not be induced to buy it, his Lenox experience laving evidently made him more cautious about purchasing an out-of-town place too bastily. Flowers grew in abundance, we had all the inxuries of a fine regetable garden, and had, as a frequent host, the head of a family whose greatest happiness consisted in making happy those around him.

MR. BEECHER NOT A LARGE EATER

IT may be apropose to say just here, in response to many inquirles which have reached me, that it is not true, as has often been stated, that Mr. Beecher was a very hearty eater. If the food was agreeable, be showed his full appreciation of it, and sometimes expressed his ideas of its excellence; but the exertise the contributions. the quantity taken was by no means large as compared with the usual appetite of an ordi-compared with the usual appetite of an ordi-narily healthy man.

When not so deeply interested in conversa-tion as to neglect his food, he ate—as he did ev-erything else—with vigor and evident enjoy-ment. That was, no doubt, one cause of the impression that he was a large enter. But, however much he might relish any article of food, if he found it made his head heavy, or in any degree impeded his work, he scrupa-lously avoided using it; except, perhaps, dur-ing vacations, or when traveling, and not even then would he indulge frequently, and never to any injurious excess.

to any injurious excess.

Another reason, and probably the chief, was the carnestness with which he sometimes talked about food and its preparation. He well understood the difference between good and bad cooking, the reasons for that difference, the materials best suited to insure success, and, occasionally at the table and at home, amused himself by expressing his opinion about it. Of course, his actual experience in this branch of domestic economy was not very great; but he sometimes boasted that he could broil a steak as well, and make as good coffee as any one; and the boast was not without good foundation. That was, however, about the extent of his cooking operations. to any injurious excess

HIS FONDNESS FOR HORSES

MR. BEECHER was extremely fond of afford it he bought only the best. As his family all had very decided tastes in the same direction, nothing gave him greater pleasure than to include them in the full enjoyment of it, either by long rides with usall, or sending the children off with young friends who were very happy to share in these country pleasures, and who never had cause to doubt a hearty welcome from the head of the family. Mr. Beecher was skillful-and fearless in managing his spirited horses, but never reckless. Both at the West, and after we came North, we have experienced many startling adventures, and some which might be termed hair-breadth escapes, but I never knew him to lose his own self-control or the control of his horses, and only once knew him to acknowledge he was frigatened.

only once knew him to acknowledge he was frightened.

It was while we were in Lenox. We had a large, grey horse, and started for a fine ride, which at the close was to take us through Lee and back to Lenox. There was a milroad track—just as we entered the town—which run through a ravine between two sleep, rocky cliffs, so high as to slut out the sight of the curs, and with the noise of teams in that busy little village, almost to prevent hearing them. For that reason it was most decidedly important that the which should he below. We For that reason it was most decidedly impor-tant that the whistle should be blown. We rode into the village, did our errands at the store, and then started to cross the track, but listened a moment to learn if the train was near. We heard no sound, no whistle was blown, and we went on; but just as the horse's feet almost touched the rail the train rushed round that hidden curve and was directly upon no. The horse regret to a other to the upon us. The horse reared up so close to the cars that had be put down his force feet they would have dashed through the windows. So he stood till the last car had passed, then fell to the ground as if in a dead faint. The perspiration rained off the poor beast until the parts are the property of the poor beast until the parts are the property of the poor beast until the parts are the property of the poor beast until the parts are the property of the poor beast until the parts are the property of the poor beast until the parts are the property of the poor beast until the parts are the property of the property beat the property of the property beat the property of the property o earth around him was wef as if a shower had passed over. Many men sprang forward to help, but turning toward me, Mr. Beecher saw I was near fainting. I had been ill and was very wenk. He came to use immediately with a glass of water. I told him I was ashamed of such weakness—but that I was preatly frightened.

"Frightened!" he replied. "Why, I was never so frightened in my life."

"Hough," muttered one of the men helping as. "If you were frightened you have a mighty coal way of showing it."

And I thought so, too. earth around him was wet as if a shower had

[ Mrs. Beecher's sixth paper on " Mr. Beecher As I Knew Him" will be published in the April

Digitized by Google

JOURNAL.]

ARTISTIC IDEAS IN RIBBON EMBROIDERY

[AS TAUGHT AT THE NEW YORK SOCIETY OF DECORATIVE ART]

STITCHES IN RIBBON EMBROIDERY (No. 1)

By Maude Haywood

HE New York Society of Decorative Art enjoys the honor of being the originator in this country of a movement which has since proved to be of such great ser-vice to women by form-ing a market for the work distinctively theirs, and, in this way, providing hundreds with a means of livelihood, and solving for many the difficult question of how to earn money without leaving their homes

how to earn money with and going into the world. On the one hand women have been trained and their natural ability educated to enable them to produce work of a high order of ex-cellence; and, on the other, a demand cre-ated for this work, whereas formerly other, a demand created for this work, whereas formerly artistic embroideries sold here had been almost all imported from Europe. The idea was conceived and the impulse given to the enterprise through the display of foreign needlework at the exhibition of 1876. The scheme was started by several prominent New York ladies early in 1877, with the sole object of helping their own sex, being themselves convinced of the capability of American women—to whom the necessary aid and instruction should be given—of producing as artistic and well-executed embroideries as any that could be shown by modern Europe. Of course, capital was necessary to start such a society, and this their generosity supplied. The result proved all they could wish. From the outset they were prosperous and successful, and, following in their footsteps, similar societies sprang up all over the country, formed after the model of that in New societies sprang up all over the cou-formed after the model of that in New York, although independently organized, and proving, indeed, a boon to all those deriving support from their existence. country,

THE plan pursued with contributors is to take their work, provided it comes up to the required standard of excellence, and to sell it for them on a ten per cent, commission; to criticise their productions, to make suggestions with a productions, to make suggestions with a view to improvement, to give them les-sons if necessary, and, above all, to en-eournge them to be original, and to make their own designs. Some of those who are now in receipt of the largest incomes brought at first work utterly unsalable. In the barinning wary high prices were brought at first work utterly unsalable. In the beginning very high prices were obtained for all the goods, but of late years these have been necessarily somewhat reduced by competition, especially with the wholesale business houses, who were not slow to set up a rival trade. Connected with the Society, and forming part of its plan, art classes were originally held. These, after the novelty of them had passed, fell away considerably, and are now no longer held, although lessons are still given to any desiring them. In addition to outside contributors, there are work-rooms on the premises, where a few-pupils are taken to be taught free of charge; in some cases they are paid a small salary while learning.

AN ARTISTIC PANEL (No. 2)

RIBBON EMBROIDERY

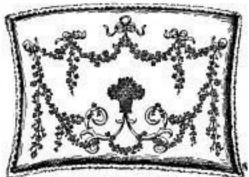

THE work which may be regarded as the specialty of this Society, and which is principally excented by their own salaried employés, is the ribbon embroidery. This is French in origin, all the materials and the models being imported from Paris. The heaviest kind of satin is used, and the design worked with narrow ribbon of delicate hues, some of it being shaded and parti-colored. The stems and a few of the timest leaves or flowers are embroidered with silk. The ribbon is all the same width, but is doubled over where it is necessary to make it narrower. Illustration No. 1 gives a good idea of some of a good idea of some of the principal stitches employed in repre-senting the flowers, foliage and ribbon, with also two of the leaf-borders used. The size of the drawing is about one-half of the original. The small panel shown in illustration No. 2, is executed upon a cream-colored ground, the tint which is employed for the ground, the tint which is employed for the majority of the work. It is mounted in a plain wooden frame, enameled white. Pale pink, yellow and blue with the green of the leaves, are the colors arincipally. colors principally used. The flowers are all single and the de-sign comparatively easy of execution. The portions worked in embroidery silks, besides the leaves and stems, are the basket, in shades of golden-brown, and the small white flowers, which are merely outlined in the drawing.

THE design for the oblong cushion (Illustra-L tion No. 3) is carried out in two separate ways. One is in colors on the cream satin, and the other, which is wooderfully artistic and effective, entirely in white ribbon on a gray-blue ground. Both are finished off with a thick slik fringe. Several other cushions are shown, silk fringe. Several other cusmons are shown, in all of which the designs are of small flowers and leaves variously arranged. In fact, this is the only style suitable for execution with the ribbon. Most of the pieces exhibited by the Society are copied from French originals, but once the style is thoroughly grasped to the original of the content of the style is the country of the style is the content of the style is the content of the style is the content of the style is the style in the style has, but once the style is the ordinary graspes it should be a very simple matter for an artist to adapt or create similar designs in an un-limited quantity. A large number of objects are decorated with this kind of embroidery. not only those of a more important kind, but also such things as photograph frames and needle or scissor-cases, so that the daintiest possible examples of this work may be ac-quired, even where one's means are small.

A DESIGN FOR AN OBLONG CUSHION (No. 3)

OTHER IDEAS IN RIBBON EMBROIDERY

O NE of the handsomest pieces of ribbon embroidery is a tablecloth, the design being sprays and baskets of flowers powdered all over it, with a double bor-der running round the edge, the outer one being of leaves only: the inner, of leaves, flowers and holds twisted and intertwined. The coloring is a little more positive than in some other cases, and it is finished off with rather a dark silk fringe. The lining is of white silk.

An order recently executed was for a series of panels for the parlor of a New York house, furnished in the Louis XVI style. One can hardly imagine anything more exquisitely delicate and artistic for the purpose; and, where money is no object, it is al-most to be wondered at that more of this work is not em-ployed for interior decora-tion particularly in the apart-ments treated entirely in the French style of the last cen-tury, so much in vogue now for pariors and houdoirs. Another use to which the ribbon embroidery might be put with advantage is for the adornment of handsome

A FINE EXAMPLE OF RIBBON-WORK

THE screen shown in illustration No. 4, is perhaps justly considered the finest ex-A perhaps justly considered the finest example of the ribbon-work. The design is very good in almost every particular, and extremely suitable in style. No labor has been spared in the execution. Quantities of double roses are introduced with very happy effect, and the general color scheme is most harmonious. In some cases the double flowers are represented by working the petals one over the other, but often the best and quickest method is to put a fine gathering backward and forward diagonally in the ribbon, which may be drawn up to the necessary extent, and with one stitch a num-extent, and with one stitch a num-ber of closely-folded petals may thus be sug-gested. For a good result, it is absolutely neces-sary that the work should be done with the ut-most care and neatness, the stitches being regular and even, and the least puckering or looseness equally avoided. The reason why such a close, heavy satin must be employed is that, otherwise, the material will pull away and show where the holes re punctured for the insertion of the ribbon. Any attempt to carry out this kind of work with inferior goods would inevitably result in failure and disap-pointment. When properly execu-ted, it is work that shows plainthat shows plainly its value in the richness of its effect, which it is impossible to imitate cheaply. A great deal more of this embroidery would doubtless be done if the materials were more widely procurable. Of course, it is open to anyone who wishes to import them from Paris, but at present the work has been almost exclusively confined to the Society we are speaking of.

CURIOUSLY enough, considering how much it is used, decorated table linen is chiefly conspicuous by its absence. There is very little of it to be seen, and none of any importance. A set of dollies (Illustration No. 5) with a border of flowers of which the restals form

5) with a border of flowers of which the petals form an irregularly scalloped edge, are embroidered on damask with white silk; a little light yellow is used for the centers of the blos-soms only, the stems being also worked in white. They are intended for use mond a polished number on. upon a polished mahogany table, where a table-cloth is not employed. There is nothing so suitable for nothing so saitable for table linen as white embroidery upon the white background, or, in some instances, with yellow delicately and judiciously introduced. Many use pieces embroidered in various colors, it is true; but they are not, it must be confessed, in such good taste, although delicate greens are employed upon the white linen with very artistic effect. If colors are employed, it is necessary that they should be made to harmonize with the china and flowers. made to harmonize with the china and flowers used with them, simplicity being studied and one general scheme running through the whole. Therefore, for those who cannot afford to have several sets of linen for various occasions, the white upon white is preferable from every point of view, and there is nothing which surpasses its purity and fair daintiness.

A SPECIMEN OF EMBROIDERY ON LINEN (No. 6)

EMBROIDERY ON LINEN

SOME of the most beautiful and best executed embroidery amongst the work contributed to the Society is certainly that done upon linen, filo-floss being the silk principally used. The most popular articles are apparently bureau-covers and five-o'clock tea cloths, and the designs are nearly all floral of a semi-conventional nature. One of the prettiest is that pictured in illustration No. 6. The flower are of role vellow and the leaves, stems ers are of pale yellow, and the leaves, stems and twisted lines in various soft shades of green. A line of green, embroidered in the ordinary stem or cording-stitch.

separates the border from the central pattern. Amongst the other pieces a very artistically arranged realistic rose design was noticed, the needlewoman herself having made the draw-ing for it, which she has also carried out in the most delicate and harmonious col-oring. Another rose juttern, less happily ren-dered, showed forcibly how much depends on the treatment of s subject.

Most of this work is embroidered solidly, being shaded in natural colors. In many instances, a great number of silks of gradating hues are used, and are blended almost imperceptibly with excellent skill and taste, the various tones being rendered with delicacy.

THE babies, as might be expected, give proof of their dominion over the fentinine heart by the proportion of space and attention allotted to their requirements.

The word dainty gives the best general description of the articles manufactured for the use of their small majesties. An ante-room, with show-cases, is entirely devoted to infantine apparel and appurtenances, and it appears that they command a ready and a constant sale. The prices do not seem much higher than asked in the stores, while the work is much finer and more carefully executed, and the materials are of the best. There are quantities the materials are of the best. There are quantities of cambric robes with hand-work yokes and trimmings, cloaks of various descriptions, caps, boods and sacques for older babies. These latter are made chiefly of fine white cashmere, some of them with a scalloped edge worked with buttonhole-stitch, some bordered or powdered with a tiny pattern such as those in illustrations Nos. 7 and 8, either in very pale blue or pink silk, the leaves in the little flower spray being made a light green.

The pillows for the little drawn-work or embroidered borders, and it appears that very many of them are purchased by women for their own was. Peause.

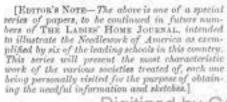

appears that very many of them are pur-chased by women for their own use. Presum-ably this is one of the latest fads. Carriage robes and white embroidered straps.

together with a number of odds and ends such as suchets, pincushions, safety-pin cases, flanas suchets, pincushions, safety-pin cases, finnel head-squares, and numerous other things too many to be all mentioned here, show evidences not only of skill but of the power of the infantsway over every true woman's imagination. Verily, it would seem that any mother who is unable herself to manufacture all the baby's outfit, would be glad to have the concetunity neverther.

the opportunity, neverth less, of providing the little one with home-made gar-

A LTHOUGH on this A occasion only em-broidery and needlework have been spoken of, it must not be imagined that this work is the sole production of the Society of Decorative Art though as a matter of Art, though, as a matter of fact, they do form the bulk of the contributions. There is a considerable amount of painted work exhibited as well, both of a decorative and pictorial character, and also some examples of wood carv-ing, all showing more or less artistic merit.

A FINE EXAMPLE OF RIBBON-

WORK (No. 4)

A FLOWER DOILY (No. 5)

THE AMERICAN GIRL WHO STUDIES ABROAD

By Varina Anne Davis

DAUGHTER OF JEFFERSON DAVIS

SECOND PAPER-Continued from the February LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

NY one who is familiar with foreign education will recognize that form of girl friend-ship which is called ezaltée in France, and schwirmerei in Germany-a condition of things which forms an integral part of the school-life of nearly school-life of nearly all continental girls. This diseased affectionateness takes the form of a species of adulation, almost a deification, of its object, who is made the recipient of constant offerings of flowers, drawings, home-made poetry and kisses ad seaseam. Sometimes it is one of the teachers who is thus canonized; and in such cases the well-learned lessons brought her as a tribute carry with them a certainher as a tribute carry with them a certain benefit to the devotee which it is needless to say is disregarded by the inneficiary.

CASE once came under the writer's notice of a class of girls in whose refractory heads the geography of Asia was in-delibly fixed by such a sentiment, for once put to a useful purpose. In spite of the occa-sional beneficial results in this direction, such undue forcing of the emutional side of a girl's character must prove deleterious to her mental development, and even in some cases to her physical condition. These overgrown children come up to the greater and more important schoolroom of the world with unduly sensitive susceptibilities, nerves unstrung and minds totally incapable of the "give and take" principles of society which brothers would have taught them early in life. It has been claimed by many that this conventual method of rearing girls is fruitful in retinement of thought and feeling. But experience renders such conclusions as doubtful as are most other generalizations. undue forcing of the emotional side of a girl's generalizations.

THE difference between the individuality of women is no greater after their graduation than it was before, as in the great world there are some in nearly every foreign boardingschool who have the instinctive love for for-bidden fruit which tempts them to smnggle in and be guilty of clandestine correspondences; and be guilty of clandestine correspondences; some in whom childish prankishness has sur-vived short dresses, and whose spirit breaks out into innumerable practical jokes of a greater or less degree of absurdity; and again others who walk the straight but dull road of greater of the straight but dull road of good scholarship, to the joy of their teachers and the goal of their diploma. As has been and the goal of their diploma. As has been before stated, the mannish element, when present in a girl's character, is apt to be rather strengthened, than otherwise, by the absence of contact with genuine masculinity. It is, indeed, fostered by what is considered abroad a necessary system of "hardening" the constitution of the scholars—a system in which a certain coarseness of living is advocated as possessing some superpire virtues; where it is a certain coarseness of living is advocated as possessing some sovereign virtues; where it is supposed that hard beds and plain fare, early rising, and fireless rooms in winter, are the best preparation for the unequal strain likely to be put on a girl as soon as she shall have sacrificed her first bouquet on the altar of society. Such conclusions may be, in many cases, the product of a fragal mind, fascinated by the economical side of the question, without any regard to the educational problem involved; but there are many noble and conscientions women at the head of foreign schools and convents who are so sincerely convinced of the excellence of such a mode of upbringing that they subject their scholars, in all kindness and honesty, to conditions which in America would be considered had usage for servants of the meanest class. What mistress on this side of the water would expect a maid servants of the meanest class. What mistress on this side of the water would expect a maid to sleep in an unbeated room where the ice formed on the inner window panes, and the water became solld ice in bowls and pitchers? Where is the Bridget, even were such mistress to be found, who would put up with eleven hours unremitting labor and only seven hours about? sleep? Reverse the figures, and the American mistress has difficulty to retain her domestic help in these days of spoiled servants.

THE first lesson of foreign schools is not to think but to obey; and to this Moloch of obschence, the foreign parent, a modern Abraham, whose hand is stayed by no pitying angel, lovingly offers up his child. Such an education may serve well enough for the mothers of a race of conscript soldiers, who are forced to give their blood and life for some imperial war lord; but such a system is badly adjusted to produce the women who are to be methers of a free people, to whose hands is en-trusted the education of our future legislators. Great as may be the danger of a foreign education to the individual, it is small as compared with the graver consequences which may accuse from such a source, consequences whose ramilications stretch through so many different expanses that the align education of different avenues that the atien education of the richer class of American girls may almost be looked upon as a political menace. It is still, to be sure, a cloud no bigger than "a man's hand," but holding in its bosom possi-bilities of infinite disorder. Most women na-turally lean toward a patriotism finding its expression in the personal devotion to some king or kaiser, rather than to the more philcouplie, but certainly less picturesque, inspira-tion engendered by republican freedom. A foreign education serves to cultivate and de-velop such tendencies.

THACKERAY says that even the children Among us seem to imbibe freedom with the air of our new country; and most as-suredly, self-reliance, resolution and rapidity of decision, are inherent capacities of American women. It is upon a preconceived idea that she is mistress of such qualities that the social mechanism of America is hinged; and no education which substitutes blind obedience and a fatuous acquiescence in the decis-ions of fate, and the male members of her family, will prove an effectual training for the lattle to which she is called. An American man expects to find in his womankind a reman expects to find in his womankind a reserve of force in any emergency, a pliability which will enable her either to rise from the "shanties" of a mining home to a Fifth Avenue palace, with the grace of a queen returning to a once deserted kingdom; or, fortune proving fickle, she will step down out of the luxurious nest to which she has been accustomed, and taking up her burden, will murch hravely by his side to the last struggle with poverty and all its attendant ills. Be it said in praise of the American woman that she rarely disappoints his expectations. She has not the sawer fairs of the French, or the perfect temper of the German, but she more than compensates for such deficiencies by her superior courage, and greater adaptability, her knowledge of the practicabilities of life, and her power and originality of thought. Just here we touch the great keynote of absolutism and tradition, which even republican France has not quite unlearned as regards her women, but which, like some fabled dragon, is poisoning all the sources of German life.

To a woman instructed exclusively in European schools, the monarchical system is usually very dear; nurtured on the divine right of kings as an unanswernble hypothesis, and dazzled by glimpses of court splendor, she often learns to look upon a republican form of government as a crude expedient of a people in the transition state between barbarism and monarchy. Her brain is tilled with the gorgeous pageants of great kings and superb conquerors, that defile in glittering procession through the history of older nations, but alas! she stumbles over the battle of New Orleans, and is not quite sure whether it was Washington or General Grant who commanded. Here the resources of her own country are simply represented to her mind by a great pink or yellow spot on the map of North America, the whole continent being drawn in her atlas on no larger a scale than that devoted to some French arrondissement O a woman instructed exclusively in Euthat devoted to some French arrondissement or Swiss canton. She may, if exceptionally well informed, be instructed that the Indians do not depredate the suburbs of New York, or well informed, be instructed that the Indians do not depredate the suburbs of New York, or the buffalo roam over the thoroughfares of Chicago; but she will, nevertheless, learn to look upon her countrymen and women through some such spectacles as Dickens wore when he wrotehis "American Notes." She will expect bombast instead of elegance, and braggadocio for merit. Of course, an intelligent girl will repair these deficiencies by subsequent study of men and books; but study as she may, the glamor of her childish imagination can never rest on the past of her own country's history. She will not be able to believe the Washington story as she accepted the nayth of William Tell. The critical faculty once awake feeds on the bones of dead ideals; the clear spirituality of a conflict of ideas will be as tasteless to her, full as she is of the personal interest which animates the war of older worlds, as cold spring water would be after whee; the legendless geography, as uninteresting as census returns. Surely the time has arrived when it is incumbent upon the women of the country to do all in their power to foster any werms of nationality which may have of the country to do all in their power to fos-ter any germs of nationality which may have spring up out of this fecund soil enriched by the blood of many races.

T is to woman that the childhood of a nation is entrusted. At his mother's knee the future man learns the rudiments of the civic virtues; it is she who tenches him to "speak plain the word country," and opens his baby heart to the rays of his people's glory. Falling in the unfathomable abyses of a child's heart early lessons times the glory. Falling in use of a child's heart early lessons tinge the whole complexion of his future character. The health of a nation, like the health of the individual, is alone safe when the atmosphere of home-life is untainted. Nay, one might even carry the simile further, and say that starvation of a child's patriotic instincts is dangerous to the one as bodily starration would be to the other. How can a woman supply the impetus to such a divine patriotism as Alfred's, Dante's or Wallace's, if in her heart of hearts the word "country" awakens only a home-sick longing for other lands, when all the hitter-sweet remembrances of when all the bitter-sweet remembrances of childhood grow in foreign fields, under distant skies, and the very winds of memory, mur-muring in the dark, whisper to her in an allen

ET the girl of to-day be given a fair chance to preserve that homogeniety with her surroundings which is the surest passport to the happiness of the future woman. Let her learn that joy which comes of feeling the heart throb in unison with the life of her own great country, without the ghost of any years of exile to step icily between; and though her French and German may not be quite so fluent, in the dignity of her American womanbood she will proudly boast, with the Shunamite, "I dwell among my own people." ARE OUR GIRLS TOO INDEPENDENT?

BY MRS. FRANK LESLIE

HE Howards boast that all their men are brave and all their women pure, and if correct it is certainly a thing to be proud of, but we on this side the water are dis-posed to think that whatever may be the boast of whatever people or whatever family under the sun, we can at least equal if not excel the vaunted quality. Our men are surely brave, our women are surely pure, but both the one sex and the other are often misunderstood either by those of another race and liabit, or by our first cousins of England, who, many of them, seem to imagine that American liberty means license, and the freedom enjoyed by our girls argues that we care less for the innocence which is so savagely protected abroad. It is those who know her best who most appreciate what may be called the total ligant innocence of the American girl the intelligent innocence of the American girl.

She has not, like her English consin, or her French, Spanish or Italian kinswoman, been cloistered within rigid although intangible walls of convenance and prejudice; she is not ignorant, nor does she pretend to be, that vice exists in the world; that the realm of nature includes volcanoes, boiling lava, and walls of pitch and slime as surely as it does daisies and lambs; that bread and milk is not the diet of all the world, and that men are neither to be treated like gentle mulds, nor are they myster-ious wild beasts, to be avoided as one would a ious wild beasts, to be avoided as one would a spider or a mouse.

American girls, like American men and women, go about the world, be it the round world, or just a little round of their own, with their eyes wide open and their minds expanded sufficiently to receive such new ideas and new phases of life as may present themselves, and to judge them upon their merits, without too much reliance upon tradition and precedent.

precedent.
When American girls set the fashion of When American girls set the fashion of traveling, either in companies or alone, without a chaperone, they were looked upon abroad as either so exentric as to be almost mad, or so bold as to be almost improper; correct English matrons regarded them at foreign tables d'hôte with that "stony British stare" which includes accusation, condemnation, and sentence of social ostracism all in one, but the American old graved called years the but the American girl gazed calmly past the British matron at Mont Blanc, or the Dome of St. Peter's, or whatever she had "come out for to see," and never knew that she was ostracised.

The Frenchman, full fed with the milk of etiquette, tradition, and those social restrictions sometimes very necessary in his own land, twirled his mustache, smiled agreeably, and followed her from picture to picture as she conscientiously "did" the Louvre or Notre Dame, but the American girl either did not notice him at all, or walked around and past him as if he were some incoming obstruction: him as if he were some inanimate obstruction; or, if he were very much in the way, bestowed upon him one of those calm, cold, and judicial regards so effective from the pure eyes of a young girl, and so quenching to the pretensions of a coxcomb.

Of course she was often misunderstood and

Of course she was often misunderstood, and that was a pity, for I am a good deal of Crear's mind and don't want the woman I love to be lightly spoken of, however falsely, but this in a naughty world is inevitable, and I think if a naughty world is inevitable, and I think if one has putience and strength to wait that Time generally wipes the slate clean of slan-derous accusations, and sets things right. He is fast doing so with regard to the American girl, and the best proof that the British matron confesses her mistake is, that her own daugh-ter, or cousin, or nicce, is now often found fol-lowing the example of the American girl, and traveling merhans to her German school, per-lowing the example of the American girl, and traveling perhaps to her German school, perhaps on some artistic tour, or even for plensure pure and simple, whithersoever she chooses.

This distinction between the two remains, however, and perhaps always will remain: the English girl under the fire of criticism expresses all over her person: "I know I'm unconventional, and I know you don't approve, but I am really a very dragon of propriety, and if you meddle with me you'll find it out!" While the American's natty little figure and joquants, pretty face simply says: "Alone! Why of course I am! What of it?" piquante, pretty face simply says: Why of course I am! What of it?"

A less independent rule obtains in the mat-ter of chaperonage, which has become a sort of spasmodic necessity of our society. The girls of to-day have no more real need of a married woman to sit in a corner and see them dance than their grandmothers had, but it is per-ceived that in foreign society too girl must be seen unchaperoned, and Mrs. Grundy says: "My girls are just as valuable as anybody's else girls, and if the others have chaperones so shall mine."

so shall mine.

I used to know a dear old hely who lived on Second Avenue, New York City, just as some old French ladies continue to live in the Faubourg Saint Germain. She is dead now, and her children live away up town, and her great, comfortable, dusky old house has become a block of warehouses, but I still remember how she used to talk to my mother as I sat by, inhaling the odor of the rose jars and timidly examining the great Chinese dragons and Hindoo idols lurking in the dark corners her drawing room.

Girls should be brought up to respect themselves and their family traditions, my dear," said she. "New York is growing too large and too busy to be good; when I was a girl every-body knew everybody, and we all belonged to some one of the old Knickerbocker families who have a character to keep up, and if there was a dance at the Van Coordand's, and one of the Rosevelt girls was going, what mat-tered it whether young Van Ruster or Van tered it whether young Van Ruyter, or Van

Corlean, or Stuyvesant, or any other of the young fellows escorted hee? Whoever it was, they went and came decently and in all honor, and if he asked her on the door-step to marry him, why, well and good, she said yes or she said ho, and that was the end of it. Why can't the girls go on so still, and what is all this talk about not going out without mann or some other married woman to play propriety? Aren't our girls as brother themselves as or some other married woman to play propricty? Aren't our girls as proper themselves as they used to be, or have our boys grown to be such villains that their sister's friends are not safe in their company? I am afraid, madam, that the good old days of New York have passed away forever."

Well, I suppose she was right, and as I didnot know the old days I cannot regret them as she did, but I do believe that the honest, self-respecting, pure-minded training of the girls of that period is felt in the characters of their descendants, and that heredity is one of the forces operating to-day to make the American girl the most trustworthy as well as the most charming young person in the world.

Of course there is something very attractive in the absolute innocence and ignorance of the ingénue as found often in England and constantly on the Continent. The dear little thing with her wide open blue eyes, her smooth expressionless face, rose-bud infantile mouth, smoothly braided hair, and complexion of milk and roses, has a charm of her own, and yet is not so charming as the little child she mentally reproduces, for one expects something of reciprocity when one talks to a womshe mentally reproduces, for one expects some-thing of reciprocity when one talks to a wom-an grown, and it is very fatiguing to always keep one's conversational craft affont upon a lily-pond when one is accustomed to mayint-ing the ocean. And also, if one is accustomed to looking a little below the surface, and forcasting the future of one's friends, it is rather distressing to imagine what would become of this lamb if by any accident she were deprived of the shelter of the fold, or even how she would be able to hold herself upright under the obligations and trials of marriage and the obligations and trials of marriage and maternity.

No maxim was ever truer than that "To the pure all things are pure," and I believe that many a woman of the world who has discreetly eaten of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge of good and evil, is as pure, as innocent, and very far safer than the convent-bred girl who knows not tinsel from gold, nor apples of Sodom from wholesome fruit.

I have said in another place that our natural foe, man, is "not so black as he is painted," and that women often imagine themselves pursued and tempted and made the object of deep-hald netarious schemes when the foe they so valiantly determine to resist has foe they so valiantly determine to resist has no intention beyond paying a few compli-ments, making himself agreeable for the moment, and rendering the homage that he fancies every woman claims and expects as her due from every man. This crying out before one is burt is of course eminently ridiculous, one is hurt is of course eminently ridiculous, and the women who do it get themselves well langhed at, both by the man whose pursuit they thus challenge, and by the feminine lookers-on, who see the game more clearly than the players; but, on the other hand, there are real wolves, and real Don Juans, and real dangers to be met with in the world, and a pretty woman must be very remarkably fortunate if she never finds herself approached by such a foe. And if she is so approached, what is berbest defence—the innocence of ignorance, or the innocence of knowledge? To my mind the latter, if combined with perfect self-poise and self-command, so that the offender shall not be able to decide whether be has been understood or not. There is probably no recepderstood or not. There is probably no recep-tion so disconcerting to a bad man as cheerful tion so disconcerting to a bad man as cheerful imponsciousness, and the air of politely trying to interest one's self in the conversation, although one finds it a little tiresome.

In fact, it occurred to me once at a foreign court to converse for some time with a very distinguished personage who afterward said to one of my friends that he never met with a better fencer than myself, for I would not see the point of any of his remarks. The fact was I did not know that they land any point, and was only wishing he would go away and allow a man to approach whom I did want to see, and whose conversation I enjoyed more than I did the compliments of—the personage.

CHICAGO'S REMARKABLE GROWTH

CHICAGO'S REMARKABLE GROWTH
Is largely in new factories which locate, not inside the city, but in her factory suburbs. Griffith has facilities possessed by no other suburbs. Four milroads, including a Belt Line which brings into competition twenty-two more roads, insure the lowest freights everywhere. Two pipe lines supply fuel oil to factories at much less than coal's cost.

History shows that Chicago's factory suburbs double every two years until they become cities.
Griffith's unequalled advantages are building her up rapidly from a small suburb into a large city.
The shrewd investor bury in a small suburb and sells in a large city. Griffith lots cost $120 to 500 on easy terms. Jay Dwiggins & Co., 142 Weshington St., Chicago, send full particulars free. It will pay to investigate at ones. Did you see the Griffith map on the back cover of the February Joranal? Look is up.

HOT WATER AS A REMEDY

"What must I Do to Get Well, and How Can I Keep So?" A valuable and entertaining book on the HOT

"SALISBURY PLAN"

MATER of treating chronic diseases. By Mrs. Stuart, Mail $1. W. A. KELLOGO, Pub., 10136th Ave., New York.

HOME STUDY, Young and middle aged thereograph and practical instruction by Mart, at their own Roses, in Bookschip, Commercial Arthmetic, Laiser Wrilling, Rostness Law, Storthard, etc. Adapted to all ages and both series, Sindents from energ Marks, Bistance in objection. Low Parks and suits from annual control of the Commercial Arthmetics, 1984, Belle St., Rostness, N. Y.

ART IN THE LAUNDRY

To introduce our new style Bag Blue we will for sixty days send therety combs worth of our float Blue, new shade, pretace paid to any address on receipt of ten cents in site. SAWVER CRYSTAL BLUE CO., 27 Br ud St., Boston, Mass. Established 1836.

A BRIEF PRELUDE

A Story. By Margaret Butler Snow

IN TWO PARTS-PART FIRST

T is probable that if brought to consider the point squarely. Jack Callam would have said he liked girls. Indeed, on reflection, he would have gone so far as to say that to be entirely deprived of their society might be positively inconvenient. He rather enjoyed watching a pretty girl. He did not find it tiresome to exchange opinions on the affairs of the hour, while the tea was in the cap, with a bright, jolly girl—that is, if she were not too bright and not too jolly. He found a competent partner indispensable in the cofficient, though he considered a girl an entirely superfluous adjunct to a tennis court. Of course, as a companion for long, brisk tramps, for quiet, sonl-satisfying talks, pipe to pipe, as it were, for absorbing games of whist or chess, for a tusale at tennis or billiards—in short for solid comfort, no one competent to judge would think for one moment of comparing a girl to a man. Jack would have said he preferred the society of men twice his age, men who knew things worth talking about, and how to talk about them, men who had burst the bonds of youth asunder, and escaped the gawaheris of inexperience. He remembered saying something not unlike that the other day to a friend. He remembered with what incredulity he had received the assertion of his friend, who had confessed with unblush-other day to a friend. He remembered with what incredulity he had received the assertion of his friend, who had confessed with unblushing candor—it struck Jack at the time as unbecoming—that he would rather spend an evening with a certain woman of his acquaintance than a year in company with the most celebrated wits and raconteurs of the age. The sense of mingled superiority and compassion with which he had regarded the misguided man recurred to him now. It heightened his enjoyment of his present state of mind. He was fond of contrusts. He looked at his watch. In the last sixteen minutes he had received a number of new ideas—that is, he would have said, with characteristic exactness, ideas now to him. And incidentally, his preconceived ideas, in certain directions, had been somewhat modified. He was disposed to ridicule himself. That it did not occur to him to attempt to regain his former attitude, would have served to show him the completeness of his reconstruction, if he had needed a proof.

He had landed at Ohm an hour ago, after a glorious sail up from Glasgow. Coming into the cosy he had needed a proof.

He had landed at Oban an hour ago, after a glorious sail up from Glasgow. Coming into the cosy little parior of the hotel, he found the bright fire so inviting he concluded he would read his letters and papers there, with his feet upon the fender. He had just read a telegram from a friend who promised to meet him next day, and was lonnging luxuriously in his great arm-chair, acknowledging to himself with drowsy astonishment that he would actually rather eat a good dinner than open the latest New York papers, when suddenly the group of English yachtsmen in the hall stepped aside, and two ladies entered the parlor. They were followed by a girl, who stood a moment in the door, motioning forward a servant, who presently brought in some wraps and umbrellas, and immediately disappeared. In the instant that she stood there, her tall, young figure framed in the doorway, the likeness of the girl was stamped indelibly on Jack Chilam's brain and he framed in the doorway, the like-ness of the girl was stamped indeli-bly on Jack Callam's brain and heart. But though not a line of her features nor the smallest detail of her costume escaped him— so perfect is that electric process that wise men refuse to call love at first sight, but can find no better name for—he could not have said, as she crossed the room, if she were beautiful or plain, so struck was he with the exceeding grace of her figure and carriage. Hastily collecting his letters and papers, he rose, offering his chair, which was declined with a word of thanks and a gracious smile from one of the elder ladies, as they sat down near the table in the middle of the room. Dexterously shifting the chair to a position from which he could occasionally glance in their direction without appearing unduly interested, he sat down again, to wait infinity interested, he sat down again, to wait for dinner with a resignation so complete that it struck him as being distinctly amusing. He enjoyed catching a glimpse of himself in an absurd light. He was never reluctant to be clever at his own expense, an impartiality which, of course, enabled him to be more clever than most men. He found himself hugely diverted by this view of himself, so new and unexpected. He was manusuring to get a glance at a pretty girl, determining already to know her, wondering if—He was presuming on his intimacy with himself. He must not go too far, he told himself cartly. Frankness could be carried to an extreme.

He sat watching the blazing coals, apparently deep in thought, carefully studying the charming photograph Pate had so kindly given him, comparing it, by well-timed, stealthy glances, with the original. Beyond doubt she was beautiful. Her soft fair hair was coiled in a shining knot low on her neck, under a small, dark turban with a velvet rim. He could not quite determine whether her eyes were gray or blue, but they were bewitching, not too large, and not too bright, with dark level brows, and long, dark eyelashes. Her features were not regular. Perhaps her nose was a trifle large. Her mouth certainly was, but Jack thought it the most beautiful he had ever seen. The full red lips met in curves that gave her face an irresistible archness even in repose. He longed to see her smile. It was evident that exposure to the summer's sun had somewhat browned her cheeks and chin, for her turban pushed back a little showed her forehead snowy white, under the fluffy fringe of curly hair that partially concealed it. The scarlet in her cheeks looked as if it had been brought there by long walks and drives in the keen winds of the bills. Her gown of dark cloth fitted her stim, rounded figure with the precision of a habit, its exquisite simplicity revealing each perfect line and curve. The rather short coat sleeve dis-

"Ladies, allow me to present an American who is not-intelligent."

pride with which he regarded the admirable perfection of the toilettes and manners of the three ladies. He was sure be had never seen a foreigner with the beauty and grace possessed by this girl. But then, he asked himself, had he ever seen so delightfully pretty an Ameri-can? He waived judgment on that point, and gave tardy attention to the two ladies with her. He admitted himself to be already prejudiced in their favor, but he decided that in any case he would have considered them unusually attractive. They had strikingly white hair, which was eminently becoming, worn as they were it, in soft curled locks on their fore-heads, under thin, almost invisible veils which were drawn snugly back over their small, dark bonnets. This piquant badge of age made a certain resemblance between them, which was heightened by the similarity of their simple, elegant dress. At first Jack had supposed them to be sisters, but as he noted their features more carefully be saw that the like-ness was but superficial.

It occurred to him presently, that he was not unlike the recipient of a letter who stands wondering from whom it may be, instead of breaking the seal to find out. He was wasting time in idle speculation as to these charming strangers. By judicious management he could at least learn from the register their names, if not where they lived. He had a clue. He had heard the names "Grey," and "Samuel." That he would know this girl was a foregone conclusion. As he left the par-lor, he dismissed all reflection on that point as superfluous. He did not see exactly how so delicate a matter was to be handled, but be did not allow himself to so insult his enter-closed a round, little wrist, and her hands, in which she held her gloves, were small and white. As she leaned languidly back in her chair, her attitude was one of grace so noticeable that her beauty became secondary, perforce. As Jack was glancing at her for the ninth time, she drew out a tiny jeweled watch, her only ornament, and said to the lady nearest her, who had taken a small note-book from the silver-bound bag hanging from her belt, and was using the table as a desk: "Mrs. Grey, if I asked for bread, do you

"Mrs. Grey, if I asked for bread, do you think they would give me a stone?" "Would you not prefer a stone?" demand-ed that lady, without looking up. "At least, you would not try to eat it." "You are severe," said the girl laughing. "A day on the coach is somewhat too trying to your"

"Temper" said Mrs. Grey, candidly. "Yes, I think we are perhaps overdoing this conching." She closed her note-book, pushing her small, gold pencil through the leather loops on its edges. "Fifteen years ago," she went on, answering the protest in the girl's face by a slight smile, "I could drive through the Highlands on the top of a coach, day in and they can give the grey and pages before a significant. day out, min or shine, and never know a moment of fatigue. It was enclanted ground to me too, then. I do not wish to jeopardize your esteem for me, but I will admit that when I weigh romance in the balance now, I find it wanting."

"Not that you love romance less, but comfort more." suggested the other lady, with a placid smile. "So do I." "Oh, but environment!" urges the girl.

"You could not, in justice to your sense of the fitness of things, consent to any other mode of travel up here! Consider yourself in your due relation to the landscape. You would not wish to withhold yourself, decoratively speaking. Sustain yourself with the thought of your appropriate picturesqueness. Realize that the effect of you is gay.

"These coaches do look gay," conceded Mrs. Grey. "There is a most deceptive air of festivity about them. Do you suppose we produce that effect, as we bump along? There is consolation in the thought that would tend to alleviate my sufferings. But we will be prosaic enough to-morrow," she added. "I think Samuel intends to go down to Glasgow by rail. I suppose you will be irreconciled to anything so barbarous."

"Shades of the Chiefs!" exclaimed the girl, in mock horror. "Fancy rushing in a train through glen and glade! What sacrilege! If we had a tinge of proper feeling and enthusiasm, we should 'prick along right meerily on red-roan steeds'!"

Jack smilled into the fire. He liked ber red-roan steeds'!"

Jack smiled into the fire. He liked ber Jack smiled into the fire. He liked her voice. He had been quite sure he should. Still, he was not entirely disarmed by her beauty. He was able yet to criticise with some degree of impartiality, and anything less than the absolute refinement of her voice would not have satisfied his fastidious ear. It was low and not too sweet to be frank. Her pronunciation, charmingly exact, was American. That it would be, he had been reasonably sure. He would have relinquished with reluctance the satisfactory sense of patriotic prise as to doubt that it would be concluded to his satisfaction. He admitted that he had no right to expect anything more from Fate. A glimpse of enchanting possibilities had been given him; he must do the rest. He was a firm believer in that somewhat depressing maxim, "Heaven helps those who help themselves." Indeed, he went so far as to say that if a man helped himself he could generally dispense with other assistance, which if rather unorthodox, not to say valinglorious, showed really nothing worse than the intolerant energy and independence of youth.

He found four new names on the page with his own, the last on that day's list; "Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bell and servant. Mrs. Katherine L. Grey, Miss Strong." They were written in a regular, characteriess hand, by the servant, probably, Jack thought, and were bracketed together by the letters "U. S." opposite. This was amousing, but not satisfactory. However, it was something to know their names.

Maring decided upon a pian of action, determined to meet chance more than half way, he crossed the hall to the dining-room, the doors of which were just being thrown open, selecting as he went the largest gold piece in his coin purse. He was not too preoccupied to notice near the entrance a tall man, with an air of distinction, French, probably, he thought, with white hair, close-cut, rather pointed white beard, and brilliant dark eyes with dark eyebrows contrasting sharply with his white hair. His dress was carelessly elegant. As Jack began a diplomatic conversation with the whiter be had summoned from the dialing-room, this man crossed the hall, entered the parlor and joined the three ladies by the table. Logically he could be none other than the missing member of the party, Mr. Samuel Bell. "Delighted to meet you, sir," said Jack to himself with a smile which was reflected on the face of the waiter, as he felt the gold piece in his ready palm.

"Yes, sir; understand, sir," he said, smiling comprehensively as Jack whispered something to him, glancing toward the parlor. "Sit here, sir," placing Jack at the table. It filled up rapidly. There was evidently no disposition on the part of the guests to affect an indifference toward dinner they did not feel. It soon became apparent that the four choice seats at the head of the table were being reserved for four favored individuals who were not disposed to basten. Presently they were taken by a tall, white-haired man, accompanied by three ladies, to whom the waiter was deference itself. This seemed to be irritating to the severe English couple near the middle of the long table. They demanded of each other in strident tones why it was that they were not placed in the best seats, instead of people who kept the whole table waiting, and receiving no response to their query glared angrily up and down the room. Mr. Bell sat at the head, with his wife a this left hand, Jack at next to her, with Mrs. Grey and Miss Strong directly opposite, an arrangement be considered satisf which made his mental portrait of her now complete.

As the various dishes of the excellently planned and executed dinner appeared and disappeared, and not a straw of an opportunity to speak to his neighbors presented itself for Jack to clutch at, he found the outlook obscure. He was almost reply to adopt that the manner. almost rendy to admit that the maneuver he had fancied so clever would result in nothing but an amount of attention from the gratefully obsequious walter that was rather more annoying than amusing. impression was general at the table was an Englishman of rank, probably the el-der son of an elderly Duke with the gout. Perhaps be owned an estate near Oban, whispered the finte English couple. He was re-garded by all with interest, and his handsome person, and modest unassuming manner, were much admired. Meanwhile be despaired. He was not without resource, as has been shown, but he could not cope with the difficulties of this apparently simple, yet obsti-nately disheartening situation. There did not seem to be anything to do but out his dinner in silence, which he did, with an appetite not Mrs. Bell would drop her knife or fork or spoon, or upset her wine-glass in his direction, he meditated, a diversion might thus be created which would prove entirely adequate. But Mrs, Bell's early training seemed to have been such as to render the probability of such an occurrence extremely remote. If she had guessed the longing in the young man's heart, she might have relaxed for a moment her gen-tle precision, though she would have felt it a great scriftor even to pretend to be awkward. great sacrifice even to pretend to be awkward. But it was impossible for her to imagine that, just as it was impossible to imagine that he was wishing that she might fairt away, with her head on his shoulder. Of course, he count hardly hope to be so fortunate, he thought disconsolately. Such generous opportunity was only to be met with on the stage, and come a dramatic author would consider it lavher head on his shoulder. Of course, he could even a dramatic author would consider it lav-ish. He realized that he must depend upon himself. Perhaps be might manage to upset something. Perhaps he might drop something on her gown. Undoubtedly that would lead to conversation, but it would hardly be of a to conversation, but it would harmy be of a nature propitions to further acquaintance, he reflected, particularly if the gown was of a material that would rendity "spot." He had heard his mother use such a phrase. He won-dered if the gown was of such inconsiderate stuff. He rather funcied it was, At this point in his meditations he brushed away a smile with his napkin. He did not want Miss Strong to see him smiling, when it was so evident there was no occasion for mirth. On the contrary, the atmosphere of dejection peculiar to table of bote was more than ordinarily oppres-

But she did not see him, he told himself drearily. He wished he could be sure she knew he was there. She avoided seeing him with a dexterity he could but admire, though it affected him painfully. He wondered with some uneasiness if he had become invisible to the naked eye, but a glance about the table reassured him. The others seemed to see him when they looked at him. He was sorry there was a vacant place between himself and that He was a most attractive man. He would enjoy a conversation with him. He would enjoy a conversation with almost any

His spirits were at zero, and he was consoling himself with the thought that he would soon be at liberty to seek the consolation of a good cigar, when he heard Mrs. Bell say the beef was particularly tasteless, and saw her glance toward an old-fashioned salt-cellar which stood just beyond his plate. Here was the ghost of a chance, and Jack was not the man to scorn it. Before the waiter could reach them he had placed the salt before her with an "Allow me," adding, with the courage of desperation ns her kind eyes met his, "We hear a great deal about the roast beef of old England, but after all it can not be compared to a good New York cut."

A discussion on meats and markets, internationally considered, is not without interest, and a man in the hands of chance cannot be critical. Jack thought the conversation fol-lowing his overture not only instructive, but positively brilliant.

The ladies did not take an active part. They acquiesced when Mr. Bell and Jack finally de-cided that no markets in the world equaled those of America.

those of America,

"But do you know," said Mr. Bell to Jack,
"I took you to be an Englishman: I thought you were remarkably inoffensive!"

Jack laughed. "And I took you to be a Frenchman. I suppose as good Americans we ought to be quite pleased. I believe it is the effort now of most of us to seem to be what we are not."

"I was born near Paris," said Mr. Bell, "My mother doesn't speak a word of English to this day, though she went to America when I was a small boy. I am proud to call my-self an American. America has been good to me 'America is good to everybody," said Jack. "We don't realize how good until we come over here, and begin to make comparisons. I always find myself belligerently patriotic when I am on foreign soil."

"Well, I am glad to find you are an American," said Mr. Bell, "It is a pleasure to see a decent American once in a while."

"Samuel!" protested his wife.
"Why, it is," he insisted, with the air of having been contradicted, "and why shouldn't I say so? I see so many I'm ashamed of I'm sure I'm glad-to announce it when I find one " You flatter me," said Jack, laughing.
"Not at all;" said Mr. Bell; "not at all; I do you mere justice."

He spoke with the utmost seriousness, but his eyes were twinkling. The ladies were smiling. They evidently enjoyed his oddity. So did Jack. He spoke deliberately, with an accent of peculiar distinctness, noticeably French, especially in inflection, and in the equality of emphasis he laid on every syllable of his words. The gestures of his white, well-shaped bands were also aversively. French, as were hands were also excessively French, as was the incessant lifting of the shoulders, and heavy eyebrows. He had the air of being able to be serious, but seemed to prefer a gentle raillery as a conversational recreation. It was evident that the ladies surrounded him with an almosphere of admiring appreciation, able, and Mr. Bell was more than ordinarily

"Doesn't it strike you," he went on now,
"that Americans are more affectionately disposed than other races, and inconveniently so? You never see Englishmen embrace each other when they meet on foreign soil. They don't yearn for the companionship of fellowcountrymen, eh?"

"Not exactly," said Jack.
"I don't see where the Americans we see over here come from," said Mr. Bell, "we never see that kind at home. We avoid them. We used to add our address when we put our names on the hotel books, but we don't do that now. Some Ohio man was sure to turn up. O. I have suffered!" he exclaimed, "I have suffered!" he exclaimed, "I have suffered!"

"I think the Americans we meet compare very favorably with the foreigners," said Miss

Strong with some decision.

Strong with some decision.

She had not spoken before, but she had looked at him once or twice, and Jack felt that he had succeeded in impressing upon her the feet of his relations, at least fact of his existence, at least,

"You are indiscriminatingly patriotic," and Mr. Bell.

"I agree with Helen," said Mrs. Grey. "At home I might not care to know all of them, but over here I am not willing to admit that they are not so good as anybody."

"Or better," said Mr. Bell. "You drape their eccentricities with the Stars and Stripes, and call the effect picturesque."

"At least you must admit that they are all very intelligent," said Mrs. Bell. "Oh, they are intelligent;" grouned her hus-hand, "that's what makes them so objectionband, "that's what makes them so objection-able! You could endure them if they were not so painfully, so supernaturally intelligent!
You can't escape them. Flee to the uttermost parts of the earth, and the intelligent American will be there. I want to meet one who has not seen everything, and won't undertake to explain to you the entire universe while to expand to you the entire universe while you smoke your cigar."

"Behold in me the man you seek," said Jack, recommending binnself with muck com-placency. "I am willing, may, anxious, to prove to you that I am satisfactorily ignorant. You could hardly hope to find anyone more so!"

The grimly silent diners at the other end of the table enviously disapproved the hilarity of this gay party. The English lady said there was an air of recklessness about them that stamped them as shockingly mediocre. Americans always were. Her husband sent glances of gloomy superiority in their direction. It struck him as being nothing short of impudent to enjoy one's self at table d' hôte. "Let me present my card," said Mr. Bell, taking out his card-case. "I am delighted to have met you."

Jack with difficulty concealed his exulta-tion. Mr. Bell handed him a card on which was engraved in plain clear lettering, " Samuel was engraved in plain clear lettering, "Samuel Clellan Bell, Ceveland, Ohio,"

"John Callam, Junior, New York," Mr. Bell read alond slowly, from the card Jack handed him in return. "Why, is it possible," he asked, lowering the glass he had beld to his eyes as he read the card, and looking at him squarely, "Is it possible you are a son of John Callam, the lawyer?"

Jack felt that he had never before realized his good fortone in being his father's son.

lis good fortune in being his father's son.
"I am," he said. "Do you know him?"
"Yes," said Mr. Bell, "I know him! I know him well, and I value the privilege. You are fortunate in your father, Mr. Callam. Your inheritance is splendid."

Jack colored with pleasure. Years of devotion could never repay his father for the joy of that moment.

"I am glad to know you, Mr. Callam," went on Mr. Bell, "glad to know you for your father's sake and glad to know you for your own. If you make half the lawyer your father has you ought to be satisfied.
What a man be is!" Mr. Bell chuckled. "He's what a man he is? "Mr. Bell conciled. "He's pulled me through many a tight place, many a tight place," he repeated, evidently enjoying the remembrance of certain legal tussles. "He has things just about as he wants them. "He has things just moont as the black is white if he undertakes to prove that black is white it's a stubborn judge who won't see it his way,

"I sa stubborn judge who won't see it his way,
—and by jove, he sees it that way himself!"
"I perceive you are familiar with his little idiosyncrasies," said Jack laughing.
"I guess they haven't been a drawback to him in his profession," said Mr. Bell. "But I must introduce you to Mrs. Bell, and Mrs.
Grey," Indicating each in turn, "and Miss Strong. Ladies, I present an American who is not—intelligent!"
They reads him you of them with a delight.

They made him one of them with a delightfully informal conventionality, if so may be somewhat paradoxically described the impresson their entirely impersonal cordiality made on him. Miss Strong was tantalizingly at-tractive. The quick, shy response of her eyes was so flattering he found himself watching for it every time he spoke. He was conscious of desiring her approval of everything he said. When her direct gaze met his he wanted to thank her, it was so beautiful. Her archness was charmingly free from coquetry. The deft originality with which she expressed herself gave a quaint background of sense to the most frivolous thing she said. Her nonsense had a quality of its own. Jack found them all adroit. At times their dexterity made him feel a trifle clumsy, but he was able to think that he did not appear so. He saw at once that Mr. Bell would not concede any commonthat Mr. Bell would not concede any common-places as stepping-stones to better acquaint-ance. It was one of his whims to remain misunderstood rather than make the slightest effort to explain himself. He enjoyed being misunderstood. It gave him a somewhat mistaken sense of superiority. But he was never more pleased than when he met some-one, who, like Jack, understood him intuitive-ly, and neverted his addity with a novelenly, and accepted his oddity with a noncha-lance equal to his own. For so clever a per-son, he was at some pains to show his esteem. Jack found they played ten-pins with their opinions, which were set up only to be bowled over, without the slightest companction, by anyone who chose to take a hand at the game, Mrs. Grey explained to him that the ten-pins sers somewhat battered, having been used in-definitely. They spoke of having a new set, but Mr. Bell said the old ones would do for him. It was mainly to see the flash of Miss Strong's earnest eyes, and the cirl of her ex-quisitely mobile lips, that he combatted one of her cherished beliefs, insisting upon it that the government of the United States was a failure, and would eventually be so admitted. "Mr. Callam believes that the mayor of the

"Mr. Callam believes that the mayor of the city of New York will be the king of the United States one of these days, don't you, Mr. Callang?"

Mr. Callam?"

Mr. Callam?"

"No; Mr. Callam believes that the mayor of New York will be the king of the world," said Helen, with petty malice. "All New York people do."

"Don't be disagreeable, Helen," said Mr. Bell, "Don't try to make Mr. Callam uncomfortable just because you are not so fortunate.

fortable, just because you are not so fortunate as to live in New York."

as to live in New York."

"Oh, I could not make him uncomfortable if I tried," said Helen, her dimples somewhat belying that statement. "It is not possible to make a New Yorker uncomfortable. They are supremely satisfied. They pity the rest of us. They will not admit that there is anything worth seeing west of the Hudson. They shudder at the thought of the dreary desert bounded on the east by New Jersey. They refuse to think that we West-erners compass the ordinary comforts of civilization. They like to ignore us, and their immeasurable obligations to us."

The proud poise of her pretty head, the light her eyes, the flush on her cheeks, were enchanting.

You are too sweeping, Miss Strong," protested Jack, "You do us injustice. We realize that New York is in some measure indebted to the United States. We would not wish em ungrateful to America!

They laughed. That has the true New York ring," said Mr. Bell.

Helen shrugged her pretty shoulders, but did not speak again, and her thick eyelashes swept her cheeks.

Well, Mr. Bell went on, "you have rea-son to be proud of your city. I think we are all proud of New York, though we like to say that the West is more interesting. I don't know that it is, though," he admitted, with a sly glance at Helen. "New York is so essentially cosmopolitan. It's the place to live. You could not keep the ladies away," he added, with a quizzieal smile at his wife. She laughed.

"Mr. Bell says he's afraid to let me go there alone," she explained to Jack gayly, "I spend "Mr. Bell says he's atrant to let an alone," she explained to Jack gayly, "I spend so much money! The shops are alluring. I always say I would rather shop a week in New York than a year in Europe. The things are York than a year in Europe. The things are really cheaper, because Mr. Bell is so inconveniently honest he will declare everything so stupid!" She made a pretence of frowning at her husband. "And one has really an excellent selection in New York. Of course, if you want an assortment of associations as well as bric-a-brac—cost was autre chose. I am not sentimental. I have never been impressed with the idea of the souvenir."

"Perhaps Mr. Callam might be interested in knowing that we have no souvenir spoons, suggested Mrs. Grey.

"Oh, are they not objectionable?" ex-claimed Mrs. Bell. "If I wanted the mon-strosities I would get them at Tiffany's, anyway. From my experience, and I have had quite a little, I should say that New York is the place to buy almost everything."

"All things to all men," said Mr. Bell, "German to the German, French to the French, Italian is the Italian."

Italian to the Italian,"—
"Irish to the Irish," put in Helen expres-

"It is more Irish than Ireland," said Mrs.

Grey.
"By certain infallible signs I discover that "By certain infallible signs I discover that we are drifting into one of our political dis-cussions," said Mrs. Bell, rising, "Mr. Cal-lum deserves better at our hands. I move we adjourn pencently!"

adjourn peacenbly!"

They lingered a few moments in the purlor. Jack and Helen stood by the fire. She put a slim, pretty foot on the fender, drawing aside the folds of her gown with one hand, the other under her chin as she supported her head, her elbow on the low mantel. Jack admired the tiny, patent-leather tips of her shoes, and the trim exactness of her costume. He noticed the pretty pink of her palm, and the upward curve of her eyelashes. Her chin was so round, and her throat so full. Her linen collar was turned away from it, in small linen collar was turned away from it, in small points. A lock of her fine bair had escaped from a knot, and lay on her shoulders like a skein of pale floss. He wondered what she would think if she knew that he wanted to lean forward and pin it back with one of those heavy tortoise shell pins she wore. She felt his stendy gaze, and turned away suddenly with downcast eyes.

"I think I shall go upstairs," she said, joining the others. "I must write a little to-night, I fear that several of my impressions are cluding me. Mrs. Grey is so systematic, Mr. Callam," she went on, her eyes meeting his an instant. "The superiority of her note book is a constant mortification to me."

"Will you put me in your note-book, Miss Strong?" asked Jack. "Do." Helen pretended to hesitate, "Perhaps I may be able to make room for you," she murnured. "Would you mind being next to an old ruin?"

"Not in the least," replied Jack, cheerfully.

"I am devoted to old rains. Put me is one!" Mrs. Bell dropped into Helen's room on her way to her own, an hour later. Mrs. Grey was sitting by the abject little fire, watching the girl as she brushed her long, wavy hair. Mrs. Bell ant down somewhat insecurely on the precipitate edge of the high feather bed, peeling off her veil and patting it absent-mindedly into smooth, precise folds, "That Mr. Cullam is going down to Glasgow with us to-morrow," she announced.

"Samuel is charmed with him. He says be doesn't know that he ever met a young man he liked so much. I tell him I think that is partly because he knows and likes his father, but he says he would admire him exactly as much if he didn't know his father. Perhaps he would." Mrs. Bell's loyalty was modified by an inflection of distinct dubiousness. "But I must say it makes a great difference with me, to know all about his family. His father is one of the most celebrated lawyers in New Vork, which means the United States of York-which means the United States, of course."

"Say the world," murmured Mrs. Grey, impolitely.

Mrs. Bell felt the interruption vaguely, but her fluency had gathered an impetus which carried her safely over it. She threw Mrs. Grey the scrap of a smile and went on evenly. "Mr. Callam expects to be a lawyer, too, but The intends to travel a year or two first. He considers this tour as a part of his education. He has been abroad a number of times, but this time he means to study Europe. He means to be very conscientious about his sight-seeing, but I suppose he'll soon get over sight-seeing, but I suppose he is soon got over that, and begin to enjoy binuself," she added, hopefully. "He was graduated only this sum-mer. He knows a lot of Cleveland men." "Is that all? Don't stop," said Mrs. Grey with light irony, as Mrs. Bell paused, "He seems to be somewhat reserved. Did he not tell you his age, and show you the photographs of his family in a case of Russian leather?"

"Oh, you know Samuel!" laughed Mrs. Bell. "He never hesitates to put his remarks into interrogatory form. He has taken one of his violent familes to Mr. Cullam, and Mr. Callam evidently reciprocates. I like him, too. His manner is perfect, I think—so frank and easy, and so affectionately deferential. He must have an admirable mother. I think he is immensely handsome, don't you? His ferror is supposely.

'And his eyes are so expressive," said Mrs.

Grey with an air of innocence.

The thick masses of Helen's hair fell quite over her face as she leaned closer to the fire.

"Yes," said Mrs. Bell, "his eyes are beautiful."

tiful."

Presently Helen said: "How do we go down to-morrow? By rail?"
"Boat," replied Mrs. Beil. "Mr. Callam persuaded Samuel to go that way. He came up by boat, and said the trip was thoroughly delightful. But he probably had a fine day—and then of course he is a good sailor."
"Odd, his going back the way he came," suggested Mrs. Grey demurely.
It was odd. So odd that Jack was laughing over it at that precise moment, as he re-arranged the various articles he had unpacked, and sat down to frame a coherent excuse for the friend he had expected to meet the next the friend he had expected to meet the next day. He finally decided to say he had been called back to Ginsgow. That was the bare truth, the skeleton of a fact, he told himself brazenly. For once he hardly understood himself. He made no attempt to defend to his reason this sudden and entire change of He was content to submit passive the dictates of a force stronger than anything be had hitberto dreamed of in his philosophy. He had seen her for the first time, five brief hours before, but what of that? He knew that where she was was happiness. Every other fact in the universe was vague and indistinct. Ht. fell to picturing the long, bright to-morrow.

(Continued in next JOURNAL)

A UNIQUE WHISK HOLDER

VERY useful as well as an ornamental A whisk holder is made from a butcher's cuff and four yards of hemp. Loop the hemp around the top of the cuff so as to form a trim-ming. Make three large loops of the hemp, placing them in the center of the cuff with ends about one-quarter of a yard long. Fringe these ends out, take one and a half yards of No. 16 ribbon and make an Alsatian bow, and twine it in with the loops of the bemp, and use one-half yard of No. 9 rib-bon to twine in and out through the loops of bon to twine in and out through the loops of the bemp which has formed the trimming at the top. For the handle, take one-half yard of hemp, and sew it to the sides of the cuff. Make a bow of the hemp and sew it to the handle, and fringe out the ends one-eighth of a yard. Finish off by sewing a small bow of No. 9 ribbon over the hemp bow, which should be a little larger than the ribbon one.

For Boils, Pimples

carbuncles, scrofulous sores, eczema, and all other blood diseases,

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

It will relieve and cure dyspepsia, nervous debility, and that tired feeling.

Has Cured Others

will cure you. Digitized by Google

THE BROWNIES THROUGH THE YEAR

A NEW SERIES OF 12 ADVENTURES OF THE FUNNIEST LITTLE MEN IN THE WORLD

By Palmer Cox

NUMBER SIX

THE BROWNIES

IN MARCH

Brownie band, while roaming round In blustering March, one evening found Themselves upon a windy height That brought the Capitol in sight. Said one: "That dome that looms so high It seems to pierce the starry sky, Proves we behold, from where we stand,

The central city of the land.
Now, while we chance to be so near, And all the avenues are clear, Across the town we'll take a race To gain some knowledge of the place, And ere the night has passed away, A visit to the White House pay."

Another cried: "The race begin, And don't be slow to count me in, For I'll be with you to ascend The White House steps, you may depend." Soon skipping on, the Brownies tried Their speed through streets both long and wide.

They moved as spry as locusts light— When fields of grain break on their sight, And lengthy fasts have whetted keen Their appetite for something green;-But nothing great attention drew Until the White House came in view. Then every foot came to a stand, And every visage did expand In giving freedom to the smile That lighted up each face the while. Said one: "A snow-white mansion, sure, Designed some centuries to endure; Broad at the base, compact and low, Built more for service than for show;

No peaks for thunderbolts to strike,

The doors are fast as they should be

Where so much plate is lying round As in this mansion may be found."

One soon replied: "We little care How many bolts and bars are there; Or heavy locks that would defy

The prowling burglar's pick or pry. We pass inside a place at will, In spite of all the care and skill

That may be spent to bring about A plan to keep intruders out The massive doors, that may outface The seeker after bread or place, Can on their heavy hinges rest, Because the Brownie band is blest With powers that make the bolt of awe

Those who of planning it had charge Displayed good sense and caution large."

Another spoke, who ventured nigh And scanned the place with searching eye, "With bolts and bars, some two or three,

As worthless as a barley-straw. For one, I'm not content to go

'Till more about the place I know Than may be gained by just a sight Of outer walls and columns white.

I neither seek a place of power, Nor food to serve the passing hour; But all the same, I'm bound to win

An entrance to the rooms within We'll not disturb their silver-ware, Nor furniture, so rich and rare; We'll simply all the paintings view, And have, perhaps, a dance or two In those historic rooms, to show

How we as well can trip the toe As those who proudly gather here To grand receptions every year." Ere long they rambled round with ease, As if they had a bunch of keys.

The President was not around, And those in charge were sleepers sound, So they were free to dance or run

From room to room in search of fun; And in the largest room they found They danced in sets both square and round;

Tried jig and reel, fandango, too, ghost dance of the painted Sloux.

All changing partners every set They bowed and scraped, and crossed and met And carried through in lively way The figures of the present day.

On ornaments and frimmings stout Some climbed, to keep a sharp lookout In case while sport went on they'd find Surprises of a sudden kind, And they some signal would require Upon the instant to retire. They sat in chairs both new and old

To prove how many hold; And on them bounced for half an hour their strength springing power. Although no time they had to sleep

Some Brownies crawled, with hughter great,

Into the very bed of state,

Until some seven faces bright Were peeping from the linen white.

Said one: "We wish to have it said That we have tried the nation's bed, And we can now aver with pride, That Uncle Sam does well provide For those whom he is pleased to call To Washington, to govern all."

Alast so many Brownles spry Were anxious on that bed to lie, Wherein great men had taken rest When with their country's cares oppressed, . They broke it down, and tumbled through Upon the floor with much ado; he splintered slats and parted wire Gave notice of a ruin dire. Those who by chance escaped the crash, Were nothing slow to make a dash

To aid the rogues who sank from sight Enveloped in the bedding white; And work enough they found to do, As from the creaking wreck they drew By hands and heels, for mercy's sake, The hapless victims of the break.

Some Brownies rolled into a ball, Had scarcely strength for aid to call; While more, half smothered in the bed, Were dragged to light

And had the band surprises known While in that wild confusion thrown, While some were struggling in the hold Of twisted wing or blanket fold. Or by the shock were senseless made, not far from dead; And flat upon the carpet laid,

Some gasped for water, some for wine, Brought from the vineyards of the Rhine,

And even stronger drinks had found A welcome there, had they been round,

To help the action of the heart And strength to nerves and brain impart. The floor was

They might have found it hard indeed To leave with all their wonted speed, But lucky for the Brownie force

No trouble came from such a source. When all at length were brought to view, At work the active Brownies flew To reconstruct the bed of state That nearly proved a bed of fate. Said one: "Ambition leads astray Its ill-starred victims day by day; The race for wealth, or social fame, Oft ends in courts, or stripes of shame,

And even we can trouble find Through an ambitious turn of mind."

Gave them good reason to complain; But other injuries they knew Than outward bruises, black and blue. Some swallowed feathers, hair and dust, And some had cotton down them thrust So far, they doubted which was best, To take it out, or let it rest.

But little time could they remain To moralize on longings vain.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

An Illustrated Family Journal with the Largest Circulation of any Magazine in the World, Published Monthly by

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY At 433-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa. With Press-Rooms at 401-415 Appletree Street

Edited by

EDWARD W. BOK

In association with

MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT ("Aunt Patience") MISS RUTH ASHMORE MARGARET BOTTOME ROBERT J. BURDETTE KATE UPSON CLARK FOSTER COATES MAUDE HAYWOOD EMMA M. HOOPER MRS. LOUISA KNAPP MARY F. KNAPP ISABEL A. MALLON MARIA PARLOA EBEN E. REXFORD ELISABETH ROBINSON SCOVIL REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D. KATE TANNATT WOODS

Advisory and Contributing Editors. With representatives at London and Paris.

Rates

Advertising

Rates

Subscription One dollar per year, payable in advance. Single copies ten cents.

Five dollars per Agate line each insertion before (this) editorial page; three dollars per Agate line on succeed-ing pages and all covers. Reading Notices, six dollars per Nonpareil line. These rates are not.

BRANCH OFFICES:

New York: Potter Building, 38 Park Row Boston: 7 Temple Place, Cor. Tremont St. Chicago: Chickering Hall Building San Francisco: Chronicle Building

LONDON OFFICE:

53 Imperial Buildings, Ludgate Circus, E. C. English Subscription Prices: Per issue, 6 pence; per year, 6 shillings, post-free

Philadelphia, March, 1892

AT HOME WITH THE EDITOR

PHYSICIAN, it is said, sees more sides and phases of human na-ture in a life-time than any professional man. But I am inclined to think that an editor is a lively competitor to the doctor in that re-spect. Especially is this true of an editor's mail. Through it there passes daily all the little weaknesses with which mankind—and womankind—is afflicted. One letter is funny; the next is tragic; one writer praises him, the other condemns; worries follow pleasures; fullest joys tread on the heels of life's keenest agonies and disappointments, and each day is a kaleidoscope of new pictures, merry and sad.

PERSONALLY, I can say that my mail has PERSONALLY, I can say that my mail has been to me a perfect inspiration for better work. Often have I wondered whether other editors have so many lenient critics, such sympathetic readers. In gloomiest moments, when worries seemed to troop in perfect battalions, there has come to me some cheerful word, said as only a woman can say it, which has raised my head and made the rest of the day seem brighter and happier than any day before it. It is easy for us to write kind things of each other, but I wonder sometimes whether we fully realize the pleasure they are apt to give to those who receive ure they are apt to give to those who receive them. Certainly, the hundreds and thousands years, have so generously written to me, can never know all that their words have meant for me, and how largely they have entered into the work which has seemed so satisfactory

BUT, occasionally, there slips into the mail Box, occasionary, there saps into the main such a message as that which came to me a few days ago. It was just that kind of a letter which I do not like to receive, since it is apt to make one ashamed that his sex inis apt to make one ashamed that his sex in-cludes such men. After a few personal allus-tions, which are hardly worth repeating, this writer gets to the subject of his letter, and he says in dictatorial fashion: "Stop this inane flattery of woman and pandering to her van-ity. Since the dawn of creation she has been told that she is an angel, until the whole earth groans with her tyranny and deceit practiced upon matakind. Be honest, and tell her the plain, unvarnished truth: She needs it, I as-sure you." When I had read the letter, I caused a few inquiries to be made concerning the writer, and I found, as I surmised, that my correspondent is what is come known nowadays as a "woman-hater." is he a common every-day sort of a woman-hater, but, as my information assures me, "an incorrigible one, who sees absolutely nothing good in woman."

N OW, there are reasons why a man may choose to remain a bachelor; in fact, there are excellent reasons why it is best that some men should. I have known men to have inner conflicts with themselves for years and then resolutely decide to choose ceilbacy. Such decisions make heroes of some men. There are circumstances which sometimes enter into a man's life that make celibacy judi-cious and wise—circumstances not of his own choosing. There are men whose lofty estimate of women will not permit of their asking a woman to share what God in His wisdom has chosen to have them bear. That type of man exists, and more largely than many women believe or know. A woman sometimes wonders why a certain man whom she knows remains single when every outward circumstance seems to point that his life might be otherwise. I have heard women speak jestingly of such men. I have seen them made targets for a fusillade of jokes in a drawing-room bearing an outward secolution then made targets for a fusiliate of jokes in a drawing-room, bearing an outward semblance of pleasantry and graciousness that always stamp a perfect gentleman. But beneath those pleasing exteriors I know there was re-newed old battles so bravely fought and won a long time since. And I have often wondered why it is that woman's natural keen intuition, so unerring in many things, did not more often divine that there are only a very few men in this world who remain single of their own choice or selection. You say there is a hidden meaning in these words? There is, and it lies in the fact that there as often exists in a man's life a life-story as there does in that of a woman, with this difference: that the man outwardly shows it less, and more rarely tells of it even to his best men-friends. But such men retain their respect for woman as much as if a member of her sex shared their lives.

BUT upon the "woman-hater" sympathy is wasted. Men are always suspicious of such a man, and no type is more unpopular among his own sex. And let me say just here: that it is always a safe rule for women to have as little to do as possible with a man who is unpopular among men. There is, as a general thing, tenable ground for it. A man often sees in another man what a woman utterly fails to detect. A wife is generally safe to avoid those men whom her husband prefers not to have in his home. A man is rarely actuated those near whom her husband prefers not to bave in his home. A man is rarely actuated in his position toward another man by a petty spite. There is always some broader reason. The outer world is a wonderful de-veloper of character, where men are judged by their inner worth. It is frequently difficult for a wife to understand her husband's dislike for a wife to understand her husband's dislike for a certain man whose whole bearing seems so gracious and so gentlemanly in a drawing-room. But good manners do not always make a good man—and men know it. When one non dissects another, he rarely scratches the surface; he generally digs right down to the bone. And a "woman-hater" is never popular among men. They know that there is always something wrong with such a manis always something wrong with such a man, and there is.

A WOMAN-HATER never has a logical reason for his position. As a rule, he represents one of two spologies. Either he has never associated with women, and therefore does not know the sex; or, he judges the many by the few, and that "few" generally means one. There is an indexible rule in this respect: A man never becomes a woman-bater from coming into contact with the sex as a sex, unless he is singularly unfortunate in his selections. It is true that a man may now and then have his illusions roughly shaken, he may have set such a high standard impossible for any earthly being, man or wo-WOMAN-HATER never has a logical impossible for any earthly being, man or wo-man, to attain. He may occasionally meet one of a certain unfortunate type of women which undoubtedly exists, but no same man which undoubtedly exists, but no same man would condemn everything that clings and climbs in nature simply because one or two specimens of vine are poisonous to the touch. It has been my good fortune to know but few woman-haters, but from those I have known I have never been able to elicit a sensible reason for their position, and my correspondent in this case is not even the exception which proves the rule. which proves the rule.

THE pith of this particular correspondent's tirade against woman apparently is: that she has been told she is an angel. But he does not say who told her so. Certainly, I never did. Why, woman, blees her, is just brimful of little faults and weaknesses, and that is precisely why she is so interesting to man. If on some line morning woman should wake up to find herself perfect, the majority of men in this world would wake up to find themselves out of employment—the editor of The Ladus' Home Journal included. If women were access they would have If women were angels they would have precious little to do with us men, and I am inclined to think that we would be the heaviest losers in the transformation. Of course, women are not angels, and God didn't intend that this earth should be inhabited by angels. But I'll tell you one thing, my friend. God did wake women caused libra areas to make women caused. make woman enough like angels to make one make woman enough like angels to make one fact potent: that if the majority of men get to Heaven it will be because women take them there. They are angels in so far as they have saved thousands of men from going to ruin, and they will prevent many thousands more before they get through. It is always well to bear in mind that more men are saved by women them injured. Cynics abrus their well to bear in mind that more men are saved by women than injured. Cynics shrug their shoulders at such a statement as this, but that is because the world generally hears of the in-jured, and rarely of the saved. One renson why there are so many successful men in America is because there are so many good women. We men have a very "smart" way of talking about women sometimes. We like to air all their little faults and folkles, while woair all their little faults and foibles, while women only smile. And it is a very good thing for most of us that they don't do more. Poke fun at a woman for some little weakness, and she laughs. But just try it on a man, and see the result. Many of us like to tease, but few enjoy being tensed,

To secuse woman of "tyranny," as does my correspondent, is funny, and sounds rather new. Up to this time I had always heard that men practiced tyranny upon women. However, like the ostrich in the comic opera, my friend seems "to know it all." I think, however, he might have been a little more specific. Now, to discover that women really tyrannize over men would be simply delicious, as it would enable us to meet the enemy on her own grounds. And then it would give the funny (?) paragraphers about women something new, too, and Heaven would give the funny (?) paragraphers about women something new, too, and Heaven knows how sadly they need fresh material. Then he speaks of woman's "deceit." That is not quite so new. There are undoubtedly women who are deceitful, but then, too, there are men who can only be reached by artifice and deceit. A wife who practices de-ceit upon a good, straightforward husband is a woman with a superfluous quality and wastes her time. But I have known men upon whom straightforwardness in a woman is her time. But I have known men upon whom straightforwardness in a woman is simply wasted, and I should judge my correspondent does, too. Yet he has overlooked what I have noticed: that women have a way of accepting their lot in life with perfect resignation, and then adapting themselves to it. Again, despite all that has been said of woman as a deceiver, she makes, as a rule, only a poor success in that rôle. Only a very few women can lie successfully. [I know that is a hard word, but there are times when you have to call a spade a spade, and when one writes of woman-haters I think it is one of the "times:"] You can generally tell from a woman's face just to what extent she is applying the principles of domestic economy to the truth. A ciples of domestic economy to the truth. A woman's feelings are her worst enemy. Let her falsify, and her feelings will always rush to her face and tell you exactly how far she is diverging from the truth. The redder the face, the blacker the truth.

PELL her the unvarnished truth," shouts my correspondent at the close. What "unvarnished truth," my friend? That she has faults? Why, bless you, she knows it, much better than you do, too. And God gave her those very faults on purpose that she might better understand those of men. Now, what sympathy would a faulty man evoke from a perfect woman? Sie would not be able to understand him. But, as it is, in her own little faults a woman sees reflected the larger ones in a man, and she says to him when he has committed some mistake: "I know, I know, dear, but"—— and then she goes on to give him that safe and gentle advice which only a woman can give, and which means more to the right kind of a man than all the sormons preached since the dawn of creation.

Of course she "knows," and it is just because she does "know" that she is man's best helpmate, his safest adviser, and his most trusted friend. Henry Ward Beecher never so tenderly consoled with others until sorrows had nearly overwhelmed him. The most successful to the safety overwhelmed him. ful love scenes on the stage are depicted by actresses into whose lives have come the per-fectness of true love. What do any of us know until we are taught?

A ND now, my esteemed woman-hater, let me say a few words directly to you. Let me try and tell you that the happiest men in the world to-day are the men who believe that there are more good women than there are bad women. That a man's life is never complete in its fullest happiness until that life is made beautifully whole by the love of a true woman. To snap your fingers at true womanhood is to stamp yourself a narrow-minded bore, and make yourself odious to all respectable and common sense people. To say, as you do in your letter, that "every woman has her price," is to ape the expression of the first fool that God ever made, and after of the first fool that God ever made, and after whose pattern all the other fools in this world were created. Besides that, you cast a fling on her who bore you and suffered that you might live, and ingratitude is always the unpardonable sin in a son. Look, too, around you, and see whether, as you express it, "a man shows his weakness by linking his life to that of a woman." Begin at the creation and come down to the present day, and see who were the men that showed this "weakness." Then look at those who thought as you do,—what were their lives, and what imyou do,—what were their lives, and what im-press they left upon the world. I do not ask you to accept an individual statement, as this necessarily is; simply turn to history, to every-day life, to every modern instance of noble success, and then make up your mind what man has done without woman, and what he has accomplished with her counsel.

F EAVE aside all power of a woman's inand consider his helplessness. A man doesn't know how to take care of himself. He is not quite as helpless as a ship at sea without a quite as helpless as a ship at sea without a compass, but the simile can almost be truth-fully applied. The absence of a wife from bome has demonstrated to many a man how large and important a part she is of it, and of him. The right kind of a wife knows better what is essential to ber husband's comfort than he does himself—far better. He waits for illness to come, and then combats it, fre-quently when too late. But the wife sees the symptoms and uses preventives. Her keen symptoms and uses preventives. Her keen insight tells her that her busband is unwell when sometimes he is not conscious of it himself. Leave a man alone, and he will sit for hours in a pair of wet shoes, or wetter clothes. Not so when a woman is near. Women, we are told, know little of business, yet when business troubles come to a man what a com-fort a good wife can be. When be despairs, she is hopeful. By her efforts more perhaps, than by what she actually accomplishes, she brings new hope, new courage, and points the way to a new beginning. How often women have been the means of averling business dis-asters or multiplying failures with further im-plications the world will never know, but there are men who know it, and they are the men of whom to ask, "Is woman a failure?"

I T seemingly sounds very "smart" to utter cheap cynicisms about women; but I tell you, my friend, the man who utters them is always either a knave or a fool, sometimes both. Some men get to a point where they understand women; others never do. Women, my friend, you who scoff at them, are much better than men, how much better God alone may know who knows them as we cannot. To know woman, to properly understand her, to correctly interpret her best motives, is the deepest lesson that life can teach a man, and I throw no depreciating cloak over my sex in these words. Every man, with a fair and I throw no depreciating cleak over my sex in these words. Every man, with a fair mind, who clasps a good woman to his breast and calls her mother, wife, or sister, will understand their import. How a man can be a hater of woman I cannot conceive when so much can be added to his life. Nothing is such an incentive to a man to make the best of himself as the knowledge that there is some one in this world who believes he is just the cleverest fellow alive; that there are eyes, far lovelier than all the stars in Heaven to him, which sparkle at his coming; that there is a loving, womanly heart which beats quicker at the sound of his footstep; that there is a nature ever ready to sympathize with him in his troubles and gladden at his victories—a dear, sweet, loving woman, who hughs with him when he laughs, and puts her soft and loving arms around him when he is in trouble, rouses him to his better self, making him feel that, after all, this world is not such a bad place to live in. This, as many a man knows, is not a peture drawn from fancy; it finds its living reflection in thousands of homes where men are happiest and where women are most this land, and across the sea, in homes where men are happiest and where women are most

THE bachelor is ofttimes happy in his single state, that is, for a bachelor. He may console himself with the reflection that he accounts only to himself, that he is his own master, can go where he will and do as be chooses so long as he obeys the laws of society and the land; but in his heart he knows that he is but half of a perfect being. He knows that there is something lacking in his life which, if supplied, would make the perfect whole. Business success may come to him, wealth may be his; but some way or other he feels the absence of some one to enjoy his successes with him. He wonders why it is that he does not always put forth his best it is that he does not always put forth his hest efforts. He marvels whether, after all, a man does not need something outside of his self to draw him on and incite him to his utmost exertions. He may be courted for his money, he may have friendships innumerable, every confort may be in his rooms; yet moments come to him when persistent thought points come to him when persistent thought points to something lacking in his life to round it out. Travel as he will, live on the best the world can provide, he feels as I have heard it said of the millionaire owner of one of the greatest newspapers in the land, roaming from one land to another, that few men are ofttimes more miserable in their daily lives as is he. He has everything the heart can wish for; more wealth than he can spend; costly residences on this side of the ocean and on the other; swift yachts are his, and swifter horses. Yet, while driving one day and seeing in a neighboring carriage a man of his acquaintance sitting beside a devoted wife and two children, he said to a friend; "That man's whole fortune is not one-half of my yearly income, and yet his life is a far happier one." And when his friend asked him in what the other's happiness exceeded his, James Gordon Bennett replied; "In having a good wife, and a lovely child for each knee."

THE woman-hater has but few followers THE woman-hater has but few followers; he is always with the minority, and this is ever a pleasant reflection, although disagreeable to him. I should think. The American man respects woman and all that is good in womanhood. Through her he has found it possible to accomplish what he has. He may wonder now and then a little whether she is not awfully expensive. Her ways may not always be his ways. Occasionally he may frown a little, and perhaps scold for a few moments. He may leave home morning and go to his office without the customary farewell kiss. He may sometimes get provoked because she is "so slow in getting ready" when he goes out with her. He may want to stay home when she wants to go out; he may be led to say once in a great while: "Women are queer, and you are one of the queerest!" He may fly into a passion only to feel sorry for it afterward; he may feel piqued at times because she isn't home when he comes from the office; that dinner is not ready just at the precise moment when he wants it; that she wants to retire about three hours earlier than he does. But "after all," he says to himself, "I tell you what, my wife wants it; that she wants to retire about three hours earlier than he does. But "after all," he says to himself, "I tell you what, my wife is an angel. She always seems to know what is best for me, and what is not. She looks at nothing in the light of a sacrifice. When I have been tired for three hours she keeps going. Well, she is my daily joy; sick, my comfort, and the best of nurses; in trouble, my star of hope; when I want to be rash, she is cautious. I could stake my life on the honesty of a man; could stake my life on the honesty of a man; she, at a glance, has read his innermost thoughts and knows his character. And take thoughts and knows as constant.

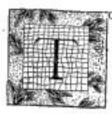

And the larger in, year out, she is the most patient, most loving and dearest of women. Faults?

Of course she has, but so have I—lots of them, too. I notice all she has, but someway or other she never seems to see mine, and talks only of my best side. And, after all, is she not right?" And then, as a pair of arms are right?" And then, as a pair of arms are twined round him from behind, as he sits in a comfortable chair, a soft, fluffy sleeve just rubs gently against his face, a pair of eyes look into his eyes as he raises them, a pair into his eyes as he raises them, a pair of his lovingly press his, a gentle, loving voice says; "The yea know, dear, you look very comfort-able and happy," everything that is good swells up in him and finds its expression in the typical Americanism:
"You bet I am!"

But the woman-hatersits alone by Google

"Perhaps it may turn out a song, Perhaps turn out a sermon.

everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the sun. This statement is not original with me; it is a spark of wisdom from the brain of King Solomon, whose forte lav in tell-ing just how the thing should be done, and then doing it some other way. This is circum-stantial evidence that Solomon was a man, He was the monarch who gave such excellent advice about the training of boys, and then advice about the training of boys, and then raised up a family of young roughs, reckless, pig-beaded, so utterly unondurable that four-fifths of all Israel couldn't live with one of them, and the other fifth didn't want to, but sort of had to, because they couldn't get away without taking Rehoboam with them. But, however unpalatable Solomon's medicine may have been to bisself it was med medicine. have been to himself, it was good medicine, and if he had only taken it a little more regularly he would not have "hated all his labor which he had taken under the sun." It wasn't really his labor that made him "go about to cause his heart to despair," it was the fun he had.

WISDOM FROM A SAVAGE BREAST

WISDOM FROM A SAVAGE BREAST

But to get back to my text, which I haven't the least intention of doing. How comfortable it would make some lives that are "cumbered with much serving," how light it would make some bardens now grievous to be borne, how much more leisure it would give to so many who "are careful and troubled about many things," if we would remember that "there is a senson and a time to every purpose under heaven," Once a wild and unlettered savage, who made his toilet in rade imitation of his refined and most Christian sister, patting on a complexion that he could change when he grew their dof it, dressing himsever, parting on a complexion that he could change when he grew tired of it, dressing himself in skins of wild beasts until he resembled a native-born "furriner," affecting a feather boa of his own design, and wearing many other peoples' hair, said to a white man who gave, as an excuse for a violated contract, the statement—less or not quite so true—that he statement—less or not quite so true—that be didn't have enough time, "You have all the time there is," And the red Injun was correct.

"I HAVE SO LITTLE TIME," SHE SAID

TWERY woman in America has just that unuch time. And nobody has any more. Twenty-four hours a day; that's all there is. Six working days a week; that's all you can get unless you steal from Sunday, and if your business requires you to steal either time or money, you'd better give it up and get into something with more honesty and less profit in it. What you can't finish this week post-pone until next, or forever; and what sticks something with more honesty and less profit in it. What you can't finish this week postpose until next, or forever; and what sticks out over the end of the year saw off and put in the stove. Four seasons have passed and that's all there is. You must make a fresh start every year. It isn't an easy matter to learn how to do this, but you've got to learn it sometime, either before you die or when you die; why not learn early and get the good and the comfort of it? Every day of my life the evening is apt to find something on my programme that I haven't got to. I say, "Maybe I won't do that to-morrow," and as a rule I don't. I go to sleep and forget about it. Every year closes with uncompleted work on my hands, and that year ends that work. I'm not going to drug it along with me into a new year. I used to do that, so that about half the time I was working six weeks ago instead of to-day, and dragging, wearisome business it was. When you die there will be unfinished work and reveled-out plans on your hands. Then what are you going to do? Take it to heaven with you and bother and drug along with it there? Not much you won't. Well, then, why not learn to drop some of it here? It is a lesson not so easily learned, but, once learned, it is more refreshing than a glass of cool milk to the lips of the man with the grip. man with the grip.

IN THE "CATCHING-UP" BUSINESS

IN THE "CATCHING-UP" BUSINESS

TELL you, daughters of Eve, I just quit the "catching-up" business. Things that don't get themselves done in their own time I will not have lumbering along on some other thing's time. Am I going to build a conservatory about an apple tree in December because it didn't bloom in May? Hardly. I'm going to have a toboggan shule on the orchard hillside in December, and I don't want any blooming trees in the way. A friend in Los Angeles said to me one warm Jacuary day. Angeles said to me one warm January day, "Oh, if you had only been here Christmas; we had ripe strawberries." I was surprised. but I was glad I wasn't there. I don't want strawberries on Christmas. I want snow a foot deep, jingling sleigh-bells and a tingle of frost in the air; a winter sun, clear as the North star, or a moon white as the snow and cold as a "spare room." Then I can sit at my North star, or a moon white as the snow and cold as a "spare room." Then I can sit at my window in a room made cozy by an open wood fire and warm by a register, and enjoy Christmas-tide. I am told there is another way of enjoying it, by which twice as much joy can be got out of it, but as it takes two to enjoy it that way it seems to me the average result is about the same.

A CONTRACTOR OF THE PARTY OF TH

EATING STRAWBERRIES AT CHRISTMAS

H, beloved, that's what makes life heavy and dragged out for so many of us. We waste many precious months trying to ripen strawberries at Christmas, whereas if we would just let them alone, and let the snow fall on them and the winter winds rave over fail on them and the winter winds rave over them, they would ripen of themselves in July. And then; ah, then they would be strawberries. Once I ate a strawberry at Christmas. A man worth seven million dollars gave it to the be had ripened some in his conservatory. I had to eat it because he stood and watched me, and I couldn't do mything else. It seems he had given some to other friends and afterward found them under the sofn—the strawberries, not the friends. The latter were picked up further down the road. Did you ever taste a nice, ripe olive fresh from the tree? Never? Well, my friend you just treat yourself to one sometime. A raw olive would be a good thing to take the taste of a conservatory strawberry out of your mouth. And what would take away the taste of the raw olive? Nothing in this world. Once you bite a green olive, and the day you die the taste thereof will still be lingering around your insulted palate. be lingering around your insulted palate.

GETTING INTO EVERYBODY'S WAY

WHY, nothing in this world gets in every-body's way like belated work. Get belated on a road and lose your way; after the right time for traveling is past there is the right time for traveling is past there is nothing you can question; the people are in bed, the tinger-boards are in the dark, only the dogs are nawke, they swarm out upon you when you hail a house; the smaller the house the bigger and meaner the dogs; they drown your "Hallo, the house!" in their hideous yelping and barking; they try to jump into the wagon. Had you stopped at sunset and started in afresh next morning, you would have saved time, worry, temper and nerves. Let one train on a milway lose time. There are a hondred trains running smoothly on that line until that one gets off its own time. Then, somehow, it gets in everybody's way. that line until that one gets off its own time. Then, somehow, it gets in everybody's way, Lumbering freights, slow-moving gravel-trains, reckless "wild trains" jumping into the spaces of time left by the regulars and skipping along without a jar, ragged-looking construction-trains, ominous-looking," wreckers" and swift-winged expresses—everything getting along with everything else until this one train loses its own time and gets onto somebody's else. Then there is trouble and veration all round, until at last the slow train is condemned as a general nuisance, is abandoned, losing all its general nuisance, is abandoned, losing all its own rights, and is run as a second section of No. 72, 72 being a stock express, with cattle and logs for the delicious Communipaw stock-yards.

HOW I TRIED LIVING BY RULE

I DON'T know that it is possible to divide the day into sections and assign certain duties to certain boars, without variation.
Even the mariner's compass has to have a little allowance. Living by iron-bound schedule is possible only at school, in the penitentiary, and some painfully well-regulated homes.
One time I resolved to live by rule. I made the rules myself, so as not to get them too hard. I wrote a programme for a month about. I went to bed that night with such a conceited feeling of condescending goodness that I either forgot to say my prayers, or thought that in the case of such a superior man they were neither expected nor required, I have forgotten which. Six A. M. was the hour set down on my programme at which all the clocks in the world were to strike the hour of the new era, and the solar system was to begin running on my schedule. I think perhaps the new time-cards didn't reach some of the outlying planets. At any rate some mortal person came to my bedroom door at 7.45
A. M., and suggested that cold coffee and muffins would be served after 8 o'clock. I arose without remark and dressed on "72's" DON'T know that it is possible to divide a. a., and suggested that cold collect an instantial without remark and dressed on "72's" time. The bright smile that was scheduled to precede my benevolent-looking countenance into the breakfast-room had been side-tracked somewhere, and in its place I wore for a headlight an expression of counte were for a headlight an expression of counte-nance. It is not necessary to specify which one. I also took my place with a tone of voice which I grieve to say elicited comment. I will not follow the day's journey in detail. It is too harrowing. But the next morning I started all right; early rising, leisure toilet, moment of tranquil meditation, bright smile, changed write and all, not through breakfast moment of tranquil meditation, bright smile, cheerful voice and all; got through breakfast like a scraph and went to my lair to write from that "new inkstand," thinking how pleased Mr. Bok would be to see my "copy" on schedule time, unless he should fall dead from ansazement. Somebody thundered the forbidden knock at my door, "Have you forgotten that you lecture in Faraway Furlong to-night? Twenty minutes to train time!" I packed my valise as men bale hay, caught the train, didn't get home again that month, and if Mr. Bok fell dead I got a posthumous letter from him that made my hair curl for a week. I don't want any more letters from dead editors. Live ones are bad enough, but the dead ones fairly bowl—at least Mr. Bok has the most uncomfortable manner of "turn-ing 'round" in bis coffin of any dead man I

THE WOMAN WITHOUT A VOICE

ONE of the saddest spectacles I ever laughed at—and I was sorry I did it, too—was exhibited in the house of a man I do not like very well. One of the best and sweetest women in the world lost what very few women can spare without missing it; she lost her voice. A severe cold had shredded it down to a phantom of a rehister world in the can spare without missing it; she lost her voice. A severe cold had sliredded it down to a phantom of a whisper, such as people in the high-priced pews use during the collection. It made the day very irksome to her, because when she wanted anybody, or bodies, from an adjoining room, she couldn't call softly to them; she had to leant them up, and chase him around until she caught her, and then hold him by the sleeve until she could whisper to her what she wanted him to do, and she had to wait, no matter how much bis other duties might be pressing her. There is a good deal of gender and number in that sentence, but there has to be to cover all the emergencies, for it was a household of men, women and children. It was great fun for the family, But after a while she grew tired of her monologue, and added a little hand-bell to her lines. When she tinkled this everybody had to drop everything and see what and whom she wanted, because the bell could not speak anybody's mane. This was great fun for the invalid, and teaches us how easily we may find the silver lining in the pocket of a cloud, after we have learned the servet of the cloud-maker. But the play reached the climax of invalid, and tenches us how easily we may find the silver lining in the pocket of a cloud, after we have learned the secret of the cloud-maker. But the play reached the climax of its action—it had very little dialogue—in the afternoon. Having lost her voice the speech-less prima-donna naturally became a little careless about her tones, and in descending the stairs made a half step in the wrong place and fell down the rest of the way. Three people, a man, a woman, and a boy saw her fall. Now, just think of it, a woman falling down stairs without being able to scream. It was terrible. And just fancy a man and a woman and a boy standing at the foot of the stairway screaming for her: the man screaming in a rearing base, the woman in a shrill soprano, very well sustained, and the boy—whose voice was changing—doing his best in a broken range from counter-tenor to a graff contraint. There is a division of labor for you! Nature abhors a vacuum, so when that woman fell down stairs, Nature, knowing how marrod and imperfect would be the performance without screaming, had the chorus in their places. I tell you, my sister, you've got to get up before dawn now to get ahead of Nature. She's spry, she is, even if she is centuries old. centuries old.

THE VOCALIZATION OF A DEAF MUTE

T ONCE saw a deef mute, running to catch a train, fall over a baggage-truck that stood with extended arms right in his way. And if ever you fell over a baggage-truck, or an empty wheelbarrow, which is much the same thing, you know how long it takes you to fall down, and how much longer it takes you to get up, and how much stage room you must have for both performances and what a ment down, and how much longer is taken you to get up, and how much stage room you must have for both performances, and what a great scope there is for action and elocution. Tele-scope, you might say. Well, this poor deaf and damb man got to his feet with our as-sistance after the train was out of sight; he opened his mute lips for one silent, but ex-pressive moment, and then picked up a piece of board and beat like mad on the side of an empty box car until the police made him stop. "Because he was so angry?" Well, not that exactly; just because the only way in which he could properly express his feelings was by making a noise. He couldn't speak, and yet he was really full of utterance.

A SORT OF DIGITAL DEPRESSION

DID you ever notice, when a man smites his thumb with a hammer, while putting down a carpet under wifely supervision and criticism, how quickly he thrusts the bruised and throbbing member into his ready mouth? Poople think it is because the application is soothing. But no; it is an involuntary movement, same as winking. The man cannot help it. Nature knows what the man would be ant to say under the circumstances. would be apt to say under the circumstances, and so she has provided him with a stopper, and has ordained that whenever he hits his thumb hard enough to hurt—and it doesn't take very much to nearly kill a man when he is doing something he doesn't want to—by a sort of interlocking system the thumb flies into his mouth and stops him up, so that he can't say anything. Some men whom you and I know should be provided with an extra thumb which they might carry about in their hand all the time it wasn't in active use. It would be a great thing, wouldn't it?

THE MAN OF '92 THE bird unes in its gilded cage, And I in life's maturer age Sigh for my lost, free childhood.

For oh, my sister came to-day— I could not tell her "No, sis;" She were my Derby hat away And went to the Sorosis.

And then before I was half dressed, This incident relating.

My niece put on my winter vest,
Pur-trimmed it, and went skating.

But "Man is than, and who is more?"

Woman! For while yet talking My dangeter my new reefer wore Out with a young man, walking.

And last of all, and worst, alack!
My wife—all, was it kind to—Bring back, oh bring my trousers back,
And vote if you've a mind to!

Robert J. Burdette

THE CHRISTIAN UNION is a Family paper for wide-awake people. It is a Thinker's paper; a Worker's paper; a Young Folks' paper; a Story paper; a Religious paper; a Literary paper.

The Silver Certificate will secure a short term subscription on very favorable terms. It has money value—if you want it. Remember that it will be sent free of charge.

Sterling Silver Inhald Spaons and Porks have pieces of Solid Silver inhald in the backs of the lower and handle. All wear positively prevented at these points. Ask your Jeweler for them, or send for Catalogue. Take no substitute.

THE HOLMES & EDWARDS SILVER CO., Bridgeport, Cons.,

PALACE ORGANS.

Over 50,000 sold during the last 20 years.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE. THE LORING & BLAKE

ORGAN CO., WONCESTER, MASS.

Waukenhose

The New Shape in stockings. Save discomfort and darning. Ingrowing nails, corns, bunions, hot and cold feet are often caused by crowding the toes into the pointed end of the old-style stocking. Waukenhose allow the toes their natural positions. The big toe hav-ing room enough stays inside. Would you like an illustrated price-list free? Waukenhose Co., 76 Chauncey St., Boston.

GEO. F. BARBER & CO., Architects, Knoaville, Team.

35 N. EMHTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA, P. 8" FIRST GOLD MORTGAGES. Payable is Gold. City and Farm Louis. Best of security. Highest self-interest, Address TATORA INVESTRENT 10. Tarona, Wash.

The purpose of this Department is to bring the members of the Order of The King's Daughters and its President into closer relations by personal and familiar "Talks" and "Chats." All letters from the "Daughters" bearing upon this one and special purpose owly, should be addressed to MRS. BOTTOME, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, and she will be glad to receive them. Please do not, however, send letters to MRS. BOTTOME concerning membership in the Order, or business communications of any mature. All such should be addressed direct to the headquarters of the order, 158 West Twenty-third Street, New York city, and prompt attention will be given.

HEART TO HEART TALKS

HIS blowing, cold month of March is the pathway that leads to the rose. A few more weeks and it will be April, and that means so near the month when we shall have the lily of the valley. And it is so with our interior life; March seems to be the most fitting emblem of it; such disagreeable winds blow. Everything seems so against you. You feel so miserable. Now, I want to tell you that though it may be March outside, you can have May or June within. against you. You feel so miserable. Now, I want to tell you that though it may be March outside, you can have May or June within. Christianity is no failure. The trouble is you have not tested it. You haven't really the kingdom within you. You reply, "I belong to the church, I read my Bible," etc. Now all that you may do, and know but little of Christianity, Can you find no one who has less than you have? Is there no one you can cheer in the least? Do you ever think that it will not be always March? Do you hope? Are you thankful? You say, "What have I to be thankful for?" as I have heard some people say. Ah, where there is the spirit of thankfulness, the occasions are never wanting. Now, may I tell you what is the real matter with you? The inside machinery is all out of order. Take it to your Maker to have it put in order. Sometimes it seems to me as if the only needed prayer was, "Lord, open my eyes." Oh, the magnificent opportunities that are ours every day of our lives of serving the suffering and unfortunate all around us! all around us!

THE VALUE OF UNREST

GOD will help you, and you will not sink in the waters of earthly prosperity. Then there is a more subtle form of temptation and there is a more subtle form of temptation and the most dangerous of all to my mind, and that is to be satisfied with the blessings that are yours, and a feeling of indifference creeps over the heart, and though no one would want to say it, a kind of independence of God and spiritual things. Satisfied with earth. Oh, what would become of such if God did not tear up their nests and make them learn to fly, and send them March with its rough winds. I have come to value unrest. It lends to the only rest, to the only one who can give rest. My dear, dear Daughters, I have lived so long, I know so much about heart life, at least, that I have so many secrets to tell you, that sometimes as I read your letters I find myself wishing I might live ten more years to help your dear, troubled, struggling souls, and to tell you that I know there is something wonderful maiting for you. You will get into May and June by the way of March.

THE HELP THAT COMETH FROM ABOVE

THIS moment I lifted my eyes from the page while writing, and saw the picture I am so fond of, the little lamb in the arms of the Good Shepherd. Poor little lamb, hurt, I think, and the lambs and sheep all around the tender shepherd. And is that a picture of God? Yes, it is. Christ came to reveal God. The deepest trouble with all of us is that we do not understand God. I read in a paper vesterday that "the woman that understands." do not understand God. I read in a paper yesterday that "the woman that understands a man is the woman that he loves." I said, "Yes, I think that is so," And then I could not see why it should not be turned round "The man that a woman loves is the man that understands her." And then a very wonderful word came to my mind from the most wonderful of books, "Thus saith the Lord. Let not the wise man giver in his wisdom. Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches. But let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth Me; that I am the Lord which exercise loving-kindness, judg-ment and righteousness in the earth, for in these things do I delight, saith the Lord." Now, I would like my circle for the next month to ponder these two verses. You must know God. You must understand that he is Love: and the root of most, if not all, of your troubles will be at an end.

SHE HATH DONE WHAT SHE COULD

HAVE just read the loveliest letter from HAVE just read the loveliest letter from one of my circle telling me of a friend of hers, a stranger in the city of New York, and wanting to introduce me to her. All I could think as I read that letter was: What a queenly woman. And she is a servant in a boarding-house, Oh, the princely natures that are earning their daily bread. One young girl says to me, "Do speak an encouraging word to us servants." My dear sisters, all I can say is "not well your part:" be good servants; do your very best; do it In His Name. Be a perfect servant. Be dignified.

A WORD TO THE WORLDLY

BUT other classes are represented in my D circle. Around some of you the chill-ing winds of worldliness blow-low aims, uning winds of worldliness blow—low aims, unworthy desires, no thought or care of God in those you truly love, and you know you must be true. You have no help for the higher path from those who should help you; everything is provided for the physical, while the best in you is so hungry, and at times you feel as it you would starve to death. But you must not die. You must use your will and say "I will not lose myself. I will not be a worldly woman. No power can make me that.
Whatever have been my mistakes, whatever my disappointments may have been, I will hold on to myself. I will be a Christian, I will be Christ-like. I will be forgiving."

I KNOW EXACTLY WHAT I WANT

THE words were uttered by a daughter to a mother. I did not see their faces, but I could not help hearing all the conversation that took place in the sent behind me before the car started. "Yes!" I said to myself as I beard the words I know exactly what I want, "there is a great advantage in knowing exactly what one wants." She assured her mother that all she could say to the contrary would not change her in the least. She had evidently made a study of the subject; she had seen, she said, a French dress, and she had made up her mind to have one exactly like it. As the car started off I fell to thinking, "what a pity that on vital lines, the lines ing, "what a gity that on vital lines, the lines of the imperishable, there should not be this decision." The pattern having been seen and the mind made up to have one exactly like it. There is apt to be such a purposeless-ness and indecision—a kind of taking what comes along. It seems to me we have need to do, in regard to character, just what that young girl had done in reference to her dress. She had looked at the different styles, she had seen what she wanted and she was determined to have it. I am sure that the need of to-day seen what she wanted and she was determined to have it. I am sure that the need of to-day is for us to look at the pattern, make a study of what Christ did when He dwelt among us. As some one says, "His whole biography was in the few words, 'He went about doing good.'" He loved little children, loved them enough to take them up in His arms. And there are so many little children to be cared for and loved. I was so shocked the other day when told by a clergy man that the matron of an institution, very well known, said that it was no uncommon thing for little children not two years of age to die of broken hearts. This clergyman was called to attend the funeral of one of these little children, and when he asked the matron the cause of the death she simply said, "a broken heart." He was greatly moved, but the matron said, "Do you see that little girl." pointing to a child of three, "she will go that way." The clergyman went over to the child and kneeling on one knee commenced to talk with the sweetlooking child with such sad, sad eyes. He told her of his own little girl and how she fed the chickens every day, but no sooner did he say chickens than the child sprang toward. the chickens every day, but no sooner did he say chickens than the child sprang toward him and throwing her arms around his neck sobbed as if her heart would break. That child wanted to be taken up in human arms and loved. "He took them up in His arms." I am so glad we are going to have homes for little children instead of institutions.

SELECT A PATTERN

DAUGHTERS, the one thing needful for say, "I know exactly what I want; I want to be like Him." The time has passed, as I have be like Him." The time has passed, as I have said again and again, for sitting in comfortable churches and singing, "Rescue the perishing." "Care for the dying." We must go out and do it. I know the perishing can be rescued. I know that touched by a loving heart, wakened by kindness, hearts that were broken will vibrate again. I saw as fine a young man a few nights ago as I could wish to look at, and not two two vers since he entered our Res. and not two years since he entered our Rescue Mission a miserable tramp—only came in, cue Mission a miserable tramp—only came in, as he said, to get a cup of coffee and sandwich, free, for he had no noney—and the sound of a woman's voice brought back memories of other days. Do not get discouraged; follow your pattern; do not be drawn away for an in-stant from following in His footsteps. He loves the race, He died for all, and it is true the helping of man is the best serving of God, "He's tree to God who's tree to man, whenever wrong done homblest and the weakest 'neath the all-beholding sun;

That wrong is also done to us, and they are slaves must base Whose love of right is for themselves, and not for all the race."

Keep close to the pattern. Let us say, "I know exactly what I want—to be like Him, like my Pattern!"

THE HELP THAT COMETH FROM ABOVE

HAVE you ever thought how many things, how many people have said to you in your life come to me I I do not mean in so many words, but they have attracted you and you have gone to them, in thought, in desire, if in no other way, perhaps; you have really come to possess them for a time. Now, what I want you to ask yourself is whether in anywant you to ask yourself is whether in anything, wealth, honor or in human love even, have you found unending rest for your son!? I often think of the poor heathen who took the missionary into a private room and showed her a long row of idols, and told the missionary she had worshiped every one of them, and in her vexation at her disappointment in them she struck them. Deep lesson there, isn't there? Then she said: "Tell me of the man you worship, your God," and the missionary told her of the One who said "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," I used to sing a little verse in the long ago that had a wonderful meaning to me: a wonderful meaning to me :

"When the poor heart with angulah learns, That earthly props resigned must be, And from each broken citient turns, How sweet the accents, Come to Me."

You know that God complained of His ancient people that they had forsaken Him, the fountain of living waters, and had bewn out to themselves cisterns, broken cisterns that could hold no water. Once in a while, I find it profitable to take a little excursion in thought and take a look at the cisterns that in my life. I have hewn out; there is no water in them, they are broken cisterns. And then I say softly in the language of Miss Waring;

The waters of the earth have falled And I am thiesty still. I thirst for springs of beavenly life And here all day they rise. I seek the treasure of Thy love And dress at hand it lies. And a sweet song is in my heart To long-leved misce set. Glory to Thee for all the grace I have not tasted yet.

HOW YOU CAN ENJOY THE BIBLE

SUPPOSE you had a need, a deep need.

Many of you write me you are orphans; you have neither father nor mother. Ah me, how well I remember when my father died; it seemed as if nothing would ever look the same again. Even the grass did not look as green. And I used to wonder whenever I saw a bit of crase whether the wearer had lost her father. Well, I found in the Bible this world: "a father of the fatherless is God," and I believed it and if anybody had asked me at that time if I enjoyed the Bible I should have answered, "Why, it was in the Bible I read that God was the father of fatherless children, and can you wonder I enjoy that!" Now, that God was the father of fatherless chouren, and can you wonder I enjoy that!" Now, do you all see what I mean? You enjoy so much of the Bible as expresses your own experience. The Bible told you this fact; the fact existed before the Bible was written. A little girl said she could not see why Columbus allowed himself to have such a dreadful time discovering this continent; if Columbus allowed himself to have such a drendful time discovering this continent; if he had only looked on the map he would have known all about it. But the map was written after he discovered America, and it is there because of the fact. There would not be so much trouble about the Bible if it was regarded as a map, a guide book; it tells you where to go and what to do, a book to be used. We study our guide books to find out the way to go, and we go. I have read in my guide book about the Alps, and I have seen them! And the guide book was for the purpose of telling me how to get to the Alps. Do you telling me how to get to the Alps. Do you see my meaning? You might as well ask me how do I enjoy my check-book. I answer, by taking it to the bank and getting the money, and in the use of my money comes my joy.

JUST WHAT WE NEED

AM not like a friend of mine who says he A enjoys reading the book of Revelation every Sunday morning before breakfast; it sounds so grand though he has no idea what sounds so grand though he has no idea what it means! And yet, when he comes to the word "There shall be no more pain," he must stop, I think, just there and he so glad that the time will come when that will be falfilled. I am not educated in classical music, so when I heard Christine Nilsson sing "Way down upon the Swance River" or Patti sing "Home, Sweet Home," ah, I understood those songs and they were more to me than all the rest. And so I do not understand as yet much of the Bible, but as I read and hear read "Let not your heart be troubled" or "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want," I know this is just what I need, and I love the book that holds the music of my heart. And so do you if you stop long enough to And so do you if you stop long enough to think of it. I have found in the Bible an "all-sufficient rule for faith and practice," and the more you practice what it teaches the more you will enjoy it.

TO THOSE WHO DOUBT

NOW, a word to my skeptical friends who NOW, a word to my skeptical friends who write me. I have great sympathy for honest doubt, for the people who want to believe and cannot, for those who have broken with their traditional faith, and are in a painful state of mind. I advise you to get a little book recently published, cailed "The Programme of Christianity" by Henry Drummond. You can order it from your book store, or from the Book Department of The Labirs' Home Journal. The Society of the King's Daughters and the aims it would accomplish will mean more to you after reading it than ever before. it than ever before.

B. & B. DRY GOODS

Qualities differ-so do prices for the same qualities. There's a long price and a short price. We're doing business and more of it every day on the short price principle.

It would be injudicious on our part to spend money for space in this JOURNAL, were we not sure that the

Styles, Fabrics and Prices

of the goods we offer are right-all better and more to your interest than you are now getting.

Write for samples, and send us one order for anything in the Dry Goods line which you may need, and demonstrate that it's to your interest to trade with us through our

Mail Order Department

We've given almost 23 years' study to this branch of our business. With us, it's no experiment.

Large and elegant assortments of new

Spring Dress Woolens:

250., 350., 500., 750., $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $2.00 a yard.

Choicest 1892 styles of

India Silks All-Wool French Challies Anderson Ginghams

Illustrated Spring Catalogue and Fashion Journal ready about March 15-free. Write for copy. Correspondence Invited.

BOGGS & BUHL

115, 117, 119, 121 Federal Street ALLEGHENY, PA.

WHY?

Because it Supports Stockings and Underelethes from the SHOULDERS, and has no stiff cords; fits with perfect case and freedem. Elegan, and strictly hygienic.
Sold by leading dealers.

LADY CANVASSERS WANTED.

LEF Send for Hustrated Price List, 22
THE FOT, HARMON & CHADWICE CO., Brocklyn, N. E.

THE "CHIC"

DRESS LIFTER (PATESTED) USED BY

H. R. H. THE PRINCESS OF WALES, Mrs. W. E. GLADSTONE, Madame ADELINA PATTI,

Etc., Etc., with Testimonials.

To be had from Leading Dry Goods Stores. Single Sect. 50 etc.; Bouble het, 60 etc. A Special Adjustment for trained skirts. Particulars with every set. Ment for trialment skirts. Particulars with every set.

G. H. LANGE & CO., ENGLAND,
NEW YORK OFFICE, 108 WORTH STREET, City.

"PARTED BANG."

Plade of natural CURLY HAIR guaranteed becoming to ladies the wear their hair parted, $64 im. according to side and color. Beautifulg Made, high preparation, $62. Bale Goods, Connection, etc., went C. O. D. angularyer, Seed to the manufacturer for its preparation of the connection price-lines. E. BERNHAM, 21:

FASHIONABLE HAIR.

We will mail goods to reliable parties throughout the United States for approval. The new-est styles and beet of goods at lowest prices. No money re-quired ontil they are received. No obligation to keep modes if unsatisfactory. Send for circular.

JOHN MEDINA.

go through my daily life, I am constantly amazed at am constantly amazed at the spirit of harsh criticism of others which is heard on so many sides. You and I both hear people tear to pieces reputations that have been a quarter of a century forming. Men, and women, too, seize with avidity evil reports, and talk about them as if they were a perfect relish. Society becomes in this wise a great slaughter-house, in which honorable names are strangulated and butchered. When a woman begins to totter a little in her integrity, or Christian principle, instead of gathering around to steady her, and keep her from complete prostration, some of us come out from our homes and our associations to out from our homes and our associations to push her flat down.

push her flat down.

Tale-bearers almost always deal in superiatives. If a woman shows a little impatience, they say she was livid with rage. If a man is seen taking a single glass, they call him a besotted inebriate. They put the blow-pipe of their exaggeration into the slightest inconsistency, and blow till the cheeks are distency, and the bubble swells, and the story is rounded into a great orb in which swim all the rainbows of conceit, and you can see almost anything you want to see. They are hounds, good for nothing but a chase.

HOW TO MEET EVIL REPORTS

Now, my friends, when we hear evil of any one, let us suspend judgment. Do not let us decide until we have heard the man's defence. Do not run out to meet every heated whelp of malice that runs with its head down and its tongue out. The probability is that it is mad, and will only bite those who attempt to entertain it. Let us be lenient with the fallen. You see a sister fall, and say, "Poor woman! I never could have done that!" Perhaps you could not, because your termstation does not because your termstation does not because the that that!" Perhaps you could not because your temptation does not happen to be in that direction; but you have done things in the course of your life that these fallen women course of your life that these fallen women would never have done, simply because their temptation was not in that direction. Do not say in boasting, "I never could have done such a thing as that!" You don't know what you would do if sufficiently tempted. You have an infinite soul force. If grace direct it, a force for the right; if evil influences seize upon it, a terrific force for the wrong. There are passions within your soul that have never been unchained. Look out if once they slip their cables.

WHEN WE SEEK TO CRITICISE OTHERS

I'v our criticism of others, let us remember I that we have faults which our friends have to excuse. How much would be left of us if all those who see inconsistencies in us should chip away from our character and reputation? It is an invariable rule that those who make the roughest work with the names of others are those who have them-selves the most imperfections. The larger the seves the most imperfections. The inger the beam in your own eye, the more anxious are you about the mote in somebody's else eye. Instead of going about town shashing this woman's bad temper and the other woman's falsity, this woman's hypocrisy and that one's indiscretion, go home with the Ten Command-ments as a monitor, and make out a list of ments as a monitor, and make out a list of your own derelictions. The best way to keep a whole city clean is for every housekeeper to scrub her own door steps. Don't look for the faults in others; see if you cannot find out their good traits their good traits.

MEASURED BY YOUR OWN YARDSTICK

OUR mode of deciding upon others will be the mode which others will employ in the mose word stress will employ in deciding upon us. A harsh man, with cast-iron-criticisms, will some day meet cast iron. Your flay others, and others will flay you. Let one of these merclless critics of character, Let one of these merclless critics of character, overcome by temptation, some day step a little out of the right path, and he will find himself in hail storms of denunciation. You have not the entire monopoly of spikes, and goods, and pincers. "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again." More than all, we ought to be induced away from all harshness by the fact that we ourselves are to be brought into high tribunal at the last, and that he shall have judgment without mercy that hath shown no mercy. You who are accustomed, with rough grip, violently to shake others for their misdeeds, waiting for no palliations, and listening to no appeals, what will become of you when, at last, in that day which will surely come to you, with all your imperfections, you appear at the bar of your Makers?

IN THE MIDST OF OUR PRAYERS

AN you ever keep your mind ten minutes While you are praying your store comes in, your kitchen comes in, your losses and gains come in. The minister spreads his hands for prayer, and you put your head on the back of the pew in front, and travel round the world in five minutes. A brother rises in on one supplication? Few of us can, the back of the pew in front, and travel round the world in five minutes. A brother rises in prayer-meeting to lead in supplication. After he has began the door slams, and you peep through your fingers to see who has come in. You say to yourself, "What a finely expressed prayer," or "What a blundering specimen! But how long he keeps on! Wish he would stop! He prays for the world's conversion: I wonder how much he gives toward it? There! I don't believe I turned the gas down in the parlor! Wonder if Bridget has got home yet? Wonder if they have thought to take that cake out of the oven? Oh, what a fool I was to put my name on the back of that note! Ought to have sold those goods for cash, and not credit!" and so you go on tombling over one thing after another, until the gentleman closes his prayor with Amen! and you lift up your head, saying, "There! I haven't prayed one bit. I am not a Christian." Yes, you are, if you have resisted the tendency. Christ knows how much you have resisted, and how thoroughly we are disordered of sin, and He will rick out the one sarnest. resisted, and how thoroughly we are disordered of sin, and He will pick out the one curnest petition from the rubbish, and answer it. To the very depth of His nature He sympathizes with the infirmity of our prayers.

DOING THE BEST WE CAN

DOING THE BEST WE CAN

It is touched with the infirmity of our temper. There are some who, notwithstanding all that is said or done to them, can smile back. But many of you are so constructed, that if a man insults you you either knock him down, or wish you could.
While with all resolution and prayer you resist this, remember that Christ knows how much you have been lied about, and misrepresented, and trod on. He knows that though you said something that was hot you kept back something that was ten times botter.
He takes into account your explosive temperament. He knows that it requires more skill to drive a fiery span than a tame roadster. He knows how hard you have put down the "brakes," and is touched with the feeling of your infirmity.

the "brakes, and is touched with the feeling of your infirmity.

Christ also sympathizes with our poor efforts at doing good. Our work does not seem to amount to much. We teach a class, or distribute a bundle of tracts, or preach a sermon, and we say, "Oh, if I had done it some other way." Christ will make no record of our bungling way if we do the best we can. He will make record of our intention, and the carnestness of our attented. We cannot see He will make record of our intention, and the earnestness of our attempt. We cannot get the attention of our class, or we break down in our exhortation, or our sermon falls dead, and we go home disgusted, and sorry we tried to speak, and feel Christ is afar off. Why, He is nearer than if we had succeeded, for He knows that we need sympathy, and is touched with our infirmity. It is comforting to know that it is not the learned, and the great, and the eloquent that Christ seems to stand closest by. The "Swamp-angel" was a big gun, and made a stunning noise, but it burst before it accomplished anything, while many an humble rifle belped decide the contest. Christ made salve out of spittle to cure a blind man, and the humblest instrumentality may, under God, cure the blindness of the soul. This is the comfort of His gospel. the comfort of His gospel,

REQUISITE FAITH IN PRAYER

SOME one writes and asks: "Do you believe, in all respects, in the efficacy of prayer?"

I do. I believe the time will arrive when physicians will come to a patient, kneel down and pray to God for direction, and then rise and pray to God for direction, and then rise and give the medicine that will make infallible cure. The time will come, when drought appearing, multitudes will gather in prayer, and, independent of all weather probabilities and without any reference to which way the wind blows, the rain will descend in torrents. When Elijah prayed for rain he did not look to see which way the wind blew. Open an account with God on this subject. I took a blank book and put on the front pages the things for which I would especially pray, leaving the opposite pages open for record of Divine answer. And they have all been answered. Some of them not in the way I expected, but all answered. There is no need of a man talking to me about prayer being an absurdity. I know of what I speak. Any man may know this if he will only test the Lord. The trouble is, many of us are afraid of being benched of for any carefully. trouble is, many of us are afraid of being laughed at for our credulity. Laying aside all our cowardice and all our infidelity, let us lay hold of God in an enthusiasm of supplication.

THE OLDER SISTER IN THE HOME

THE OLDER SISTER IN THE HOME

LAST week I received a letter from the older sister of a delightful home in the west.

It was one of those letters that you read over and over again. And as I read the words of this young woman I thought: How much the world owes to the older sister in the home.
Born while yet the family was in limited circumstances, she had to hold and take care of younger brothers. And if there is anything that excites my sympathy it is a little girl carrying round a great heavy child, and getting her ears boxed because she cannot keep him quiet. By the time she gets to young womanhood she is pale and worn out, and her attractiveness has been sacrificed on the altar of sisterly fidelity, and she is consigned to celibacy, and society calls her by an ungallant name, but in Heaven they call her Miriam. In most families the two most undesirable places in the record of births are the first and the last, the first because she is worn out with the cares of a home that cannot afford to hire help, and the last because she is spoiled as a pet. Among the grandest equipages that sweep through the streets of Heaven will be those occupied by sisters who sacrificed themselves for brothers. They will have the finest of Apocalyptic white horses, and many who on earth looked down upon them will have to turn out to let them pass, AST week I received a letter from the older

MOULDING A BROTHER'S CHARACTER

MOULDING A BROTHER'S CHARACTER

A ND this leads me to the thought: Let sisters not begrudge the time and care bestowed on a brother. It is hard to believe that any boy you know so well as you do your brother can ever turn out anything very useful. Well, he may not be a Moses. There is only one of that kind needed for six thousand years. But I tell you what your brother will be—either a blessing or a curse to society, and a candidate for happiness or wretchedness. He will, like Moses, have the choice between rubles and living coals, and your influence will have much to do with his decision. He may not, like Moses, be the deliverer of a nation, but he may, after your father and mother are gone, be the deliverer of a lousehold. What thousands of homes to-day are piloted by brothers! There are properties now well invested and yielding income for the support of sisters and younger come for the support of sisters and younger brothers, because the older brother rose to the brothers, because the older brother rose to the leadership from the day the father laid down to die. Whatever you do for your brother will come back to you again. If you set him an ill-natured, censorious, unaccommodating example, it will recoil upon you from his own irritated and despoiled nature. If you, by patience with all his infirmities and by nobility of character, dwell with him in the few years of your commoniouship you will few years of your companionship, you will have your own counsels reflected back upon you some day by his splendor of behavior in some crisis where he would have failed but for you.

THE SPIRIT OF TEASING

ONE word in particular: Never snub your brother. Don't let Miriam get down off the bank of the Nile, and wade out and upset the ark of bulrushes. Don't tesse him. Brothers and sisters do not consider it any harm to tesse. That spirit abroad in the family is one of the meanest and most satusic. There is a tensing that is pleasurable, and is only another form of innocent raillers, but There is a tensing that is pleasurable, and is only another form of innocent raillery, but that which provokes, and irritates, and makes the eye flash with anger is to be reprehended. It would be less blameworthy to take a bunch of thorns and draw them across your sister's cheek, or to take a knife and draw its sharp edge across your brother's hand till the blood spurts, for that would damage only the body, but tensing is the thorn and the knife, scratching and lacerating the disposition and the soul. It is the curse of innumerable households that the brothers tense the sisters, and holds that the brothers tense the sisters, and the sisters tease the brothers. Sometimes it is the color of the hair, or the shape of the features, or an affair of the heart. Sometimes features, or an affair of the heart. Sometimes it is by revealing a secret, or by a suggestive look, or a guffaw, or an "Ahem!" But it is tease, tease, tease! Don't do it, I beg of you. It is a leprous abomination. Let your interests be identical. Let the joys of the sister be those of the brother; the success of the brother he that of the sister. But don't be a tease! Help your sister in her work, and encourage your brother in his. Each has perplexities—don't aggravate them by tensing.

7. De with Talmage

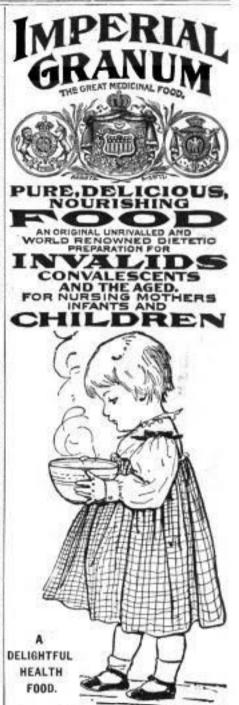

GIVES a GENUINE OXFORD TEACHERS BIBLE, Containing, 1450 Pages, and measuring open, faps included, 7xf1 inches, Free to all New Subscribers at $2.00.

It is Leather Bound, Gilt Edge, Overlapping Edges, and Contains ALL THE HELP'S. Including CONCOR DANCE 40,000 References, Subject Index 16,000 References, TWELVE COLORED MAPS and Other Valuable Helps.

De Hitt Talmage $1, 92, 90, 94, 96 BIBLE HOUSE, MEW YORK OFT

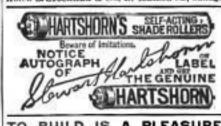

IMPERIAL GRANUM is an exceedingly nutritions article, whose merit has, in short, been amply demonstrated for years, it having been long before the public, and constantly growing in favor and extending in sale. The high recommendations besto wed upon it by emiment physicians is a sufficient guarantee, if any were needed; but the thousands who have used it in their families attest its value from personal knowledge of the benefits derived in its use. Probably no article known is more beneficial to babes and children, and to the aged invalid or convalescent, and it is delictions to the taste, and therefore all the more acceptable.—New Haven, G., Pulladium.

Sold by Druggiese, 1913, CADIT 4, CADIT, New York

Sold by Druggiste. JOHN CARLE & SONS, New York.

SHEPP'S VORLEY SHIP (1988) PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE WORLD

TOKOLOGY, a complete Ladies' Guide in health and disease, has become a household word in thousands of families. Mrs. N. R. McC. writes: "Dear Dr. Stockham:—I cannot tell you how much Tokotcovy has done for me. Our son came almost without warning. I most heartily rejoice when I hear of a 'Tokotogy Roby.' Prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents. Alick B. STOCKHAM & On., 277 Madison St., Chlesgo.

PLEASURE. NEC THESE NEW DESIGNS
IN BIGGS 4 and A. "BOOK NE AND UNITED AND A CONTROL
PORT OF THE CONTROL
PORT OF THE

This Department is conducted and edited by RUTH ASHMORE, who cheerfully invites questions touching any topic upon which her young women readers may desire help or information. Address all letters to RULH ASHMORE, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

ROM the far West and from way down South, the girl who is all day at the desk or at the counter day at the desk or at the counter has been writing to me. Sometimes she is dissatisfied with her work; sometimes her work pleases her, but she is not sure she does it right. And again she is perfectly indifferent to her work, and has but one desire, that is, to get it done any way as quickly as possible. I wish I knew how to say to her just what should be said. I wish I knew how to tell her of the truth of that very old proverh, about any work that is worth doing, being worth doing well, and I wish I could make her understand. well, and I wish I could make her understand wen, and I wish I come make her understand, not just how bard work is, but just how good work may be, just how happy one may be in work, and just how the work may be made a stepping stone always to a higher and better work, that at last becomes the work that is a perfect rest.

THE GIRL WHO IS BUSY ALL DAY

THE busy girl tells me she has to be at her desk at eight o'clock in the morning, that she has to work, and work hard, until twelve at noon, when she has an bour for rest and luncheon, and that five or six sees her going home with the day's work ended, and the thought that before her there is only just another day's work. My dear girl, there was a time in my life when I felt just as you do, so I know what that is; when it did seem so very hard to be at a desk at eight o'clock; and yet, when you come to think of it, it is just as easy to be there at five minutes of eight as five minutes past eight, and the habit of punctuality is the best one that the busy girl can learn. It did seem hard to think of the places I wanted to go in the sunshine, but you places I wanted to go in the sunshine, but you know there are countries where the sun shines know there are countries where the sun shines at night. And so I learned to have my pleasures them, when the working boars were over, and I felt myself a woman of leisure. I learned to meet the most charming people, a great many of them every evening after my dinner. It is true, they only lived in books, but they were marvelously good friends. They never changed, they were honestand bonorable, and when I came across means priviled, contempt. when I came across mean-spirited, contemptible persons I so soon discovered them that I knew just how to avoid them, and just what opinion to have of them.

THE OFFICE GIRL AFTER OFFICE HOURS

A ND there was another thing I learned: I learned that if you do your work well, it is not hard to do. It is only when you do it poorly, when you dawdle and mosn over it and when you find it a great care that your work is hard; but when you give all your very best, when you put your heart into it and determine that your work will bear the closest inspection, do you know you will grow as fond of that work as if it were your child, and you will take just as much pride in it? as fond of that work as if it were your child, and you will take just as much pride in it? Will you take this little bit of advice from me? Will you, when you put on your coat and hat and leave the office, forget the working hours? Will you, as much as possible, make your evenings play times? If you love music and can afford to go to good concerts, find a girl whose tastes are like yours, and you two go. If you love pictures, see them in the same way, for to-day two American girls can, with propriety, go alone to any respectable place of amusement, and they will be treated exactly as they invite it. If they longh and giggle they may expect some foolish man to return this, but if they conduct themselves like gentlewomen, the looking-glass of the world will reflect to them just the gentle manners they show to it. gentle manners they show to it,

THE GIRL WITH A MEAN PRIDE

IT is a mean pride which a great many girls have to-day—the pride that says to itself, I should like some pocket money and perhaps I can earn it without anybody knowing. Without anybody knowing you are doing the work. What is there to be ashamed of in doing work? Only had work is to be made a secret of, only had work is to be hidden as if it were a sin, but unfortunately the had work is told of far and wide ands poken of as the way women It is a mean kind of pride that makes a girl write to me and say, "can't you tell me some work that I can do at home that nobody need see, and through which I can gain some extra money?" I don't believe that girk knows how mean it is. If she has a house and a father who is happy in caring for her, she has no right to that work. It belongs to some woman who has to earn her bread and butter by the labor of her hands and not to the open by the labor of her hands, and not to the one to whom it is an amusement for a little while. By it she wants to gain a little money; nine by a see wants to gain a little money; pune times out of ten she is not very particular in her way of doing it, and so she makes the work of other women of less value. That is where meanness comes in. I don't believe where meanness comes in. I don't believe there is a single girl in all the world who would like to be called mean. I would rather be called a thief. But unconsciously they do so many mean things. This being ashamed of the work and doing it poorly, taking away from other women who need it sadly, are mean things to do. And don't, don't, my dear girl, permit yourself to be guilty of mean things.

THE GIRL BEHIND THE COUNTER

THE GIRL BEHIND THE COUNTER

THERE stood behind a counter the other day a girl who most indifferently sold me a spool of silk. Now, it happened that I wanted an odd color. Did she help me choose it? Oh, dear no! She literally banged the drawer in which the silks were at me and let me, unused to the selection of colors and a little bit confused, pick it out. While shewell, she polished her nails, and she talked about some of her personal affairs with the girl next to her, and I hunted, in a dased sort of way, for that particular shade of blue, which it ought to have been her pleasure to have found for me. Now, this is what she would answer me if I told her this: "It is not my pleasure to be behind this counter. I which it ought to have been her pleasure to have found for me Now, this is what she would answer me if I told her this: "It is not my pleasure to be behind this counter. I am just paid for being here; you ask for a spool of silk, I give you the hexful for you to take your choice, that is all that is necessary for me to do." Then she wonders that her salary is not raised and says with a little faintness in her voice, how much easier it is for men to get along in the world. Did she ever see a man sell a spool of silk or a yard of cloth? He does not slam things down in front of you and leave you to take your choice and let you buy things or not as you feel like. Oh, dear not His object is to succeed in life; he knows that every single sale he makes adds to his reputation in a business way, and so he takes care to please every enstomer. His salary is raised, and after a time he is put at the head of his department, and the day comes very often when he has a store of his own. Now, you could have it just as well as he. His only capital was politeness and industry, while yours is indifference and laziness. Do you think I am cruel? Do you know how a doctor cuts out a sore that is esting into the flesh? With a sharp lancet that goes way in and hurts, but removes every particle of the bad flesh. And that is the way it is going to be with you. Your hidifference must be cut out, and in its place there must be energy and honesty. Honesty means doing your duty to your customers and employers, and take my word for it that the girl who does this is certainly going to receive recognition. I don't know how it will come; it may come to you in the form of a good man, who asks you to govern for him and for you a little home as well as you have governed that part of the store which you call "your end."

A FEW LITTLE GRAINS OF ADVICE

A FEW LITTLE GRAINS OF ADVICE

HAVE made my little talk this month en-tirely to the busy girl, and so I am just going to say to her in closing: Take care of yourself.

When you buy an umbrella, will you be sensible enough to get a good sized one that won't permit drippings to get on your shoulders and skirts?

When you buy a pair of rubbers, will you get those that come well up on your feet and protect them, rather than the strap sandal, which is only of use to the women who can which is only of use to the women who can pick their steps as they go along? When you are fixing your skirts over, won't you make one of suitable length for a miny day, so that your ankles don't get wet and a

Won't you try and eat suitable food for your lunch, if it is possible, choosing bread and ment rather than sweets?

and ment rather than sweets?

Won't you when you come home at night put on mother gown and seem to become mother girl for a little while?

Won't you if you have nothing but a hall room in a boarding-house make that as pleasant and bright as possible, and invite your girl friends to see it and to enjoy with you?

Won't you, if you are forced to live in a boarding-house, keep as much as possible out of gossip and ill-ratured talk that too often reaches these homes, so-called?

Won't you try and not only say, but think what is kindest and pleasantest about people?

what is kindest and pleasantest about people?
If you will make yourself "think" it, then not only will the considerate words come but a gentle grace will pervade your entire face, a grace that will be like smashine to other people, making them feel the better for it pie, making them feel the better for it.

Won't you rid your brain of a silly idea, very prevalent among workers, and that is, that some special favors are shown to nome girls and that there is a clique against you? Watch the other girls, and you will be very apt to discover that the special favors shown result from their being good workers and from employers recognizing that the one who merits, deserves consideration and ornise. deserves consideration and praise.

Won't you try to do what, when you are away from home, you think would please your mother? You can't make many mistakes if you do this, and I do so very much want you, more than any other of my girls, to do that which is right. I want you to be always honest to your employer and your friends. I want you to be the most loving and most courageous of women, and you can only be, this if you get rid of all the follies that keep you small in thought and heart. I want you to be a working girl, not a lazy girl, but an honorable woman, not one who by your con-duct lessens the good words said for all other women. Won't you be this?

WHAT YOU WANT * * TO KNOW * *

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any question I can, sent me by my girl readers-RUTH ASHMORE.

T. W.-Lives of Haydn, Handel, and Back may be gotten in any public library.

Ben-As only daughter should have "Miss Smith" engraved on her visiting cards.

Reserver—You cortainly should not take a gentle-man's arm unless he offers it to you.

INNOCEST-In writing a letter to even a very young man commence it, " Dear Mr. Brown."

S. C. G.,-* R. S. V. P.* is not put on wedding invita-tions, as an answer to them is not required.

PHILLIS H.—The inhers at a wedding are sopposed to be the friends of either the bride or groom, and are not paid.

C. N.—linb vaseline well into the roots of your hair with your fingers; it will tend to prevent your hair from falling out.

IVY AND OTHERS—A visitor is supposed to look after his own but and cont. A hostess need not trouble her-self about them.

I. B. P. AND OTHERS—Books of parlor plays can be gotton at any of the large publishing houses. I cannot give addresses in this column.

A fluence: nea.—I have never tried the cream to which you refer, but I am sure you are perfectly safe in using cold cream on your face.

EULA—A regular life, good food and plenty of exer-cise ought to give you some color is your face, if as you say your complexion is already clear.

E. S.—It is in best taste to let a young man ask per-mission to call upon you rather than extend the invita-tion to him for which be has not saked.

Mass.—I cannot advise anything for the brown spots on your skin which seem to be an stubborn, but I would suggest that you consuit your family physician.

Chara—Even at a quiet wording the bride and groom wear gloves. Those of the groom should be tan celor, a very dark shade if the bride is in traveling dress, and white if she is in full dress.

A TRIOUGETFUL GIRL—There is probably no musical instrument that has so much soul in it so the wiells. It is perfectly proper for a girl to play upon it, provided always abe can play well.

J. W. W.—The only remedy for bachfolness is an en-tire togetfolness of yourself, a thought for the comfet-and happiness of other people. Forgetting yourself, you will get over that extremely unpleasant feeling which we call bachfolness.

Cangue,—Using charcoal on the besth about index week will not prove injurious, that is, if the powder is thoroughly taken from them by the brush and with soap and water. Always use tepid water for your teeth; cold water shocks them and is says to break the coame?

May Battis.—The best cosmetic for a colorises and yellow skin is careful dicting, proper bathing, and reg-ular exercise. Go to your doctor and get something that will put your diperiton in good order, for its being bad is probably one of the causes of your ugly complex-

Horn B.—I do not think it is ladylike to chew gam. The friends who are ride to you when they are among people and pretend to lave you very dearly when you are about are about are about are friends. Thank you very much far your kind and laving word to me.

P. L. B.—A pretty present to give a friend who has just referalshed her room would be a decorated china candiestick of some unique shape standing on a tray on which may be put the matches; this can be placed on the small table near the head of her bed, and it will be found very useful.

M. H. L.—I scarcely think you are old enough to de-cide for yourself whether it is proper to have gentlemen art as your escort or pay fortial visits to you. Take the advice of your motion. There will be plenty of time for you to go into suclety and receive these attan-tions a little later on.

Massex—If one of your teachers gives a little reception to a girl because it is ber birthday, certainly everyone of the guests should thank her for her kindness when saying good-bys. At an ordinary reception it is only necessary to express to the hostons the phasaure you have had; thanks for the invitation are not necessary.

Reserv—I do not think that because a man tells a woman he loves her and she tells him his loves her turned that he is entitled to a kies. This could be given to him when he has spoken to her parents and asked that she might be his wife. The man who asken about marriage is the one I would advise any girls to beware of.

Innorance—I should advise your reading good books if you wish to bearn to speak good English. All the grammars in the world will not leach you unless you find your faiths out by comparison, and remedy them. Do not allow yourself to grow thoughtless and facety lost what you want todo, but speak good English at all times and in all places.

Uncomposed in the process.

Uncomposed the many reason why a girl of eighteen should not persist is marrying a man to whom her parents object. It is fair to suppose that her father knows rather more about men than she does, and she will be wheat if she bout men than she does, and she will be wheat if she bought in. If the sam really lowes her and is an honorable grathernas he will be willing to wait until be has proved to her people that hela surrily of their daughter.

O. L. R.—It is quite proper for a bride to wear at her wedding a piece of lewelry given her by the bride-greom. I think, if I weeth your place, that I would smaply tell the man wher talked against women that I didn't wish to beer his opinions on that subject. You may be pretty certain if he says disagreeable things about other girls to you that he does not spare you in talking to them.

P. P.—Steam your face over a basin of hot water, when it gently with a soft towel and then prose on a few of the blackheads at a time; do not try to do too many, and do not be rough with your skin. Anoth the places where they have been removed with a little sweet oit. Continue this treatment until they are all gone, but if you do not wish them to return you must eat proper food, bothe regularly and exercise with equal sections.

Make M.—Make your light blue china dik with a beli-chaped shirt and a long haspac having he edge cut is deep torrets. Wear with this a two-inch ribbon belt fascenes in front with a cut jet chap. Have full, patfed sierces with deep cuffs closely studded with jot sail beads, and decerved your high column is the same way. Blue and black form a very fashionable combination, and in the summer time the some way, belt with the summer clime the governments of the worn at any hour excepting in the early morning.

Passy — A pretty dress for a finey party would be one representing the flower that you call yourself. The stairs could be of purple talls looped bere, there and everywhere with bunches of passies; the bodies should be of purple veived trimmed with different shades of layensher chiffon, and a veived beauter made in the shape of a pancy should be coquettishly fled on the lead. Wear layensher such that and purple veived slippers, using a pancy instead of a backle on each of them.

using a paney instead of a tockie on each of them.

W. R. C.—A chaperone is supposed to book after not only the comfact of the young indies who are in largeriangs, but their good conduct. If one should do something not quite proper the chaperone can kindly but firmly repelimend her. She must see that they meet no objectionable people, are laken to as entertainments not proper for young ladies, and yet six must make them only themselves, giving the timid girl encogragement and seeing that the one who to perfectly self-assured does not become completions. With a pleasant, well-bred set of girls the duthes of a chaperone are light and pheasant, but with girls who have not been properly trained they are frequently very troubissoms.

U.S. by us. 45 shades. 27 inches -57 cento -Dont turn how to fade Frite us about Phenoline, with which all our preparations and appliances are medicated, is the espential antiseptic constituent of phenol and the odoriess chlorides, in combination with boracic acid, discovered and produced exclusively in our own laboratories. It is an entirely new deodorizing agent, pronounced by eminent gymeologists to be the only odorless, decolorizing. antiseptic compound yet discovered that is absolutely harmies. These features together with the caragive properties 'of PHENOLINE are posessed by no other antiseptic agent. Our Crown Shields correspond in general appearance to the goods of other firstclass makers. We warrant them to be PERFECTLY IMPERVIOUS, HIGHLY ABSORBENT, INSTANT-LY DEODORIZING and infinitely more comfortable than any other, and the only shield yet produced com-bining these invaluable features. For sale at leading fancy and dry goods stores.

FREE, Illustrated descriptive catalogue of our antiseptic preparations and sanitary appliances ex-clusively for women sent on application. (Mention this publication.) Address

CROWN PHARMACAL CO., 93 & 95 Prince Street, New York, N. V.

New Gowns,

Stylish Jackets,

Spring Hats.

A new gown, jacket or bat can be made easily from the old with Diamond Dyes. They are easy to use and come in all shades,

Scarlet, Marcon, Carnet,

Bottle Green, Indigo Biue, Seal Brown,

Are a few of their popular, non-fading, handsome colors. Several colors are made with each dye. With yellow, even a child can dye

Yellow, Lemon, Canary,

Use only the Diamond—they are reliable 10 cts. a package. He Send for free directions for home-dyeing, and disamples of colored cioth. Willias, Richardson & Co., Berlington, Vt.

A few reasons for buying

BECAUSE:—They are made from the most carefully selected material.

BECAUSE:—Their tone is powerful yet pure, well sustained and of a superliveic quality.

BECAUSE:—They contain all desirable improvements.

BECAUSE:—Diet plane is marranted for seven years.

If not for sale by your local dealer, address THE JOHN CHUISCH CO., Cincinnail, O.

From Archanic to Allegro," an illustrated pampilet, be sent free to any one who will mention where advertisement was seen.

GOLD-SILVER-NICKEL PLATING. A trude easily learned; costs little to start. I will furnish outlits and give week in part payingst. Carollars from Address F. LUWET, 356 Serges St., Brooklys, S. J.

Digitized by Capagle

MR. COATES cheerfully invites questions touching any topic upon which his young readers may desire help or information. Address all letters to FOSTER COATES, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

f recent article in the Journal on the value of trades for boys has apparently been favorably read, if I am to judge by the way the article has been reprinted and commented upon, and the scores of letters that have come to me from and approving fathers boys and young men, and approving fathers and mothers. Some of my young readers seem to be puzzled about the trade they are best fitted to engage in, and have sought further light and assistance. Ghally would I give information if I knew all the circumstances of each of my young correspondents, but at best the problem is a difficult one. Each boy must be guided by his own taste, inclination and fitness. Not every boy can find his place in the world without more than one effort. Some one of the trades may promise well until the boy has given some thought and study to it and perhaps even worked at it for awhile and so found what is best fitted for him. My suggestion is that every boy should occupy himself only with the labor that is honorable, congenial and profitable. Work that is irksome is work indeed. No boy or man can succeed unless he is in love with his toil, and goes at it with courage and a strong resolution to succeed, no matter what obstacles may be in his way. There are many notable examples of men who worked at the bench, the force, and the mill who found fame in other and higher walks of life.

TRADESMEN WHO BECAME FAMOUS

TRADESMEN WHO BECAME FAMOUS

C EORGE FOX, the eminent scholar, was a good shoemaker, but in addition he wrote a journal that Spurgeon, the great preacher, has declared to be as precious as a gold mine. John Woolman was a tailor, but he studied until he became a proficient writer, and he wrote in a style of such exquisite purity and grace that Charles Lamb praised him unstintingly. Benjamin Franklin was a poor printer boy, who made his own way to a fame that will endure forever. Samuel Smiles, the author of so many valuable books, with the author of so many valuable books, with whom I spent a delightful summer day last year in his English home, has told me of many who studied trades, and yet carred their many who studied trades, and yet carved their way to imperishable fance in other and higher callings. From the barber shop came Jeremy Taylor the eminent preacher, Sir Richard Arkweight the inventor of the spinning jenny, Lord Tenterslen one of England's distinguished chief justices and Turner, the greatest among modern landscape painters. Shakespeare was a wool comber. Milton was the son of a scrivener. From the lowest of day laborers came Brindley the engineer, Cook the navigator and Burns the poet. From the trade of bricklaying and masonry came Ben Johnson the author, Hugh Miller the geologist and Allan Cunningham the poet and gist and Allan Cunningham the poet and sculptor; while from the carpenter's work-bench sprang Inigo Jones the architect, Har-rison the chronometer maker, John Hunter rison the chromometer maker, John Humer the physiologist, Romney and Opie the paint-ers, Professor Lee the orientalist and John Gibson the sculptor. The weavers have pro-duced Simson the mathematician, Bacon the sculptor, the two Milners, Adam Walker, John Foster, Jacquard, Wilson the ornithologist and Dr. Livingstone the missionary traveler.

FROM THE HUMBLEST BEGINNINGS

FROM THE HUMBLEST BEGINNINGS

HOEMAKERS have produced Admiral Sir Cloudesly Shovel, Sturgeon the electrician, Samuel Drew the essayist, Bloomfield the poet and Thomas Edwards the naturalist. Elihu Burritt, famed as "the learned blacksmith," was the son of a shoemaker.
Tailors have been distinguished in the person of John Stow the historian, Sir John Hawkson, Admirable Hobson and in one of our presidents, Andrew Johnson. Cardinal Wolsey, DeFoe, Akenside and Kirk White were sons of butchers. Bunyan was a tinker, ens of butchers. Bunyan was a tinker, were sons of butchers. Bunyan was a muser, Joseph Lancaster a basket maker and Richard obscure. Cobden's start in life was equally obscure.

The greatest names identified with the invention of the steam engine were those of mechanics: Newcomen, a blacksmith, Watts, a maker of mathematical instruments and Stephenson, an engine fireman. Sir Thomas Lawrence was the son of a tayern keeper. Sir Lawrence was the son of a tavern keeper, Sir Humphrey Davy an apothocary's apprentice and Michael Faraday, the son of a blacksmith, was a book binder. Among those who have given the greatest impulse to astronomy was Copernicus the son of a Polish baker, Kepler the son of a German innkeeper and himself a the son of a German innkeeper and himself a waiter at the tables, d'Alembert, a foundling. Newton, the son of a farmer in a small way and La Place, of a poor pensant. At one time in his life Abraham Lincoln thought seriously of learning the trade of blacksmith and Andrew Jackson, our seventh president, was apprenticed to a tanner. All honorable work is manly. Boys, whatever you find to do, do it well. And while you work, study without ceasing, and some day, some of you, too, may become famous and helpful to others, which is a good deal more to the point.

JOINING LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

ONE of my correspondents in the South asks a pertinent question. He is a young man serving an apprenticeship at stone cutting, and he is anxious to know whether he should join a labor organization after he has mastered his trade. I do not think there is any valid reason for remaining out of such organizations, although a great many good men differ with me on this subject. Personally, I prefer organized to disorganized labor, I am myself a printer and a member of a typographical union. There are some things about labor organizations that are unfair, I think, for we have not yet reached perfection in any department of life. And what is more, I am afraid we never shall. There will be unfairness and disappointment, and shattered hopes until the end of time. It does seem, however, unfair that a man who is not a thoroughly good workman should be paid as much as one who is alert, apt, intelligent and a great force in whatever be undertakes. Labor organizations, it would seem at first glance, are more helpful to poor rather than to good workmen. But the good workman has this advantage, that he will soon be singled out by his employer and given the best work, and advancement if possible, while the inefficient laborer, no matter what his work, cannot hope for promotion. I advise all young men to join labor organizations. When they become members let them do what they can to better their condition and help themselves, by raising the standard of labor. Let them learn, too, that labor organizations are not for the purpose of selfish motives, and to advance the interest of the workingmen at the expense of the capitalist. Labor organizations that become tyran-ONE of my correspondents in the South asks a pertinent question. He is a young the workingmen at the expense of the capital-ist. Labor organizations that become tyrunnical and arbitrary have no place in this coun-try and cannot succeed for any length of time. Neither can employers who ill-use their men, Acather can employers who it use their men, and who expect five dollars worth of work for two dollars in money. Capital and labor are so closely allied that one cannot be hart without injuring the other. In this case, as in all others, I know of only one rule to apply, and that is the Golden Rule.

CAN A LAWYER BE A CHRISTIAN?

Do you think a person can be a successful lawyer and a Christian, too? Such is an inquiry from a correspondent in Iowa. Why not? There are thousands of able and Why not? There are thousands of able and successful lawyers who are God-fearing men. It is not necessary for a lawyer to lie to be successful. There is no renson why he should do anything to lose his own self-respect any more than a physician should, or banker, or a baker, or a candlestick maker, for that matter. It is the same with lawyers, as it is in every other profession: no great name is ever built on fraud, or by lying or deceit. This is particularly true of lawyers. A tricky and unscruptious lawyer is quickly found out. Nobody will have anything to do with him. He will have no status in court. The successful lawyer is not always the one who searches for loop-holes in the law to crawit through, who is on the alert for mistakes made by his oppoon the alert for mistakes roade by his oppo-nent, and who knows how to take advantage of nent, and who knows how to take advantage of every intricacy. Certainly, I can see no reason why every lawyer should not be a Christian, And it may be said, furthermore, that the judi-ciary of the United States is purer than the judiciary in many other lands. Our courts of final appeal may always be depended upon to act fairly, and in strict conformity with the law, and the exceptions that we hear of only prove the general rule.

HOW TO BE AN ORATOR

A LL young men may become good speakers by observing a few rules. I should advise those who desire to speak in public to make sure they have something to say. After this, the most important thing is to learn to say it well. The best plan for a young man is to write out his remarks and then memorize them so that when he stands before an audience he will not be at a loss either for ideas or words. When you arise, button your coat, throw back your shoulders and pitch your voice so it can be heard distinctly by every one present. Be sure and do not speak so rapidly that you can-not be understood. Emphasize every needful word, and do not forget that it is best for a speaker to avoid a sing-song voice. Do not use too many gestures. Do not stand awk-wardly, first on one foot and then upon the other so that you will present a tired appear-ance to your auditors. Do not stand by the side of a chair, and rock it back and forth while you speak, or otherwise act nervously by pulling at the buttons on your coat or toy-ing with your watch chain. In other words, be natural. If you have anything to say that can be the better emphasized by a wave of can be the better emphasized by a wave of the arm, do it as naturally and gracefully as possible. Always be good-natured. No pub-lic speaker can succeed who is constantly fault-finding, or who will not take pleasantly any interruptions of his heavers. Learn to move about in an easy way. Try to be graceful. Do not make a had exit from a platform, or be abashed. Watch your audience. Speak earnestly. There are many good books on ora-tory that may be read with profit, but like every-thing else, polish, grace and eloquence come thing else, polish, grace and eloquence come only after long study and tireless practice.

ALL ABOUT TRADE SCHOOLS

ALL ABOUT TRADE SCHOOLS

M ANY boys have asked me to give some information about various manual training schools. I am enabled to do this by the help of Mr. Henry C. Townsend, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Williamson Free School of Mechanical Trades, in Pennsylvania. Mr. Towsend says that one of the earliest steps in this country in the direction of manual training was taken at the Naval Academy at Annapolis in 1868, and the instruction of the officers of our Navy in the use of mechanics' tools has steadily grown in importance to the present time. The Russian manual school exhibit at the Centennial Exhibition did much toward popularizing thought importance to the present time. The Russian manual school exhibit at the Centennial Exhibition did much toward popularizing thought on the subject. The St. Louis University, the Boston Institute of Technology, and Cornell University, were the first institutions to add mechanical laboratories to their equipments. The Worcester Institute, Worcester, Mass., was soon after started, and the Spring Garden Institute, Philadelphia, was the fourth manual training school of size to be inaugurated in the country. Girard College and the Chicago Manual Training School followed soon afterward. In 1885, Philadelphia added the Manual Training School to its public schools, and enjoys the distinction of being the first city in the world to make that branch a part of the system of free public education. In the same year the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, added mechanical shops and training to its equipment and curriculum, and now ranks high as a manual training school. The Pratt Institute, of Brooklyn, has well-furnished departments for the various mechanical trades. Institute, of Brooklyn, has well-furnished departments for the various mechanical trades. San Francisco has perhaps the finest and best equipped manual training schools in the world, and the University of Pennsylvania has a complete manual training department for her mechanical engineering students, started in 1889. The Toledo Manual Training School, of Toledo, Ohio, also a well-equipped institution with eleven shops or laboratories, and three hundred and eighty pupils who do their academic work in the Public High School to which the Manual Training School is attached as an annex, is one of the leading institutes of the world for the training of the hand in harmony with the development of the intellectual faculties. In Albemarle County, Virginia, the Miller Manual Labor School is doing a wonderful work. The New York Trade doing a wonderful work. The New York Trade School, founded, developed and maintained by the intelligent and comprehensive thought and generosity of Col. Richard T. Auchmuty,

Now, if any of my readers desire further information, let them address the Superintend-ent or principal of any of these institutions.

WHAT SORT OF A BOY DO YOU LIKE?

SINCE I began writing for the Journal in this department hundreds of boys have written to me on all sorts of subjects. Many young women as well as fathers and mothers have done the same, so that I feel I am on tolerably familiar terms with my readers. Now, what I should like to ask is: What sort of a boy do you like best? And what are the most essential qualifications for a boy who is anxious to get on in the world? I hope to hear from a great many little and big people on this subject. Perhaps mothers and fathers may do me the favor to reply also. Do not write long letters, for that is asking too much of you; a few brief sentences will do, if the ideas are clearly expressed. Perhaps from these letters we may get some new and origimal ideas that will be helpful to the boys of America. Who knows?

THREE-WORD COMBINATION PUZZLE

HEN I was a lad I was very fond of skating. Many a time I have spent a whole afternoon on the ice, and rea whole afternoon on the ice, and returning later given a whole exeming to the sport. It was all I could do to break away from my fevorite sport to return home at bedtime. A pinic on the ice was one of my fads. I cut pictures and letters in picturesque profusion, and picked out smooth pieces in far corners for my pictorial field. As the boys used to say, I had a pile of funthough the cold often pinched my fingers. At any rate, it was sport worth having, and if I appear to prate about it do not berate me and I will be grateful. I do not wish to be considered a prater. First word A; second word PI (a word used by printers to designate a confused mass of types); third word RATE. Combination, A PIRATE.

The JOURNAL's boys worked hard over this puzzle, and I wish that they all could have puzzle, and I wish that they all could have seen the many basketfuls of suswers that were received. Several persons have been kept busy opening the letters containing them although the "first five boys" were found although the "first five boya" were found early on the first day. Thousands of correct answers have reached my office, many of them prepared so neatly that had it been possible there would have been five hundred prizes sent out instead of five. The most ingenious reply came from R. G. Lockwood, Brooklyn, N. Y. It was an exact copy of the combination done in pen and ink, with the missing words inserted.

THE WINNING FIVE B. J. Hubbard, Lyndon Centre, Vermont, Ralph L. Smyn, Wichita, Kansas, Wallace P. Peters, Guernsey, Pa, Frank McLinone, Philadelphia, Pa. R. G. Lockwood, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE LIST INCREASED

I induced the JOURNAL to increase the list of prize winners to seven, that it might include the names of two boys whose answers came from so great a distance and were so well written and correct in every particular, that I felt they were entitled to some reward:

Willie Hoskins,
26 Civil Lines, Cawnpore, India.
Arrive Coles Armstrong,
25 Edward St., Hampstead Road,

London, England.

YOU HAVE SOMETHING

CENTURY COLUMBIA, with Personatic Tires. Light, Strong, Durable, and fully guaranteed. POPE MFG. CO., 221 Columbes Ava., Bod rren St., N. Y. 291 Wabash Ave., Chicago Factory, Hartford, Com.

MOTH PROOF BAG.

No Paste or Giue necessary. No bad odor about Carments when taken out to use. SIKES: | 26 x 48 inches, when closed; price, 50 cts. each. Expressed to any address on receipt of price. When ordering, send New York Draft, Postal Note or Registered Letter.

DETROIT PAPER BAG CO., Detroit, Mich. Paste This in Your Scrap Book

A Simple Menu - POR A-

FAMILY DINNER

Curry of Chicken and Rice "Cowdrey's Early Harvest Corn" stewed with Cream Roast Partridge Cauliflower Salad Cottage Pudding

A Graceful Act

Of hospitality is to offer your evening guests a cup of Bouillon before leaving. Use Armour's Extract of Beef and boiling water; add pepper and a thin slice of lemon to each cup. Serve with plain crackers.

Armour & Co., Chicago.

POULTRY KEEPING AS AN INDUSTRY

For Pariners and Cottagers. By Edward Brown, F. L. S. The great English work on this subject, Recommended by Mr. Cladetone, the Countess of Aberdeen, etc. "Every recent improvement and new idea seems to have been noted."—Country Gentleman (Albany, N. Y. L. Mailled free, $1.00. Lordon (Eng.), 53, Imperial Buildings, Lordon Crems, E. C.

Tasty Wall Papers

A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St. Phile. Pa.

PLACING A BOOK ON THE MARKET

A PEW HINTS TO AUTHORS WHO CHOOSE TO BE THEIR OWN PUBLISHERS

By A. S. FEBSUS

HOULD you decide to be the publisher and owner of a book written by yourself, which for some reason or other you desire to issue yourself, and you wish that it shall not be handled for you by any publishing house, there are certain methods you must pursue in order to place your book on the market.

You can do it is two ways; Either by securing some wholesale jobbing house to take the entire calition for you, and to distribute the book to the trade; or, distribute them shronghout the trade yourself. HOULD you decide to be the out the trade yourself.

In the first place, if you are di tant from the large publishing centers, lik New York, Philadelphia, Boston or Chicago, it will be necessary for you to write to the principal jobbing houses—not the publishing houses—there. Of course, it would be better to make a personal visit, if possible. If not, write briefly, yet fully, enough concerning your book to enable them to judge of the nature of the work. Send them a copy; also, any newspaper reviews, if you can, with your letter, but not local notices if you can possibly avoid it. Those from a distance would be better, as they are apt to be more impartial. Select a jobbing house in New York, since it is the largest literary output of the United States. The principal jobbing houses are the Baker Taylor Company and The American News Company. In Boston there is Estes & Lauriat; in Philadelphia, J. B. Lippincott Company and in Chicago, A. C. McClurg & Company. There are also minor houses with whom an arrangement might be made. But the larger the house the better. All goods must be delivered free of expense.

CUPPOSING a house accepts your work, it will generally be on a basis like the following: They will accept from you five hundred or a thousand copies, as the case may be. Their imprint, that is, their full name and address, as your agent, or as publishers, must appear on the cover, if a paper book; or, if cloth, stamped on the bottom of the cover on the back and on the title page. This is of advantage to you, as it informs the trade where the book can be bad. These copies will not be bought outright by them, but you will send them to the house "on sale," which means they will not pay you until the books are actually sold, and they can return to you all copies unsold. If your book, say, is published at fifty cents retail, you will probably have to sell them at twenty or twenty-five cents to the house acting as your agent. This is the price they will pay you for each copy sold. You must give them from fifty to one hundred copies free of cost for editorial parposes. These they will address and send to the best papers in the United States. It is better for them to do this for you than to do it yourself. Their name being well known to the editors, your book will be apt to receive better attention than coming from an unknown party, and they will select better papers.

THEY, in turn, will try to sell to the trade outright all the copies they can. But it may happen that the trade do not bey the book for various reasons. In that case they may send out copies to the trade on sale, until the book gets known, and a demand is created. They will also send copies to the out-of-town trade on sale, for which no charge will be made to you, as they are generally inclosed in other goods. But in case the books are not sold, and are returned, the chances are, and it is generally the case, such expressage and postage is charged to you. You must supply them, or order them to print for you, show hills and circulars descriptive of the work, which they will send out to the trade. These are at your expense, of course. They will generally send you an accounting every three or six months, as may be agreed upon, when they will count up the stock, see how many copies have been sold, and pay you twenty or twenty-five cents per copy, as per your understanding with them. They will rarely pay you up to the full number apparently sold, always leaving a margin for copies to be returned, unless it is a final settlement. In that case, all unsubit goods will be returned to you, sold, copies paid for and the account closed. They will not do any newspaper advertising unless you pay for it, nor will they send out They will not do any newspaper advertising unless you pay for it, nor will they send out tipe circulars except in the packages of goods made up to be shipped to various houses. It is a good idea for you to instruct them to print small circulars, with dealers' imprints upon them. This will not cost you much, and will add very much to your chances of making the book known, for these dealers in turn distribute the circulars to their customers.

The jobber cannot be relied upon to do much more than is here given. It is foolish for you to expect it; for he has thousands of other books to sell and to push the sale of. Much must depend upon you to advertise and make the book known.

I WOULD not advise your attempting to distribute the books yourself to the trade. It has been done in some cases, but it costs a good deal of money, labor and time. Of course, you can work up the trade in your own locality, and get your out-of-town friends to do the same for you in their localities. If you are bent upon doing this, or you cannot find any wholesale house willing to do so, and must rely on your own resources, then the following is the best course; Get your local bookseller to assist you, if you can, by giving you a list of the principal wholesale and retail bouses in the country. If he does not do so, then procure a copy of "Cooper's Directory," which gives a list of all booksellers. Take the largest cities, and select one or two in each locality. Write to them as in the provious case, asking how many you can send them on sale, if they do not offer to buy out-right, which is not at all likely. If you receive permission to send them, have the number done up carefully. If only a few copies, you can send them by book poet, or still better, if under four pounds, you can send them by the American Express Company, by special book rate, which is the some as by mail. You have the advantage of a receipt from the company. In all cases you must deliver the goods free of expense, Be very careful to send a bill by mail at the time you ship the goods. You should have a billhead printed with your full name and address thereon. Mark your bill on sale; don't fail to do this. Enclose in your parkage such circulars and show-bills us you have. Send a few copies of your book gratis, for chitorial purposes; let them send to such papers as they desire; they may have a preference. WOULD not advise your attempting to distribute the books yourself to the trade.

MOST authors, when publishing for themselves, are very careless in getting up the proper circulars, etc. The book being published they feel that it is all that is needed.
It is a mistake. A good show-bill is important. It should be in plain black letters, in black or dark blue, simply the title of the book, the author's name and price and "For Sale by All Booksellers," or "For Sale Here."
The latter is the best. It should not be larger than one foot square, and should be privated upon white paper. The circulars should be large enough to go into a large commercial envelope, known as size No. 6. The dealer can then, if he chooses, enclose them in his letters, or insert them in the book he sells.
This is a very good advertisement for you. It should be plainly printed, on thin paper, and on one side only. Give full title and anthor's name and price, and such book notices as you may have. This is well worth the expense.

You can request the houses to whom you name and price, and such book notices as you may have. This is well worth the expense.

You can request the houses to whom you send to place them conspicuously on their counters, and to interest themselves in its sale. You should do a certain amount of newspaper advertising in each locality, but you must be very careful in this; for you can spend a great deal of money with very little return for it. Do not weary the dealer by constant inquiries and asking for settlement. You are entitled to it at least once a month, though some refuse to make any accounting under three months. When final settlement is made they will pay you for all sold, and will return, at your expense, all unsold copies.

WHEN YOU WRITE TO OUR EDITORS

T is the wish of the management of THE Lanus' Home Journal that its readers shall feel perfectly free to write to any of its editors when they desire information upon any subject in connection with their special department. The Journal makes a specialty of comenting friendly relations between readers and editors, and all such letters are, in every case, answered in some way, either by mail or through the magnitude. The editors are always glad to do this.

But the Journal, must ask that its readers hear the following facts in mind:

First: The editors of deportments have nothing whatever to do with either the manuscripts, of whatever nature, should be addressed, impersonally, to "The Editor, The Lanus' Home Journal, Philadelphia." Please do not ask our editors to send a superdo not ask our editors to send your manuscript to Mr. Bok for you, or influence his judgment, They will not do so. Send it to him direct. SECOND: Subscriptions should under no cir-

SECOND: Subscriptions should under no crecumstances be sent to any one of the editors. They know nothing of the subscription department, and your letter is only delayed against your own interests. The one and only place to which to send subscriptions is to the home office of the JOURNAL at Philadelphia, and not to our branch offices.

Trung: Please do not write Mr. Bok or any of the board of associate editors about matters relating to subscriptions or advertising. Write to the Journal itself and your matter will have speedy attention, but it will not have if you insist upon writing to the editorial depart-ment upon matters entirely foreign to it.

Our readers must kindly remember these things. We repeat again: Write to any one of our editors whenever you want to know something in their special department of work, but please refrain from writing to them of husiness matters of which they absolutely know nothing, and avoid, in your own interests, a delay of your letter.

LITERARY QUERIES

Under this heading the EDITOR will endeavor to answer any possible question conc rining authorship and literary matters.

C. S.-I do not know who wrote "The White Cowl." 8, E. H.—Tennysoo is, of course, still living—at the late of Wight, England.

M. R.—There is no sequel to "Vivian Grey," and I know of none to "Briven to Sea."

J. C.—Benier's "Studow Partonimes," twenty-five cents, and Dick's "Partor Exhibitions," are excellent books on the subject.

INQUESTRIVE-If you will carefully read the column of "Literary Quarks" in former bruss, you will find all your questions answered.

M. F.—D. Leibrop & Company, and Roberts Brothes, of Boston, publish miscellaneous books, but make specialty of books for children.

MAGAZINE CLER GRILE-"Current Liberature" is a very desirable publication to add to your cleb list of magazines; one of the very best, in fact.

CONSTANT READER.—If you are sending illustrations to magneties for consideration and acceptance, it is immererial whether they are sent in lak or wash.

A. M. P. —Manuscript sent by mail is subject to letter postage. (2) You can send a written story by express, (3) See previous answers in "Liberary Quartee."

A. C. H.—Cardinal Newman's poem, "Lead, Kindly Light," is pullished in book form, with tredve full-page fibritations, Price, $1.50. We util send it to you on receipt of price.

FRANCASSE—You can obtain French books of any uporting house. Write to Beentano's, Union Square, low York; they will send you a catalogue of recent reach publications.

E. D.—(of the three titles you send, which you propose for the story you are writing. I think number one is the best. It is impossible to say how such a book would sell. You can only try.

J.—Do not be impationt. The editor of the magazine, though pleased with your story, may have material enough to last for months. You will protably hear from him in due course.

Isoquince.-You could exchange your books most likely at any second-hand book store. Try Leggalt Bruthers, Chambers street, New York city, or " Lenry's 05d Book Store," Publisherphin.

ANXIOUS MOTHER—I think the magazine called "Short Sheries" would be very benedicial for a bey of iffeen to read, if he can rightly appreciate such literature as a offered in its pages.

J. E. M.—Hinstrations for magnetice articles depend entirely on the nature of the article in question; conse-quently, photographs of presons or places would be of no use ouless whapted to the article. F. A. C.—The right name of "The Duchess," is Mrs. Mangaret Hungerfied; a portrait and sketch of her will shortly appear in the Jouensa. The author of "Hebern's Housenboid" is James De Mille.

W.—Any book on English literature will give you in-formation regarding English authors and their works. You will foul plenty of criticien upon Thackeray nota-bly in Taine, Shaw, Murley, or in any life of Thackeray.

H. H. W.—Any book store will province for you books that are out of print. Write to any of the New York houses, and request them to advertise for it in the trade papers, if necessary. The chances are they will get it for you.

H. H.—I do not know of any back giving an account of "The Magazine in Literature." There has been match written on the subject, however, in magazines. Consuit "Poole's Index," which you will find in any public library.

S. T. H.—Sarah Jeannelle Duncan is the author of "A Social Departure; or, How Orthodach and I Went Bound the World by Ourselven," $1.50, and also, "An American Girl in Leddon," $1.15. These can be had through the JOURNAL'S premium department.

J. B. D.—There is more or less risk in writing a story wherein fiving people are portrayed, and the incidents of their lives narrated, especially if it is discretizable to these, even though other names be used and the location changed. It is best to avoid such portraiture.

M. C. W.—I do not know of any college in Michigan or Ohio that has a course in journalism exclusively. Write to some school and educations bureau. (2) A thorough general closation, and especially in litera-ture, composition and writing, is essential to success.

F. W. H.—An author and publisher most, of necessity, confer regarding the publication of a book. The details should be left to the publisher, though the author has the privilege, of course, in selecting the style of book preferred, especially if he be at the cost of besine.

American—(1) An author retains the right to dra-matice his own works. (2) You must obtain permission. (3) The matter of compensation is one of motion ar-rangement; there is no fixed sum. (4) Bramatic writ-ing is like any other; you must have the necessary ability.

BRILLAH—You ask me too many questions. I cannot answer them all; besides, the previous columns of Liborary Queries would cover many of the points you give. (2) A vivid tenagination is all-insportant in writing tection. (3) Reputable editors always expect to pay for what they accept.

M. M.—If you desire to tasks a specialty of writing for Sunday-school illeraties, most of the religious houses like the Prestyterian Board of Publication, the Banks Publication Seciety, or the Methodist Book Concern, and many other son-religious houses are always glad to receive good manuscripts of that character.

HELEN-1 cases of give you a list of magneties and papers; it would be impossible; consult "Ayer's Newspaper Annual for 1892." Most periodicals pay for articles accepted, int a complete list can be found in Element Kirk's book, "Periodicals That Pay Contributors." The JOCHESAL can forwish this book for one dollar.

Op.a.—You have a right to withdraw any unpublished and unpublished ariticle. If it is published, and not paid for as agreed upon, you can do nothing except to rely upon the honor of the party offending. Of rouses, any breach of content is actionable at law, but I would not advise legal resource unless it be a matter of great importance and value.

Descrictasem, and Others—Will queries khally read carefully the answers previously given in these columns before sending questions to me? The chances are, you will find many of them already answered. I shall be gird to assist you in every way possible, but I cannot space the place to answer the same questions over and over again.

A Sussentines—The literature of Japan is very ex-tensice. There have been many translations into European isograpos, especially jove die literature. You will find a very interesting account in "Things Japan-nes," by Chamberdali, price, $180, which we can supply you if you desire. Sir Edwin Arneld's papers on Japan are published in book form under the little "Ja-ponies."

H. L. J.—The address of The Weltzer' Library Bureau is 186 Washington Street, Beston, Mass. When sending manuscript, it should be arcompanied by the requisite fee, with full name and address. Bent in mind that yours is not the only one sent for examination, and has it must take its time to read and decide upon in meets, being often sent to many different readers. Your other questions have been often answered. Bend over the previous "Library Quarter."

Moss W.—I can only answer your question in a gen-eral way. It would not be proper for the to mention the natures of magneting of which complaints are made to me resarchus contributions sent them, as I have but me side of the case. All reportable publishers will deal fullly with their contributors. When they fall to do so in any one instance. I whould certainly request the re-turn of any manuscripts in their possession, and leave them severally alone in the future. Articles published and not paid for as agreed upon in a breach of contract.

NOW READY-THE MARCH PART OF THE YOUNG LADIES' JOURNAL

The best Journal for Laddee and Families, Contains the Latest and Bist Pamilions; PROPERLY BLUSTRATES; A PARMOTE COLDERED SUPPLEMENT OF FAMILIANS; SUMERIUS COMPLETE STORIES of absorbing latered; and the configuration of 4 New STORY, smilled "TROM OVER THE SEA," beddee New Monie, Exhibitionary rogslove, his. The most complete magnatine for beddee pathietics. Price, 30 Cts. Yearly, $4, Including the Christians untuker, All unwelcher, and THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK.

4 NEW NOVELS 15 Center FAMILY LIBRARY MONTHLY.

Of all Newsdealers and THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK, 32 and 35 Dunne street, one door East of Broadway. Subscription Secured for any Periodical, Portige or Exceeds.

METROPOLITAN

COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
LEADISG MERICAL INSTITUTION OF AMERICA.
Piano-forte temptors' certificates. Examiners: William Mason, Mus. Doc., A. C. M. and Albert Ross Parsons, A. C. M. Budber Buck, President, H. R. Palmer, E.
Agramonte, H. R. Shedey and C. B. Hawley are among the distinguished members of the Faculty. Circulars sent on application. Address
H.W. GREENE, 19 & 21 East 14th St., New York City.

SHORT-HAND Send for Cotalogue of Books and helps for self-instruction by BENN PITMAN and JEROME R. HOWARD, to THE PHONOGRAPHIC INSTRUCT, CENCENNATE DESC.

CINCINNATI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC. Miss Clara BAUS, Directors. Established 189.
Ladies from a distance may board in the Conservatory, where they are under the personal supervision of the Derectors, Students may enter at any line. For entelegue, address Miss CLARA BAUR, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CHORTHAND ther'ly taught by mail in THREE months. No chading, no position, connective you comethed. Person Shorthand Institute, Detroit, Mich.

SHORTHAND. Marcast of Phonette Short-hand, 65.90: Speed Book, 85.30: Cosmpendium and Vocabulary (for the vest pocket), 30 cents. Send S-cent stamp W. W. OSGODDBY, Pub., Rochester, N. Y.

CHILD CULTURE STUDY CIRCLE is a new department in the Kindergarten Magazine, devoted exclusively to the home-training of children according to Froebel. $1.50 per year; 30 cents on trial, three months. Kindergarten Publishing Co., 277 Madison St., Chicago.

DINING-ROOM HINTS.

How to Bet the Table:
What to Have Ready on the Side Table:
The Order of Serving.
By concer run Kon's December.

Price, 30 cents: by mail, 51 cents. On sale at 20 College Place, New York City, and Pleat-class Booksellers.

th Edizion, postpaid for Ec. (or stamps.) THE HUMAN HAIR, Why It Falls Off, Turns Grey and the Remedy. By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F. R. A. S. A. T. Lexin & Co., 2015 Arch St., Philista., Pa.

SEND for free Catalogue of Books of Amusements, Speakers, Balogues, Gyunnestics, Calishenies, Extended and Books, Debates, Letter Writers, etc., Dick & Ferzoersales, 21 Ann St. N. Y.

POCKETBOOK Worth 50 cents, and made of institution Scall also Elegant Store Catalogue, sent on receipt of 30 cents postuse to LAPHAM'S, PALMER HOUSE SHOE STORE, Chicago, 10.

IT'S WONDERFUL! "The New Treatment" for Catarri, by petroleum, is not stamp for 30 page pamphi-, free, Agents wanted. Petrolcum. Part Branced. free. Agents wanted. HEALTH SUPPLIES CO., 710 BROADWAY, N.Y.

WALL PAPER SELECTED BY MAIL.
Sond 8 cours portage for a full line of samples.
THOS. J. MYERS, 12 to Market St. Phila. Pa.

A Box containing 12 Aluminum Thimbles given Pree with a Pive BoxLan parcel of beautiful aluminum gifts. Write for catalogue.

THE CINCINNATI PURE ALUMINUM CO., 7 Smery Arcade, Cincinnati, O.

MUSIC SYSTEM. All can bear music without the sel of a bunder. Eagle, correct Established 15 years. Notes, cheeds, accompanients, thereigh base laws, etc. Ten Lessons 10 cents. Circulars free. G. 8. RECE MUSIC CO., 243 State Street, Chicago.

SELL MUSIC We will pay a liberal Salary to Agents who will take subscribers for sold sample rapy with five complete places of intest rocal and generation of manual. Adverse Beyl R. WOODWARD'S SUSPERLE BOXYDLY, 342 Sension, Dev York.

SYLPH CYCLES RUN EASY Spring Prome dealths) s Viteral's Light, sim-ple, strong, Cata free Bouse, Proper Cy, Ch.

MISS MAUDE HAYWOOD will be glad through this Department to answer any questions of an Art nature which her readers may send to her. She cannot, however, undertake to reply by mail; please, therefore, do not ask her to do so. Address all letters to MISS MAUDE HAYWOOD mail; please, therefore, do not ask her to do so. A care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

PAINTING IN WATER COLOR

THIRD PAPER

STUDIES IN STILL LIFE

order to attain expe rience and facility in water color painting, no better practice is possible than that of making many careful studies of still-life sub-jects from nature. As a preparation for good work from the living model it is really indis-pensable. For a begin-ner a great advantage lies in the fact that the object or group may be chosen and arranged object or group may be chosen and arranged in such a way as to remain precisely the same in position and appearance for almost any length of time. Fruit, eggs and similar sub-jects will keep for a considerable period, while brie-a-brac, books and drapery, if untouched, of course, give an unlimited opportunity for their careful representation. Fish and game, which afford excellent studies for more ad-vanced workers, should not be attempted untia certain degree of progress has been made, because they must be painted as rapidly as possible, for their freshness and beauty of color last but a very little while.

In this kind of painting much the same advice will hold good as that already given in the article last month as to the method of making studies of flowers. The special point to remember, however, is the necessity of aimmaking studies of flowers. The special point to remember, however, is the necessity of aiming for roseadzess in the forms, realizing when reproducing them upon paper that an orange has thickness as well as surface, and that a pitcher or mug is not flat but circular. Begin at first by making studies of single objects, such as an apple, an egg, a bunch of grapes, one or more books, a jar or a vase. After a considerable amount of this practice something more ambitious in the way of a picture may be attempted, but to do this successfully demands at least an elementary knowledge of the laws of composition. It is a good plan, after having decided on the individual elements of a group, to arrange them in various positions and in different lights, making several small sketches in order to select the best as a guide in painting the plcture, aiming to maintain a simplicity of effect and breadth of light and shade, which is the characteristic of a good sketch, while elaborating the detail in the finished composition. The light should preferably come from above, on the left hand; therefore, if painting in an ordinary room, block up the lower part of the window and be particularly careful to avoid having a cross light, that is to say, light falling upon the group from opposite sources. Bring into prominence that which should be of main interest in the composition, and treat the rest as accessory to and dependent upon it, allowing them as a means of beightening the effect and concentrating the attention upon the principal feature of the picture.

THE rendering of textures is an important part of this branch of art, and a most essential study to those who aspire to work later from the living model. With this view, it is very good practice to copy draperies, observing carefully the difference in the manner of hanging and in the distribution of light and shade in various materials—the soft numerous folds of thin woolen stuffs, the sharp shadows in silk, the sheeny lights of satin, the rich shades of velvet or plush with the beight lights always on the edge of the folds. Moreover, whatever the object to be represented, always pay particular attention to rendering correctly their characteristic qualities, distinguishing the rough rind of the orange from the smooth the rough rind of the orange from the smooth skin of the apple, and that again from the glazed surface of the porcelain dish which holds them.

WHILE studies of this kind are the most V excellent means of acquiring mastery over the technique of water color, it must not over the technique of water color, it must not be supposed that, especially at first, they will be found so very easy when actually attempted as they may seem beforehand. But do not, therefore, become discouraged; persevere with a drawing to the utmost; more will be learned from one study, conacientionsly completed, than by half a dozen beginnings abandoned so soon as difficulties appear. Rather, when this point is reached, push bravely on, not resting satisfied until the desired effect is ob-tained, even if it involves partially sponging tained, even if it involves partially sponging out the work several times, only if the latter out the work several times, only if the interexpedient be resorted to, take care not to injure the surface of the paper, for in that case it is useless to attempt to paint further upon it.
As the picture approaches completion a frequent fault with beginners is a certain hardness of effect, to obviste which the edges should be softened on the shadow side, and blended partially into the backrgound.

ADVICE FOR PRACTICAL WORK

HERE is a certain in-definable yet very definite boundary line which separates the amateur worker from the professional. To cross this invisible Rubicon, with the hope of making a career, is the legitimate aim of most students, but how to do so often proves a really difficult question. It is not only the looked-for start in practical work that is necessary, but the knowledge of how to use to necessary, but the knowledge of how to use to the utmost whatever opportunities may occur daily or from time to time. The attainment of even an ordinary success, in whatever branch it may be, is dependent not less upon the per-sonal character than upon the artistic capabil-ities of the individual. Yet this is a point far too little realized by the average aspirant, who is very apt to look upon those who have already earned a reputation as being particu-larly lucky or particularly clever, while proba-bly both suppositions are either parily or wholly incorrect; the true secret of success, in the majority of cases, having been a capacity for steady, persevering, hard work, with an for steady, persevering, hard work, with an energy not easily discouraged.

for steady, persevering, hard work, with an energy not easily discouraged.

Ask any women or any men who have made their way, whether in art, music or literature, how they began, and nine out of ten will have a tale to tell of mouths and perhaps years of positive drudgery, even after their professional life had actually begun. There is only one way of gaining knowledge, namely, by dearly-earned experience, and all must serve their apprenticeship before they can become master-workers. This period of learning and waiting is very irksome to many, who fancy they are losing their time. Not so if they are in earnest and constantly gaining a clearer and better knowledge of their craft, No one sees the seed germinating in the earth, not many particularly heed the plant springing up and gradually increasing in size and strength, but when after the blossoms have appeared and withered, the fruit forms and slowly ripens, then men gather and store it, and it has its place and work in the world. So in a career, although almost unnoticed by others, from the very beginning lessons are being learned, methods mastered, experience gained, and one day all this bears fruit, when after a greater or less delay, the realization being learned, methods mastered, experience gained, and one day all this bears fruit, when after a greater or less delay, the realization comes that a certain degree of success is al-ready attained, opening out wider and fuller opportunities, which only the knowledge for-merly gained could make one competent to use advantageously. Then it is seen how that not one single day's work or day's failure has been lost. been lost, been lost.

As an illustration, take the case of a young woman who having just finished her course of art training has succeeded in obtaining a position as draughtswoman or designer in a business house, and who is capable from the artistic standpoint of accomplishing the work she is undertaking. Her object is to gain a knowledge of the practical requirements of her employers and to make herself valuable to them. Certain qualities, directly they are recognized, gain for their possessor the respect and confidence of both men and women. Such are promptness, punctuality and reliability. Often these characteristics are only acquired after the painful discipline of mistakes and failure. Artists have the reputation of being by nature unbusiness-like, and many of them certainly are, but greatly to the hind-of being by nature unbusiness-like, and many of them certainly are, but greatly to the hindrance of their financial prosperity.

To conclude with a few words of practical advice. In the first place, be punctual; that is to say, arrive a few minutes before the hour agreed upon for starting work. Never mind if others are always or often behind the time, that is their business. Persevere in bemind if others are always or often behind the time, that is their business. Persevere in be-ing prompt, even if no fault is found for tar-diness. These duties are as much to one's self as to one's employer. Work steadily on through the day without hurry or idling. Haste is exhausting and acces not pay in the long run any better than waste of time. Where the duties are varied and recur period-ically plan there out mathedically and recorically, plan them out methodically, and never leave anything, however trifling, which ought to be done at once, for a more convenient sea-son. Left over duties accumulate rapidly into son. Left over duties accumulate rapidly into a formidable mass of work, and create difficulties by causing confusion. Try to earn a reputation for being at all times dependable for a certain quantity and quality of work.
Otherwise it is hopeless to look for future advancement to a position of trust and responsibility. Finally, be silent as to the affairs of the firm and as to the details of personal dealings with them, both with fellow-workers and with outsiders. The importance of this is very great, for without intending any harm it is great, for without intending any harm it is easy to get one's self or others into serious trouble by a few beedless or unconsidered words. To maintain habitual To maintain habitual reserve on all such matters is an admirable and necessary rule in a professional or business life.

HELP IN FYOUR OWN WORK

Under this heading I will be glad to answer every month, questions relating to Art and Art work. Maune Haywood.

HARRIET—Mix fresh spirits of turpentine with the oil colors in painting on bolting ciots.

C. E. M.—I believe that the name your inquiry refers to is the artist's own name, and not an assumed one.

Mns. F. K. A.—Poppy oil is preferred to linseed all by ome artists for oiling out the picture, preparatory to a second radiation. second painting.

N. B. G.—A plaster-of-puris bust must be cast in a mould. (2) I do not believe that you would find purify answer the purpose.

EARNEST READER-I cannot give personal recom-mendations in this column. Possibly the trouble has in lack of meritor originality in the designs.

Mrs. E. P. G.—In painting apple blossoms use white, scarlet vermillon and yellow other, with rose madder as a glaze. For grayish half tones add a little cobair,

K. S.—Use rose madder instead of German lake in La France roses in the future. I am afraid you cannot do anything to restore those which have become dis-culered.

AN INQUIRER—(I) In Boston, training can be obtained at the Museum of Fine Arts. (2) Read "A Few Words to Designers," in the January number of the JOURNAL.

O. A.—(1) The heads you refer to are drawn as you suppose, from photographs with a pen, in India ink, upon Bristol-board. (2) I am not acquainted with any such work.

A. M. J., AND BAB—Ordinary water-colors are employed by many artists for making their designs for wall-paper, instead of the powder colors. Oil paints are seldom used for the purpose.

M. M. D.—If original and well executed in pen and lnk, or in simple coloring, designs of the kind you mention might prove acceptable to the art magazines which publish drawings of that style.

M. R., AND SEER.—You do not say in what locality you wish an art school recommended. Choose, if pos-cible, a well-established training school in some city. I know of some that promise positions to graduates.

PAINT—In painting dark grapes, every shade desired can be obtained by using crimson lake, Antwerp bine and a little white. For the shadows, gut the bine and crimson lake on clear and separately, working them in-to each other.

Mas. B. M.—Either olls or water-colors may be used on collusold. For finely-flatished and delicate week the latter are preferable. For boiler subjects, where rapid-ity of execution is an object, oils are employed, but should be mixed with spirits of turpentine, and gold-size as a drier.

K. J.—The work you refer to is crystoleum, and to give full directions for it would occupy more space than can be spared here. I think you can procure a hand-book on the subject. For a short time there was a crass for this style of painting, but it has now almost completely died out.

Mas. H. S. H.—Drawing with India lok is done with a pen. (2) Pen. ink and paper are the only mate-rials absolutely needed. Corrections can be made by an expert with a sharp penkrile, but beginners usually find it beyond their capacity to cross successfully. (3) Any smooth drawing-paper will do, but Bristol-board is easier to work upon.

A STUDENT-I cannot advise you how to get up such a class as you inquire about. As a matter of fact, I think that the method of teaching you refer to usually proves unsuitafactory to all concerned. The advertising rates of the Journal are given on the editorial page. Write direct for further information, and give your full name and address.

P. A. M.—Your question is too comprehensive to be answered in this column. (2) The silver powder that comes with other lustra colors should prove satis-factory. In some cases the metallic water-colors are employed, and are less troublesome to manage; but us you do not say for what purpose you wish to use the silver, I cannot advise you definitely.

E. F. D.—(1) The paste for raised outlines may be obtained of any desire in materials for chira-painting, (2). A little fat of its most usually employed when the prepared gold has become hard and dry, to make it fit for use, (3) In tinting with La Croix colors add a little flux to them, substitute Cooley's tinting oil for the fat oil, and preceed precisely as when working with the Boyal Worcester paints.

8. D. W.—(1) With cobalt, raw umber and white and cobalt, yellow ochre and white, adding, if necessary, a touch of black, you can obtain a complete range of grayish, greenish and becomish tones for the shadows of white-objects. (2) Read "How to Painta Face in Oils," published in the Jockman for has September. (3) For the bay horse use raw number, black, burnt sienna, raw stenna, yellow ochre, with cobalt in the cool shadows.

AN ANXPOUS QUERIST—(1) Your first question is not very clearly expressed. If you allide to the paint-ing of the ware while yet in the blecuit state, the proper undergiase colors are used for the purpose, and the pieces are fired and glassed after being decorated. (2) The paintings must not be variabled for several moths after they are completed because the colors are not thoroughly dry and hardened; the variable is liable to orack sooner or later after having been applied.

A. B.—It is difficult for me to advise you, as I have no means of telling how far your design is original. Without good inacting you would have no chance whatever of success. There is a certain feeling in the drawing, which if it is in any sense really your own, would justify your entering on a course of training such as that given at the New York School for Art Artisans. Unless you can give the time and hard work necessary in gaining a thorough education it would be useless to enter the field.

L. D.—I would not advise black satin panels for your parter screen. Without any knowledge of the retoring or decorative scheme of the roton, I am not in a position to give you definite advice as to the treatment of the screen. You will find suggestions as to designs and material satisfable for various priposes in an article on "Servens," published in the Jos usual, for last October, which will probably prove heighti. (2) The Japanese gold cord may be precured either of a dealer in Japanese goods, or at any sites where first-class embrowlery materials are sold.

Box summer. These solutions and convent tentum that BOUNDIFFE.—The coloring and general treatment that you propose seem very good, and the background described will be extremely effective for a brown horse's bead. The power of obtaining the gistening high lights is a master of practice and experience, and the only method used is to carefully stody your model, endeavoring to copy faithfully what you see in the original. He not set to work with percursely offered some of what you ought to see or to do, but use your own eyes and brain. By your letter you seem capable of doing so. Have conducted in yourself.

A. E. D. The retain of the trailing actions and

A. E. D.—The petals of the trailing arbitus are of an extremely delicate pink. (2) In offing out a picture use lineed or poppy oil, and never slexalif. The object of suiting on the oil is to make the colors blend well with those pervicently laid on, while to substitute slexalif is practically laying on a cost of variable between the first and second paintings. (a) To paint the malross cross in silver you may either use the pore meal which course in shorts, or, if something less expensive is desired, the effect units color, which is sold in a powder not applied with the proper medium.

and applied with the proper medium.

Horse-It is an extremely had pian to start by going over the whole canvas with a grayth that, as you describe. Begin by laying in the sky. If you are after to finish the painting as you so adong, so that it is not necessary to bouch it up, so much the better. Few he giances have the requisite ability. The object of a second painting is to correct mistakes, in work up the detail, and to improve the effect of light and sharle. Aim to just in all these with perfect overestmen in the beginning, when there will be no reason, for going over them, and when the painting of the property arrives of the brush have an object and a meaning.

Are plated THREE TIMES HEAVIER on the three points most exposed to wear, as shown above.

THESE GOODS ARE IN THE STOCK OF EVERY FIRST-CLASS DEALER.

We have the very Newest Designs in Jewelry.

These Pins are 14k.

Gold and Enameled in Colors. $1411 Diamond

HENRY ABBOTT & CO.

14 Maiden Lane, New York.

See a Pin

and let it lie, Come to Sorrow bye and bye."

But the "Puritan" Pin don't liet not only its name but the pin itself is a proof that it can L—They carry Proof of Perfection, (and who has not known by a pricked finger from a bent pin the need of perfection even in pins), with every insertion.

Again you do not "come to serrow" when you "buy and buy" the "Puritan" —but let the sample speak for libelf. Sent free to any address.

American Pin Company

Waterbury, Conn.

DO YOU PAINT?

Ordo Fancy Work! Ingalls' Home and Art Magazine is a Text Book on Painting and Fancy Work. Single copies 15 cts.; $1.00 per year. LIDA CLARRON'S Easy Lessons in Drawing and Painting

First and Second Series. Price, a centreach. Every one doing, or wishing to do, Drawing or Panyaya should own these Books. We will send BOTH

FREE! to any one sending us 35 cents (stamps taken) for a three months'

Ingalls' Home and Art Magazine.

UMBRELLA A long-felt need supplied. Made of lighter, and instant- in the water that russ off. Also the DRIP CUP. HELPINA

for handling cooked articles while hot. Just pasented, Selling like but cakes. Our Agents actually and easily make from $25 to $75 a week. Samples of either by mail with terms and price-list for Sc., or both for Sc. Secure your territory at once. Address for Me. Becure your territory at once. Address THE STANDARD NOVELTY CO., Winter Street, Worcester, Mass.

THE NEW MODEL "HALL."

PREFECT TYPEWRITER, BOST MANIFOLDER,
TYPES A Agende Liberal, POSTABLE, INEXPENSIVE, WHITES ALL LANGUAGES, Send for Cutalogue and Specimens of Work,
Address N. TYPEWRITER CO.
611 Washington St., Boston.

"DO NOT STAMMER."

Endorsed by Professor H. C. Wood, M. D., L.L. D. and Professor Harrison Allen, M. D., University of Pennsylvania; also Postmasier-General Wanarmaker. Send for 64-page pamphiet to R. B. Johnston's Institute, IRB Spring Garden Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WALL PAPER

Natural Curio Bange, El. Parcel Sanga or Warnes, for Silberty Laddes, El.36 to Ec.56. Newtones, El.36 to El.4. monoring to brough and quality of hist. Ladder and George Wars, El.30 to El.50. Send sample beer, Try Graze, Balm and Tweeter for Complex-ies, 30 correr work. E. C. STREIL & Ch., 191 Websch Avenue, Chicago, El.

FILL YOUR OWN TENTE with Crystaline. Stop Pain and Becay. Lasts a lifetime Crystar free, T. F.TRUMAN, M. D., Wells Stridge, N. Y.

CARE OF SICK CHILDREN

T is when the baby is sick that the young mother feels most helpless and despairing, and longs earnestly for help and advice. I am often asked to recommend some book that gives directions for the treatment of sick children. I never do it, and I want to say here most emphatically that it is not safe seional person to attempt to an any medical book. The my diseases are much alike in my diseases are much alike in s, and it requires a practised i between them. It is somesthe doctor can do, with all decide on the proper course mother, depending upon which may not fit the case sparable harm. There are works which treat of the al and the personal care of other should have one of sich profess to give advice ments should be avoided, rough to require medicine axative, the doctor should rders implicitly followed. rders implicitly followed.

> who is far from a physiber for her comfort that ally requires medicine. it she can give without ure air, cleanliness and rders of children, par-se from some derange-act. The food is not unlity. It is not as-up by the blood for issues, and the child retful, throws up its and does not thrive. The first thing to food. Add a table-each six of food; y using one-fourth with water. Vary y adding more or saful, try some of is found that does > error of diet is ved by feverish-emperature does m as with grown temperature of e hundred and be compara-simple enema t syringe such is the sufest there is con-ld may have p of rhubarb e of magneat indigesti-When this > > a pure at-to breathe, ly chilled a nursery crees, and seventy ted and eep the Tremely sed and ep. At ie win-CB COVmeter ordimediate im-

strip 'n at uld A GOOD-NIGHT MELODY

SLEEP, my darling, while I sing, Free from care and sorrow; Nestled close in mother's arms, Waiting for to-morrow.

When the morning rises fair Early you will greet it, Six o'clock will see you up Quite prepared to meet it.

Now the busy play is done, Little feet are weary; White lids drooped o'er sunny eyes Hide their glances cheery.

May no harm come near my boy While I sleep beside him; To the tender Father's care Fearless I confide him.

*EDUCATION AT HOME

IN TWO ARTICLES-PIEST PAPER

BY CAROLINE B. LE ROW

HE German Froebel was the great apostle of the kindergarten, a word which means literally a garden of children, where young buman beings are cared for as plants are cared for, plants are cared for, that their growth may be symmetrical, and that the ripened fruits of character may appear in due time. He saw that the infant made constant use of its eyes; desired to use its legs and arms, and had a disposition to play; that with the first indication of intelligence it showed curiosity, and that its first connected words were in the form of questions. It is because his system of educations of the connected words were in the form of questions. of questions. It is because his system of edu-cation is based upon these facts of the child's natural unfolding that it has proved itself to be the best, and, indeed, the only proper train-be the best, and, indeed, the only proper train-ing for young children.

The mother who prefers, or whom circum-stances compels to educate her child at home, should make a close study of kindengarten ideas and methods. These are embodied in Froebel's own books, "The Mother Play and Nursery Songs" and "The Education of Man," the former containing fifty engravings, notes to methors and music for some, well worth Nursery Songs" and "The Education of Man," the former containing fifty engravings, notes to mothers, and music for songs, well worth its price of two dollars; the latter costing a dollar and a half. In addition should be read
"The Paradise of Childhood," by Edward Niebe, the first illustrated guide to the kindergarten ever published in the English language, and the only one covering the complete ground. This can be had in paper covers at one dollar and a half. In addition to this should be read Penbody's "Guide to the Kindergarten," price one dollar and twenty cents, and Hailmann's "Kindergarten Culture," to be lad for seventy-five cents. There are many other valuable books on this subject, but these are the most essential.

Froebel regarded the whole world as the school-room for the race, and the things of the material universe as God's gifts to man, Looking upon the child as the race in miniature, he selected a few objects which represented the great world of matter, and arranged them in an order which should help the child's growth at successive stages by giving him are selicities to de "The is what is them in an order which should help the child's growth at successive stages by giving him something definite to do. This is what is meant by kindergarten gifts and occupations. The first gift consists of six worsted balls, one of each of the six colors. Upon these the child can be made to use every muscular and intellectual faculty. The balls illustrate all movements; they spring, roll, jump and rest; suspended by strings, still more varieties of movement are obtained. The child's attention is first caught, then naturally follows observation. From this first gift he learns his first tion. From this first gift be learns his first lesson of form, color, size and substance, as well as of action and re-action, motion and inertia.

The second gift is a wooden hall, cylinder and cube, the primary form of all objects. In this case the ball is hard and not colored. The faculty of observation is again called upon, and to this is now added that of comparison. The child will count the faces, lines, angles and points of the cube. His examination of the cylinder calls his attention to the difference between circumference and diameter, the properties of the circle, etc. The rolling motion of the wooden ball differs from that of the worsted one, and differs as it is rolled up or worsted one, and differs as it is rolled up or down an inclined plane. So does the child gain his first lesson in geometry and phil-

The third gift is a cube composed of eight smaller cubes, a practical instructor in arith-metic, as shown in adding, dividing, subtract-ing the little heap. Nearly one hundred different things can be built with these eight blocks—stems sents, windows, bridges, all blocks—steps, seats, windows, bridges, all kinds of crosses, etc. The gifts are ten in sumber, all arranged on this progressive plan, and handlest in the most orderly fashion. By their use the child acquires great skill of eye and hand in children.

and hand in addition to mental knowledge.

The kindergarten occupations are almost innumerable, but the materials are few and very simple. The articles in most common use are clay for modeling, wooden balls for stringing, colored papers cut into circles, squares and triangles for folding and posting.

squares and triangles for folding and pasting, or into strips for weaving; stiff paper perforated for embroidery; beads and wafers of various sizes and colors; sticks, hair-pins, pebbles, pieces of card-board, cork and wire.

It is one of the greatest possible mistakes to imagine that the gifts provide for mere play, or the occupations for mere tancy-work. Nothing could be farther from the true kindergarien might for kindergarien instruction is a perspirit, for kindergarten instruction is a pro-found philosophy, and should be so studied.

*Tire Lances' Howe Jouwnat, will supply the books sentained in this scricle to any reader.

CAN any one belo me. I worder? I find so much belo from "Mothers' Curner," I am sure this is the place Thave a boy eight years old who shores so one can hardly sleep in the same room. Can anyone advise me what is best to do?

E.J.J.

Take the child to a physician. There may be some obstruction in the nose which prevents breathing with the mouth closed.

WILL some of the mothers tell me what to feed my fifteen months' old baby to obviate constipation? She has only been troubled since wearing, so cow's milk must be the cause of £; also, the best remedy for a cold which she takes at night, in spite of a warm room and long flamed night-dress.

Lots W. Lawers.

Give oatmeal gruel made with milk alternately with the other food, until the desired result is obtained.

Read the paragraph on children's colds in the February "Mother's Councik"

FLANNEL DRESSES

FLANNEL DRESSES

I WANT to tell the sheers how much benefit a little suggestion in the "Mother? Council," was to me. One overlang has November I was reading our favorite Journal, and found tills advice: "Fut flaunch dresses on your bables." I looked at my darling, four mostles old, whose chutby arms had quite entgrown the sheeves of every haby dress, and association must be done. Like that other stodier I felt I was not able to Iron the long dresses and skirtly, nor side to hire it done, and here was the problem solved. Before I slept that night I had a dress of portly gray (with tiny stripes of pink and blue) French flaunch—al seventy-dive cents a yard—cut out. I made it Gretchen maist, with skirt a little below feet, feather-stitched with blue embroidery sitk. Then I made adoesn pretty white blue, put on titlle black worden sitekings and nice little crechested time worsted shoes, and bably looked "too cute for anything." Afterward I made another dress of dark-blue flaunch with cardinal dots, feather-stitched with cardinal silk. Slaby wore these two dresses every day all winter, and was warm and combrabite. When I whited to dress her to go out. I either put a white dress in over, or put on another flauncel shirt and an extra skirt, and oil, wasn't I thank'd when I rothing day came around that the great basket of white slips and skirts a se missing. I hope some other mother will profit by my experience. CLIPPER.

AN ECONOMICAL WARDROBE

AN ECONOMICAL WARDROBE

Thave often read articles addressed to young mothers-to-be, giving a list of the must-haves for the small sovereign of the household, and an constrained to give my experience, because I am convinced that the remailest of these settemets is too large for the purse of her who must count every penny.

First, four bands of all-wood flannel, one-half yard leng and six inches wide.

For shirts my plan is to bey a gentleman's games shirt of the largest size and test quality. From this I make four tiny ones, cutting them square on the length of the front. These I fields with crecheting, adding several rows to the object at the neck and running in a ribbon to the with.

Two plexes of cofton disper made into towels one yard by one-half yard, and lave donen dispers made from old sheets, one donen being eighteen inches square, and one desen twelve inches.

Pettenate I make of one and one-half yards of flannel, using the width for the length. I finish the hem with feather establishing of silks or yarm.

For drosses I perfer Leastale cambric, though harved or flagured usuals in a equally pretty. I have not yard of tacking or cambridery, from which I make four yokes. One and one-half yards of Loneshale makes the skirt. I turn up the selvedge three inches for a hern, and finish with machine-sittebing, feather-sillching, or hem-sillching. Halfa down drosses are enough. Some of the dresses may be made sack-patition with the failness arranged in tooks or box philos down to the waist.

One best dross is enough, and this I make of nalascole, and use the width for the length, as in making the other dresses. A bem five hiches deep, with a row of fagure drosses. A bem five hiches deep, with a row of fagure drosses. A bem five hiches deep, with a row of fagure fine all dresses because they are not so quickly entirem.

Two kejitted blankets of white Germantown mool are very useful; make them about one yard leng by three-shores for all dresses because may are not at quasi-ontigrown.

Two knitted blankets of white Germantown wool are very useful; make them about one yard long by three-quarters wide.

Three little wrappers of outing flannel ornamented with feather-stileding, and cloak and bonnet complete the wardrobs. A very pretty cloak is of fine flannel with nucled walst, flancy-stileded with silk.

The cost of these articles will vary in different local ites but I am quite sure will not be more than the following:

following:

3 yds, outling flammed for wrappers 8: 1254c.

4 yds, cutton and west flammed for two petitionats and 4 bands 655c.

1 yds, Lousdale cambrie for 6 dresses 6:125c.

1 yds, tousdale cambrie for 6 dresses 6:125c.

2 yds, namescak for bosel dress (a like, 16 skedus Germantown wood)

15 yds, flor flammed for cloak @ 5c.

1 bonnet.

or course, one can easily do without the best dress, make a cheaper cloak and bounct and in that way save some money, while buty will be as evert and pretty as if clothed in fine linen and lace. I would have all rossus mothers remember that there is nothing pretiter for a bally's wardrobe than fine limid-sewing, and if one begins early there will be plenty of time for much of it in the months of waiting for her coronilion as a mother.

A NEW BASSINETTE

A NEW BASSINETTE

PERHAP'S nothing fills a woman with more happiness and causes her hands to fly faster and on sweeter wings, then the perspendion of the wonderful wardrobe for the wonderful "little stranger" whose agrical shall crown her life with motherhood. There are not only the articles to cloubs the little visitor, but the "last with motherhood. There are not only the articles to cloubs the little visitor, but the "last with the "buby's chest," sofily lived and sweetly scented, in which are placed the complete outfit. There must also be something to lay the tile-hit of humanity in, where it may lie in state, to be admired by the many friends coming to behold the miraria, and offer due human been a favorite nest for the new birdling. Of course you have all seen these pretty devices, and it is appropriate the latter, and for the benefit of novelty-forting women, that I write to tell of a yet prettice and more useful farry enteriored by a proud young mother of my acquaintance. Purchase a small cheap below carriage—whicker is best; paint white, then make a limit of white china silk, or movies, nather, than the last of the sides of carriage—with the ritheaut sharp this to the sides of carriage—with the ritheaut sharp this to the sides of carriage—with the ritheaut sharp this to the sides of carriage—with the ritheaut and draw with ribbons.

This cover-me can be drawn from more to room, to a particularly sing all the corner in wheter, and to some coil, refreshing spot in segment. Thus the networky for carriage about, which is so trying to the installer's lack and enterwing to the child, is avolved.

conf. refreshing specification, which is sorrying to the motion carrying buly about, which is sorrying to the motion back and exervating to the child, is avoided. Occount La Coroni.

A PERTINENT QUESTION T ITTLE Macries was taken in ser a favorite horse L1 short. After watering the strange operation with deep interest in second of a casion for it, he said: "Papa, is Nelson having his rubbers put on?"

PROPER FOOD FOR INFANTS

How Can the Little Ones be Happy, Healthy and Hearty?

Dame Nature provides the best food for babies, but there are often cases where it is impossible to feed the child naturally or where such feeding, because of some unhealthy condition, is absolutely dangerous.

Then there is need of a substitute that contains the constituents of human milk. Such a substitute is lactated food, and how well it does its duty is best shown by the picture

This little girl is the child of Mr. and Mrs G. W. Raymond, of East Harpewell, Maine. The mother wrote: "Every one said our baby would never live to be three months old. But we used lactated food for her, and she is now sixteen months old and perfectly healthy. Our heartfelt thanks go out to the discoverer of this food, for it saved our baby."

There is no secret about lactated food, and even the most cautious physicians, like Dr.

There is no secret about lactated food, and even the most cautious physicians, like Dr. Agnew and Dr. Guernsey, advice its use.

Sugar of milk is the basis of mother's milk; it is the basis of lactated food. With it is combined the strengthening and health-giving parts of wheat, oats and barley, together with the necessary bone-forming elements. Every precaution is taken to insure its purity and perfection, and the result is a nourishing food that makes the little ones haven, healthy and that makes the little ones happy, healthy and that makes the little ones happy, healthy and hearty.

Lactated food is not a medicine, yet by regu-lating the digestion and supplying the natural elements for proper growth, it prevents and overcomes colic, poor sleep and the other troubles that afflict infants.

Physicians everywhere prescribe it, and thousands of mothers recommend it from having seen, in their own families, its wonder-ful nourishing qualities.

Twenty-five cents will buy enough of it at any good drug store to make ten pints of the food that will piense and nourish and strengthen the infant. It is a safe, simple, invaluable food for infants, and they like it, thrive upon it and grow healthy and strong.

The manufacturers of lactated food, Wells, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt., offer to mail a full-sized can to any reader of the JOURNAL for 25 cents. Beautiful birthday card and valuable book free to any mother on request.

THE BABY'S DELIGHT EXERCISING MACHINE

is an invaluable aid to every mother. It amuses the baby and at the same time gives him an exercise that is highly beneficial; strengthers his limbs; prevents bow-less; teaches him to walk and gives him a general strength and vigor that will go far to ward of all infantile diseases.

PRICE, $3.00. SEND FOR CIRCULARS. THE WILDER MAN'F'O CO., Salem, Mass.

"MIZPAH" VALVE NIPPLES WILL NOT COLLAPSE.

WILL NOT COLLAPSE.

Make musting user, and prevent much colic, because they admit sir isso the bottle as the milk is drawn out, and prevents a recumbeling formed. Sample five by mail upon request, with valuable information for cleaning and keeping sipples sweet and bealthy.

MANIPOLD CO., 291 Church Street, New York, Has INFANTS' HEALTH WARDROBE.

Sc. Short clothes 25 pat, 50; directions, kind, amount unterial regulard. Mrs. F. E. Phillips, Keens, N. H. BABY WARDROBE PATTERNS

Complete cutifit, 25 improved patterns for infants' clothes. Also 25 of short clothes. Either set with full directions for making, amount and kind of material, he mail, scaled, 55 cents. Patterns absolutely, o'dable. HINTS TO EXPERTANT MOTILIES. Hrs. J. BRIDE, P. O. Box 2033, New York.

WARD Heavery gar-Ament re-Boundsting Vinpoved Series and February Series and February Series and February Series S

EDITED AND CONDUCTED BY MARY F. KNAPP

This Department will alternate each month with "Knitting and Crocheting," so that both of these branches of woman's handiwork may be distinctly and more fully treated.

Both Departments are under the editorship of MISS KNAPP, to whom all letters should be sent, addressed to 20 Linden Street, South Boston, Mass.

ABOUT JEWEL EMBROIDERY

BY JANE S. CLARKE

continue as regards dresses; but, nevertheless, a great variety of beads is used for enriching both dinner and evening dresses, and the white satin waistooats, with the coral embroidery, are very beautiful and most effective.

There is, however, little doubt that whatever may be the future of jewelled dress trimmings, this kind of ornamentation is becoming more and more popular for every kind of knick-knack, as the jewels give a very bright and sparkling effect if they are judiciously used upon a background of satin, velvet, brocade, plush or silk; and it can be used for wall pockets, tea cosies, suchets of all sorts, night-dress cases, etc. It is always desirable to have a good and durable foundation for this kind of work, because it is practically almost indestructible. The mistake which most beginners make is that of having too many jewels and too many colors. The effect is much better when only two, or at most three, kinds of stones are used, sparingly, upon the same piece of embroidery. same piece of embroidery.

These jewels are made in a great variety of These jewels are made in a great variety of colors, and are in shape round, oval, square and six-sided, and are foiled at the back, which adds greatly to their brilliancy and durability. The jewels are generally used unset; but some are mounted in a gilt claw setting, pierced with four holes, so that they can easily be sewed down to foundation. The unset gems have only two holes pierced in them, and very often these holes are so small that a very fine needle cannot pass through them; and as the least force may split the jewel it is safe to pass the slik through them, and then thread the needle and fasten the jewel to the velvet.

In the pattern of the handkerchief case which we give our readers this month, the foundation is of a bronze green satin, and the foundation is of a bronze green satin, and the stones used are oval, of a pale green color for the leaves, the berries being formed of white uncut round ones. Two patterns are given; the small one shows the effect of a small spray of mistletoe worked in each of the points, and the larger one will be more suitable for working when only one spray is required.

The stitches which hold these gens in their places should be of silk, almost matching the stones in color, so that they are nearly invisible; but many ladies prefer using the gold colored horsetail silk, which is extremely fine and strong, and the same silk is used to fasten down the single gold thread which outlines these leaves, and the double line of gold thread which forms the stem. The large spray looks very well worked in satin stitch and edged with either gold thread or gold-colored silk.

silk.

The case itself should be lined with either old-gold or pale blue silk, the edges being finished off with gold cord. A layer of wadding should be placed between the satin and the lining, and on this should be put a sprinkling of sachet powder. This will give a pleasant perfume to the handkerchief placed in the sachet. The foundation should be marked out before beginning to work the nattern, and out before beginning to work the pattern, and it should be traced like the diagram.

INFANT'S CARRIAGE BLANKET

ONE yard of white eider-down flannel one yard wide; paint a spray of wild roses a little at the right of center, drooping toward the center of blanket, having the stems of the spray about three or four inches from the top. Place a cluster of three buds at the left, and a single bud below, at the right, hav-ing the effect of dropping from the spray; turn the edge in all round on the wrong side and baste it down. Line it with china silk, blind-stitch or fell it on to the wool. Finish with a white silk cord; or, if you prefer, knot pink and green worsted fringe corresponding to the colors in the spray. to the colors in the spray.

A PIANO LAMP SHADE

By Mrs. W. C. Woon

HOLD a yard and a half of wide china silk twice, cut to make three pieces exactly alike. Sew two pieces together, and turn a bem two and a half inches deep for the top; overcast the bottom. Run a shirr next the bem, another two inches below, and one one inch below that. Place on the shade frame, and draw the top shirr string to fit the frame, allowing the wide hem to arrange itself into a graceful puff; draw the other shirrs to fit the frame. Now take the other piece of silk and a graceful puff; draw the other shirrs to fit the frame. Now take the other piece of silk and cut into exactly three parts for the ruffle. This allows a whole breadth extra to full. Sew the three pieces together and "pink" both edges. Shirr about one inch from the top, and sew to the bottom of the shade. A handsome spray of flowers, and a lace ruffle over the silk one, adds to its beauty, but it is very handsome without these.

very handsome without these.

If the frame is not large enough, a small wire may be looped around it very easily, making any size desired.

BABY QUILT OF CHEESECLOTH

DOUBLE two yards of cheesecloth, basting D a layer of wool between. Turn in the edges, and run them together with fine stitches. Tack in squares or diamonds with any color of worsted, as in a comfortable, and buttonhole-stitch the edges all round with sephyr of a contrasting shade. Use white, pink, or pale blue cheesecloth.

PUMPKIN PINCUSHION.

BY M. J. SAFFORD.

THE materials needed are a piece of bright yellow surah, satin or any bit of plain silk stuff, a spool of button-hole twist the same color, a few scraps of dark green silk, a little wadding (wool is preferable) and a piece of thin white cambric. Commence by making the wadding and cambric into a cushion seven-teen and one-balf inches roundand seven and one-half inches deep, and flatten it somewhat on the top and bottom like a pumpkin. Gather the yellow material—wool will answer if silk cannot be had—at the top and bottom, and slip it over the cushion, drawing it closely together in the center and sewing firmly to the cushion undergoth. Not factor a modelleful cushion underneath. Next fasten a needleful of the twist at the top of the cushion, draw it down to the bottom tightly enough to indent the silk and fasten at the bottom. Repeat this eight times, keeping the threads at an equal distance apart in the center of the cush-ion than dividing it in the center of the cushion, thus dividing it into sections of the same size. Then cut from pasteboard a circular piece two inches in diameter, cover it with dark green silk and sew it on the bottom, to conceal the gathering of the silk. Cut from the same green silk a piece three inches long and two wide, and stitch lengthwise four tucks one-eighth of an inch wide, to be left outside. Stuff the case thus made with wadding and bem the bottom nently down upon the yellow silk top of the cushion.

USES OF HUCKABUCK

BY M. A. WILLIAMSON

OR all articles on huckaback the design should be rather conven-tional, large floral and scroll pattional, large floral and scroll patterns for counterpanes and tablecloths, geometrical forms with double outlines, the pattern running in and out all over the surface, so the background can be darned in different stitches, the figure or design left plain buckabuck, and the outline worked in stem or heavy buttouhole stitch in white (silk or linen); or, if desired, in the darkest shade of

Supplementation of the the color used, for all the work on this material is prettiest in shades of one color. A double outline can define the pattern, one a dark shade (darker than any used in the darning) and within it another of white.

Summentalitations

A set of doilies, like the illustration, should be fringed, the pattern worked in white outline silk, in stem stitch. The darning: It is surprising the variety of different stitches one can use in the two lightest shades of any color the lighter. two lightest shades of any color, the lighter for the background inside the geometrical figure, the second shade for that outside, and a line of stem stitching, with the second ahade just above the hemstitching fringe. All colors can be used upon this set, pinks, lavenders, greens, all the dozen in different tints, or at pleasure, two or three of a color, or the whole set may the whole set may be made in yellows, some very pale, some medium, and others quite dark, for all shades of yellow are good on this material. A variety is very much appreciated.

These same suggestions can be used on the table-centers and for sideboard covers: for the latter a row of squares arranged like tile along the front, just back of an inch-wide hem. Each square can be filled in with a different color, and the out-line worked in yelline worked in yel-low, if preferred. The center-piece can be a combina-tion of the geome-trical figures withthrough and sround them, with plain material left in the middle.

Handkershief Handkerchief cases, also of the fine quality. A strip 8 x 30, with small circles, little figures, be scattered over the surface, which is darmed (not too closely) with pink or blue on white, or lavender upon eern, and should be made up with the same colored linings.

There is a course double weave that is very suitable for counterpanes, table-cloths and toilet covers. Large petal-ed flowers should be worked in rope silk, or white linen floss, in long and short buttonhole stitch, and darned with the same heavy silk.

Cushion covers that slip over, made like the dolly illustrations, are worked in heavy outline silks, or if for every-day use, linen doss, and red and blue marking cotton for the background will answer, and look very well. A set of ècru linen shades for a very sunny window was made some years ago, and are still in use. A deep border of the heavy huck was used, worked in white, and the darning of twine the color of the curtain; the effect was good, like an antique lace.

Over towels, with deep borders at the ends, are very nice for presents for brides; and for the babies there are cab and crib covers, with white silk descine or the baby pink and blue for descine

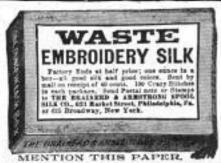

And for the mother's lap is the little pad, a square of the goods fringed around, with five-leaved roses scattered over, and the words in yellow silk, "Ring around a rosy, sit upon a posy," the back-ground of baby colors darned under the letters, but the roses showing the material, which be-enuse it is of linen s so suitable for all the above purposes.

For all kinds of house-furnishing, bucksbuck is an exceedingly desirable material; but a very fine quality must be used for the dollies, center-pieces and side-board covers. For the counterpanes and bed-room decorations the double weave is the more suitable.

Agents wanted in every large place. Ladies can make from $10.00 to $0.00 a week. Address the BRAINERD & ARMSTRONG SPOOL SILK CO., 6st Market Scroet, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE STOCKINGS THAT ARE STAMPED

LOOK WELL, FIT WELL, WEAR WELL,

ON THE TOE

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS. For sale by the trade generally and obtainable direct from the makers, who will send a

POST-PAID PARCEL PRICE-LIST, FULLY DESCRIPTIVE, TO ANY APPLICANT

SHAW STOCKING CO., LOWELL, MASS.

FOR-LADIES & GENTLEMEN. "BOX TIP"SCHOOL SHOES FOR BOYS & GIRLS.

A<sup>SK</sup> your dealer for the Fargo Special Shoes; if he does not keep them send to us for the style and size you want. Illustrated descriptive list furnished on application, also comic pamphlet.

C. H. FARGO & CO., Chicago.

ormandie

CONTREXEVILLE MFC.CO. 287 Creat Ave. Manville, R. I.

ADAPTED TO ALL KINDS OF

HAND AND MACHINE WORK

LACE AND EMBROIDERY, now of so much interest to the Ladies, especially considered.

SOLD BY ALL RESPECTABLE DEALERS IN THE COUNTRY.

ASK FOR BARBOUR'S.

ends of the steel, surrounced not to but through, Gust Percha, ownered, will not reast, "Perfaction stamped on the back of each Stay, Ask your deal for them, Write for samples. Manufactured by THE DETROIT STAY CO., Detroit, Mic New York Office and Salesroom, 333 Broadway.

HAROLD SORE HAIR CURLER

NO HEAT | Quick, Burable, Sure Light as a hairpin, and makes a FULL, FLUFFY CURL.

Can be worn day or night. ## Full Set - 30 Cts.
SIX CURLERS - mailed on receipt of 30 Cts.
H. R. CUMMINGS, (Bex 120) Wordester, Mass.

DD RAGS TION" Dyes will make beautiful carpets and rags and are guaranteed not to per we will send a package each of "PERFECTION" arkey-lied, Green, Wine, Nedhun-Brown, Rose and catague, for 40 cents; single package, by cents.

W. CUNHING & CO., FORCEOFT, MARKE.

MUSIC SALE To reduce our stock of mostle we will send by pieces full about mostle size, including songs, marches, waltow, quadrilbes (with calls), etc., by Mesdelsscoles, Reckboree, Monart, etc., all for only 25 cts. Yes, COMRADES is included. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Q. L. HATHAWAY.

239 washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Stamping Patterns

Any one who wants Stamping Patierus can have them sent to select from on agreement to pay for what they keep and return the rest. Address HENRY MITCHELL, North Reeding, Mose.

MUSIC Beginners read notes in one bour. Large plane or organ chart (14 x 23), 3 lessons only 90c. Prof. Jas. MacMaster, 26 Wahash Ave., Chicago.

OLD MAIDS made new by "Prof. Baster's In-wention." Pr. No. List of new plays FREE. BAKER'S, 23 Winter St., Boston, Mass.

"FREE Samples mailed for Sick Headache," Rhomas-tion, Dyspepsis. Bushe's System Tanis Co., Cheeland, O.

ON HOME DRESS MAKING

MISS HOOPER invites, and will cheerfully answer any questions concerning home dressmaking which may be sent to her by the JOURNAL sisters. While she will answer by mail, if stamp is inclosed, she greatly prefers to be allowed to reply through the JOURNAL, in order that her answers may be generally helpful. Address all letters to Miss Emma M. Hoopen, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

PRACTICAL DRESSMAKING

IE serious details necessary in successful dressmaking rob the subject of any levity; for it is undoubtedly hard work at the present time to turn out a well-fitting, stylish gown. The inside finishings are important items and it is nty touch that makes the French eautiful inside and out. Nothing is for a lining with a Parisian modiste ork too much to put upon the inev make a customer pay well for all sary in successful dressey make a customer pay well for all indiwork; but when a woman orders om Paris prudence is usually thrown

FINISHING A BODICE

the shoulder-seams open, or both es forward; I prefer the latter. The darts and under-arm seams open, side-form seam should be turned as firmly, with a bit of crinoline te iron and hodice, using a moder-iron. Press the seams of a velvet ice by running the seams over the of the iron, after standing it erect, of the iron, after standing it erect, sing will leave marks on the outer Before pressing, overcast the seam colored silk, or bind them with the inding sold for this purpose. In snip each seam twice at the waistent any drawing. Cut the sleeve he same manner, and press these loping the seam edges before bindwasting them is a French fancy, as half an inch wide, except the dunder-arm seams, which should riths of an inch wide. Cut the ly, or the exquisitely neat effect attained. Set the belt half an the bottom of the waist-line, and to the center-back, side form and ans. The belt should be a fourth maller than the waist-line of the maller than the waist-line of the hus keep it in place, and remove

BONEING A BODICE

VER stays you select, have them ow. With the best of whalebone rty cents for a yard length, and it, it can hardly be universally ere are too many good patented market to name any. If the market to name any. If the dy covered they are cut-stitched with colored silk twist. If un-the double or single casing on a statisching it along the edges, nes to run to the edge of a bodice, roject beyond it, fastening each top and bottom firmly in its a halebone in warm water before rot, it in the casing warm, so put it in the casing warm, so s and hardens it will be shaped s and hardens it will be shaped. If the garment is a princess ones run down about as low as que. If you are particular as to gown, bone every seam. French bone between the under-arm ram, and the side form and gore become quite common to bone in the edge to a height just betpart of the bust, which certhe smooth fit, but renders the ooking of a bodice a trial. If a sing lit fasten your buttons rook, and thus save your nails

L FURTHER DETAILS

lower edge of a bodice with the cross-barred, cut on the inch and a half wide, which inch and a half wide, which erlining between the material ient. It is neater and pleas-ich if wrists and collars are isilk. A thick facing is an every way. In blind-stitch-be sure that it does not catch al, but remains a blind to the reast the raw edges without the top of the sleeve and the ngh the rest of the seams are lining, casing and belt, overtitching of pink, red or yellow iskes a pretty inside to any g to be of silk, silenia, French called percaline, or linea, mas entirely with silk. There is of the JORNAL containing detalls regarding the first f dressmaking. In these the implements necessary for the treated of, as well as how to make a given, telling of the etc. A satire waist lining is very tightly made does not e than the other materials. up crosswise of the goods

AN OUTFIT FOR SPRING

EVERAL correspondents have asked for a guide for their spring shopping, which they require early in the senson. In preparing for a new sen-son's wear, three things are to be considered; the amount of money in the purse; what is already on hand, and the size of the town where the time is to be seent, as a dressy.

time is to be spent, as a dressy, fashionable city of fifty thousand inhabitants makes larger demands upon the wardrobe than a quiet town of fivethousand. If the unlucky owner of a small purse, never buy loud colors or designs in dress materials, or the latest novcities, as when their day is past they are not "joys forever" to serve a second time when remodeled. Try to have becoming clothes, neatly made and well-fitted, to atone for the lack of variety, and take good care of them, in the way of brushing and mending, when either are necessary.

THE NECESSARY GOWNS

A GENERAL shopping, walking and traveling gown, a nice dress for church and visiting wear, a pretty evening toilette, though not for full dress, and a neat home afternoon gown seem positively necessary for a woman's comfort who goes into ordinary society, and lives in a town of about ten thousand inhabitants. In buying dresses in the spring keep the summer in view, and buy goods that are not too heavy for that time as well. We will imagine that our inquirer has one hundred not too heavy for that time as well. We will imagine that our inquirer has one hundred dollars to spend on her clothes, exclusive of any dressmaker's bills, which may be large or small, according to the spender's own proficiency. If there are any gowns on hand that will pay for re-making, use them, of course. But of this fact I cannot judge, every wardrobe being in a different condition, but I am supposing that this young woman is in the condirobe being in a different condition, but I am supposing that this young woman is in the condition of Flora M'Flimsy, with literally "nothing to wear." For the generally useful gown have a navy-blue serge at seventy-five cents to one dollar, and make it with a basque and a blazer. Worn together, it forms an entire suit; and when the summer days come the skirt and refer may be worn with a blouse of nainsook, percale or China silk, and prove the most useful gown on record. It does not require any trimming but stitched edges and bone buttons, and will require nine yards for a "bell" skirt, having a tiny ruffle, coat basque and stylishly long blazer jacket tied with a cord at the front. This will cost twelve dollars, made of the dollar goods, and should be worn with gray or tan Biarritz gloves, and a soft felt walking hat, these costing two and a half dollars more.

CONTINUING THE OUTFIT

CONTINUING THE OUTFIT

THE visiting gown may be of brown, deep tan, grayish-blue or gray cording, or Henrietta, a plain surface being better for a stand-by. This may have a vest of bengaline, and a trimming of gimp, making it with a "bell" skirt, pointed or coat basque, or as a princess, with a draped, diagonally-opening, front. Including linings, this will cost eleven dollars with material at one dollar. For the evening dress have a crépon at one dollar, in pearl, blue, pink or yellow; pink with a black velvet girdle bodico and a little jet looks well; also, yellow, with a Wattenn bow of No. 22 satin ribbon, which comes from the back of the waist, crosses in front, and is then carried back to between the shoulders, nearly to the neck, where it ties in ends and loogs that fall to the edge of the skirt, using from seven to nine varis of ribbon, according to that fall to the edge of the skirt, using from seven to nine varis of ribbon, according to the figure. With such a bow, a round waist, V neck, chiffon ruffles on neck and wrists, and a "bell" demi-train, hav-ing a ruffle of the goods, fourteen dollars. More must come from the fund, including cream sucide gloves to wear with the dress. With the best gown wear gray or tan sucide or glace gloves, and a black straw hat trimmed with lace and flowers may be worn until fall by renewing the flowers. For midsummer have a white or blue sailor to wear with the blue serge. This takes another nine dollars, and we must add shoes, ties, probably six pair of hose, some dainty lingerie, etc., using grob-ably ten dollars more. For the home after-toon gown, which would be a tea-gown if the wearer is a matron, have a bright rolor, cardi-nal, blue, or tan, and trim with a little velvet. This can be made in rather a picturesque style with a round waist, large sleeves, "bell" or slightly gathered skirt and collar, deep cuffs and corseler of relvet, costing about cuffs and corselet of veives, costing about eight dollars, with goods at seventy-five cents. A long cape wrap, made at home, will cost eight dollars. We have now bought to the value of seventy-four dollars, and with the remainder may have china slik at seventy-five cents, a white dimity and a next Sea

*DRESSMAKERS CORNER

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any possible question on Home-Dressmaking sent me by my readers. EMMA M. HOOPER

I must ask my correspondents to write me just how a most ask my correspondence to write me just how their pieces are cut up when they wish information re-garding the remodeling of a gown; and also to state the occasions for which a certain costume is wished, when asking how to make it. Another point is in regard to an outfit of any kind, which can be more plainly written of if the writer will tell me how much she wishes to apendupon it. One more important item is—to be brief, yet give necessary detail in an explicit manner.

Mas. M. F., Chicano, Ill.-Please rend answer to "M. C.," as your letter had the same fate.

Mas. Howako E.—Read about new gowns for the spring in this issue; also of boneing busques.

Chuntung—Read answer to "Jane P." Double-fixed antin ribbon is benetiful, but nearly double the expense of the single-faxed.

Laura F.—Tun, gray and grayish-green grounds are now preferred for ingrain carpets. Use oak furniture for your yellow bed-room.

CLARA G.—Taffeta at $1.00 makes a good black silk petitocal. Trim with hemmed ruffles, unless you wish the trouble of repinking edges.

EARLY SKWING—Make up your cotton dresses first, then spring woolen gowns and finally the China silk and lare dresses. Read answer to "Young Girl." MIS. WALTER K.—Such a well-grown boy of five years should certainly be in knee trousers, with the cul-away jacket and bloose walst that he used to wear with klit skirts.

MENNIE O.—Tallor-made suits for the spring will be a small, indistinct stripes, plain and diagonal, motified ad clouded goods. Have lvory buttons rimmed with ull slives.

"Synthe Gree"—A white nainsook, embroidered floencing, two ginghams, a mousestaine de Lade and an organdy will do for the wash dresses, though the two latter will not wash according to the manner of making nowadays.

Mss. POSTER K.—I do not advise buying bargains in dress groots to lay away unless you can at once place then into use; otherwise they causily take all of your spars shopping money, grow threscene and disappoint you when examined.

M. C., Enperos, Taxes.—A personal letter sent you on December 18th has been returned as "unclaimed," so when disappointed in your asswer not "reaching you quickly" remember where the fault lies, as the address was exactly as you gave it.

JANE P.—Velvet is universally becoming, and brover out of style entirely. Remodel your pointed V neck erresing bedies by cutting it into a round walst, with thiffin fritle on neck and timy puffed sieeves. Then bey eight yards of sain ribben, No. 22 and make it is to a Walkens bow, which is described in "An Outfit for Spring" on this page.

Yours of the page.

Yours of Grat.—Moiré ribbons and striped moiré silks are exclusively stylish just now, with the prospect of being very popular this season. Sea Island ginghams are very wide, retail at about twenty cents, and can be triumed with ince of embreidery and ribbon bows, especially the latter. There are first pinks now in reliable cotion goods.

HARRISET C. R.—"An Outfit for Spring" in this base will neeled you. Probably this answer will be too late. Posither bossese from $1.50 to $0, as you have a wide margin for this article. If you make your own gowns I think $6 will cover the cost of the articles if of a med-ham price, though you could find them from $0 to $0, even among the medium prices.

Long Stan—It is rather amusing to find many letters in my mail containing locks of hair. In the first place they do not determine what colors will be most becom-ing, as the eyes and complexion misst also be consid-ered. A paints skin, blue eyes and red hair cannot weak what a rowy complexion, harel eyes and red hair will find charming, yet both girts have red bair.

OLIVETTE—Avoid plak, crange, brick red and purple.
Gray, navy bite and brows will prove becoming. Your hair is clearly authorn, which as often accompanies hand eyes. The present style of "bell" skiri will add to your height, with it wear a pointed basque with a very long, coat-tail back. The coat basques with a very long, coat-tail back. The coat basques will shorten from will find the being slim, the full or duritees basque from will be stylish.

Mrs. M.—White crition goeds trimmed with edging would certainly be suitable for you. Bellable Scotch and Sea Island ginghams do not fade. White dimity, nainscok, or douncing, with edging and ribbon bell. The other dress have of light being cheviot, or serge, with "beil" skirt, pointed, contrail basque, high sherves, ruffle on skirt, sik voel and cuffs in bluish gray, ten, golden brown, or clear gray shades.

golden brown, or clear gray stances.

Courracy Gant.—If your allk is not too much worn I should remodel it with brocade, as brown is not a pretty color to use as a liming to a black lace dress, and brown betts or gauses are rare to find and expensive when famil. If you use a brown not have the lining of this silk as a "belt" sidt with a blac-gathered raffle on the edge. Let the not hang easily over the silk, but not full, except at the back. Full sleaves, pointed basque, with the set full on the front. Raffle of net on basque to give a roat effect, a glimp of brown and gold on wrists, cullar and printed edge of basque. Six yards and a half of net and three yards of the glimp.

of net and three yards of the gimp.

BLACK EVEN—You must dress in unison with the class whether they select China sitk, wool crépon, China crèpe or nainsoix. The first three would be trimmed with chifton rufflesand penri or sitk giang and the latter with satin ribbon bows and the finest of britation Valenciennes lacs. The skirts would touch in the back for three loches, have a ruffle on the edge and be of a medified "beil" shape. Full sleeves, round waists cut with a gettinge or slight V and a Wattewn bow which is described in "An Outilt for Spering" in this number. Which is described in 2.0 on the class of t from fifty to severally-five cents. The entire cost will depend entirely upon which material you select. Hy all means have white.

all means have white.

MINNIE LUTE—You can evidently wear any color and dark reds. In fact, the thame or brick reds are not becoming to anyone. You are "plans" but not seconing to anyone. You are "plans" but not retout in figure from your description, and there is a great difference between the two states. Thank you fee your kind appreciation. Your letter was too late for the lease mentioned. As your white dress is not soiled why not wern it this season as white and then have it dyed next season for a pretty hoise-gown? Make it over new with a low neck, full slevers, long or either letter, "bell" skirt, with a tiny ruffle of the material, and a round water. Have a ruffle of chiffon all around the low neck and use the stik yoke above it. Went your sush in Japanese siyle! one end from the left shoulder, crossing the front diagonally, passing around the right safe of the waist and the last. Trim the wrise also with chiffin, which has an embroidered edge and be faur inches wide, for thirty-diversities a yard. New it on fall and fieldy.

on full and floff).

Lowerth Vour letter has been a long time unansword, but he length was simply appalling to a beey woman. You should be that time wear dresses well down to your scale, about two inches from the floor. No. I knot an impubility large above flor your size. Servention is will a mineral age, though many are no auxiliar to be young leafers at that time. Young girls of servention wear their half in a flatogan braid, a long shulles braid named up and their at the neets with a bow of ribbon, or in a loose, lew knot having a bailpin for the older half in a flatogan braid, a long shulle in the leafest and set a good example in patients and manners to the younger one, yet I do not believe in expecting for much of the eldest in a family. To be greatle and quiet is not believe to expecting for much of the eldest in a family. To be greatle and quiet is not believe the delicate uses to obvious a young girl, and as a general rais I think her mostley the best consell through her stributed. Thesigh sense of her rules may seen strict now, some day you will see that they were all for the best.

BEST&CO.

Baby Slips for 98 cts.

Made of fine Nainsook—yoke of narrow tacks and hand feather stitching between, finished with fine embroidered edge-embroidered edge on nack and sleeves—Skirt has deep hemetitched hum.

For 90 cts.

Heavy Nainsock short frees-yoke has six groups of fine tucks, with hemstliching between-front and back alike—Neck and siceves finished with the embeddered edge—Skirt has deep beneatisched bem—Siess one and Either sent by mail, postage paid 8 cents extra, can be returned and money refunded if not satisfactory.

These are good examples of the exceptionable advantages we are prepared to offer in Children's clothing which is our exclusive business.

Our Catalogue of BABIES' WEAR, and full descriptions of the latest styles for BOYS and GIRLS of all ages. furnished upon application.

60-62 West 23d St., N. Y

WM. SIMPSON & SONS'

Printed Fabrics.

For sale by all Leading Retail Dealers. Send for Illustrated Catalogue.

L. L. LOOMER'S SONS, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Sample pair of either style malled on receipt of 25c. L. B. KLEINERT RUBBER COMPANY, 26 to 32 E. Houston Street, New York.

SOME FASHIONABLE VISITING TOILETTES

By Isabel A. Mallon

HE old idea that one could drop in and see a friend anyhow and at any hour has—praise be to Madam Etiquette—been lost in that stream where all bad ideas should be. To-day, when one goes to see a friend, one bonors one's self and her by dressing to suit the oc-From the wife of the millionaire to easion. the gentlewoman who keeps her own apart-ment in order and yet remains a lady, who has not known of the horror of having a friend drop in? Nowadays all that has been changed, and every woman who has a circle of friends, no matter how small, has her "at home" day, and on that day, and that day alone, un-less it should be by special invitation, are her friends expected to call. This is a relief specially comprehensible to a housekeeper; for it gives her time not only to see that her own-household is in order, but that she herself is prepared to see her friends mentally and marecally.

A few women maintain that they like their friends to drop in at any time, but these are usually the women who have no cares, and, I am too often afraid, wish, instead of the general conversation, that there should be a discussion of their accountances and of their eral conversation, that there should be a dis-cussion of their acquaintances and of their affairs, a something that really good society frowns upon. It is the women who make the visiting day one of proper formality who ex-pect their guests to observe the same dignity who will reform the world in one way, that is, they will kill scandal and scandal-mongers. To visit these women it would seem proper that a proper gown be assumed.

SOME OF THE MATERIALS

WORTH has, it is probable, done more to extinguish the severe tailor gown as a visiting custome than any other person in the world. He has always despised them, called them "stable clothes," and insisted that the only place for them was in the street, when traveling, when driving one's self, or when taking long walks in the country. All his protestations against them went for nothing, but at last he carried the war into Africa by taking the fine cloths themselves and making taking the fine cloths themselves and making them elaborate with rich trimmings. He has favored supphire, navy and steel-blue; seal and golden-brown; emerald and very dark green; black, bright scarlet, beliotrope and mode in the cloths, and has found no material too rich to combine with them. And so he has triumphed. And the cloth costume of to-day, intended for visiting, is a marvel of elab-cration, having no mechine stitching upon it oration, having no machine stitching upon it except that used for the seams of the skirt and the seams of the bodice. Velvet is very gen-erally used with cloth, but all-velvet gowns are also seen. Heavy silks or broundes are united with cloths, and velvet ribbon, for, passementeric of all kinds, and very coarse lace are used as decorations. The materials are carefully blended, and the trimmings so skillfully applied that nothing seems incongruous. A garniture out of place, not in accord with the material is, as all good dressmakers know, less to be desired than none at all.

THE RUSSIAN COSTUME (Illus, No. 1)

SOME OF THE DESIGNS

In almost every instance, the visiting toilette has the Louis Quinze coat or the Russian blouse for the bodice. The skirt has a very slight train and almost invariably a foot trimming outlines it. For a slender figure, nothing is prettier than a Russian blouse, which is shown in Illustration No. I.

which is shown in Illustration No. 1.

The toilette illustrated is of light mode cloth with a perfectly smooth surface. The skirt is the usual bell-shape with a slight train in the back. The bordering which outlines it is in emerald green cloth overlaid with gold passementarie, a design below cloth overlaid with gold pas-sementeric, a design being chosen which permits the bright color to show through. The blouse as it is called, though it is in reality a cont basque, has a yoke of the green cloth overlaid.

eloth overlaid with gold, and is drawn in soft folds to fit the figure, while the skirt, which reaches almost to the knees, reaches almost to the knees, is full, and confined by a fancy belt of gold clasped in front by two buckles elaborately set with imitation emeralds. The edge of the basque skirt is finished like the edge of the skirt, with a band of green overlaid with gold. The collur is a high straight one, with the gold over it; the sleeves are full ones of the mode cloth, drawn into very deep cuffs of the green with gold decorations that flare just at the wrist. The bounct is a very small one of gold not, with the usual three plumes of green tied on at the back, and a gold erescent decorating the front; the ties are of green upder ribbes. This can crescent decorating the front; the ties are of green velvet ribbon. This contume, which is made by its gold decoration to look very rich, can be developed in a much simpler fashiom if one desires it. Black passementerie, either silk or wool, may be used in place of gold; that is, when the material itself is black, and if one wished a different color, the gown could be developed with no trimming, except that required on the belt, on the cuffs and on the yoke.

A SYMPHONY IN HELIOTROPE

WOMEN who find the various shades of WOMEN who find the various shades of beliotrope becoming to them, are, for the time, casting all other colors aside for it, and having their tea-gowns, their street dresses, their evening dresses and their visiting costumes made of the shade which is so dainty, and which is also so very trying. A typical beliotrope cloth is most simply but prettily made, and intended for visiting. No other color but this one is seen on the toilette, except where a touch of some other shade is required on the bonnet. It is one of the few gowns not made with a cont basque, and so its wearer can, during the cold months, assume a handsome fur wrap, or, when the season grows wearer can, during the cold months, assume a handsome fur wrap, or, when the season grows warm enough, go abroad in her figure.

Illustration No. 2 shows just what the gown is. The skirt is very smooth-litting and barely touches the ground in the back, so that it is quite possible to walk in it. The lower edge is finished with a two-inch band of veivet, exactly the shade of exactly the shade of the cloth, and starting from under it at regular intervals are strips of ribbon vel-vet that form the skirt decorations; the center one reaches almost to the knees, the ones on each side of it are much higher, while the ones beyond them come far up on the hip. The velvet is drawn up and tied in a flat bow with ends, and all of it so securely fastened down that it looks much bigher, while like a decoration brocaded on the brocaded on the skirt, or a passemen-teric applied to it. The bodice is a close-fitting, sharply-pointed one, arching over the hips and laced in the back. It is outlined with vel-vet like the bottom vet like the bottom of the skirt, and has, starting from the throat, ribbon dec-orations like those described on the skirt; although, of course, a narrower ribbon is used for this purpose. A high

The bonnet is a small one of heliotrope felt, with a bunch of feathers at the back; there with a bunch of feathers at the back; there are high velvet bows in front, and black velvet ties that cross under the chin and then over the back in the received fashion, so that it seems as if two sets of strings were worn. The gloves are of lavender undressed kid. In brown cloth such a gown would look well trimmed with green velvet, blue could be ornamented with black searlet with with black, scarlet with black, olive with golden-brown; and mode with navy-sapphire or emerald.

A VERY DRESSY COAT

VERY many of us have pretty black skirts, either of cloth or silk, properly cut and made, and which, by the addition of a dressy coat, form suitable visiting costumes. Such a one is shown in Dicstration No. 3. The cont itself is of moss-green uncut velvet, is quite long and closely fitted to the figure in the back. The skirt extends well around over the hips and seems to be buttoned by a single large gold button onto the waistcoat of white cloth that forms the entire front. This waistcoat front. This waistcoat, which is really the front of the bodice, as it extends from the shoulders down, is not quite as long as the coat. Its lower edges, and those defining the opening in front, are outlined with a narrow braiding of gilt. The collar is high and tinished with the same decoration. isned with the same decon-tion; from under it comes a gathered fall of coarse frish lace, caught here and there to form a cravat. The sleeves are of the velvet, quite full, but shaping into Quite full, but shaping into the arms and baving broad flaring cuffs of the white cloth, braided with the gold as their finish. The hat worn with this coat is a "Beef-eater" one of velvet like the coat; on one side is a bunch of cream-white feathers, while one long full green feather falls down on the hear.
As it is a picture hat, it is posed on the head to show the hair, and in the manner that is most becoming. Of course, this coat would be worn becoming. Of course, this coat would be worn by a rather young matron, or unmarried girl, but developed in somewhat darker colors and having with it a bounct instead of a hat, it is suitable for a woman of any age.

A HELIOTROPE CLOTH DRESS

A VERY DRESSY COAT (Illus, No. 3)

THE ECONOMY OF THE VISITING TOILETTE

THAT there is economy in a visiting tol-lette cannot be doubted. Like the house-A lette cannot be doubfed. Like the house-dress it has its place, and not being used for any other purpose it retains its freshness and beauty longer than it would if it were a general wear frock. Of course, it is suited for open or concert wear, but I would not advise its being worn where one has to sit down all the time, as it is apt to lose its shape after three hours' crushing in the ordinary seat in any place of amusement. By care and thought, very rich costumes may be arranged without a great expense, and the woman who early in the season carefully selects her fabrics and gives her dressmaker time enough maker time enough to develop them, will find that she has saved money, and that she possesses a gown appropriate for all daytime func-tions. And there is a deal of satisfaction in knowing that so in knowing that, so that when the cards come for the wed-ding the "at home," or afternoon tea, one is certain that one possesses an entire costume, and this is a consolation almost passing those given by the consolations intimate friends. To be ready at any moment for any call that soriety may make upon her does mean so much to a woman. It lifts off her mind that awful thought: "Whatam I going to wear?" and gives instantly a sense of supreme a sense of supreme gladness that gown and wrap, bonnet and gloves are at hand, waiting to be assumed. There is no care until the is no care until the very day of the ten, of the reception, or whatever the func-tion may be has come, and then the only care is to as-sume one's belong-ings properly and to be as hunny as tossibe as happy as possi-ble.

maker time enough

IS OUR SPECIALTY.

After years of persistent effect to raise the standard of our Muslin Underwear we have now reached the point where further improvement would seem almost impos-sible. We submit our present stock as the best that can be done in this direction. The shapes seem to be perfect, every garment is guaranteed to dt, the material is ex-cellent and it is difficult to see where any detail of manufacture could be improved upon. The prices are as low as such carefully made garments can possibly be produced and sold for ; indeed, we think such qualities and prices sever went hand in hand before. The following items will give you an idea of the entire stock:

This cut represents a fine quality Muslin Gown, Hub-hard yoke of four Hamburg insertings and six clusters of tucks, full sleeves, ruffle of emberodery $1.00 sround mek and sleeves.

presents a fine quality Muslin Walking Skirt, with deep ruffle of embroidery, clusters tucks and voke

$1.00

BRIDAL SETS ==== for $3.75

Observe the descriptions:

CAMBRIC GOWN, with yoke of lace and clusters of tacks—sallor collar, edged with tine Valenciennes lace, eaught at the threat with a dainty rithen bow—high, full sleeves, finished with deep lace unifie and inserting.

DitaWEIRS, tacked and finished with deep ruffle of Valenciennes lace and inserting.

CHEMISE—V-shaped yoke of Valenciennes lace and lacetting and narrow rithon run between. The three pieces, of any size you wish, for $3.75 a set.

WOODWARD & LOTHROP 10, 11 and F Streets, N.W.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

NEILL'S,

6th Ave., 20th to 21st Street. NEW YORK.

We are now booking names for the Spring and Summer edition of our

Illustrated Catalogue

which will be issued April 1st, 1892 (mailed free of charge). Send us your name early as the supply will be limited. Information as to goods, samples and prices, furnished upon application.

"Mention this magazine."

H. O'Neill & Co., 6th Ave., 20th to 21st St., N.Y.

CROCK CROCK DP FADE

IN SHEER INDIA LINONS LAWNS & BATISTE PRINTED EFFECTS

#45mile

WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY FAST

THE SMALL BELONGINGS OF DRESS

By Isabel A. Mallon

MRS. MALLON will be glad to answer any question about woman's wear which may be sent to her by JOURNAL readers. She asks, however, that she be permitted to answer through this Department in the JOURNAL; though, if stamps are inclosed, she will reply by mail. Address all letters to MRS. MALLON, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

HE dainty little butterfly that we are used to associating with Psyche is now rampant on all the pretty belongings of mademoiselle's costume. He is wrought out in a very small design on the black lace veil that is drawn in close folds about her face; he stands with wings upright in the corner of her dainty handkerchief; he in the corner of her dainty handkerchief; he is seen in coarse white lace on the cape that is about her shoulders, and he fastens, when made of bright gold and set with diamonds, either the collar at her throat, or the coll of her hair. In white, or black lace, with his wings wired so that they stand up, he is noted perched in front of the little breakfast caps that matrons affect. Everywhere the gay and festive little chap seems to be welcome; and as he is always made of material to suit his background, he is not inappropriate. Certainly the butterfly, as an adjunct to a pretty woman's toilette, is in much better taste than the serpeuts, toads, or other horrid "beasties" that she has favored in the past.

HAT that is just now very popular in England, and which will undoubtedly a here, is of fine black straw with a somewhat low, square crown and a rolling brim, that is, a brim after the fashion of the English walking hat. The only trimming is a broad band of white satin ribbon quite the bright of the crown; it is drawn around smooth-ly, and the two ends lap over each other just in front, a long, slender jet buckle seeming to fasten it. Somewhat severe in shape, these lasts will only be becoming to women who do not need to show their bang to soften their

The light, rough cloth storm coats that are so useful for spring wear, invariably have deep capes lined either with bright scarlet or some bright plaid silk.

WOMEN have found the jersey too popu-W lar to permit of its disappearance.
The latest style is of striped stockinette in black and white, the black stripes being longer than the white, and in this way achieving a turret outline about the edge. The sleeves are of the black, and have cutfs of white set in at the wrist. The high collar is of black, and the belt is of black ribbon with a white pearl class just in front. clasp just in front.

THE cat's eye, not only because of the good luck that it is supposed to bring, but also because of its beauty, is liked on a bangle that is to be worn on the left arm; the bangle itself is of narrow twisted gold, and the curious stone is set on top with a framing of diamonds that seems to bring out its weird colors better than any other would. It is said that the woman fortunate enough to research. that the woman fortunate enough to possess this stone will always have good luck in money matters; certainly she has good luck in getting such a pretty ornament.

ONE of the novelties to be hung upon the chatelaine, and which really suggests the chatelaine of old, is a curiously-carved silver key. It is quite good-sized, but one is not told whether it is the key to my lady's heart, or to her jewel-box.

THE tendency in dressing the hair is to have it not too high and not too low, and while the top is all curled, it must yet be very soft, and the hair at the sides must be brushed back, and certainly not cut. Hairdressers are anxious to introduce more elabo-rate styles, but my lady very sensibly prefers the simple mode which she can arrange ber-self, and which does not look stiff and studied.

A S a fancy has arisen for the wearing of mob, or of Venetian, caps by bridesmaids, the Greek fillet, with an added decorathanks, the theek mist, with an asked decora-tion, is also laying claims for a position on the heads of the pretty attendants. The newest design shown is a band of twisted white satin ribbon, with a white lace butterfly, whose wings glitter with a shower of diamonds (presumably) placed just in front. A woman with an oval face, and who finds the Greek styles becoming, will hook better with this styles becoming, will look better with this head decoration than if she wore a fancy cap, or a large bat of any kind.

THE liking for fringes of silver, steel, gold, jet or pearl, strung in straight lines, and measuring at least a quarter of a yard, continues. They are used to outline the edges of basques, and tend to make the figure look longer and more slender. Of course, they are very expensive, for so many finely-cut bends are used, and the fringe itself is made by land; however, it must be said of it that the strings do not break, and that even if a little care is shown them they will wear for a long time.

THE foot trimming, which has been so popular on the winter skirts, will be seen on those intended for spring and summer wear. Of course, lighter decorations will be chosen, and the lace frills will be looped with ribbons and gay resettes, while for evening wear some of the marrelous artificial flowers will do this duty. The stiff, small pink and rellow roses will have special favor given them, as their size permits their being used as an outlining for the bodice, both at the neck an outlining for the bodice, both at the neck

William Control of the Control of th

MILLINERS predict that large buts and M small bonnets will have the same vogue given them during the spring months that has been shown them all winter. However, a medium-sized poke bonnet will certainly be one of the features of the summer.

VARNISHED shoes, so says a fashionable shoemaker, are not ladylike, and will never be really fashionable. And he adds that women who dress their feet well are using shoes half a size too long for them, so that the long, narrow effect may be produced.

If you want to make yourself a pretty handkerchief get a square of black chiffon and scallop the edge with gold thread; then lay under it and sew firmly and yet so that the stitches may not be seen, a full frill of that the statenes may not be seen, a tail trill of the French lace. Such a handkerchief cannot be bought under five dollars, and it can be made for very much less than that amount. A handkerchief that is essentially Parisian in its oddity is of black chiffon, with medaltions of white lace set upon it, and having a narrow, full finish of the white lace.

WOMEN of very good taste, and who unject to the heavy pattern -black veils that are now in vogue, because they tend to make the skin look so pale. One clever woman claims that they are immoral, because they encourage the using of rouge. If this is so, certainly too much cannot be said against them; and yet, for traveling, or when one really wishes one's face muffled up, there is no veil quite so convenient because they are light and cool, and at the same time will, if properly arranged, thoroughly conceal the face.

SPANGLES are used on everything; on gowns, on bonnets, on all the little belongings possible, and especially on fans. The prettiest of fans are of gauze with very large spangles of steel or gold upon them, and then dragon-lies or butterflies formed of spangles. Being on the outer sticks the effect is very sparkling and as a results of is very sparkling, and, as a matter of course, tends to brighten the entire toilette.

EVERYBODY is a little tired of the tufts 12 and aigrettes, so that the new decora-tion for the hair is much appreciated. It is a small crescent, beautifully made of tiny curled feathers, and is worn after the fashion of a crown.

THE long ribbon sashes reaching to the edge of the gown continue in vogue, not only for evening, but for street dresses. Sometimes the ribbons simply start from the shoulders and fall almost to the edge of the gown; again, they are brought front, cross over the corsage, come around under the arms high up to the center of the back, where they are arranged in small bows, while the long ends reach quite to the edge of the skirt, By-the-by, to be effective, these decorations should always be of velvet ribbon.

IF your sweetheart is giving you a ring for good luck, and you are to have the choice, let it be an oval moonstone surrounded with small, clear diamonds. This stone, more than sman, clear chamonos. This stone, more than any other, has the reputation of bringing hap-piness, and even if you do not consider this the ring itself will be found a most effective one, the diamonds bringing out the many colors in the moonstone, and the moonstone returning the compliment by intensifying the brilliancy of the diamonds. brilliancy of the diamonds.

A N extremely pretty brooch is one of gold, enameted in light lavender shade. It is half an inch wide and apparently tied in a stiff how. It has just in the center a violet, enameled in a darker shade, and with a diamond for a heart. This would look peculiarly harmonious if worn with a lavender tails or valvet. a heart. This would look peculiarly harmon-ious if worn with a lavender tulle or velvet. Another style is of stiff white enamel, being as prim and proper as the lawn tie worn by gen-tlemen in evening dress. This is very much affected by the young women who go in for the extreme masculine get-up.

THE favorite sleeve links worn by those who like the shirts of white silk with deep, straight cuffs, are of gold, enameled to look like piqué. The shirt buttons are round, flat ones, matching these. With the shirts are worn the jaunty cloth jackets that flare away from the foot paymitting the silk extrement to from the front, permitting the silk garment to show to advantage. Women who do not care for the very masculine-looking linen shirt are pleased with the silk ones, because they have such a womanly air.

ON the broad-brimmed picture hats loaded with feathers, Mademoiselle puts a bit of color in the form of a velver flower, pink or sapphire-blue being most faucied. If possible, this is placed under the brim just in front, so that it rests on the hair, and looks most coquettish. If the shape will not permit this, then the flower may be nestled among the plumes themselves, and look out coully and effectively from their darkness. effectively from their darkness.

THE real old-fashioned diamond boop is seen again. It is just a narrow band of small diamonds, with only enough gold to form a setting. It is, as in the olden days, used for an engagement ring, and becomes the "keeper" of the wedding ring.

Special attention is called to this celebrated brand of Bleached Muslin, which for fineness and durability is unsurpassed. This cloth is manufactured with great ears, particularly for LADIES UNDERWEAR and

GENTLEMEN'S SHIRTS, in 36, 41 and 45 inch widths,

and is guaranteed not to Crack or Turn Yellow.

Inquire for this brand, and take No Substitute.

In purchasing garments, ask for Pride of the West.

For sale by all leading retail Dry-Goods dealers in the United States.

The Most Comfortable Support a Lady can Wear. Patented Feb. 13, 1887. Take No Other.

See Patent Stamp on each Waist.

THE GENUINE Jackson Corsets Waists

Are made ONLY by the Jackson Corset Co., Jackson, Mich.

The manufacturer's name is print-ed upon the boxes, and stamped upon inside of chasp in each waist. They are the most popular arti-cles of the kind now on the mar-ket. You should have one of them.

Be sure and get the right thing. IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, WRITE TO US

YOUR NEW DRESS—YOUR NEW WRAP

"What Kind of a Spring Wrap Should I Get?" Is a question that need not go unanswered if you have our new Spring Catalogue. Jackets from $2.60 up; three-quarier Jackets, $1.50 up; Refers, $4.53 up; Long Capes, $3.25 up; Ulsters, $6.50 up; Ulsters with Military Cape, $9.00 up; Box-Coats, $6.25 up; also other styles and qualities, all illustrated in our Catalogue. We make every garment to order, thus insuring a perfect fit, and pay all express charges.

"We want you to see our new Spring Catalogue; we will mail it, together with a tape measure, new measurement diagram and a full assortment of samples of the cloths from which we make the garments, to select from, on receipt of four cents postage. You may select any style garment you wish, and we will make it to order for you from any of our cloths. We also sell Cloth and Trimming by the pard and will make any jacket or wrap for you from your own material.

DRESSMAKING: We have opened a department for making Ladies' and Misses' Suits and Costumes, from laddes' own materials only and from designs selected from any fashion plate or magazine. Ladies residing in New York City should risit our salesroom.

THE NATIONAL CLOAK CO. 21 Wooster Street New York City.

THE NATIONAL CLOAK CO., 21 Wooster Street, New York City.

PRINTED BATISTE,

36 inches wide.

King Philip Mills.

Send two-cent stamp for samples of Cambric, Lawns,

Nainsook and Batiste,

MADE BY THE KING PHILIP MILLS,

85 Worth Strget,

87

New York,

N. Y.

A Fine Photo of Cleveland's Birthplace, Only 25 cents, Agents wanted, USBSLEY, Caldeell, New Jeney.

OUR FASHION CATALOGUE

SPRING AND SUMMER OF '92

Will be ready about March 1st. It will be a handsomely illustrated book, containing complete descriptions, illustrations and prices of all the latest novelties to be found in a first-class Dry and Fancy Goods establishment.

Send us your name and address and we will mail you a copy free of charge.

> WOODWARD & LOTHROP, WASHINGTON, D. C.

" Cleanliness is next to Godliness."

YOU CAN CLEAN • • • •

YOUR SKIN by using Dr. Palmer's Almond Meal which prevents and removes

all humors and makes it soft and white; YOUR DRESS, Carpets, Flannels or any fabric, removing all stains or grease spots with Russian Ox Gall Soap;

GOUR BREATH, Stomach, Liver and Bowels and aid digestion by using Dr. Palmer's Charcoal Tablets. Pleasant to take. Good druggists keep them all. You can get either of them by sending 25 cents to

McCAFFERTY & HOLTON. 165 William Street, - NEW YORK

PRETTY THINGS FOR TOILETTE AND TOILET

By Isabel A. Mallon

UST to disabuse some-body's mind of the idea that a toilette and a toilet are the same, it may be well to an-nounce that a toilette is the completed costume, including all the little details, and when details, and when madnin has on her toilette she is prepared to go wherever she is dressed for; if it is to an evening entertainment she has on her gloves and her fan is in her hand, while all the small details of jewelry are properly arranged. If madaru makes her toilet it is presumed she is brushing her hair, making herself sweet with odorous waters, or healthy in the bath; in her toilet she is in the room where her dressingcase stands, and where all the dainty and pretty belongings of the toilet are to be found —the pretty belongings that make the toilette possible. Now do you see the difference?

WHAT EVERY WOMAN LIKES

WHAT EVERY WOMAN LIKES

A SILVER toilet set. It is prettiest when part of glass and part of silver; that is, the perfume bottles want to be of glass with silver stoppers, and the puff-box of heavy glass, with a silver cover. A silver toilet set is possible to any girl if she has sufficient amount of patience and the courage to boil down her Christmas gifts into one or two. If is possible to any girl it she has sufficient amount of patience and the courage to bell down her Christmas gifts into one or two. If she will just tell her family that she wants to start a toilet set, then each year and each birthday will find a separate piece given to her, until all the pieces desired are obtained. I should advise beginning with the brushes and the mirror; of course, I only mean a handglass and not a large mirror, such as people with a great deal of money aspire to. A simple pattern in burnished silver is most desirable because it cleans easiest, and because it can be most readily matched. Then, if there is somebody who knows you are collecting a set, and wishes to give you a small piece toward it, there are the pretty pin-trays, the glovestretcher, the silver box to hold nail powder, and the little glass pot, with its silver cover, which will hold the cream to be used when your lips are chapped, or your face burned from the effects of the sun. In collecting your set try and have two hair-brushes and two clothes-brushes, one stiff and the other soft. Remember, in buying these brushes two clothes brushes, one stiff and the other soft. Remember, in buying these brushes that you can always have fresh bristles put in them, so that they really are going to last you your lifetime, and will be something to will away when you are disposing of your earthly belongings.

A GROUP OF SILVER TRIFLES (Illus. No. 1)

A GROUP OF SILVER TRIFLES

THERE is shown in this group (Illustra-tion No. 1) a heart-shaped tray for pins and hair-pins, or any one of the innumerable small belongings which tend to litter up one's toilet table, and for which these little trays are a great convenience. This shape is much liked, though one may have round or square ones as well, for to have the little platters cold is well, for to have the little platters odd is counted especially desirable. The case standcounted especially desirable. The case standing in the background contains silver glove-stretcher, shoe-horn, shoe-buttoner, glove-buttoner and curling-tongs; each of these articles may be bought separately, but it is convenient to have them in a case, so that the wise woman can close it an when she is going traveling, and will know just where the trifles which may cause her so much annovance, if they are missing, may be found. The puffibox is of cut glass, with a silver cover, and the puff which is in it has a silver handle, contrasting prettily with the white fluff of the swansdown.

A something not shown in this group is

A something not shown in this group is seen, however, at the jeweler's. It is a veritable hare's foot, such as is used on the other side of the footlights, with a long sliver handle, side of the footlights, with a long silver handle, so that if Mademoiselle has ronge in one of her silver boxes she may possess the proper appliance for applying it. Boxes intended especially for roage are round and not very deep; those for lip-salve or vaseline, cold cream or whatever may be your chosen unguent, are of glass, with allver mountings. All silver bottles are shown, but are not considered in as good taste as the glass with a silver stopper. The bright glass, cut like diamonds, and which, of course, must be immaculate, and the shining silver, form a contrast on the dresdingtable that is most artistic. And what woman does not love a pretty dressing-table, and what more dainty useful articles can she have to arrange upon the pretty lace trimmed linen cover of her table than the silver toilet set, with its glittering array of brushes, boxes, bottles, combs and truys, and other innumerable adjuncts of the follet.

THE SILVER CHATELAINE

THE SILVER CHATELAIME

The old woman who came to town with "rings on her fingers and bells on her toes" was probably the originator of the chatelaine, which, with its many jingling pendants, is more in favor just now than ever before. It has been stated, at various times, that gold ones would obtain; but as the average woman would get no further than the single pendant, she gives her shoulders a shrug and decides to cling to the silver. The chatelaines themselves are very simple in dechatelaines themselves are very simple in de-sign, sufficient room being allowed for the in-numerable chains that must depend from them. People who are in doubt as to what them. People who are in doubt as to what may be given to a woman friend cannot doubt long if they know she has a fondness for her chatelaine, something always can be added to it, for it is never complete.

The one shown at Illustration No. 2 is a typical one. The chatelaine itself is merely a curving of silver, good and strong, that will recent the recent desires.

will permit the many chains to be fastened on it. The pendants are a small silver watch, with the owner's mon-ogram cut in high relief upon it; then there is a book of tablets which represents a letit; then there is a book of tablets which represents a let-ter received, and is addressed to the owner thereof; there is a small mirror, a stamp-box, which also has a place for holding court-plaster, a pin-cushion, a pencil, a vinni-grette, three curious bells i mitating those found in Egypt, and two or three coins valued not because of their antiquity but because of their associations, each one bearing upon it an inscription of some upon it an inscription of some sort that revalls to the wearer the special time when the coin acted an important part. Of acted an important part. Or course, a great many more belongings can be put upon the chatelaine, but this one may be cited as possessing most of the adjuncts fancied. In the illustration, or when they are laid out in their case, and a chatelaine does leek they are laid out in their case, one's chatelaine does look stiff, but when it is assumed the silver trifles fall together, look artistic and are most musical. When the day arrives, as it will, that the silver is tarnished, don't attempt to clean it yourself, but submit it to a jeweller for brightening. And he will return it to you looking as bright as when it was first bought. when it was first bought.

THE DAINTHST OF HANDKERCHIEFS

would seem as if no material were too fine for the handkerchief of to-day; for The for the handkerebed of to-day; for the finest of lines, the sheerest of mousseline and the daintiest of lisse are used for the pretty trifles. Those of lisse are shown in all the pale pinks, and with an embroidered edge done in corresponding colors to insiste a flower. Except as ornaments, these are en-tirely useless, and must, when they get the least bit soiled, pay a visit to the cleaner's, as soap and water mean death and destruction to them. Women who do not care for these handthem. Women who do not care for these hand-kerchiefs choose those made of the sheerest kerchiefs choose those made of the sheerest linen lawn, with a narrow hem stitched by hand, a lace edge about a quarter of an inch wide below, and the monogram or cipher wrought in very small letters in one corner. However, all tastes can be suited; and though the plain linen handkerchief certainly has its position, still there is a time when the more decorative one should be used.

A GROUP OF MOUCHOIRS

THE handkerchiefs shown in this group one, such as has been described, and its exact opposite in white, that is, one with a square center of lawn, and a bordering of real Duchesse lave. Another is of black crèpe de chine, having rather wide scallops embroidered in black about its edge, and above this are gold fleur de lis wrought out in gold thread. Another would seem to have been mude for a fairy, and a puff of wind would blow it away; it is of pale lavender lises, has its edges scalloped in silk, a shade darker, and just above that tiny pansies are wrought out in silks of different shades, exactly imitating the saucy flower itself. The other is of white hawn scalloped with pule layender, and in the corner is a group of butterlies, whose wings stand up separate from the hundkerchief itself, and are worked out in layender like the address.

A GROUP OF PRETY MODERNOURS (Illus. No. 3).

THE PURSE OF GOLD

THE PURSE OF COLD

Of satisfied with having plenty of gold in her purse, the special woman is most eager to have a purse of gold. It may be a tiny little one, formed of links of gold, with the ordinary snap top made of gold, and then it is just large enough to hold small bits of silver. Sometimes, if one is very well off in this world's goods, the golden purse will be a long stender one, just like those knit ones one's grandmother carried, and the ring upon it is one elaborately set with precious stones. People who do not expect to attain such magnificence as this are satisfied with purses of gray, scarlet, brown or black leather, having upon them decorations, small ones, either in gold or silver. A pretty funcy is to duplicate one's own method of writing one's initials, and this may be done either in silver, gold, or precious stones. A very beautiful card-case has upon it the name of the owner in diamonds, which is so fastened on the case that it may be taken off and worn as a lace pin, as it screws right into a pin filted to it.

A black purse is always in good taste, and is certainly more to be commercialed than a soiled.

A black purse is always in good taste, and is certainly more to be commended than a soiled, elaborate one. The objection made to those of light-colored leathers, the gray, white and light brown, is that of soiling very easily, Curious bits of brocade lined with white satin are used for card cases and are a Parisian style. There, great effort is made to have the brocade of made to have the brocade of your visiting case match some famous brocade, so that you can claim that it is like that which was worn by the Empress Josephine, by Marie Antoinette, or some of the celebrated beauties who surrounded her. As sold in the stores these cases are quite expensive, but a clever needle woman could easily make one at home, and it would then be in her power to give to each of her friends one of the daintiest of presents possible.

Assesses of wisiting coals.

Apropos of visiting cards do not under any circum-stances permit yours to lie among your sachets and become perfumed, for a card become perfumed, for a card fairly reeking, even with a delicate odor, is counted extremely bad form.

It was announced when the skirts that womankind would have no further use for purses, but that this is not true is best proven by the number of beautiful ones seen in the stores where a specialty is made of such belongings. belongings.

THE SILVER CHATELAINE

(Hint, No. 1)

THE MYSTERIOUS VEIL

THE MYSTERIOUS VEIL

ONE calls it mysterious because it seems absolutely impossible to fold it so that it will retain its pristine freshness. During the early spring it is most probable that the very thin tulle veils matching the bonnet in color will be in vogue. Of course, these colors are so faint that they really have no effect upon the complexion, and they do all that is asked of them, which is to keep the fluffy bang in place, and be a pretty film between the pleasant and unpleasant things of this world. Black veils of very thin tulle with jet stars and crescents upon them are still liked, but when worn must be drawn up in thick folds over the lower part of the face. I do not advise folding these at all, but instead straighten them out and throw them loosely, each on the hat with which it is to be worn. The woman who has the courage of her convictions and wishes to make her complexion very white will muffle herself up in a thick blue harege veil, behind which she will perspire very freely, and the whitening effect said to emanate from this process will result. Personally I approve of sunshine, consequently I cannot altogether recommend this style of veiling the face, although it has many followers, especially when the March winds blow.

THE TOILETE AND THE TOILET

THE TOILETTE AND THE TOILET

WE have all heard of beautiful tellettes arranged with very few of the proper toilet accessories. This may be possible; but it cannot be doubted that a woman is much more fastidious, and much more careful of her appearance, if she has the proper belongings on her toilet table. To have to rush around looking for pins; to let the linir go somi-loose beenise no halr-pins can be found, and to be unable to see whether the back of one's gown is the back of one's gown is right, because a hand-glass is lacking, will result in a cureless get-up. It is possi-ble that effective results have been achieved when the necessary tools were not at hand; but any good workman will tell you that you cannot attain good results, or reach per-fection in your work, unless you have the proper implements with which to do your duty. The painter is sure that his brushes are is sure that his brushes are right, his paints properly arranged before he begins his work; his tools are in order. A woman should be equally particular, for she has also to form a peture. It is every woman's business to look well; it is her duty to be a rest for the eyes of man in general, man who is tired of looking at ugly things like himself; so while you need not make your toilette the work of your life, you still can make it a success; and the quickest and best way to do this is to furnish your toilet table properly. your toilet table properly.

SEND FOR -*

POSNER'S Catalogue

Posner's is decidedly the largest retail house in the South. They sell everything any man, woman, or child ever has occasion to buy. Posner's prices are the lowest in the United States.

Goods sent anywhere, any way, any

POSNER'S, Baltimore, Md.

MADAME GRISWOLD'S Patent Skirt-Supporting Corsets AND SKIRT SUPPORTERS.

For circulars and terms to agents send to MADAME GRISWOLD, 923 Broadway, New York; 7 Temple Place, Boston, Mass.; or to General Agents, M. M. Wygant & Co., Fredonia, N. Y.; J. B. Putnam, 126 State street,

Mrs. Cleveland's

Gloves Wear out at the tips-any other woman. She can prevent this (so can you) by getting the Chiengo, Ill.

"Kayser Patent Finger Tipped"

Silk Gloves

These gloves are sold with a guarantee ticket inside of each pairentitling you to another pair free of charge in any case where the tips do not wear as long as the gloves.

If you cannot get this Glove from your dealer, notify the manufacturer, JULIUS KAYSER, New York, and he will see that you get them.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

THE McDOWELL CO.
4 West 14th Street, New York City. Send 25 cents for copy of our elegant French Fushion books explaining how to cut latest style garment,

FREE, TO LADIES!

A Leaflet, about stylish ways of using ribbons. Address

FAIR & SQUARE, 67 Greene St., N.Y.

LADIES without businesses.
Ing removes salve of Mine.
MOGAWES CORNETS AND WASTES, Send for agents terms
St. Louis forsot Co., St. Louis, Ms.

Ladies, Send Stamp for Primer. I do abopping of all kinds. Eight years' experience seat reference, Mancoure Massim, 901 Spring St., Phila-

A Department devoted entirely to an interchange of ideas among our band of JOURNAL rs. Address all letters to AUNT PATIENCE, care of 'The Ladies' HOME JOURNAL, 433-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

O many letters come to me asking for sugges-tions for leisure hours that I am constantly wishing it were possible for me to buy up some of the time which seems to hang so heavily upon my dear sisters' hands. My days are all too short for the work I find to do. and not a week passes that I do not feel grieved at having to put aside some interesting study. It seems to me if I should live a thousand years and had a thousand hands and feet, and to me if I should live a thousand brains to match, I could be kept busy day and night. Time is our most precious possession; let us be careful that we do not misuse or

WE live in a small town, and have not many neighbors. I am kept at home a great deal because there is no one to take owe of the knose, such I would like you to tell the some way to pass the time. I would like you to tell the some way to pass the time. I would like you to tell the some way to pass the time. I would like you to tell the some and the time doing any house-work, and I am sper with my needle so I do not have seeing on hand all the time as some women do. Ever so many afternoons I have teithing to do not skey the window and rock and watch for somewhall be go by, but ours is not a very lively road. It would be real nice if I had something to pass away the time.

M. G. L.

M. G. L.

If you have no stitches to take for yourself, take them for your most needy neighbor. If you lack the material, I am sure you could find it, if you went about it vigorously. Write your friend whose mending basket is running over to send it to you for a few days. Take some tired tencher into your home and wait on her and cheer her up. Send for two or three of your minister's children to spend a week with you; they will give you enough to do—and their mother may "catch up" with her work. with her work.

I THOUGHT I would sell "Jennie" what helps me over the stony path of life we all most tread. I have three motions—" never to fire; naver to grow onld, to be natical, sympachetic, tender; to look for the bodding lowers and the opening heart, to hope always, to love always." This is duty. And when I am disacheted with myself I think over my nest motto; it is this; "God sets heroes where the world acce only very hombie people," and I think God would not put me here if I did not have a mission to perform on earth, and that thought makes me stronger. My third and last is, "speak generate words, for who can tell the hiesdings they impart; how off they fall (as manna fell) on some nigh-fainting heart." The tracet happines is bound in making others happy. God never falls to promote the faithful worker, A TRUE SESTER.

Your mottoes are very good. If one could live up to them, all difficulties would be solved. To hope always, to love always, Ah! who is equal to these things?

T' is sad if one is unhappy in one's position in life. In "Jennie's" family surely some of the children are old onough to usels her in the performance of home ditties. They will be the better off for so doing. Perhaps a visit to a relative or friend, together with the accompanying charge of somes and circumstances would charge and rest ber if she would beave the children at home and stay long emough to recuperate. She will be given the appreciation she longs for when she returns. "Absence makes the heart grow fooder," I find my homeowork castest when I hurry it in the serior time always doing it the very best I know how; and do not let it heavy me. It only makes the daily routine of work more laborious to let any go malone. Method is absolutely necessary.

Change of scene is one of the best medicines for weary minds, and many a mother would return to her duties with revived energy and strength if she could take a short vacation from them. Often when she needs it most, it seems to her most impossible to leave home.

A LADY whites to learn some method of preserving choice bits of reading matter. My way is this if have such at leafl a commonplace book; they can be bought, I think, but I never saw but one, which the owner, a minister, said bewould not take five hundred dollars for. He lent me his as a patient. I bought a large blank book with good binding and paper. I printed the letters of the alphabet on the first few pages for an index, say tow or there on a page of those not commonly used. I then arranged my extracts (which had been accountiating for years) according to subjects, and placed the subject of the paragraph under the alphabet, the first letter of which was the first of that subject. Furthermore, a quotation on the subject of reading is would place under the letter H, with reading undertasth, with the number of the page; so that in descring to refer to that subject I have simply to refer to the index, and so that through my book rand I may have any number of quotations from any number of authors on the same subject, classed together, right, at hard. I prize my book very highly; i conty with I had learned this many years ago, it would have saved me the loss of many valuable quinteness. I generally read with pencil and paper at land; then, if I come across a choice bit I copy is, and when I have a collection of such I copy them into my common page of the page of the

I HAVE been married seven years, and my busband is not an angel; he is an honest man with a good many faults, and if I get out of patience with him I put sit down and count my own faults and I am ready to call it square. But we can not be truly happy unless we belong to Christ. Let us take all our troubles to him; he will carry them for us, and let young girly remember the injunction, "be ye not unequally yound together with unbelievers."

This squaring one's own faults off against another's, if honestly done, is pretty sure to make us lealent towards those from whom we feel we are receiving injury.

Barren Se

I HAVE received the ordinary education of girls in my position (I am a farmer's daughter), I came to find that in an emergency I could make myself useful. The emergency having passed, my compution is gone. So the years go and I seem to have nothing to show for been. I am improving my mind and gesting ready, for possibilities are such threatone things when you are conscious all the time that by a little bound you can chear the barriers and be right in the midst of the possibilities; I am homey for work, and one thing I sak of you is to prove to me that I would not be selfish in swelcing it even though it cuited me from home, or so filled mind and three as in a measure to exclude home thoughts, and I appeal to you because I am sure I am only one of a clean.

If you are not needed in your home and can If you are not needed in your home and can find elsewhere the opportunity for service, go away by all means. "Improving one's self" is a very misleading idea. Often it is a sort of gurging process, like the goose fattening for pdit de foie gros (a goose liver pie), and is useless and destructive. Use is the best promoter of efficiency, but you cannot set type without tearning the business, nor be a stenographer without careful preparation. If you want to learn a business by which to support yourself, you must seek advice from those who know you personally.

I AM a young married woman, and my bushand's bushness keeps him from bome from early in the morning until sen at night, and so you see I have a great deal of time on my hands and I find myself wondering what I am going to do during the winter. I cannot sew, and do not care for reading; is fact, I would like to spend the long winter days in a way that will be both profitable and instructive, but am unable to decide just what course to pursue, as I walt all the day and evening for my husband to return. So I come to you, for you always give such good advice to those whe go to you, and will find very grateful for your help.

1. J.

Dear! Dear! I wish I had your time.
Why, I should offer myself as a "friendly visitor" under a charity organization society;
I should teach in a sewing school (at least you can show little children how to thread you can show atthe chaldren how to thread needles) and perhaps learn how to sew; I would join some of the many classes in—oh! I should not know what of all the interesting studies to choose—I would try every possible way to help others, and to improve myself. Don't waste a day; find some one who needs your help; there are hosts of needy ones, and give yourself no rest till you have filled your life with wholesome service.

I KNOW all about hard work, railin drosses, lonelines, discontent, intense longing for congruist companiouship, desire for beautiful surroundings and for a broader and better life. I have been through it all, But these things are not hopeless; to day I am one of the cheerfalest and happiest women in the whole State. I have indeed firsted that within myself which makes "drudgery divine," My home and surroundings have not changed but I have chouged my seed, and such year of two and sunshine have come hate my life that I want to help others who are living into miserable places, so that I can (like Mark Tapley) "come out strong" and be "billy." I am a firmer's wife, and say "John" is one of the kindest and trenst of mor. Take courage, life is not half as had as we think. Live for happiness; it wiff spreig come. Out of my own by and gladness I feel as if I must make all realize that one may be happy and contented in very lonely places.

We are all strengthened in hone and courre-

We are all strengthened in hope and cour-age by the testimony of friends who have borne griefs and anxieties like our own, and have not been cast down by them. What man bas done man can do, and surely what one woman has endured another woman may,

MAY I suggest two more or less trivial things that help to make convalence or more endirable? One is that the invalid should have a chair by her bed, a basket (covered, if possible) in which to keep writing materials, cologue, a clean handkerchief, unit sciences and say of the little odds and ends needed through the day which give an unity aspect to the rocen if lying about, and yet, when needed, are so troublesome to ask for, and have to be hunted up by asymore she may have to call upon. The other is when the morning washing and freshening up is going on, to have a tumbber with fresh water, with a little bornx dissolved in it, brought, and for the invalid to wash out her morth with a soft handkerchief dispecting the borax water, and to riuse her month well with it. The beding of freshesse it gives is most delightful. But of these things have given me much comfort when ill.

Thank you for these successions: they may

Thank you for these suggestions; they may comfort many an invalid.

I WAS very much impressed by an article in which "Our Editor" lefts it that "Mary women have yet to learn the great lesson of silence on matters which belong only to themselves." It has been brought home to me so forcibly of late that I not add my experience, as a word of caution to others. There came a time soon after my marriage, when, in my dilemma, I must as confidants of my mother. It was not assessable to so; it would have been so mich better to have left it usuald, but I considered the confidence succed, for suredy cose might iront a mother if no one clea.

It has lately come to my knowledge that the confidence was written in full, word for weed, so my sister in a distant state, and when she received the letter it was read unbiastingly about to four or five relatives. Imagine my discuss of a hearing this, and also my bears of grief, meetification and -yes, sater, to find that that which should have been sacred in my own heart had been parasked before the world for ifficen years, so let me say once again hold some things as toe sacred for expect will be irus. If you cannot keep a secret, so not expect will be irus. If you cannot keep a secret, so not expect others to keep it for you.

Your experience should certainly warn you.

Your experience should certainly warn you and others who learn of it not to give into another's keeping a confidence without assursuce of its safety, and it should certainly one to be very careful not to after that which it would be injurious to have repeated.

Will AT has pleased me and surprised me was to see the words." A Contented Wife." In surprised me because I cannot remember of inwing-seen it very often in our corner, and I find them few among my acqualitations. What a pity! and I really believe coro-thirts of the field lies with the wives themselves. Now, that may seem to you a sweeping assertion, but from my own observation and experience I before it to be true. I have been a wife eight years and the unhappiest year and only one of my married life was the first. I can look back now and see pearly all the fault was my own.

look back now and see pearly all the fault was my own.

I was twenty-one and my John twenty-two when we were married. I was a school-ma' am. We started on a large farm in which he hold an inherited interest, and the work was heavy and, from my inexperience, irk-some. He wanted to get me a girl, but I was independent and ground to dowry with me and I knew he married me and get no dowry with me and I knew, or thoughl, we could not afford one. When I became tired I became cross and fretful, and becames the did not hanter as in my ill nature, I imagined he did not care, when, if I had told him my troubles in a right spirit, he would have sympathical with meand lighteech my imagined burdens.

Bou't you wonder what charged me? Well, it may sympathised with meand lightened my imagined burdens.

Bon't you wonder what changed me? Well, it may seem odd to you, but I cannot bell cancily what did start the change, but I gradually saw my faults and profited by it. Margarel Bottome (fod bless her) has beliefed by it. Margarel Bottome (fod bless her) has beliefed by it. Margarel Bottome (fod bless her) has beliefed by it. Margarel Bottome (fod bless her) has beliefed by it. Margarel Bottome (for bless her) has beliefed by it. Margarel Bottome (for his her) has been beliefed to overcome my ugly temper, have sayone of you ever done that! I loved my busbed better than life; still I was hateful and mean to him because I could not see my own faults.

With "Mrs. John Smith" I have no patience available trouble lies in the sentence "I am not cose of the constant of kind and what's more I don't mean to be." Biddshe mot know her bestonn'd linancial circomstances before she merried him? or was she not prepared to manser according to his incomer Side says she wants to enjoy the meeting sanshine with her children; would she want to go every day and leave ber household duties; if so she must have to his more than by preparing the day before I do that when I want to go handless with my hisbard. My only hope for her and "Janet" is, that their eyes may be opened to their huppiness or their flexibless mine lave been, before theirs becomes one like poor "Mary" "hoo late.

You are right, Difficulty often comes be-

You are right. Difficulty often comes between husband and wife because be cannot divine, and she does not explain, the cares and perplexities which are making her life burdensome. Frankness is a quality of the utmost importance in a happy marriage. Often the wife refrains from speaking of the things which oppress her from the kindest of motives, and if she be able completely to hide them that may be well. But if her brow is furrowed and her lips drawn and her eyes heavy, some cause will be imagined which may be far from the right one, and if possible the truth would best be given.

DEAR SISTERS;—I want to say something in defence of "back-door neighbors." Mine are nearly all of that kind, and I'm glad of R. If my neighbors wanted until they knew my housework was done I fear I would seldom see them. If one comes to the back door when sweeping is in order, I invite her to walk into the skitting-room and entertain herself with the books and repers always there; and she will do this shally, especially if there is a new Lances' Bross from the kitchen I give them a recker there; and if I fall over them occasionally for lack of room I do it with a laugh, and neither of us is weerled by the courrence. Of course, I don't accompiles quite so much; but what of 12 our companionship has cheered us both, and a few moments will complete the work after the last gone. It is not the sick alone who need our sympally and alt; every heart has its own burden, and sometimes our friendship is most needed where we less stepect it.

Thank won for this bit of your accompanions.

Thank you for this bit of your experience and the suggestion of the value of sympathy. We forget too often that our next neighbor may need a kind word.

...

J. AM very glad of an excesse to write to you, if that were necessary, to tell you how much I enjoy your visits, and especially the deep religious some of our Lanter Hoose Journal. I would suggest that any one who wishes a name and address to whom they can send a paper or magazine regularly should write to Mrs. John S. Bossing, Paper Mission, E. Rende Stress, New York city. If any of the sheers have a bondle of reading matter, religious or otherwise, it will be most gladly received by William M. F. Round, Orresponding Secretary of the Prison Association of New York, at 15 Back Fifteenth Street, New York city.

Find another excuse as good as this, please, and write again.

My DEAR SISTEMS—Let your little ones help you. If you will, you will be supprised to see how many light tasks they can do. Let them seed the raisins, heat the signs, and save you stops. Praise them, and they will count it an bonde to be of use to manus. Then you will have time to go together to the fields. My little nephew brings all be finds in the field to me, and we visit in my kitchen and I have no better or more comprehending friend. If you will, you can being the field and the sensitive right into your kitchen, and it will be the place of all places to the family. There the children will come from school, and can't you sympather with the missed lesson and bake the pie too? And there Mr. John Smith will come, and if Mrs. John is not put out that she must be there, but quite risted because the rolls turned out so benedifully, he will think, "My litchen is a sunnier place than some men's pariors." When I was very young a kind out gave me a rule for my bousekeeping: "Always let your braits save your beels; they are the stronger."

B. W. Le

A very good rule that is, and it is quite true that companionship in the household work makes the home happier to all the family.

Will.L you allow me to join your circle? I have taken the Jouannal for years, and this is my first attempt at writing for any of its columns. I am an exchaol-mar am. I was married over a year ago to a backeler that was living on a claim in western Nebraska, but owing to drought and ball, last summer, my leasured the second of the second three months to get a livelihood, leaving me at home. This summer we are three hundred miles from home three months to get a livelihood, leaving me at home. This summer we are three hundred miles from home, working on a ranch, he doing farm work, I cooking, but I do not find washing debres and keithes disagreeable or jrk-some, but have speed the summer pleasantly and lapply. We will remain here this whiter. I will try tenching again. I can look to the west and see the grand "Rockies" towering toward. Him who reigns wheely and well.

Your winter has passed pleasantly, I trust, and may your next year be more prosperous.

I. Too, am a farmer's wife, and f have to "cook," to "saw," to "wash those kettles," and I consider I am doing it for myself so well as my husband, and, with the love of ma husband to cheer and encourage me, I am spending the happiest time of my life.

Doing for another, and not for one's own self, how it lightens heavy burdens! ...

Will "Snapper" of Wilmington; P. L. P., of Olneyville, R. I., and Mrs. William S. Lines please send me their correct post-office ad-dresses?

Aunt Patience

SEASON 1892

"Toile du Nord"

The most popular, durable and attractive of all the

Wash Fabrics

Women's and Children's Wear.

For sale by every leading retail Dry Goods House in the country.

THE READ UMBRELLA

80.50 | 83.00 FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN. Silk umbrellas of special qualities at very low prices. Delivered free on receipt of price. Send at once for our free illustrated catalogue, which contains full information. We guarantee satisfaction.

CHARLES F. READ & CO.

45 BROAD STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

A DELICIOUS PERFUME. DELICATE BUT WONDER-FULLY IMPERISHABLE. Ask your druggist for it or send us 35 cents in stamps for 1/2 on. sample.

C. B. WOODWORTH & SONS Rochester, N. Y.

WE PAY YOU TO READ THIS!

To each of the first 25 who write for our paper on investments. "How to Get Rich," mentioning this paper, we will send a receipt for $7.50 good as cash on sty preperty bought of us. Each of the next is will receive an elegant paper picture of the Catchraised "Whaleback," He Beyr, JOS. C. HENVIS & CO., West Superior (home of the "Whaleback"), Wis.

WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SHE SHOW FOUR TOUR MONEY.

$12 Servin Sci. 00 Impressed (taked Sheet).

$12 Servin Sci. 00 Impressed (taked Sheet).

$12 Serving Machines perfect worthing, indiallies, incloy includes, and pated 19 gets and beauty words, with a competite set of the bases Superved attachment from Early Inch Deckory and inner declare warm. By affect from our the long and more declare and against profit. Bend for NURC CATABOOMS.

ORPORD MPS. COMPANY, BUPT P. CHICAGO, HE.

DRESS CUTTING

By the Tallor Method. WAIST, SLEEVE and SKIRT CUTTER. Simplest and most practical ever made.

Any lady can become a practical dress-cutter in half an hour. Half Price to introduce if f. Send for circular B. M. KUHN, Inventor, Bloomington. Ill.

3.000 JOB LOT BICYCLES

30 40 50 c Off. Bicycles an all % makes a mill but had lowest prices an all % makes a mill but had lowest prices an all % makes a mill but had lowest for his self every where. "Millia but had lowest for his but had the millia the self research "Millia but had lowest for his him Rambler " 300 yet him Cast in High O'makest had not devoter signing as close, largest stock and olders dealers in U. S. Agus, washed, Casa, froc. Rouse, Hazzard & Co., 80 6 8t. Perda M.

THEO. The most remarkable novel of the day. The experiences of a young girl in New York society, A revelation is books. At the newestands or 50 cents, postpolid. UNITED PUR. CO. 178 December Street, Buston.

WANTED

Shows the highest prices t. W. Vecc. DEBUKN, 87 ort St., Storton, Mass. FOR Baby Carriages, Adjustable Chairs, Invalid's Rolling Chairs, Safety Bleycles, Refrigerators, Office Deaks, Fancy Rockers, etc.,

send to LUBURG MPG. CO., 321, 323, 325 North Eighth street, Philadelphia, Pa. Catalogue free.

MOTHERS If you desire the most healthful clothing for your belies send for the for girls to age of 18. Sould 20. stamp for free samples and calabogue. R. 4. SPERGUE & CO., 34 Secree St., Chings. UK.

WOMEN'S REST TOUR ASSOCIATION 264 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass.

Send two-cout stamp for prospectus stating conditions of membership and describing handbook for 1882.

PATENTS D. C. No attempts for mail paint in obtained. Write for /neessor's Guida

Mrs. Kroncke's Boarding School for Girls. N. W. Wright Streets, Chicago. Highest references.

With this expect signific. Double Carnacters are as easily grown from seed as Fandes. All colours and thebre stard in every pit. See our spelled offer in January issues of this paper, Ptr. El cents, 5 pits. 50 conts. Her superit catalogue fire with every order. MAY & CO., Surmessen, M. Fand, Minn, HALF PACKETS AT HALF PRICE. SEEDS! 10 Samples and Catalogue, for 10 cents, alver.

YERRIES BROS., KINGSTON, N.Y.

100 Ledies Wanted to represent us at the World's Fair at Chicago, in 1868, All experses paid by us. Apply early. Send 4 cents, slamps, for particulars. Address THE RUSHFORTH OO, Lawrence, Mass.

MISS PARLOA will at all times be glad, so far as she can, to answer in this Department all general domestic questions sent by her readers. Address all letters to Miss Maria Par Da, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Cooking receipts are not given in this Department, hence do not ask that they be printed, and do not send manuscripts of that nature to MISS PARLOA.

these days of lavish ornamentation and brick-brac, the young bousekesper must be on guard against filling her house with such furnishings as would make it stuffy and cause it to back individuality. The home should be an index to the character of the family. Do not furnish your house fully until you have lived in it awhile. Buy at first only such familiare as you need for comfort. When you are settled you can study the needs of each part of the house, and after you have fully determined exactly what you want hous it when you are exactly what you want, buy it when you see an advantageous chance.

TAKE A LONG LOOK AHEAD

NEVER decide hastily upon a piece of fur-niture; purchase for the future as much as for the present. It is true fashions change in furniture from year to year, but it is only people of large means who can follow a fashion of this kind. The plain, elegant styles are quite expensive as compared with the ordinary pieces which are turned out of factories by the thousand, and which are covered with by the thousand, and which are covered with ornamentation to catch the popular fancy. One quickly wearies of such furniture; besides, it is not so well made as the plainer styles, and therefore gets out of order easily. Get the things necessary for kitchen, bedroom, dining-room and sitting-room before doing anything about the parlor, and let every article be of good quality, no matter how plain. Make an estimate of what you can spend on each room; then get the best things possible,

FORNISHING THE CRAMBERS

ONE can get a chamber set for as low a sum O as twenty-five dollars; but the prices run up rapidly until the hundreds are reached. Handsome, well-made sets, with little or no ornamentation (the quality of the wood, and the finish giving them a simple elegance not found in more showy pieces) cost from forty to seventy-five dollars. The set includes bed-stead, dressing-case, wash-stand, towel-rack, a stend, dressing-case, wash-stand, towel-rack, a small table, two common chairs and a rocker. The more expensive sets have the English wash-stand. No marble is used with the fincest chamber furniture. The springs, matricester, etc., must be purchased separately, as a rule. Have good ones. Have shades and plain mustin curtains for the windows. Stain the floors, if possible. If you prefer not to do that, use straw mailing, with one rug beside the bed and snother in front of the wash-stand. In buying the tollet set select one that has a plain, fine shape and simple decoration.

THE DINING-ROOM FURNITURE

THE DINING-ROOM FURNITURE

THERE are two articles which one must have for this room: a table and some chairs. It often happens that the young housekeeper, not realizing the necessity for having these of generous size, and well made, chooses articles that seem good, but which, in a short time, become unstable. Oak is the most satisfactory wood for the dining-room. Have the table of good width, as a narrow one never looks well. The chairs should be strong, broad-seated, and with high backs.

Having the chairs and table, you our wait for the other things, although a sideboard-table is a desirable thing. If one can afford it. THERE are two articles which one must for the other tangs, atthough a successful table is a desirable thing, if one can afford it. If you cannot have exactly what you want, be patient. Sideboards, sideboard-tables and china-closets of glass all come in such simple, yet tasteful, designs that one may be sure to like them all one's life. It will pay to wait for such a piece of furniture. Have a hardwood, or a stained floor. Just enough of the floor may be stained to make a deep border, and a simple rug be placed in the center of the room. Shades, without any draperies, answer very well for this room.

COMFORT IN THE SITTING-ROOM

I N the sitting-room, where the family gathers for the execution I ers for the evening, and where some members of the household spend a good part of each day, put all the comfort you can. Let it be one of the largest and brightest rooms in the house. There should be a bookense, a firm table of good size, several comfortable chairs, a couch with plenty of pillows, a good chairs, a cruch with plenty of pillows, a good lamp, with a shade that will not try the eyes, some pictures, a few plants and shades and draperies that will soften, but not exclude the light. If possible, have an open freplace. Let this be a room that shall always be remembered as one of the pleasantest spots in the world. When possible, have a hardwood or a stained floor, with a rug in the center.

SELECTING CARPETS AND RUGS

N buying carpets remember that the best In buying carpets remember that the best are always the cheapest. The more limited one's means are, the more essential it is that only a good article shall be purchased. The best quality of body Brussels will outwear two or more of the cheaper tapestry carpets. A finely-woven, smooth ingrain carpet may cost half a dollar more per yord than one of common texture, but it will be cheaper in the end. Nothing is more unsatisfactory than one of the locsely-woven straw mattings. A fine matting, costing say a dollar and a quarter a yard, will last a dozen years or more, with constant wear, too. It is so fine that but little dust sifts through, and the straines do not pell apart, as in coarser grades. Rugs for the center of the room can be made strands do not pull spart, as in courser grades. Rugs for the center of the room can be made from a body Brussels, with a border to match. They should be tacked down. Japanese cotton rugs, pretty and durable, cost from three to six dollars. They are good for bedrooms, bath-rooms and sitting-rooms. Buy handsome rugs whenever you can afford to. They are a good investment; for, unlike carpets, they do not wear out, and you can hand them down in the family the same as silver or diamonds. A beautiful Oriental rug is a joy forever. In selecting one be particular to see that the colors are rich, and have some brightness. In general, when choosing carpets, have the groundwork rather light, and the colors somewhat neutral. Such a carpet will always look clean, and you will not feel the need of shutting out the sunlight through fear of fading.

WHEN SWEEPING A ROOM

WHEN SWEEPING A ROOM

THE preparation of a room for sweeping and the arrangement of the furniture after the room has been eleaned, are by far the greater part of the work. The first step is to dust all the ornaments and place them on a firm table in another room. Next, dust all the plain furniture, using a soft cloth, and removing the lighter pieces from the room. Now beat and brush all the stuffed articles, using a brush to clean the tuffing and creases. When everything movable has been taken from the room, and all the large pieces covered, dust the pictures with a feather duster, or a cloth; then cover the pictures. Brush the celling and walls with a long feather duster, or a soft cloth fastened on a broom. Brush all dust from the tops of the doors and windows. Have the windows open all the windows. Have the windows open all the while. If there he portières and window draperies that can be easily taken down, put them on the clothes-line and shake them well. draperies that can be easily taken down, put them on the clothes-line and shake them well.
Take up all the rugs, and, if you have grass in the yard, lay them upon it, right side down, and beat well with a switch or ratian; then shake. If you have no place where you can spread them, hang them on the line and beat them well. Have a good broom, not too heavy, for the curpets. Sweep in one direction only, taking short strokes. Take up the dirt with a dustpan and corn broom. When the dust settles, go over the carpet once more, having first freed your broom of all lint, threads, etc. When the dust has again settled, dust the room with a soft cloth.

Put three quarts of warm water and three tablespoonfuls of household ammonia in a pail. Wring a clean piece of old flannel out of this, and wipe every part of the curpet, wringing the cloth as it becomes soiled. Now wash the windows, and wipe off any marks there may be on the paint. Remove the coverings from the pictures and furniture, being caraful not to scatter the dust. Bring bock the rugs and hanvines and arrange them. Finally, but the to scatter the dust. Bring back the rugs and hangings, and arrange them. Finally, put the furniture and ornaments in place.

Many people cover the bed, but not the bedstead. It is really quite as important that the wood-work should be covered as it is that the pillows and bed are, for if dirt lodges in the grooves and carvings, it is a difficult task to remore it.

COVERINGS FOR FURNITURE

If one have proper covers for the pictures I and heavy pieces of furniture in the room, a great amount of trouble can be saved on the severping day. Buy cheap print ctoth for the furniture. Have three breadths in the cover, and have it three yards and a half long. It should be beaumed, and the work can be done quickly on a sewing-machine. I find six cloths a convenient number, although we six cloths a convenient number, although we do not always need so many. Get chenp, un-bleached coston, and cut it into lengths suitable for covering pictures, heavy ornaments, clocks, etc. These need not be bemmed. Alchecks, etc. These need not be hemmed. At-ways remove any coverings gently; then take them out of doors to be shaken. Fold them and put them away. They will last a long time, and pay for themselves in a year, because they save so much extra dusting, and the moving of heavy articles.

HOW TO DESTROY MOTHS AND WORMS

FROM all quarters there come inquiries about destroying moths and worms in excepts, rugs, furniture and clothing. If the piece of furniture or the rug be very valuable, piece of farniture or the rug be very valuable, the quickest and surest way is to send it to one of the many places where they clean with steam heat or naphtha; but one can do a great deal at home if one will only be thorough. For the staffed farniture use naphtha freely. Put the article on the plazza and pour a gallon of naphtha into it, being sure that every part is saturated. After a day or two repeat the process, and I think you will find that both worms and eggs are destroyed. Still, it will be necessary to keep a close watch; for it is more difficult to destroy the eggs than the worms, and they may be hatched out after days, or even weeks, have passed. I know that if the naphtha be used again at this time the trouble will be at an end. Furs and wooken gurments should be well beaten, and then saturated with naphtha. There is no danger in this generous use of the fluid out of doors; but in the bouse great care There is no danger in this generous use of the fluid out of doors; but in the bouse great care must be exercised. Windows should be opened, and there should be no light or fire in the room for several days if naphths has been used in large quantities. When rugs or carpets are attacked, have two hot irons ready. Wet with hot water the parts that are affected. Place several thicknesses of wet cloth over this, and apply the bot iron, which should stand there for at least ten minutes, that the steam may penetrate every part. When all is done, pour on amphtha; also, pour it about the edges of the carpet. Remember that wiping with naphtha has no effect; it must be a generous bath. Bear in mind, also, that the danger from the fluid comes from the gas, and ger from the fluid comes from the gas, and that the windows are to be opened, and no fire or light allowed in the room during the work, or for a few hours after it is done.

TO BRIGHTIN LEATHER FURNITURE

SUBSCRIBER asks for a receipt for re-storing the color to leather furniture which has become rusty in appearance. Fur-niture dealers say that real leather should not fade as long as it holds together. However, it niture dealers say that real leather should not fade as long as it holds together. However, it does fade; so try this method of brightening it: Wash the leather with a sponge that has been wrung out of hot soap-sads; then rub as dry as possible. Now place the furniture in the son and wind, that it may get thoroughly dry as quickly as possible. Next, rub hard with a cloth that has been wet with kerosene. Let the furniture stand in the air until the oder of the cil has massed off. the odor of the oil has passed off.

SOMETHING ABOUT COOKING SCHOOLS

O many questions are sent to me concerning cooking schools that I will state briefly where some of them may be found, and the usual method of teaching followed there. The New York Cooking School is open there. The New York Cooking school is open from October or November until about May. Pupils can take private or special lessons at any time through ti, winter or spring. Classes of six take a regular course of ten or twenty lessons, doing all the work them-selves. Demonstration lessons are also given at stated times. Besides this there are several hundred children taught free in this school.
The pupils do not board or lodge there. Address "The New York Cooking School, Lafayette Place, New York City," for any further

The Boston Cooking School, on Trement The Boston Cooking School, on Trement street, does its work in much the same manner, save that it has a larger training department for teachers. Mrs. Rorer has a cooking school in Philadelphia, and there are many other good institations in various parts of the country, but I lack information in regard to their methods. I know of no school where one can be taught the art of dinner-giving and entertaining, except as one is taught the best modes of serving the dishes which she learns to cook. learns to cook,

CLEANING BURNISHED STEEL

SUBSCRIBER asks how she shall keep A the nickel-plate bright on her base Burner.

Burnished steel on stoves is often mistaken for nickel-plate. There is comparatively little mickel-plate used on the parts of a stove where great heat comes, since it has a tendency to scale off when exposed to a high temperature. A store manufacturer tells me that there is nothing so good for cleaning burnished steel as naphtha. There must be no fire in the room when it is used, and do the work by daylight. If a stove require cleaning, he sure that there is no fire in it. Wet a soft cloth with naphtha and rub the steel briskly.

METHODS OF REMOVING STAIRS

SEVERAL requests have been received for O the publication of a receipt that will remove fruit stains from linen or cambric.

one of the simplest methods is to place the stained part over a bowl and continue pouring boiling water through until the stain disappears. If this be done soon after the article is stained, there will be no trouble in most cases. The water must be boiling hot.

Oxalic acid will remove fruit stains. As it lauseful for many purposes, it is well to keep a bottle of it in some safe place. Put three ounces of the crystals in a bottle with half a pint of water. Mark the bottle plainly.

when stains are to be removed have a large pail of water and a bottle of bousehold ammoniant hand. Wet the stained parts with the acid and then rub. When the stains have disappeared, put the article in the water, wash thoroughly in several waters, and then wet the parts with the ammonia, that all truce of the acid may be removed. Finally, rinse again.

WHAT CAUSES SPOTS ON A MIRROR

SPOTS have uppeared on a correspondent's new mirror, and she wants to know how bew parries, and see wants to know how to remove them. If a mirror be placed where smilight or a very strong light fails di-rectly upon it the quicksilver will be liable to dissolve, leaving dark spots on the glass. I have failed to learn of any way to repair this defect except by having the glass resilvered.

Contains No Alcoh Makes an every-day convenience of an old-time luxury. PURE and wholesome. Prepared with scrupulous care. Highest award at all Pure Food Expositions. Each package makes two large pies. Avoid imitations-always insist on having the

NONE SUCH brand.

If your groot does not keep it, seed soc. (or stamps) for full size package by mail, prepaid.

MERRELL & SOULE, Syracuse, N. Y.

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocca mixed with Staych, Arrowroot or Sugar, and in therefore far more economical, costing fees then one centacup. Itisdelicious, nour-febiug, strengthening, RASHT

DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in bealth.

Sold by Grocers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

BURNETT'S FLAVORING EXTRACTS

Are in our judgment the best goods that are now or have been on the Dec. 3, 1890.

C. JEVNE & CO., Chicago.

s Department is under the editorship of EBEN E. REXFORD, who will take pleasure in any question regarding flowers and floriculture which may be sent to him by the readers. Mr. REXFORD asks that, as far as possible, correspondents will allow him to rir questions through his JOURNAL Department. Where specially desired, however, he is them by mail if stamp is inclosed. Address all letters direct to EBEN E. REXFORD, Shiocton, Wisconsin.

S THAT WILL BEAUTIFY

HOSE who have vines already growing about their bomes will not be particularly in-terested in this article, but those who have new homes, which they desire to beautify, or those having old homes which may be improved by the use of vines, glad of a few hints in time for them to vantage of them this season. If you mail grower, something hardy, beautiful that requires very little care after

d that requires very little care after g. perhaps the Virginia Creeper, or pea, will suit you as well as anything a select. It fastens itself to smooth surhus requiring no attention in the way jorts, has large, luxuriant foliage, which richly in the fall, and climbs to the of the house in time, and will run over of if you allow it to do so. Nothing can in fall, when it outs on its rich crimor in fall, when it puts on its rich crim-ad maroon; every leaf becomes a flower

VINE that improves with age is the Colastems scandens, or Bittersweet; it is a good er, with green foliage which always seems healthy, and seldom harbors worms. In all it will be covered with drooping cluster of crimson or scarlet berries in orange uses, these enpoutes bursting and disclosing ules, these enpsules bursting and disclosing bright fruit within. These would be reed throughout the winter if the birds dd let them alone, but the robins claim in as their especial property, and the vine con stripped of its pretty fruit. I consider a one of our best native vines. It is very owns and perfectly bardy, so far as my owledge goes, in all parts of the north, meysuckles are excellent for planting about randas and porches. They can be trained the poets and along cornices, and their autiful and fragrant flowers will be sure to light you. For covering arbors, screens, if the like, the Akroin is a good vine, as is a Aristolockia.

HAVE seen a charming effect produced by L planting Ampsiopsis by a fence of woven rire. The young growth was trained out and a through the meshes of the wire, and in a hort time the fence was almost like a hedge, vithout the primness which characterizes nost before

A NOTHER excellent vine for training over wire trellises or fences is the Clematis. If C. Jackmani and C. languissen candids, the former violet-purple, the latter white, are planted together and their branches trained out and in in such a manner as to make them seem one plant, the effect will be very pleasing, because of the contrast of color. C. flamania, a native variety, is one of our most charming vines. Its flowers are white, very sweet, and produced in such profusion that the plant seems buried under a wrenth of newly-fallen snow. Nothing can be finer for cutting for use in tall vases than branches of this Clematis when in full bloom. It forms a most effective combination with Roses, Oleanders, and other flowers of that class. As a flowering vine I know of nothing more delicately beautiful.

CLIMBING Roses are always admired when grown well, but it is not often that we see them in perfection, because they are likely to be neglected in the full. Their causes are stiff and thorny, and difficult to handle, and on that account many full to lay them down and give them proper protection, and it has been my experience that at the north a climbing. Rose must be well protected if you would have it give satisfaction. My plan is to heap a quantity of earth about the base of the plant, and carefully bend the stalks over this heap. and carefully bend the states over this near,
If care is taken in doing this the canes need not be broken, and the task will not be a very difficult one. Without doing this many of the canes will be split or broken, because of receiving abrupt bends, and such canes will fail to produce healthy branches the following string and as a natural communication they will spring, and as a natural consequence they will give inferior flowers. After bending the capes to the ground, cover with six inches of soil, or evengreen branches. In spring cut the branches back about one-third if they come through in good condition.

A LL growers of good plants know that a plant suffers greatly if it is not given now, fresh soil as soon as the old has been nolbed of its notritive qualifies. The use of fertilizers applied from time to time renders this neglect less apparent, but it does not do away with the necessity of providing a good soil if you would have vigorous, healthy plants. Plants should be given attention swhen it is needed, and no amatter can afford to forget or ignore this fact, if they hope to be successful floricalturists.

SPRING WORK IN THE BORDER

HEN this issue of THE LADIES' Home Journal is in the hands of its readers. I am aware that the enrith will still be under its covering of snow, though the magazine bears date of spring.
On this account it may hardly seem timely to spreak of work. 8

magazine bears date of spring.
On this account it may hardly seem timely to speak of work to be done out of doors, when spring has really come, but there is always so much to be said at that time that something is sure to be left unsaid because of lack of space; therefore, I take time by the forelock and give a few hints about the plants in the border, thinking that those who are interested in them will remember them when the proper time comes to make use of them.

If you have old plants of Delphinum, Aquilegia, Iris, Hollyhock, Perennial Phlox—anything that forms a clump, and sends up a great mass of stalks each season—it may be well to divide their roots. Such plants do well for three or four years, as a general thing, without any attention of this sort, but after that they do much better if taken up, the old roots cut out, and new clumps formed by planting the strongest and healthiest roots of the previous season's growth. In this way the vitality of the plant is renewed. Very often old plants seem to be failing. They give few flowers, and these are generally inferior. By taking them up in spring and re-setting them, rejecting all old roots, you will be able to secure a vigorous plant in place of the old worn-out one. If you do not care to take up the entire plant, cut among it with a sharp spade, and remove as much of the older portion of the roots as possible. Fill in about the plant with strong, rich soil, and dig away all grass-roots. Most border plants are greatly injured by letting the grass seems a small plant, it is a most voracious and aggressive one, and it will soon choke out a plant with much larger, stronger roots. No grass should be allowed to grow within a foot and a half of a border plant. The labor of keeping it from getting a foothold is not very great if it is done at the proper The labor of keeping it from getting a foot-hold is not very great if it is done at the proper time. Use a sharp hoe, and after cutting the grass apart, go over the soil with a small rake grass apart, go over the soil with a small rake and remove every portion of top and roots, or it will soon take possession of the soil, as every little piece baving a bit of root attached will soon become an independent plant. All border plants should be given a liberal application of well-rotted manure in spring. First dig up the soil well about the plant, then apply the manure and dig it in well about the roots. No other manure is as useful as old, well-rotted cow manure. If the flower stalks of last year were not cut away in fall, as they should have been in order to give the garden a look of neatness in winter, cut them off close to the roots now.

a look of heatness in winter, cut them on close to the roots now.

If you divide your plants, do not throw away any of the good roots. Haven't you a corner where you can plant them? If so, put them there. Don't trouble yourself about "arrangement," just plant them in an infor-mal way, and the chances are that you will have the roots of your persons the plants of the state of the find this part of your garden the pleasantest spot in it. It will have that "free-and-easy" air about it that will attract you and your vis-itors more than the more formal portions. Every plant in it will seem to give you an in-vitation to "run in and see me again when you feel like it; drop in any time."

PLANTS FOR DECORATIVE PURPOSES

AM asked to give a list of such plants as can be grown by the smateur which are suitable for parlor decoration. I gladly comply with the request, because I like to encourage the growing of good plants for use in rooms. I would have them considered a part of the furnishing of a room as much as a picture or other work of art. I would be glad to have plants considered as necessities in every bome.

They are every day becoming more popular.
PLANTS WITH LARGE FOLIAGE.—Palms in variety (Best varieties for amateur; Phenix reclinata, Latania Borbonica, Areca lutescens and Charnerops excelsa). Ficus elastica or India Rubber Plant, Cycas, Canus, Banana, Aspidistra, Of the above, all but Canus and Banana bave thick, firm leaves, and stand dry air and dust well.

dry air and dust well.

Other Good Plants.—Phormium Formosum, with that foliage, long and pointed, like some of the native Flags. Pandanus utilis, or Screw Pine, with recurved, drooping foliage.
Ancuba variegata, green, sprinkled thickly with yellow, often called Gold Dust Plant.
Very line. Agares, is variety; plants with thick, fleshy foliage, somewhat resembling the Cactus in habit nod general appearance.

Any of the above will give complete satisfaction if properly cared for, and all are easily grown.

SOIL FOR POTTED PLANTS

T this season of the year the grower of house plants will naturally begin to think about the work to be done among her plants a little later on, and potting and re-potting will come up for consideration. This leads up to the question of a suitable soil for pot-plants. Where leaf-mold can be obtained, I would always advise its use, as it contains some of the best elements of successful plant-growth, but of course those living in towns and cities can not get it without a great deal of trouble and expense, and to such I would recommend as a very good substitute turfy matter to be got in any pasture or roadside where grass grows. Cut around a sod and turn it over, and you will find that immediately below the thick mass of grass which forms a sward there is a layer of earth which is completely filled with very fine and fibrous roots. Indeed, this portion of the soil seems to be composed almost wholly of these roots. Shave this off with a spade or sharp knife, close to the bottom of the grass, taking care to retain all the roots. These will decay and form a vegetable fertilizer almost equal to leaf-mold, and quite as satisfactory to many plants. A little trip into the country, or even into the all the roots. These will decay and form a vegetable fertilizer almost equal to leaf-mold, and quite as satisfactory to many plants. A little trip into the country, or even into the suburbs of most cities, will enable one to secure a quantity of this soil.

Mix with it one half the quantity of loam for such plants as Geranians, and one-third for leaf-mold-foring plants like the Fuchsia and Gloxinia. Then add enough sand to make the compost light and arable. The kind of sand to use is that which is coarse and sharp. Fine sand generally loses its lightening qualities when mixed with much loam. But coarse, sharp sand always retains its characteristics and keeps the soil open and porous. To ascertain when you have added sand enough, take up a handful of the compost after mixing it, and give it a squeeze. Then relax your hold and open your fingers; if the soil retains the shape given by the pressure of your hand it requires more sand, but if it falls apart readily, it is about right. Such a soil will never become sour from stagnant water, for it will be so one mediacrous that all sur-your hand it requires more said, but if it falls apart readily, it is about right. Such a soil will never become sour from stagmant water, for it will be so open and porous that all surplus water will drain out of it readily.

Most persons think that some kind of manure is required. I prefer to let plants grow in this soil for a time, and add fertilizers later when the demands of the plants for it are noticeable. So many complaints come in about white worms in the soil, after using harnyard manures, that I would advise the use of "Food for Flowers," instead. Its use can be regulated by the requirements of the plants, and on this account all good fertilizers of this class are preferable to manure which must be mixed with the soil at the time of potting, thus often giving too much slimulation in the early stages of plant growth. By watching your plants and understanding their wants, you can apply a fertilizer just when it is most needed, and in this way it can be made most useful. "Food for Flowers" never broads worms, and on this account it will be appreciated by those who have had plants ruined by these pests. I have often advised keeping a supply of potting soil on band for use as required, and I would again urge the advisability of doing so. If you have a supply to draw from at any time, you will be much more likely to re-pot your plants when they need it than you will if it is necessary to prepare some soil for them especially.

THE QUEEN CARNATION

THE QUEEN CARNATION

WAS very glad to see this new strain of Carnation advertised in the January number of this paper. It is a "novelty," but such a novelty as I am always glad to endorse—a novelty with great merit. This strain is being introduced to the public this season for the first time, but it has been thoroughly tested before sending out, and those who admire the Carnation of the greenhouse, and would like something like it in the garden, will find it what they have long been wishing for. Imagine Carnations of the greenhouse class blooming all through the season in the open ground, and so profusely that you can cut them for table, corsage, or bouquet use, whenever desired, and you may get some idea of what the Queen Carnation is. It has the fine form of the Rementants, with their delicious fragrance, and a great deal more freedom of bloom, and comes in as great a variety of colors. I can unhesitatingly recommend it as one of the greatest acquisitions of the last few years among desirable garden plants. I notice that the introducers speak of starting the plants in the home early in the season, so that they can be brought into bloom very early when put in the copen ground. I would not advise can be brought into bloom very early when put in the open ground. I would not advise this, as it is difficult for most amateurs to grow seedlings well in the ordinary room. grow seedlings well in the ordinary room. They will be forced, weak, and spindling, and consequently they will suffer when planted out to such an extent that, as a general thing, plants grown from seed sown in the open ground will get the start of them. We open ground wan get one start or them. We have so many early blooming plants that there is no real necessity of trying to get them to bloom very early in the season. I think they will be found much more satisfactory if sown in the open ground, and given a chance to in the open ground, and given a chance to make a healthy, strong growth, before coming into bloom. They will begin to flower by mid-summer, and continue to give their beautiful flowers during the fall, at a season when most flowers during the sail, at a senson when most other desirable plants have suspended opera-tions. For cutting, for table use, or the cor-sage, no finer flower can be grown. They have that lasting quality which all flowers must have in order to be very useful for these purposes. As to their beauty and sweatness, they "go without saying," for all lovers of charming flowers class the Carnation only second to the Rose in these respects. In order to secure the greater quantity of flowers, by to secure the greater quantity of flowers, be sure to keep seed from forming.

READ EVERY WORD If you have a GARDEN

You will need not only seeds, but also will likely be n want of Small Fruits, Flowering Plants, Builts, etc. Poor sects and plants are an abomination; and if you have ever had any experience with them, once has been enough. It is our business to supply the test of everything in plant life, and to give some iden of our success, would say: Our 1802 back represents an expenditure exceeding $41,000 for the first edition alone. From October 1, 180, to October 1, 180, we paid the Philidelphia Post Office, $20,860,58, for Postaye. We mention these items simply to give you an idea o. what we are doing in our special line. The credit for this business success belongs exclusively to the su-perior excellence of Maule's Seeds, Plants

SPECIAL

To the Readers of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

For 25 cents we will send any one mentioning Text Latited Hour Journal, one package each of the following five varieties of the choicest Flowers:

Maule's Superb Camellia Flowered Balsam New Globe Pyramidal Stocks

Phlox Drummondii Grandiflora, Mixed New Mammoth Large Flowering Sweet Peas New Annual Chrysanthemums

These seeds are worth 55 cts. in any other way. And, in addition, a copy of our '92 Catalogue.

This book is a wonder, and is absolutely the finest ever published, taking seven cents to mail, while most other catalogues take only 2, 3 or 4 cent stamps. This will give you an idea of its size. Besides a magnificent lithographed cover, it contains to stakeonic Colored Fintes of Vegenaties, Flowers and Small Froits; 72 colors; weighs over 12 concess and is brim full and run-ning over with the good things of plant life. Beasember, we send those 5 packets, the regular price of which is 55 cents, and our handsome book for 25 cents, to readers of THE LADDE HORE JOURNAL, so don't fall to mention this paper when writing.

Special Low-Priced Offers of

riants and	Dui	us.
5 Fancy-Leaved Bogonias,	-	944	lpaid,	50	cfs.
6 Popular Carnations,		=		50	++
6 Handsome Chrysanthenisms,		4.	4	50	140
7 Boastiful Monthly Roses,				50	465
5 Extra Choice Hardy Hybrid	Roses,		11	50	**
5 Choice Hardy Shrubbery,		4	0	50	4.0
6 Excelsior Dwarf Dbl. Pearl To	beroses		111	25
12 Gladiolus, in grand mixture,		-		20	44
4 Superb Named Dahllas,		-		50	40

Or the 34 plants, the 22 bulbs, the 5 packets of Choice Flowers, with a copy of our 1892 Seed and Plant Book for $3.50, postpaid.

Remit by money or express order, bank deaft, check or registered letter, and address all orders to

WM. HENRY MAULE, 1711 Filbert Street,

Philadelphia, Pa.

Every one sending 25 cents or more be-fore April 1st will be entitled to an extra present, as we want every reader of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL to have our ! as early as possible. You need it before purchasing anywhere. Will mail book alone to anyone for 5 two-cent stamps.

LOVELY NEW VARIEGATED TUBEROSE

J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N.Y.

Amateur Gardening for Amateur Gardeners Breeg, Brief and Brainy. Crisp, Chatty and Chevry.
Only 50 cents a year, with a handsomely liketrated dwarf dashin, 'The Bulle of Springfield,' which as since of being photographed shound $44 block some Try it one year, and scheenile now. Address AMATEUR GARDENING, flyringfield, Mass.

READER If you love HARE FLOWERS.
Chairest only, address Halls HROSE,
Keene, N. H. II will assemble and please. FREE.

TREES-PLANTS, ETC AT 12 PRICE

Prust. Ocuanicinal. Nut or Flowering which are accurately described in a logue LOVETTS GUIDE TO HORTICUI and quoted at OSZ Hair the Price of selletions.

The following are a few of our choice newelline: Lovett's Real Backborry. Beets and Lovett's Rairy Straw borry, Lovett Hamberry, Japan Walmab, Ico & Hard Orange, Hard Orange, Japan Walmab, Ico & Hard Orange, Japan Walmab, Ico & Hard Orange, Japan Walmab, Ico & Hard Orange, Japan Walmab, Shipmanis to distant politics of pulses as politics as preciately.

L. L. LOVETT CO. Little Silver, N. J.

This excellent variety is distinguished from all thore by its large stiff stalks, as shown in the engravag, standing uplike a tree without support of any kind. I have very absendantly of large, bright red to assess, very smooth, and of fine flavor; it is exactled, very smooth, and of fine flavor; it is exactled, very smooth, and of fine flavor; it is leaves as the control of the form of it is leaves.

FINCH'S EVERGREEN CUCUMBER

FINCH'S SURE HEAD CABBAGE s all head and sure to head. Very uniform in the firm and fine in texture, overleight in gashity, and good keepper. Alfred Ross, of Penn Yan, N. Y., saw a lead which weighted $4.5 pounds. Commber $2 T will send a Product each of Younds, Commber of Cabbage, with my line strated Combigues, for only 3 cents in Silver or 28 cents in Stamps.

FIVE CINNAMON VINES FREE

This rapid growing Vine, with its boastirib heart-shaped leaves, glossy green peculiar feliage, and delicate white blassom, emitting a deficions chramon fragrance, will grow from 10 to 30 Feet in a single senses and for covering Arbers, Screens and Versadas is without a real. I will send 5 RULRS PRRE, and postpaid to every person sending me 25 creats for the above Tree Tomate Collection, the bulbs will produce 5 Regultful Vines exactly the same in overy respect as I have been selling for One Boling. Address plainly

FRANK FINCH, (Sox B) CL YDE, N. Y.

FF Sterry person conding SILVER for this collection will recording conding SILVER for this collection will record as the First which has been grown over class layout as the First with the been grown over class feet in heighth, learning fruit of good quality, weighing from one to two pecuads each.

Royal Splendor Verbenas.

This Novelty is the result of 30 years' selection. The flowers are the Largest Size, Unsurpassed for Vividness, with Wonderful Range and Brilliancy of Colors. Plants compact and vigorous. Prof. S. T. Maynard, Mass, Ag. Col., says: "Your Royal Spiendor Verbeans are the monthlistic years and the monthlistic years and the monthlistic years and the result of the series of the series. Seed as another or, of area seed." The Royal Spiendor has another or, of area seed." The Royal Spiendor has always taken fret price as Floral Exhibits. Price, 26th per pet. SPECIAL OFFER. For a limited time, is interested and price of the series and price of the series of the Royal Spiendor for the Royal Spiendor Verbeaus.

Royal Splender Verbenss. B. Howard, Seed Grower, Belchertown, Mass.

SEEDS-

FRESH! Reliable! Colo-brated for Parity 4, Strong Germi, antisy Qualities, Oily 12 Re, per lungs pick. 5,000,000 Novelly Entrace with orders it in your Resul-tiful Hua. Colored Seed and Plant Catalogue, Free to all who addees at come H. W. BUCKBEE-Bockford Seed Farms. No. 224 Ham St., Reckford, H.

FLOWERING Send I (Je, and I will mail to you? Truberrose Bullba-BullBS and 10 mey varieties Summer Oralls. For 250-, 12 Grand Inth. Double Pour Truberros Bulba I (Je I orange Ref.) and I or sum you will be summer Oralls. For 50-, 12 Grand Inth. Double Pour Truberros Romer Covalis. Summer Ovalis. Send of the Covalist Summer Ovalis. Send of the Covalist Summer Ovalis. Send of the Covalist Summer Ovalist Summer Ovalis. Send of the Covalist Summer Ovalist Summer Ovalis. Send of the Covalist Summer Ovalist Summer Ov

RARE NEW FLOWERS FREE!

To get all of the readers of this pages to one our enables of this pages to one our enablests, we will, for thingy developing, and it together with a like, and it together with a like, and it together with a like, plat, of the new Langings and the Langing of the law Langings and pages of the law like, to simply page cost of posture and pages and large and pages and pages and pages and large and pages an

SEVERAL CORRESPONDENTS Write me about plants that full to bloom, and want me to tell them why it is. I am not able to give any opinion unless some information is given on which an opinion can be based. How do you expect me to tell you what the cause of trouble when you merely state that such trouble exists? Unless you can give me some idea of the conditions under which your plants have been grown, please don't ask any questions.

And to other correspondents who write me and say, Please reply in next Jounnal," let me repeat what has been said in this department time and again, that it is utterly impossible for a reply to be given in the magnetice in less than three mouths after the question is

A JOURNAL READER-Prune the hardy Hydrangess in spring.

Mas, C. B. W.—Cannas winter well in any ordinary cellar. Store with the polators.

Miss F. L. B.—See answer to Payelle. What I have said about Punsies will apply to Violets in winter.

M. A. C.—Consolt the entalogue of some dealer in olds, and you will find instructions regarding their buibe, a culture.

Miss A. P.—You can get Covent Garden Fuchsia from any of the seed dealers advertising in THE JOURNAL.

J. M. B.—Any one of the large seed firms, if written to, will give reliable information regarding the care and culture of the Cactus.

A. M. P. says that her plants are infested with worms that work on the plants, and not in the ground among the roots. Syringe with helictore in water.

SEVERAL SUBSCRIBERS—Gray's" How Plants Grow" and other works in that line are standard, and very likely would prove to be just what you want. N. P.—The best way to winter builts of the Tuberose is to put them in paper bags and lang them in a room that is wholly free from frest, but not too warm.

M. E. B. asks if seeds can be expected to germinate after the first year. Some kinds rotain their vitality for years. Other kinds are worthless after a year or two.

SPECTMENSIFOR NAME-Hereafter, please send no spectmens to be named through this column. An answer interests no one except the party seeking in-formation.

New Jacoby Boy-Passies and English Violets can be wintered in perfection by covering with leaves; by removing the leaves early in spring, the plants will soon come into blocks.

F. L. T.—Forpiques: requires only ordinary-stand pots, but must have a good deal of water. If the leaves ap-pear to be exten, you will doubtless find some insect at work if you watch closely.

Mass L. L. L.—The "white first" you speak of on your Palm is probably the mealy bug, which resembles a bit of cutton more than anything else. Kerosene emulsion applied with a brush will remove it.

A. M. D.—Tuberose plants bloom but once; buits that have blossomed or budded once are worthless thereafter except for purposes of propagation. It generally takes there years for northern grown bulbs to reach blooming size.

A SUBSCRIBER is possible to know what is meant by the terms fail-blown, half-blown and bud. A fail-blown Rose is one which has fully expanded. A half-blown one is one that has just begun to break sport. A bud is —a bud.

Max J. W.—The brown spots on leaves of your Begon's may come from drops of water standing on them. Do not keep the plants in the sun, and only water when the soil seems inclined to be dry on the surface.

L. M. O.—Freus elastica. Pandanus utilis. Greetiles robusts. Aspidistra burids and any of the obtowing varieties of Palm make fine parter plants: Letastic Robusta, Area intesors, Phonis recissats and Opose reputals.

Miss B. W.—(1) You can obtain a water-proof cloth for pit covering from almost any dealer in seeds and plants. (2) I cannot tell you how to prepare it. (3) Two year old Geraniums ought to have six or seven inch pots if well grown and developed.

V. A. W.—(1) The Japan Lily is hardy out of doors.
(2) The Bose named is a hybrid perpetual, and should be hardy in Pennsylvania if covered well in fall. Bend the branches to the ground and cover with evergreen boughs, laying sods on them to bold them in place.

S. A. C.—Seed developed from the first crop of the Swood Pea flower is best, therefore you cannot cut your Sweet Pea early in the season and expect good seed from the late flowers. I think the English Violet is the best variety to grow in a cold frame for early and late flowering.

GRETHEDR—Always cut off the tops of your Chrys-amhermums when their senson of flowering is over. They will bloom next senson foram new groath, which will be sent up from the roots. It is the opinion of most needed mean that a few plants in a stepping-room are not harmful.

Mas. A. M. M.—I am sorry to say that I don't know where rose lars can be obtained. It is an easy matter in bog what perports to be the germine arricle, but they are generally shams. Why not wall until next summer and make one for powerfol? Half the pleasure of one comes from the making of it.

"FAYELLE" is anxious to grow Paneles in the house us states, and wants to know how she can do so. I do not think it worth her while to try. The Paney is a plant that likes a cool air and moistare, and its flowers would blast in the living room, and very soon the red spider would gut as end to the plants.

Miss. M. C. G.—The scap and kerosene emulsion should be applied to the leaves of the plants—not to the roots. If you are troubled with worns in the soil, I would abanden the use of barupard manure, and use instead any one of the Foods for Flowers, which may be bought at any shop where seeds are sold.

Mus. W. J.—Boses like a rich soil. Old cow manure is the best fertilizer for them. They do well in an old chip-yard, if the chips have decayed considerably, Keep them well peured, removing all weak branches. I perfer spring to fall planting. The Storm King Fuchsin is of too weak a babit to do well. For sitting-room culture it is a failure.

Mas. L. S. W.—It is not customary to put plants in the cellar to rest through the summer. We prefer to put them out of doors. The Calla sheald be re-pointed in September in a soil of leaf moid, muck and sand, well drained. The Easter Lily may bloom next senson, but it is better to get fresh builts each full, as old ones are not to be depended on after being forced.

SEVERAL BEADERS—To make lime-water for plants. Put a piece of fresh lime as large as an ordinary-sized bowl in a patient of water. Let stand until dissolved. Then pour off the clear water and apply in your plants. Use enough to theoroughly saturate the self. You need not be afraid of injuring any plasts except those which have a special dislike to lime, like the Azalen.

Mass. L. W.—If your Beronia was respotted only a month see, and you cut off some of its racks at that time, you can hardly expect it to have become sufficiently es-tablished to make much growth. Walt patiently. I would never advise the two of hen manure. It is too strong for most plants, if the plant does not begin to grow soon, re-pot, and leave hen manure out of the compost.

Have You Seen The Latest Fashions in

Probably not, for the remarkable improvements are very recent and several are now offered for the first time, while new strains of the past few years have been perfected.

Pansies are doubtless the most popular of all flowers raised from seed, and in order to give a new impetus to their culture, by acquainting all with the wondrous beauty of the LATEST NOVELTIES, we have decided to make the following

Special Offer For 25 Cts. we will mail one packet

PEACOCK PANSY. A grand fency flow-er, yeals edged with a thin white line, within which is a space of purplish crimeen, passing into a rich central blotch of deep blue shading to black. The coloring in truly deliciour.

ROSY MORN PANSY. This is a really beautiful rosy red color with a distinct white edge around each petal, while the three lower petals are blooched with a deep purplish red. The flowers are of perfect form and good size.

BURPEE'S DEFIANCE GIANT FANCY PANSIES. The flowers measure from two-and-one-half to fair teches across; the ground colors are of all shades and they are both three-apotted and five-apotted, distinctly marked with the large blotches.

We have a beautiful plate, publish in wine colors, of the three distinct new Funcies named above, which we will mail enclosed that with one FASM ANNUAL for 1892.

IMPROVED GIANT TRIMARDEAU. Greatly improved in the encrusous size of flow-ers, fine form, and increased variety of colors.

IMPERIAL GERMAN, Splendid Mxd. Seed of over fifty colors, saved from the finest flowers by the German specialist, whose gardens we repeatedly inspected during the past Summer, ORDER NOW, and ask for Burpee's Farm Annual for 1892, the most complete Seed Catalogue of the year. With honest descriptions, truthful illustrations, and colored plates pointed from nature, it tells all about the BEST SEEDS, including Rare Novelties in Vegetables and Flowers, which cannot be had elsewhere.

W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

The STORRS & HARRISON CO. PAINESVILLE, Lake Co., OHIO.

5 Cts. 15 Continuous Flowering Roses 2, 75 cts.
A MAGNIFICENT OFFER!

ss, prepaid by mail, for only 76 cents.

ALL THE ABOVE are strong, vigorous Plants, suitable for immediate flow-ALL THE ABOVE aring. Each labeled. From this collection you can have a bougust of reac buds almost every day throughout the summer. For 73 cents I will send free by mall, All strong Flawering Plants, each labeled, 15 Gerandoms, either double at single flowering, or 15 Carnation Pinks, or 15 Chrysanthemanus the gons from my tellection, or 15 cassoried flowering plants, or 15 assorted sum-ince flowering bulbs. For a remittance of $3.73 is will send the above six collections of plants. Get up a club for five of these collections and have one for journell with-out cost. It addition I will add gratics a plant of the New Striped Tea Rose, Bala-bow. Catalogue of Plants and Seeds mailed free.

CHARLES A. REESER CHEENHOUSES, SPRINGFIELD, O.

PLANT, TREE AND OLLU LIVE 112 Pages, 200 Fine Engravings, Handsome Colored Plates, information, One of the most reliable catalogues published. Describin Garden, Plower and Floid Seeds, Fruit and drammental Trees, 8 Flowering Plants and Bulbs. Thoroughbred Land and Water Plants and Rules, Thoroughbred Land and Water Plants and Fully and Formation.

SAMUEL WILSON, " MECHANICSVILLE, PA. HOICE ROSES AT

OUR RAINBOW COLLECTION OF 20 ROSES FOR $1.

In roces we some are on their own roces, from letts to inches high, and will bloom freely this summer either in gots or planted in pard. Please examine the below list of 20 scholes fragrant monthly roses, and see if you can duplicate them anywhere for an amount so small as $1. They are nearly all new kinds. The List:—

Buchess of Albary, the best pink rose by he can introduced. The Brida, pare ivery white. Viacountous Folkestone, depart have color. Medeor, the best rich crisess rose. Franciska Krugser, eigent shade of term. Pearl of the Gardon, day grider prior, digant shades of term. Pearl of the Gardon, day grider prior. Immocent Physics, dother pare white. Moss. Furstade, leaves prior. Page Goutter, ivery dark red. Heaving of Stapheford, begin strains. Humsel, boundful shades of action and taws. Mad. Sciphes Cochet, a great rose, in bloom all the time. La France, thrown at the "queen of coses." Snowflake, per white, always in bloom. Mad. de Watterfills, the branchist Tulip mes. Cochet, when the Martinet, a great gasten rose. Mad. Joseph Schwartz, bloom is choice, very deposit. Sour, of Woodton, horses, first sentic. Star of Gold, will produce the most yellow bade and roses. Laciale, long bods, atmins and coppert yellow.

[Collection of 12 Harriy Roses, all different colors, M.].

We will also send our fron Clad Collection of 12 Hardy Roses, all different colors, $1. Try is sel. 30 Chrysmathemums, all prize winners, $1. 16 Gernniums, double and single flowered and scented, $1. 10 choice Begonius, different kinds, $1. 40 packets choice Flower Seeds, all different kinds, $1. 00 packets, describing above flower, Plants and all Seeds, maind for 8c, stamps. Book erder your Roses, Plants or Seeds before seeing our prices. We can save you money, We have all the new Begonius, Chrysanthemums, Geraniums, Roses, etc. $6000 & REESE CO., Box S, Champion City Greenhouses, Springfield, Ohio.

ROOZEN'S BULBS, Etc., for SPRING PLANTING. Oladioli, Dahlias, Begonias, Irises, Lilies, Tuberoses, etc., etc.

The most extensive catalogue of the above and all ness and zore Bulbs and Plants is published by the famous growers

ANT. ROOZEN & SON, OVERVEEN (near Haarlem), Holland. (Established 1893.) Catalogue upon application. Mention Ton Lances' Hour Journal. Address our sele American representative J. TER KUILE, 33 Broadway, New York.

FOR 100 PODS!

Bills' improved Prolife Tree Bean.

ry person sending silver for above collection verifies a packet GOLDEN BALL TURNIP, and finest variety over grown, and a 50 cent cor-

NEW, RARE AND BEAUTIFUL TROPICAL PLANTS

From Florida and the West indies. They will do light every lover of choice plants and flowers. Elegant Palme and Greekleis; Gorge con Foliage Plants: and the Newsen and Chalceleis and the Newsen and Chalceleis and the Newsen and Chalceleis and the Freekleis Chalceleis and the Freekleis Chalceleis Chalceleis

Petunia, 10 colors; Ve colors; Parts cet Alysaum

FOR 12 CENTS DES Sixth Street, South. Minnespolis, Minn.

RARE AND CURIOUS PLANTS

ELSEWHERE. The Blue Amaryilla Yellow Spider Lily Yellow Calla Giant Torch Lily 700 SORTS CACTI-Book on Cacti, 16 pages, 10 cents CATALOGUES FREE. A. BLANC & CO. Philadelphia.

Established 1838. Rich Scarlet Climber.

Manettia Tipped bright reller, inbright relevent to the second to the Fruit Trees, Berries, Hardy Shrubs, and Chrysanthemans. 48 Send for Outsingse, ISAAC C ROGERS, MOORESTOWN, N.J.

25c Send $80 for my new pamphlet, salakers curries samernoss, fully grow Plants, Floreer, Vegetable and Farm Preducts. Send Se. Postage for Finest Seed Catasing published. Pamphlet and Cat, 30c. o JOHN A. SALZER, LaCrosse, Wis.

Mas. R. C. II.—Pot bulbs of this Lily in any good soil. Plant in October for mid-winter.

Miss. A. T. C., and others ask what will destroy wire-worms in the garden. Can any one tell?

A CONSTANT READOR-You can obtain a book on Mushroom culture through the Journal's Book De-

Mns. E. W.—I do not know the plant to which you give the above name. It is not the botanical name of any plant I am familiar with.

Mus. R. W. M.—Consult the advertising cultums of this paper and you will find Chumas spoken of; any dealer two supply you with them.

A. S.—You can obtain plants of both the hardy Coreogeis and hardy Carnadion from any dealer adver-tising in this paper. The leaf seat is a Palm.

Mns. C. W. L.—I think the korosese emulsion, for which formula believe below, will rid your Dahlias of the insects which trouble them; try it, and report.

Mns. M. C. R.—I infer from your letter that you have grown the Lily in a pot; if so, set the pot away in the cellar until spring, keeping it cost and rather dry, also dark.

I. M.—Writes that she has planted the tops of several Phospoles, and they have began to grow. She wasse to know what kind of care to give them. Can any one toll her?

R. M.—This correspondent says that the leaves on her Calla turn yellow and die off. Perhaps the rod spider is at work on the lower side. Examine; if found, apply water freely until he is routed.

Mis. J. R.—Yes; ammonia in the water applied to plants is frequently beneficial, though not to the ex-tent many imagine. A tablespoonful to eight or ten quarts of water once a week is sufficient. Mise S. E. A.—Why Carnations and "Marguerites" of the white and lighti-colored varieties fall to upon fully cannot say. I have never noticed any trouble of the kind here; it may be owing to some peculiarity of the climate.

Calla-M. E. T.—Let the plant rest from June to September. Put the pot out-of-doors, on its side, and give no water. In September re-pot the roots; they will soon begin to grow after being watered well. Warm water is beneficial after November.

Max. W. S. T.—The Marquerite strain was a forecun-ner of the new Queen Carnation. The latter is a great improvement on the Marquerites; indeed. I know of no finer new plant for the garden. You will regret it if you do not include it in your spring order for seeds.

S. C.—The Ivy-leaf Gerandum, L'Elegante, is not a free bisconer. It is grown solely for its foliage. I re-ceive many complaints similar to yours about the bisst-ing of bods on the Narchews; it seems that some di-ease has attacked the plant; I cannot suggest a remedy, Miss E. C. R.—This correspondent writes that her Ribberts is covered with green lies, and that bark lies cause her lay to drop its leaves. She wants a remedy, For the aphis use a detection of sniphot-tolacco scap; for the bark-louse, or scale, apply an emulsion of kero-sens.

Mas. S. R. S.—The Promy Bloss a rather heavy, stiff, clay soil. I presume the white appearance of the leaves of your Perennial Pen must result from the attack of some insect. Try korosene-emulsion, prepared and ap-plied as advised below. Violeta like shade and a cool place.

Miss. A. K. S.—Mrs. J. H., Centre, Ottawa, Illinois, writes in reply to your letter that if you will scatter rusty salis or scraps of Iron about your Peony the answell not trouble the beds. She thinks that experas would be a good substitute for iron or nails if the latter are not obtainable.

Miss. J. C.—Puchsias require a sail of leaf-mold and sand in order to secure the best results. Drain the pots well, and there will be no danger of over-watering. Keep in a half shady place; shower the foliage daily, shift to larger sizes as soon as the old pots become filled with roots. Never let the soil get dry.

C. E. K.—The heavy clay sell you complain of can be improved by adding sand, loam, old mortar, anything that will have a tendency to make it lighter and more open. This correspondent wants to know what line of flowering plants will do in a place where the air is most, damp, and sally, five miles from the ocean. Can any one having experience tell?

A. B.—This correspondent writes that she has an Orange tree four years old; it occupies a pot four lackes across the top. Boil, strong clay; it does not foursh; why? No wonder it does not grow well; it is starved. A plant four years old ought in be in, at least, a neven for eight-inch pot. Give a soil of loam and sand. Apply furtilizers when growing.

M. E. G.—If you take your tree to a florist to grant let him exercise his own judgment as to the number of grade to put in; also as to pruning. I would have the ten-year-old tree graded in preference to the smaller one. Grading should be done before the tree makes its greatest annual growth. One dollar is not too much to pay for the work. Only the graded portions will bear fruit of the variety from which the graft or scion is taken.

25. V. IL.—To prepare the popular "Rose jar," gather Roses while in their prime, in the morning. Put a layer of petals in the bottom of the jar and scatter coarse sait over them; then add another layer of petals, and more sait. Set the jar in the sun after closing it to prevent evaporation. Proceed in this manner omtil it is filled. Some add various spices, also other sweet-smelling flowers, but flowe leaves alone give the most delicate and delicate perfume.

PEATSTHE

PEATS THE

RETAILS all grades of Wall Paper in small quantities at wholesale prices. Newest designs, latest colorings, lowest prices. Your home dealer cannot buy some patterns as cheap as Pents sells them.

If you have any use whatever for Wall Paper do not fail to send 10 cents for postage n samples, and his guide "HOW TO PAPER" will be sent free.

Good Paper without gilt, 3 cents per roll. Good gold paper, 5 cents per roll.

Handsome gold parlor paper, 10, 125 and 15 cents per roll, with wide borders and eilings to match. Agent's sample books, $1.00. ger Answer this advertisement, you may overlook the next one.

PEATS, the Wall Paper Merchant

136 and 138 West Madison St., Chicago

MOST FAVORABLY KNOWN FOR

MORE THAN FORTY-THREE YEARS. always give satisfaction, and we want at least a Trial Order from You. In order to increase our business we make the following

SPECIAL OFFERS, which have never been equaled in which have never been equaled in really embracing Harry E. Widener, Ada Spaniding, Ivory, Violet, Rose, Wm. H. Lincoln, John Lane, Sunnyside, and nine other superb sorts. If you want a grand display of Chrysanthemums for cut flowers in the antunn, do not fail to order this collection, as all the varieties in it produced flowers that sold in Philadelphia last fall for $5 per descen blooms. This is the best offer of rare Chrysanthemums ever made.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

3 NEW EARLY-FLOWERING SORTS

and the Pink For 50c. embracing one Strong Plant

Medame Bergman. Pure white shaded yellow. The carriest of all large flower-ing sorts, takening from Sortember tilks takin frost. On flowers sold in Philadel-phia for $6.40 per deach blooms. Strong plants 50 cts. each.

plants is cis. card.

Portanter. Magnificent large crimson: Servers, shaded carmine. If blooms at the same time of heliance Bergeron and is splendid for our flowers. Se cis. cock.

Harvest Queen. Flowers the first week in October Estra large blooms of lemma yellow, color changing to white, lic. carb.

The Piek Getrick Plume. Identical in its strange and beautiful formation with Mrs. Harry, but its color is an exputible shade of silvery pital; flavors formed into a bail covered with fine batts. He cach.

For 50c. we will send plant each of the above four superb new Chrysanthemums, Please Note that they flower from three to four weeks earlier than other large-flowering sorts, when cut flowers are always scarce and before the early frosts appear.

CHAMELEON.

THE WONDERFUL NEW GERANIUM, with from three to five distinct varieties in bloom at once upon the same plant. It is a perfect marvel among Geraniums, and is the best of the new dwarf growing sorts. Like the chameleon, the color is ever changing, and often upon a single plant we noted blooms of crimson, deep pink, crimson finked with rose, pink striped with scorie, and light rose color. It is the most novel Geranium ever introduced, and should be seen to be appreciated, 25 cents each; 6 for $1.00, postpaid.

ROSES. THE ENVIABLE REPUTATION OF SCOTT'S ROSES has been won by sending out strong plants, SCOTT'S ROSES true to name, of the best varieties only. Try them, it will pay you.

FOR 50 CTS. we will send, postpaid, one strong plant each of the Red (Duchess of Albany), White and Pink, LA FRANCE Roses and Mrs. De Graw. All are Hardy, Constant Bloomers and Fragrant.

BED OF THIRTY ROSES FOR $2.25

Embracing.

( 15 Clotilde Soupert [aw mm] | 5 George Pernet, 5 Mignonette. 5 Mignonette 5 Miniature.

THESE 30 Roses will be sent prepaid for $2.25, and will plant a bed four feet in diameter. Will flower the entire summer and will be hardy.

WABAN. To every one who sends an order from this advertisement and mentions this paper, we will send free the superb new Rose, Waban. Order now, and ask for SCOTT'S CATALOGUE Waban. Order now, and ask for SCOTT'S CATALOGUE at lovely colored plate of the new Geranium, Chameleon. It fully describes the grandest novelties in Plants, SEEDS AND BULBS, and is mailed free.

ROBERT SCOTT & SON, PHILADELPHIA, PA. ......

ALL plants grow splendidly, in books; and some grow just as well in practice,-but which? there's the rub. Have you time to test them all? Won't it pay better to buy from a house which is trying, testing, proving, all the time,-cutting out the kinds that won't pay you to grow?

Have you our "Money Grower's Manual"? Indispensable to those who plant seeds to raise money. It costs a good deal to do without it,—only two 2c, stamms to get it, if you mention "The Ladies' Home Journal,"

JOHNSON & STOKES, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Are Large, Vigorous Plants, specially prepared for Summer Blooming. We grow them by the hundred thousand, and can send you large plants by express, or smaller ones by mail. We guarantee satisfaction either way,

Here are 6 Beautiful Everblooming Roses we will send you for only 50c: HR. Jan. WILSON, new.--Pale yellow.

THE QUEET, new.--A superh, pure white Rose ONFT, do La RANTHE.--Remnikal pink, fragraci.

PERLE do Jakures.--Clear, solden pellow.
ONFT, do DAVID.--High univers arisans.

LATHERING MARKET.--Lovely pink, magnifected body and flowers.

6 FIME PLANTS OF ABOVE CHOICE ROSES, SECURELY PACKED, BY MAIL, POSTPAID, FOR 60c. Our Grand Catalogue (120 pages; superbly illustrated) of New Roses, Hardy Plants, Summer Flowers, Buibs, Vines, Ornamental Shrubs and Choice Seeds goes FREE with every order, or mailed free to all who write for it, enclosing 6c stamps for postage.

C. YOUNG & SONS' CO., 1406 OLIVE ST., ST. LOUIS, MO.

BULB GROWERS' ASSOCIATION, BAYONNE, N. J. Bulbs, Seeds, Plants. Gladiolas 25c. dos. SAVED! Highest grades only in the matter of SEEDS. Demand rad accept only D. M. Ferry & Co's. No woods from

MAKE NO MISTAKE

A handsome book that rells all yes want to know for your garden, will be mailed free if you ask for it. No planer, be he ever so expert, car afford to do without it. Send to-day.

D. M. FERRY & CO., DETROIT, MICH.

S500 FOR A TOMATO Lartspring 1 offered $500 in any person person to the stage of t

ducing a 3 h. Hammooth Frice Townston
T. H. Harris, Abbett, Neh. wen it with one weighing 3 his. Siy one, and I sent thing mysheck for 1800. It measured over 64 in indiameter.
To tamahoos grew on one atoms over 5 feet from the ground. Largest plant on record 13 h. 6 in. Lail.
This mammoth strain creates a sensation wherever it goes, and is the largest ever offered. Thousands of my Castomers have green them to weight ever off evel. Thousands of my Castomers have green them to weight ever off evel. Thousands of my Castomers have green them to weight ever of one. The quality is excellent; after you case best if you will grow be exhem. If well cared for they will produce 1 be, to a peak (see cut) of large, smooth, forgits red torantons, very solid withoutly a few seeds in such, and entirely free from rot. If slanted early, fruit ripens from July 4th until freel.
This year 1 offer $500 Cash to any person producing a 15 ib. townsto.
If can be donn.) Full directions how Mr. Harris grew his with each order. Flant some, yet may win the prize. All my lead is saved from large specimens.

SURE HEAD CABBAGE

SURE HEAD CABBAGE Is all head and gure to head, very uniform in size, form and fine in texture, excellent in quality and a good keeper. Single heads have weighed over 6t pounds.

EARLY SNOWBALL TURNIP

A PHOTOGRAPH, In the earliest in the world, easy grown, good size, excelent quality. Will be far shead of your neighbors.

My Caralague, is worth 50 to to any one who gets it. 1800 offered impost order, 1800 for a pancy blessom, 1800 for a bean plant with 100 peds, and above to made prize. 1871 will send a packet each of Price Termin, Catheague and Turnin, with my Catalogue of Ragadus for only 25 cents. Greatest hargain catalogue ever sent out. 187 Every person sending silver for above collecting. The Every person sending silver for above collecting. The Every person sending silver for above collecting. The Every person sending silver for above collecting to the collecting of the collect F. B. MILLS, Rose Hill, Onandaga Co. N.Y.

2 SPECIAL 30-DAY OFFERS!

PARKA

The bine variety reserves, they park a line was represented to the first year. He was a server, they are represented to the first year. He was a line was a li or Spider Life. or spheriting. 200 blockers a coason.

Absolutely sure to block. Each 25c,
100,000 ROSES & PLANTS For 12c

egetable &5 magnificent Flower Seeds (cata value) in order to introduce my LWESEIDS everywher Finest catalog published Se. Cata & 9 page 17: JOHN A. SALZER, LaCrosse, Wis.

Parsons & Sons Co.

(Limited) FLUSHING, N. Y.

Selected Specimens of Japanese Maples, Rhododendrons, Golden Oak,

And many other Rare Trees and Shrubs.

WATER LILIES Choice agentles, ornamental plants and chrysanthements. Handsome Einstrand calabate, telling how to growthem, sent free. ws. TRICKER, Beages Hills, New York.

Seeds! Get the best. 5 Pkts. Aster, Tuberous Begonia, Calceolaria, New Canna and New Passion Flower, ion. Cata, free. A. C. Andenson, Leigh, Net.

Max, R. W. S. A.—Tenadestrans requires a rather light-sandy soil, but rich, and water coough to keep the earth moist all the time. Plants in the cellar should not be watered until they seem to be very dry; water at the roots has a sendency to excite growth, and we aim to keep plants in the cellar as reaxly decrunit as possible. The Passion Flower is a very good vine to train about a window.

A. H.—The twisting of the Callisputs, or Corresponding to the plant to produce flowers of a different character from those usually produced. Study the Aster, and notice the change that has taken place in the petals, some being quilled, others flar, the latter having been developed from the quilled class. Cosmos does best in a poor soil, as the rich one encourages such large growth that the plant is late in coming into flower.

M. W.—I presume the reason why your Geranisms fail to mature bath is the room is too warm. Perhaps you have not good drainage. If you have not, the soil may retain too much water. Smilas ought to bloom the first year, but its flowers are insignificant. Oleaners are only prisonous when the leaves are estimated until July or August. Petunlas cannot be wintered out of doors, and do not do well in cellars.

Mas. M. D. S.—I do not know whether the Jasmines are hardy in Tennesses or not; they are farther south, and I think they would go through the winter well with year, with some protection. Laurel grows most plentially in Pennsylvacia, but is found in many other Noethers States; it has flowers from one to two inches across; in some becalifies I think they are somewhat targer, and they are borne in clusters. Habit of plant, seringcy and angular. I do not know what you refer to us "Cross-vine."

L. A. C.—The proper name of Spider Lily is Pun-cratium. It is not a subfactory plant for ordinary room culture. Begenias seldom or never where well in the cellar. Decidence plants are not adapted to cellar wintering, nor soft-wooded ones. I would cat back Baschallies if I wanted it to grow low and busky, but if I wanted a tall plant I would bet it grow. A specimen six Set bigh, in good condition must be a fine ornament to the sitting-room, and I would much prefer it to a smaller specimen.

Characteronogent—Tuberose bulbs bloom but once with as at the North; therefore, a bulb which has produced flowers is of no value except for purposes of propagation. This plant comes from the South, and our summers are not long and warm enough to mature bulbs perfectly; therefore, we often fall to grow young bulbs satisfactorily. Occasionally, the Harristi Life blooms well a second season, but it cannot be depended on to do so; therefore, I always advise getting fresh, strong bulbs each fall for forcing.

"Plosal."—This correspondent says that a Lilac planted two years ago has failed to bloom, and fails to understand why, it having been taken from a blooming plant. Of causes, it is impossible for me to say why the young plant has not bloomed. It may have been so small that it has not bloomed. It may have been so small that it has not yet attained the necessary ago. Other conditions may have operated against it. I have frequently known Lilacs to wait years after transplanting before giving one flower, and it was not possible to tell the reason; but in every case they flowered well after "they got at it."

R. R. S.—If you want a dozen good plants for your bay window, I would advice Gernatum Sourceie de Mirande, white and rose; W. C. Bryant, dack, velvety scarlet; Pantine Lacen, white, and Mrs. Moore, white, with plank eye; Abadileas Pink Perfection, Boule de Neige, white, and Crusader, crimson, and Edipee, with beautifully variegated fellage. One Rose Geranium, for ragrance, Begenia rashra, Calla Ætheyles, Ackarda moisvecieus, and an English Ivy. These are all quite common plants, but they are beautiful, and easily graven, and when properly cared for they give flowers throughout the entire winter.

M. M. R. wants to grow flowers in the house, but says that her rooms are heated with coal, and that gas is used. Has only east windows. Few flowers will do well under these conditions, but there are some plants which will, and "green things growing" are a delight to the eye and mind in our long windows. The Aspidiera will flourish where most plants would die. So will Pleus dustines. Among the Palmstry Pleus reclicate, and Lebents Borbowin. I think, perhaps, Primata Obeconica would bloom for you. Try it.

L. M. L.—The Horn is one of those plants which seem intent on taking their own time. They bloom "when they get ready," not before. When they become fully evaluabled they usually bloom, but it often takes years for them to reach this point. I know of no way in which they can be hearried along. Treat them well, and have patience. Seedling Carnations should be grown in pots suited to the size of the plants, and keep as read as possible through the winter. Shower frequently to keep the red spider down, and apply an infinition of Suipho-Tokacon Scap about once a week to prevent ravages of the aphis—a pest very destructive to the Carnation. Chinose Hibbsens can be grown from send or cutting—the latter preferable.

Our Straschmen—(i) In fitting up a greenhouse I would have benches along the sides, and shelves at the windows. In the center I would use troo stands or wire ones. These admit of a pretter arrangement of plants than that tables. If the water can drip into basement ulthout hydoring anything there, I would have the foor made or sides, and a half-inch apart. This will allow all surplus water to drain off. For amount of radiating surface required, get size of room to be heated—multiplying sides, each, and height together—and then find out the number of square feet of glasses sides, each sand roof—nod then write to some good heater company for an estimate.

Mas. E. F. McCanna. Feres are somewhat difficult to grow well in the living room, because of the dry aimosphere which generally prevails there. But if you take pains to keep water evaporating on the stove or register, and give fresh air dully, some varieties can be grown quite satisfactorily in the parior or siting-room. A soit of leafmoid mixed with a little losen and sand is best. Ireain the pots well, and give emough water to keep the soft moist all through, and all the time. Keep in shade. No Fern with which I am acquainted does as well in sun as out of it. The best varieties for house culture are Adiantum exceptants. Peris breasts and Purppers. Most of the Adiantum are too delicate for culture outside a greenhouse or conservatory, therefore the amatisur would do well not to alternpt to grow them.

Mas. W. F. B.—Analous do best in a self of peat and loam, with some sharp sand. But care must be taken that the soil is whodly free from lime. These plants often drop their leaves because they get too much water. This can be largely remedied by providing good drainage. They also drop their leaves because they do not get water enough. They have very fire roots, and these make a compact mass is the center of the poil, and unless under is given liberally it often falls to penetrate the soil where it is needed most. It is a good plan to have the self kneer in the center of the poil than at the sides, so that the water will run in about the base of the plant, rather than away from it. It is also a good plan to run a fine wire or knitting-needle through the half of roots to make sure that the water has a chance to penetrate it.

has a chance to penetrace II.

Max, T. G. S.—If you have no cellar to winter your Fuchelas In, I would advise you to put them in a room free frost frost, but rather cool, and water very sparingly. The absence of warmth and water will have a tendency to keep them domaint. If you must keep them in the room with your other plants, set them away from the light, and water very slightly. Perhaps the leaves will full, but that doesn't matter so long as the stalk remains plump and green. Very likely, though, the plants will insist on growing some, in spite of your efforts to prevent E. In this case alm to keep them growing as sheely as possible. In February re-pet them, and cut back at least half. Then place in the window and give plenty of water, and they will soon make new growth. But they will not give such sitning growth, or as many flowers as plants which have been kept entirely domain during the winter.

THE CHARMING MEXICAN PRIMITORE is the Grandest of all New Plants. It is strictly a perpetual bloomer, as it is in dower at all times of the year, a good specimen showing always from ten to thirty hirge successful bloomers, about three inches across, of a beautiful, hright, clear pink color, veitsed with sender and with a white center. The superb color, combined with alry grace and beautiful form, goes to make a dower which is in beauty perfection itself. Each blossom keeps perfect many days before fading, and when it drops, others are out to take its place, and this succession of beauty is continued from one year's ond to snother. The plant is a free grower, succeeding in any sold or situation. As a window plant it combines great hardiness and ease of culture with unsurpassed beauty and delicate loveliaces, and is truly a plant which has no superior. In the open ground its grows freely and blooms profusely all summer, and, in fact, until winter is upon it. Early frosts do not injure it, and it blooms on until freedom of bloom, and unsurpassed beauty, both in culor and hardiness, case of culture, perpetual freedom of bloom, and unsurpassed beauty, both in culor and hardiness, case of culture. Perpetual freedom of bloom, and unsurpassed beauty, both in culor and hardiness, case of culture. Perpetual freedom of bloom, and unsurpassed beauty, both in culor and hardiness, case of culture. Perpetual freedom of bloom, and unsurpassed beauty, both in culor and hardiness, case of culture is the content of the perfect of

NEW PEACOCK PANSY. A Pansy of superb and varied color, showing the giorious and luminous strain of pansy every seen. SEEB PER PACKET, 55 CENTS.

SPECIAL OFFER For 60 cts. we will send by mail one plant each of Marican Primross, Manettia Also the Following Extra Choice Collections by Mail Postpaid.

Extra choice mixed Gladicius, flowering bulbs. 25: 5 Grand Lilies, 5 sorts named, including Auratum. 50: 5 Grand Caett, different sorts named. 50: 5 Grand Lilies, 5 sorts named, including Auratum. 50: 5 Grand Lilies, 5 sorts named, including Auratum. 50: 5 Grand Lilies, 5 sorts named, including Auratum. 50: 5 Grand Lilies, 5 sorts named, including Auratum. 50: 5 Grand Lilies, 5 sorts named, including Auratum. 50: 5 Grand Lilies, 5 sorts named, including Auratum. 50: 5 Grand Caett, different sorts named, including Auratum. 50: 5 Grand Caett, different sorts named. 5 Grand Caett, d

A GREAT OFFER. For only $2.00 we will send postpaid all the collections, Primrose, Manettia and AGREAT OFFER. For only $2.00 we will send postpaid all the collections, Primrose, Manettia and OUR BRONZE BLUE GATALOGUE (A superposition of the postpaid all the collections, Primrose, Manettia and OUR BRONZE BLUE GATALOGUE (A superposition of an intercome blue) of FLOWER and RARE PRUITS, is the most beautiful and complete ever issued. By ngs. has the Line, FLANTS and RARE PRUITS, is the most beautiful and complete ever issued. By ngs. has the line of the part in present and the property of the property of the property of the property of the linest standard warieties and novelties in Flower and Vegetable Beeds, Fulbs and France. We offer the faces that the first standard warieties and novelties in Flower, all summer Raspberry, Water Brachell, Dental Rance, School, Bowerform, Bronze, Moscolies, Berlin, New Forney, Marier Brachell, Trailing Queen Fuchia, Bwarf Orange, Moscolies, This MAGNIFICENT CATALOGUE WILL, BD School, College of the Grand Novellies. This MAGNIFICENT CATALOGUE WILL, BD School, College of the MAY-FERED. Or for only 20 etc. we will send CATALOGUE WILL, BD School, Catalogue William of the MAY-FERED. Or for only 20 etc. we will send CATALOGUE, Sample Copy of the MAY-FERED. Or for only 20 etc. we will send CATALOGUE, Sample Copy of the MAY-FLOWER and a packet of PEACOCK FANST SEED. We wantagetub in every fown to take subscribers for our beautiful Monthly Horitcultural Paper, THE MAY FLOWER, 50cc, per year. Large Colored Plate with every number. Liberal premiums. Sample copy free. Address

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, Queens Co., N. Y.

S MOST FLOWER LOVERS KNOW, we have been for years A the largest Rose Growers in America. We sell many plants to Dealers, but more to customers direct. Old customers are already old friends. To all others, the amount we do, gives the best guarantee of the way we do it. There is no near or far in our business. Flower lovers in California or New Jersey can alike enjoy the advantages of dealing directly at headquarters.

The simple question is, do gramman and you love flowers? If so, you can get ours for the Wherever the mall goes Our ROSE GUIDE and how to keep what you our success with flowers.

price of the other kinds. our Roses go and bloom. CATALOGUE will tell you buy, and how to repeat It is made for plain people to understand and enjoy. OWN ROOTS. It is not pad nooning the state of the flowers also; from the favorite of your childhood to the novelty of the hour, almost everything-except trash and the wonderful wonders which disappoint and disgust. We would like to make the acquaintance of every flower lover in America, and offer our Guide as above, by way of introduction, FREE for the asking only.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., West Grove, Pa.

ROSE GROWERS AND SEEDSMEN.

D FOR

PREE by mail, comprising the following lists: ROBES—Gen. Jacqueminot, Hermosa, Marie Lambert, Ciethilde Soupert, Papa Gontier. GERANIUMS—White Swan, J. P. Kirtland, Bruantli, Mons. Diller and Burkel.

Dites and Perle.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS—Leopard, Clara Rieman, Mrs. G. D.
Coleman, Gloriosum and Fair Maid of Guernsey.

BEGONIAS—Diadems, Clementina, Alba Pieta, Berthe Chatenurocher and Few Brop.

Or we offer 10 fine named Hybrid Perpetual, and 10 named everblooming Roses for $1.00. Our selection free by mail. Send name and we will mail you our new cutalogue of 1822, with latest novelties of Roses, Geraniums, Chrysanthemums, Begonias and Carnations at bottom prices.

E. BONNER & CO.,

Maple Grove Greenhouses. XENIA, OHIO.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS. SPRING, 1892. Send for Descriptive activities to WILLIAM G. MCTEAR, Princeton, N. J. SEE Set. 2 patts. Flower, 140c., 12 patts. Frogetable, Princeton, N. J. SEE Set. 2 limiting, 50c., 10 conditions, 160c., 160c., Ass.

Many a life has been lost ecause of the taste of codver oil.

If Scott's Emulsion did othing more than take that aste away, it would save the ves of some at least of those hat put off too long the neans of recovery.

It does more. It is halfligested already. It slips hrough the stomach as if by tealth. It goes to make trength when cod-liver oil vould be a burden.

Scorr & Bowse, Chemista, 130 South 5th Avenue, low York. Your druggest keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-lever I—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Ascarded highest honors at Philistelpiain 1876 Meibourne 1
Sarith 1877 Frankfort 1
Paris 1878 Amsterdam 1
And schereter also exhibited.

A package of ALL-COCK'S CORN SHIRLDS or a sample of ALL-COCK'S BUNION SHIELDS will be sent, prepaid, on receipt of Ten Cents.

They are easily ap-plied, give immediate relief, afford absolute comfort, and are the best, surest, cleanest and cheapest remedy for corns and bunions ever

BUNION produced.

The Com Shields are made large and small. In ordering, state also wanted.

FLDS. 274 Canal Street, New York

Natural curied, feather light, lifelike, benotiful, from $1.00 up. WAVY HAIR SWITCHES, long, convent Hair, from $3.00 up. $00.00 elsewhere.

COCOANUT BALM.

e only Complexion Beautifier endorsed by eminent reletans. Makes the skin as fair and soft as a child's ce. 81.00 per box. All Tollet Preparations of Celebrated PARFUMERIE MONTE CHRISTO. All DYES ALL SHADES, A SPECIALTY, Send free pampidet " How to be Beautiful."

West Fourteenth St., New York.

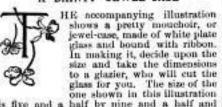

ORN SALVE Recept the in any series of the salve series of the salv

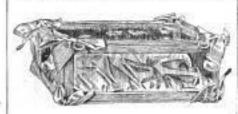

THE PIANO OR OR GAN
aded by the Prench Method. It cordsts of a full-size keyboard, the processive being marked, and accompanionerin to t for songe, all easily four-red in an hora. Frien date, prepaid, 80.00. F. A. CONSTANTIAE, forest and Maker, No. 2047 North 7th St., Philiadulphia, Fu.

A DAINTY JEWEL-CASE

one shown in this illustration is five and a half by nine and a half and three inches deep. Take the piece of glass which is to act as the lid (the bottom piece of glass and the top are the same) to an engraver and have him cut your initials upon the lid, engraving being preferable to painting, as it will not lose its luster, but always look bright and neat. Bind all the edges very tightly, sewing neatly at the corners, using No. 5 ribbon, either satin or gros grain, according to taste. Sew the four sides together, joining the four corners of the bottom to the sides, and in putting on the lid sew only the two ends together very tightly as these stitches act as hinges. Make a pad the size of the bottom piece of glass of a thin layer of cotton, using smelet powder to perfume it; take a quarter of a yard of China silk and sew on to the pad of cotton, sewing the silk loosely so as to have a pretty and graceful effect; the silk should be put on plain on the bottom of the pad. Make bows for the four top-ends of the lid, so as to cover where the corners have been joined together. A pretty finish is secured by putting four smaller bows on the bottom of the box to hide where the corners have been joined. Take two brass rings and crochet them over with button-hole silk the same shade as your ribbon, and sew these rings on each end of the lid to raise it by. Seven yards of ribbon were used to make the case described.

SOME THINGS WORTH REMEMBERING

Light travels 188,800 miles in a second.

The average life of a coin is twenty-five

There are over 6,000 known languages and Fifty million pins are made every day in Statistics show that married men live longer than bachelors.

Ten men can be arranged to march in single

The average duration of human life is thirty-three years, file 3,628,000 ways.

Every year 36,792,000 births occur; 100,800 each day and 70 each minute.

One-quarter of the people born die before the age of six; one-half before sixteen.

The number of lighthouses in the world has quadrupled during the last fifty years.

The number of punpers in London, England, is estimated at from 95,000 to 105,000.

It is estimated that there are 25,000 women in America who possess medical diplomas.

The total number of newspapers published in the world at present is said to be in excess

On an average there are 106 boys born to every 100 girls; but more boys die in infancy than girls.

A cremated body leaves a residuum of only eight ounces; all besides is restored to the guseous elements.

There are about 99,800 Sunday-schools in s; 8,048,4 1,108,265 teachers.

The mean annual temperature of the earth is fifty degrees Fahrenheit; the average min-fall is thirty-six inches.

The total population of the earth is esti-mated at 1.483,000 000, of which 35,639,835 die yearly, 97,700 daily and 67 every minute.

During heavy gales the waves of the Atlan-tic Ocean are from twenty-four to thirty-six feet high, half above and half below the mean level of the sea. This increases to forty-five feet in a raging storm.

The sun gives 600,000 times as much light as the moon; 7,000,000,000 as much as the brightest star, and 36,000,000 as much as all the stars combined. In size the sun equals 1,300,000 earths, but owing to its smaller density its weight equals only 300,000 earths.

The average age at which men marry is 27.7 vears; the average age at which women marry is 25.5. Married women live two years longer than single women, although one woman in seventy dies in childbirth. February is the month in which the greatest number of births occur; June is which occur the fewest.

VAUGHAN'S GARDENING ILLUSTRATED

For 1892, is a beautiful book, of one hundred pages, elegantly printed with true photo-engravings and colored plates and plain, truthful and reasonable descriptions. It is a Mirror of American Horticulture to date, and with less brag and exaggemation to the square inch than most books of this Rind. We show that in one order, from under one roof, we furnish all Seeds, Plants, Bulles and Gardening Helps, a combination not possible elsewhere. We offer completeness in every department and have a record in each; famous Chicago Market Vegetables, Grand Chicago Parks Bedding Panstes and Lawn Seed 16 Manmoth Greenhouses with all Roses, Chrysanthemans, Palms—new or old, from home of abroad.

SE IT TELLS THE WHOLE STORY -GO

THE LLS THE WHOLE STORY CA

for the Garden, Lawn and Farm, and is a work of art and of FACTS.

The book tells you our plans for Horticulture at the World's Fair of '86, and we cordinly and carnestly invite every flower lover to register in our Columbian Directory. You willnot regret it. John Thorpe says issu will advance American Horticulture 25 yrs.)

THE To record every friend of Horticulture for our World's Fair Edition of 1895, we will mail

OFFER 5 GRAND SPECIALTIES.

Sweet Pea Blanche Ferry, large pink and white, it days carties than any other; profuse bloomer on long stems; very sweet. Pansy Velvet Gem, nearer red than any other l'ansy; many reddish shades in its variations. Nasturtium Aurora, yellow with carmine and purple; a distinct novelty. Mignonette, Giant Galatele: very handsome flowers with thick heavy spikes. Carnation Margaret, the greatest novelty, flowering in 12 to 15 weeks from seed; full double flowers in all the shades of this fewering flower.

These five and our 18ct Book: "Gardening Illustrated," with cover illustration of flower girl in ten colors and gold, FOR ONLY age., loss than half price. We make this ofter only to secure your address as above. Come with us now, Seed Chalogue abone, free, MENTRON TRIS PAIPSE.

VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE Mashington Bireet CHICAGO

FARMER THE STRAWBERRY.

This is the title of a little book written by our L. J. Farmer, who has spent his life among strawberries. It will be an accurate guide for beginners in all the details; giving directions in choice of soil, location, varieties, setting out, after culture, manuring, whiter protection, spring cure, picking, markeding, etc. A record of actual experience; much better to the novice than a but of theories. Price, 25 cents, nestpoid. Jerry Heagerty, "The Strawberry King of Gewego Co.," says:—"I know of no man better versed in the theory and practice of Strawberry Culture than Mr. Jarmer of Pulaski." We send our beautiful new Catalogue 31.35 FOR 25 CENTS, Strawberry for 10 cents. Those who order the book will get plants and estalogue free, if they name this paper.

EF The first person in each state who sends 25 cents for

All-The first person in each state who sends 25 cents for the above, will get 12 Westbrook Strawberry plants (price, 81) free as a premium for promptness. Speak quick. Say when to send plants. Catalogue alone free. Address

MAPLEWOOD FRUIT FARM, Pulaski, Oswego Co., N. Y.

SEEDS. LOVELY FLOWERS. 10 Trini Packets FREE.
Bell's Fancy German Asters, 10 doise sens nived; Summer Wave Candyteft, irret; todalen Wave Callingsia, effective and popular; White Angels Trumpet, Bhl.
Violed Bash Moreing Silegay, they; New Ghant Nicothiana, a grand giant: Heanty of The Burner's Marriagelis, this; Striped Sicanty Pappy, the grandest; Grandifform Platycedon, our best permetal; Buckets of Edinburg Helman, thanks, red and broken. One parkings such of above flower seeds worth ELO, presented
FREE to every purchases of our "Ladies Flaval Bax," which contains one packet seed of Creary's New Large Flowgring Cannon; new Early Moon Flower; Mammorch Incarnate Passion Flower; Benutiful Rome Sweet Penn; and 2 bulks of Excelsion Pennt Tuberouse. The bas is mailed with our beautiful Floral Annual, to introduce or support Seeds, for only 10 cents. Our Flower Seeds mixed, 10 cis. Address. J. J. BELL. Windows, N. Y.

YOUR DRESS PATTERNS

Every subscriber for 1892 to Arthur's New Home Magazine, Illustrated, will receive $3.00 worth of McCall's Glove-fitting patterns free. McCall & Co. want to introduce their new patterns; we want to increase the circulation of our magazine. make an agreement to help each other and the result is our subscribers get the greatest offer ever made by a magazine. New subscribers get three months free. No advance in price; still only $1.50 a year. Full particulars in January number, sent postpaid (including a pattern order, worth 25 cents), for five two-cent stamps, Address

THE ARTHUR PUBLISHING COMPANY,

LOCK BOX 913.

PHILADELPHIA.

OVERMAN'S SPECIFIC OXYGEN

A Medicated Oxygen Hone Treatment for Diseases of HOAG, Throat and Links.

Separate Specifics for Catarrh and Hay Fever.

It Softens Tubercles. Quiets Coupts, Heals the Lungs and Purifies the Blood, and Relieves Hay Fever, Brocchilis, Asthma, Nasai Catarrh, La

Grippe, Catarrhai Deatress and Nervous Prostration.

A REMEDY PRESCRIBED BY PHYSICIANS.

Microsoft Oxygen FREE. Depositories: Onana, Net, Locarnia, Ky.

The SPECIFIC OXYGEN CO., Nashville, Tenn.

MARION HARLAND and other bright women, for the Elegent ladies have elegant surroundings. The glass of their mirrors and bottles sparkle, the silver frames of their mirrors and brushes glisten and the gold stoppers of jewel boxes and performe bottles are bright always. With what? Why, with Stilboma-a chemically prepared chamois which burnishes polished surfaces, and never scratches them.

A large sample of Stilborna will be sent to any one who will intertion where this advertisement was soon and inclose six cents in stamps to The Champiage di Burne Co., Cleveland, O.

"Once tried, Used Always."

"Confound those

Boyll They are Always asking for More' since the Board introduced VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA."

PERFECTLY PURE.

VAN HOUTEN'S PATENT PROCESS

erreason by 10 legs cases, the solubility of the finsh-forming elements, making of the coors been an stinlly digreted, delic ing and stimulating drink, readily assimilated even by the most delicate. #g-Hnot obtainable from your grocer, enclose 25 cts, to atthey Yar Harrier & Zoor. 188 Reads Street, New York, or 65 Walash Are.

Chicago, and a cen centulating enough for 25 to 46 caps will be mailed. Monifor this gradient flow. Prepared only by the formation.
VAN HOUTEN & ZOON, Weeth, Helland.

The Standard Cocoa of the World,

BUY THE BEST. SEELY'S CELEBRATED

Flavoring Extracts. VANILLA, LEMON,

And Asserted Flavors.

DON'T rain your Cake, Ice-Cream and Pastry by using poor extracts. SEELY'S have shood the test for twentynine wears.

Ask your grocer for them. Sample by mail on receipt of SEELY MFG. CO. Detroit, Mich.

HOUSE FURNISHINGS.

THRIPTY AND PROGRESSIVE HOUSEKEEPERS who accessedly approxime all articles of housekeeping which educh and make therefold their homes, are condially invited to injulie into the excellent merits of the following Patented Textile Fabrics, which are kept by fore-class Bry Goods and Furniture Stores throughout the United States and Canada:

KNITTED FILLED MATTRESSES and FILLOWS,
" MATTRESS PADS,
" STAIR PADS,

TABLE PADDING.

FILLING FOR CHURCH CUSHIONS.

Heing the only fabrics of their kind ever manufac-tured. Ther are quitted into pockets by a knitted pro-cess, and will not mat, ser any part become displaced: retaining all the natural softness of the fibre, as there is no twist in the filling.

The above have attained the leading position for high and practical nearit in first-class stores wherever introduced.

KNITTED MATTRESS CO., Canton Junction, Mass.

CHREWSBURY Tomatoke Tchup

"To gild refined gold, to paint the fily, to throw perfume on the violet," or to improve on Shrewsbury Tomatoketchup is a wasteful and ridiculous excess.

E:C. Harard & New York York

PERFECTION CARE TINE, hour homess. Cakes removed without breaking, Strante paying business for good agrees. Sample Sec Mo. Recognises Mrs. Co., Rach, N.Y.

USEFUL"THINGS WORTH KNOWING

OFTEN it is the stray short hint or sugges-tion that we read somewhere which proves a mountain of help at some critical time, and the subjoined little helps have been gathered and put together in the liope that they may be of practical use to some one of the Journal readers.

A GOOD WASHING FLUID

Dissolve one pound of sal-soda and balf a pound of lime in five quarts of water, and boil for a few minutes, stirring occasionally. Between from the fire, and allow it to settle; pour off the clear liquid into a stone jar, and cork for use. Half a tescupful of this fluid added to a half boiler of boiling water on wash days will save a great deal of labor.

HOW TO PACK SILVER

WHEN putting away silver that is not to be used for a considerable time, place it in an air-tight case, with a good-sized piece of camphor,

TAKING DOWN THE STOVE

IN taking down the stove, if any soot should full upon the carpet or rug, cover quickly with dry salt before sweeping, and not a mark will be left.

HOW TO RELIEVE MIGHT-SWEATS

N IGHT-SWEATS may be arrested by sponging the body at night with very hot water. It is a great help also toward toning up the skin to rub the body briskly in the morning with a bathing towel wrung out of salt water; the salt enters the pores and stimulates the skin to healthy action.

A TONIC FOR THE HAIR

A GOOD tonic for the hair is of salt water, a tesspoonful of salt to a half-pint of water, applied to the hair two or three times a week. The effect at the end of a month will be surprising.

TO MAKE A MUSTARD PLASTER

FOR young children:—Mix one tenspoonful of mustard and three of wheat flour with water to the consistency of a stiff batter, and apply between soft mustin cloths. For adults:—One part of mustard and two of flour.

THE MEDICINAL USE OF EGGS

THE MEDICINAL USE OF EGGS

IT may not be generally known that there is nothing more soothing for either a burn or a scald than the white of an egg. It is contact with the air which makes a burn so painful, and the egg acts as a varnish, and excludes the air completely, and also prevents inflammation. An egg beaten up lightly, with or without a little sugar, is a good remedy in cases of dysentery and diarrheat; it tends by its emollient qualities to lessen the inflammation, and by forming a transient costing for the stomach and intestines gives those organs a chance to rest until nature shall have assumed her healthful away over the diseased body. Two, or at the most three, eggs a day would be all that would be required in ordinary cases, and since the egg is not only medicion but food, the lighter the diet otherwise, and the quieter the patient is kept, the more rapid will be recovery.

HOW TO ALLAY HEMORRHAGES

HOW TO ALLAY BENOMBRAGES

I EMORRHAGES from the nose may be stopped by snuffing salt and water, or vinegar and water, up the nose, by raising the arms above the head, by applying fee to the back of the neck, and by putting absorbent cotton or lint in the nostribs. Hemorrhages from the lungs may be alleviated by placing the patient in bed in a sitting position, and giving tenspoonful doses of salt and vinegar every fifteen minutes. In both cases strive to ollay the patient's fear until the arrival of the physician.

TO TIGHTEN CANE-SEAT CHAIRS

TURN up the chair-bottom and wash the L cane-work thoroughly with soapy water and a soft cloth. Let it dry in the air, and it will be firm as when new, provided the cane has not been broken.

SIMPLE REMEDY FOR DYSPEPSIA.

ONE tenspoonful of flaxseed taken just before each meal and at bed-time, and a half-tenspoonful of celery-seed taken after each meal and at bed-time. The flaxseed should be rubbed in a dry cloth to free them from dest. They may be small owned whele should be rubbed in a dry cloth to free them from dust. They may be swallowed whole, with enough water sprinkled over them to dampen, or chewed before swallowing; the latter is preferable; as they have a rich, mutty flavor, the taste is not unpleasant. They may be taken an hour or two or immediately before meals and just before retiring. Any time after meals take the celery-seed, either clewing or swallowing whole, and a few minutes after the flaxweed at night. For thin persons, an excellent addition is a tablespoonful of pure giveerine taken three times a day, after or with the celery-seed. This is firsh-producing. producing.

REMEDY FOR CHAPPED HANDS

WHEN doing housework, if your hands become chapped or red, mix corn meel and vinegar into a stiff paste and apply to the hands two or three times a day, after washing them in bot water, then let them dry without wiping, and rub with glycerine. At night use cold cream, and wear gloves.

Look Around

and see the women who are using Pearline. It's easy to pick them out. They're brighter, fresher, more cheerful than the women who have spent twice as much time in the rub, rub, rub, of the old way. Why shouldn't they be? Washing with Pearline is easy.

And look at the clothes that are washed with Pearline. They're brighter, and fresher, They haven't been rubbed to pieces on the washboard. They may be old, but they don't show it. For clothes washed with Pearline last longer.

Beware "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S you an imitation, be honest—send if back, 317 JAMES PYLE, New York.

ENGLISH DECORATED Dirmer Set, No. 45, 112 Pieces.

ENGLISH PORCELAIN

Gold Band Dinner Set, No. 250, 106 Pieces, Decorated in Three Modest Natural Colors.

Premium with an order of $20.00.

Or, packed and delivered at depot for $9.00

Cash.

Or, packed and delivered at depot for $9.00

Cash.

We have been boston direct with consumers. We also carry a large stock and sell at the lowest possible Cash-prices Dinner and Coffee. China and Cockey, and do the largest Ten and Coffee havings in Boston direct with consumers. We also carry a large stock and sell at the lowest possible Cash-prices Dinner and Ten Sets, Silver-pinted Ware. Lamps, also Lace Certains and The Libera four own importation. To those who take the time and troubts to get up Clubs for Table Libera four own importation. To those who take the time and troubts to get up Clubs for take for the genory invested and get a premium, ind you get goods that are direct from the IMPORTERS. If you but Ten and Coffee from your grover you say three or four profits and get a profit of 10 per cent. The moral is plain, but from first heat the ten bought from the result grover showed a profit of 10 per cent. The moral is plain, but from first heat the ten bought from the real greecer showed a profit of 10 per cent. The moral is plain, but from first heat the ten bought from the real greecer showed a profit of 10 per cent. The moral is plain, but from first heat the ten bought from the real greecer showed a profit of 10 per cent. The moral is plain, but from first heat the ten out the ten of the profit of 10 per cent. The moral is plain, but from first heat of the largest.

We have been doing hadrowers, Lamps, etc., announced to $65,000 in 100, acid from our Ten and Coffee sales. Our illustrated Price and Premium Liet tells the whole story. We like to mail it to all the first it is east you nothing and will interest you, 134 pages.

THE LONDON TEA CO., 811 Washington Street, Boston.

PILLSBURY'S BEST" FLOUR

Makes More Bread Makes Whiter Bread Makes Better Bread

THAN ANY OTHER FLOUR MANUFACTURED.

For Sale by all First-class Grocers.

ICIOUS DESSERTS INSTANTLY.

Dissolve this package of IMPERIAL TABLE JELLY in a pint of hot water, pour into a mould, and when cool you will have a quart of DELICIOUS JELLY.

MPERIAL CREAM DESSERT. BICH and DESSERT. BELIGATE. Made by adding a pint of boiling milk to contents of this can. OFFICE

These are two TABLE DELICACIES made quickly and without trouble. If you fail to find either with your grocer, send 15c. (to pay postage) for full-sized package of JELLY or CREAM DESSERT. Various Flavors.

E. C. RICH CO., LTD. 160 & 182 FRANKLIN ST., NEW YORK,

How to Make a Fortune

WANTED—Science: who can easily make twenty-five to seventy-five dollars per week, selling the Celebrated * Pinkes Ciothes Line." or the Famous "Maccomber Fountain Ink Eraser"—Putente recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory. The Pinless Cedres Line is the only line ever invented that holds riothes without plus—a perfect success. The Macomber Fountain Ink braser is entirely new will crase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of Sec. will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for gi, with circulars, price-tiats and terms. Secure your territory at once. Address THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 128 Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.

PRINTING Small Newspaper
Type-setting season Type-season Type-season Type-season Type-

Type-setting easy, printed rules. Food twostamps for entalegue of presses, type rards, etc., f. N.E.S.E.Y. &. CO., to factory, i. Meriden, Connecticut

No tools required. Only a hammer needed to drive and clinch them easily and quickly; leaving the clinch absolutely smooth. Requiring no hole to be made in the leather nor burr for the Rivers. They are STROMG, 1995M and SURASLE. Millions now in use. All lengths, uniform or assected, put up in boxes. Ask your dealer for them, or write to the nearest hardware jobber for agency.

MANUFACTERED BY

JUDSON L. THOMSON MFC. CO.,
Waltham, Mass. WANTED, Several General Agents to travel and appeals been arrebe on our publications. Most have expectence, shillly and best references. R. H. WOODWARD & CO., Baltimore, Md.

MEND YOUR OWN HARNESS

CLINCH RIVETS.

WITH

THOMSON'S

SLOTTED

TO ALL CORRESPONDENTS:—Any question from our readers of help or interest to women will be cherylally answered in this Department.

But please bear in united? Write your questions plainly and briefly. Don't use unnecessary words; editors are busp persons.

The right to answer or reject any question is reserved by the Editor.

Asswers connect be provided for any special turns. They will be given as quickly after receipt as possible. All correspondence should be accompanied by full name and address, not for publication, but for reference.

L. N .- Mourning stationery is never out of style INQUIRER-Belva Lockwood is in her slaty-third Expectaty—"To-morrow will be Wednesday" is a correct expression.

Ext.ics - "Beauty sleep" is the sleep that one gets before midnight.

Taruma-No call is necessary in acknowledgment of an afternoon tea.

PERKERILL—A rose jar may properly be placed in my room in the bouse.

 ${\rm Localinn}-{\rm Black}$  or tan-colored gloves may be worn with a dress of any color.

INABELIA - Lotteries are illegal, no matter for what surpose they may be held.

SISTER-Mark your table napkins in one corner with embroidered initials an inch long.

Mrs. R.—A lady should rise to greet a gentleman, or to bid him good-bye in her own house.  $N_{\rm KLLE}-Guests$  at a large reception do not say good-bye to the hostess, they quietly withdraw,

MAUD-In spite of the dress reformers, we maintain that a well-fitting curses never bort any one. B. M. C.—There is a branch of the "Salvation Army" in the United States, with headquarters in New York City.

IONORANCE.—The World's Fair at Chicago will open on May 1st, 1861, and close on October 30th of the same BUNKER HILL-The precious stone under whose in-fluence those born in June are supposed to be is the again.

SISTEX.—The national flower of England is the rose; of France the tily; of Scotland the thistie; and of Ireland the shamrock.

SETER-The City of Paris and the City of New York are called "I win ships" because they are built as nearly alike as possible.

PATTY—Goethe is pronounced as though spelled Galrisch, with the account on the last syllabile; portifire as though spelled port-years.

A.'M. G.—The address and the conclusion of a letter, or any other document, as well as the date, should have a comma between every item.

Cona.—The word "syggignocism" means sympathetic knowledge. The word was coined by Dr. Hammond in connection with mind-reading.

Wapow's Boy.—There is no institution of any sort to which admission may be secured by the presentation of a million cancelled postage stamps.

X. Y. Z.—We cannot give addresses in this column. Women who are not of the average size usually obtain most comfort by having their corrects made to order. Down East—A single woman, or a married woman, who is legally the head of a household is entitled to the same privileges as a man under the Homestead Act.

Jackson—Bryn Mawr College is located at Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania. It is said to have the largest and best-equipped symmetrim of any woman's college in this country.

Mas. G. M.—Information regarding the Home Study Work of University Extension may be obtained from the General Secretary, George Henderson, 1922 Ches-nut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A. B. Z.—The best way to have superfluous hair re-moved is to have it done by a surgeon with an electric needle. Preparations for the removal of such hair are, as a rule, dangerous and injurious.

UNRAPPY GREE—If you have a large stomach, have a slight full ness in the backs of your skirts, just below the wast line, and strive as much as pessible to sland erect, with your chest expanded and stomach drawn in.

PRINTLEXED—Finger boxis should be filled only half full with water; a thin sites of lemon or a fragrant leaf of some sort may be laid upon the surface. The bowle should rest upon a plate covered with a dainty dolly of some sort.

S.—The old superstition that the stars and planets affected the lives of those born under their ascendency and exerted a malign or benean influence over them has no foundation. A marks destiny depends upon the character which be inherits and develops.

Mass H.—A hardward and wife are always lavited together to any entertainment which includes men and someon. To invite one without the other to your reception would be an act of very ill breeding, and one that we would not advise you to be guilty of.

M. F.—Black silk may be cleaned by brushing horoughly with a soft brush, and sponging with water a which an old pair of black kid gloves have been edled. Sponge on the right side, spread out smoothly a the wrong, and iron with a not too hot iron.

QCERY—If you intend to decline a disner invitation, to so at as early a date as possible, and if you necess to militing previous your being on hand at the appointed time. In going in to dinner the host leafs the way to the dining room with the most distinguished lady goest upon his arm.

COUNTRY GERL.—Reduce your weight by taking plenty of in and outdoor exercise and by avoiding all swort and starging articles of food. Lend an active, energetic life and you will have little time to worry ever your weight, which is probably just the proper one for a person of your begin and build.

I ground street The lady should precede the gentlemant in going up stairs and follow him going down. She should stair a carriage first and leave it fact. She should precede him going into the house and follow him going out. The idea being that he shall always be where he can best protect and assist her.

HAV RIDGE-Only intimate friends should be invited to a christening. If the christening takes place in the morning serve a light luncheon; if in the afternoon a light tea. The budy should not be brought down stairs until everything is in readiness, and should be sent back to the nursery before refreshments are served.

D. G.—Authorities differ as to whether the knife and fork should be held in the hand or laid spon the plans when if is passed for a second helping. At take a good and a safe rule is always to do that which will attract the least attention, and as for as possible to conform to the castems of the people whom you are visiting.

ANNIE-When your beaves are perfectly firy put them in your rose for, sprinkling a little salt on each layer. Every two days are no put in a tenspoonful of alreaded. Keep your jar closed lightly until it is well filled with the leaves, them you may retrieve the manade enters and the color will circulate through the room.

DELAWARE—The price for a seal for the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Pair has been awarded. The design represents the flarship of Colombra. Re-ments it is the out of arms of the United States repre-senting formity, and the launch weath which is emblematic of success. There is a star for every listy RESECTA-Beware of advertisements converning large stime of operatined money in the English Court of Chancery. Steel some do not exist, as the tourt has aften declared. The advertisers who claim that the ma locate such money for the brundle of American beits are ministly imprincipled persons whose interest reason upon the recent of a fire.

School, Gruz.—The newspaper clipping which you enclose contains an error. Under the Grugorian calisadar the centurial years are only long years, when they may be divided by 40. The year 1800 is not so divisable, and will not, therefore, be a long year.

INVALID—The strictly formal way would be to leave for Mr. and Mrs. Brown, Jr., one of your own and two of your husband's cards; for Mr. and Mrs. Brown, Sr., the same: for the widowed relative one of your cards and one of your busband's, and for the young indies the same. Hand your cards to the maid at the door, inquir-ing merely for "the indies."

M. D.—The best way to increase one's conversational power is to read good books and the daily papers; to listen to people who talk well, meantime forming equinous of your own, and formulating them in words of your own. A special set of books for this purpose could not be advised; general reading is more useful when you have this distinct purpose in view.

E. M. O.—A widow wears her veil at least one year, offener two; while elderly women, who are widowed, often wear their veils all their lives. The widow's cap is some slong as crape is. While liese is worn at the wrists and neck in the very deepest mourning. Second mourning is no longer in vogue; when crape is laid aside, all-black is worn until colors are assumed.

Innovance—In sending out cards to your friends, telling them of your arrival in the city, it is not necessary to send your hashand's card, nor should your husband's card to sent with those of yours, amounting an afternoon tea. Even if you are not acquainted with the gentleman you send him your card, and not your husband's, as a request for his presence at the tea.

Subschings.—The Society of the Daughters of the American Bevolution was organized a year or two ago in Washington, D. C. The object of the society is to secure and preserve the historical spots of America, and to perpetuate the heroic deeds of the men and women who added the Bevolution and created constitutional government. Mrs. Harrison is president-general of the society.

QUESTIONER—The wife of a physician should not have Mrs. Dr.—engraved upon her visiting-cards, nor should she sign herself Mrs. Dr.—. The card should be Mrs. William —, or Mrs. John ——as the case may be, and her signature always her Christian name, followed by her streament. In whiting to strangers and tradespeople it is often a good plan to write in the third person.

EDITTEEN—A dainty graduating dress would be one of white surah, trimmed with a fromce of chiffer, caught up at regular latervals with white rithers hows. The bodies could be a draped one, the reck in a short V, both back and frest draped with chiffer, and the sheeves full coies of chiffer, tied with white ribbons; wear white stippers and white undressed kid gloves. To your hair with white ribbon.

Anxious Inquinen—If as you say, you are very sarcastle in your speech, it is not difficult to discover why you cannot keep your friends. Sarcastle remarks are never "cate," but frequently very impertinent. As woman who is not beautible, but who is bright, considerate and thoughtful of other people, will undoubtedly gain and keep more friends than a handsome woman who is selfish and lacking in thought.

FRANKLIN-11 is proper to break bread in eating it; if, at the same time, you are eating jam or sweets, it may be put on the bit of bread with your knile, just as you do cheese, and the bread conveyed to your month by your fragers. This, of course, only applies to the eating together of bread and jain, or bread and preserves; for when they are served in any other way they would, of course, be eaten from a spoon.

Estea G.—If you should meet a genileman when you are out walking in the afternoon, and should give him permission to walk home with you, there would be no impropriety in your asking him to came in when the servant opens the door. If he should do so, tell the servant to inform your mother and present him to ber. Do not ask him to call again: If he wishes to do so he will ask your mother to allow him that privilege.

T.—A young girl may properly went her watch upon all occasions, except when in full evening drass. In almost all large schools for girls there are appor-tunities given pupils to continue their studies by giving lessons in any branches in which they may have them-selves become profedent. There would be no impro-priety in your sending your regards to a young man-to whom your mother should be addressing a friendly rate.

A. P. C.—The picture of "The Angelus" has been taken back to Paris. The picture was painted by Jean France's Millet in 1858. It represents a man and woman of the French peasant class similing in a field in which they have been at work. The time is smeet. In the distance is the spire of a church in which the angelus, or vesper-helt, is ringing. The peasants stand with folicet hands and bowed heads silently praying while the angelus rings.

Karsaa-In selecting a mane for your listle daughter remember that she will have to carry it with her to the end of her life; therefore try to choose one that will always be appropriate. We would suggest for your use such names as Agnes. Alice, Edith. Etten or Helen, Mary, Buth. Borothy, Eleanor, Etimbeth, Frances, Ger-trade, Katherine and Margaret. These are all good names, and oan never be other than a source of pleas-ure to their owners.

T. F. R.—All of the Rev. Lyman Reccher's sons became Congregational ministers; his first wife's name was Economa Foota. His cidest daughter, Cutherine, never married; the was betwitted to Professor Puber, of Yale, who was lost with the Albico off the coast of Prof. Calvin Stowe; Mary, Thomas Perkins, a prosper-sus lawyer of Hartford, Conn., and Insbella, John Hooker, of Hartford, Conn.

JOHANNA AND OTHERS-To keep the hands white I needed advise that you do not wear tight strling gloves, and that every night before retiring you give the hards a thorough bath in hot water and soap; areint them afterward with each cream, remembering that it is not the quantity you put on, but the amoust you mit in that will whiten and soften the hands. Never, at any time, shock your hands with cold water, but instead use that which has had the call! taken off of it.

ALIENA—A physician's visiting-cards should be engraved; and at he does not make social calls they should be left by ble wife with hers. In calling, she should leave two of her husband's cards and one of her own; her day he had being for the lady of the house, her husband's for the gestleman and the lady. If there are visitors on whom also wishes to make a call, the heaves one of her cards, and one of her husband's for each lady. In calling upon in the residents of her make a call, the leaves one of her cards, and one of his make a call are rules are observed, and also in calling upon unmarried ladies.

also in calling upon unmarried issues.

A SWIE E.—With such a bridal party as you describe, the buy salvers would enter the chards first, two by two, the betdescensis follow, and the belde enter on the arms of her brother. The bridegroom should be waiting for her at the after. In coming out the bridegroom escents the bride, the brother should walk with his mother, and saids usher bring out a bridestmad. The contain blow-some used on the bride's dross are usually artificial, as the matural ones are difficult to obtain, and they would quickly with m a gown. A few real ones may be carried in the bride's dross the second on the brides.

L. A. S.—The old ratios for persons in mourning do not are generally obtain; it is not unusual for such persons to be seen either at the thenter, or at small distincts or receptions. Of course, a great deal depends upon now a feetings in the macter; but physicians are trying to todate their rations to banish gloom and entitivate therefores; consequently, it is not considered bearties for people in mourning to be seen at small social gatherings. Try to enterial a generalist per people as a satural section, where he class to go do not use thin to remain; more realist in the conversation. When he class to go do not use him to remain; men generally stay as long as they want to.

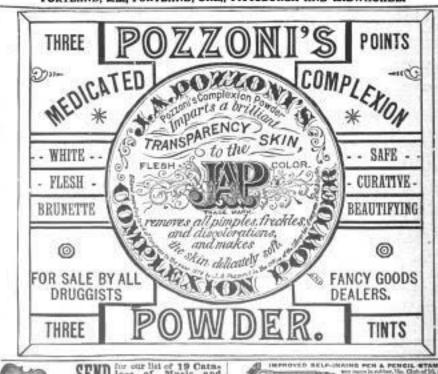

Ivory Soap is especially valuable for bathing the skin of infants: and very young children. It has a direct action on the pores, and not only thoroughly cleanses but softens and heals the skin.

Particular care should also be taken to wash the children's clothing in Ivory Soap. The garments will be whiter, cleaner and sweeter. The lather of Ivory is clean. There is no oil or grease in it. Dr. R. Ogden Doremus, of New York, says that the detergent properties of Ivory Soap are unsurpassed.

COPYRIGHT : SOO, BY THE PROCTED & GAMELE CO

CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE,, PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKER.

SEND for our list of 19 Cata-lors of Music and Musical Instruments.

OUR NEW TRAIN

We take pleasure in announcing that our line is now open for travel West

Via OMAHA and LINCOLN

and our Through Vestibuled Train is called

"THE BIG 5 LIMITED."

It leaves CHICAGO daily at 10.00 p. m.; arriving at DENVER 7.40 a. m., COLO-RADO SPRINGS 7.30 a.m. and PUEBLO 9.15.

Returning, this fast train is called The World's Fair Special," And leaves DENVER daily at 8.10 p. m.; arriving at CHICAGO at 7.45 a. m.

High

The New Boute shortens our mileage to Denver very unertaily and the new trains are models for beauty ad convenience, and leave and arrive at these great-files at bours practical for the tourist, and the right-our for the business man.

hour for the believes man.

Solid Vestibuled Trains are still run over our former lines via Kanass City and St. Joseph, and the elegant service bereiofers given on these reales by "The Great Bock Island" will continue.

E. ST. JOHN, JNO. SEBASTIAN, General Manager. Gen'l Ticket and Pan'r Agt.

IS NOT A CHEAP IMITATION, BUT MADE IN OUR OWN PACTORY. Send for Illustrated Catalogue and Testimonials. Demorest Sewing Machine Company, 17 East 14th Street, New York.

NATURE'S REMEDY THE HEALING BAL-SAMS OF THE PINE FORESTS, PREPARED FOR INHALATION BY S WM. B. HIDDEN, M. D. Throat & Long Specialist

BALTIMORE, MD. Colds, Courts, Catarralises, Goes directly where chisi and Lung disease. Goss directly where needed and gives instant relief. Special inhalants for Asthms and Whooping-cough, Send & for Inhalor and Inhalant

CHAMPION WASHING MACHINE.

Best in the World. Entirely new principle; will wash 1,000 pieces per day. Yo steaming the celling, or slopping the floor. Will sell at wholesale price, where we have no agents. Address

THE CHAMPION SHELF MFG. CO. Springfield, Obio.

EAGLE PRINTING OUTFIT 15 use, EAGLE SUPPLY CO. New Ho

TAR SELF-TAUGHT without notes with Howe's Charts, 55c, per set (20). A.O. Howe, 79 State St., Chicago, Cir. free on trial. Roof's Magic Scale, the popular of Tallering System. Hiestrated circular Roofs Magic Scales Co., Chicago, Ill.

CARDS MEETING TO THE FIRST CO.

1892

LADY Agents to sell new and beautiful goods.
Address Mrs. N. B. Livele, Chicago, Ill.

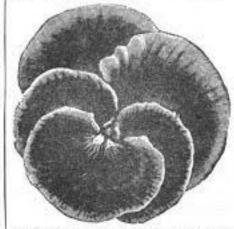

500 SCRAP FREE NEW CARDS

TO INTRODUCE OUR SEEDS into new hands we make this

SPECIAL OFFER

for 30 cents of one full-size package of this beautiful strain of

"Bliss ansy Perfection"

and a one oz. package of Boston Beauty SWEET PEAS, and send FREE our Hand-Book of Vegetable 1892 and Flower Seeds for -

It is fully illustrated and contains colored plates painted from nature. The latest novelties you will find in this book. It gives full description of how and when to plant all kinds of Seeds. Everyone Interested In Seeds should send for it.

W. W. RAWSON & CO. BOSTON, MASS.

WALL

Attractive and Non-Arsendeal, Factory prices, factory
fa

A World-renowned Remedy for RONCHIAL

RONCHI

🔈 $6 Roller Organ FREE.

50,000 In Use. Plays 600 Tunes Weight 15 lbs.

THE AUTOPHONE CO., ITHACA. N. Y.

PLO GROUP BOOT Trees: ase "Fruits and Terrico asp: Trees" - Fruit - Trees "- Fruit - And Terrico asp: Noval, DEEFUL, to the point. Grunge Justic Brunner / Abit without gives trees | INFORMATION Col., Fruit Grouper, Surprising LOW prices! Apple, Fear, Cherry of the Control of the Prices of the Pr Farmer's Ably written; gives treaty into tamarious. Sr., Fruit Grouper, Supprising LOW prices! Apple, Foar, Carr-sy, Fign., FSUNE, Feach, Ap's, Quince, Nui. Or. Trees, Stocks, Qualus, 300ES—corrything, No. LARGER stock in U.S. No. SETTER, No. cheaper, STABLE BROS., Louisianna, Mo.,—Francet 1835; GLDEST, 1000 Acres; LARGERT.

CARDS: New Sample Book St. U.S.CARD CO.Casta, O

ANTED A Lady in each locality, to open a Tollet Parker at frome and calific our conditions and calific our conditions and calific our conditions and calific our conditions are senting of the condition of the parkers beaching dur New Tollet Art.

EYLVAN TOILEY CO., Perigners, Port Same, Mich.

CARDS THE PROPERTY OF STREET

USE Pr. X. Stone's ESHONCHIAL WAFERS, the great Throat & Ling Rensely, Separ box, Druggists Sample Ser, Stone Medicine Co., Chicago, Hi-

CARDS IN THE THINK THE PARTY OF THE PARTY OF

PLAYS Malogues, Speakers, for School, Club and Parlor, Catalogue free, T. 5. DEMSON, Publisher, Chicago.

THE WONDER OF THE AGE! A SCIENTIFIC TRIUMPHIL

ment became. If you have no Parts you can hear at a friend's house and activities at with your sequimisants. Have no surer, editor of the bading Maximal Paper in the work, are, "They should find a please or stray house. They are to Maste what the Multiplearmon Tobic to be Arthresia." Between survivisions in every race. Musica Pranchers undestinatingly endouse it. The price of 1.00 for a complete set, A torse.

SPECIAL OPFER, To be desired by Albam, enhancing maste, editor between the receiver at our Musical Albam, enhancing maste, editor between the property would not will be proper, the second of the paper, which between the property would be remotered of this paper, which between the second of the paper, who will be remotered on a present saidly to the remoters of this paper, the second of the Albam for an arm of the advertisement in this paper, which is proposed to the following the collection of the second saidly to the remoters of this paper, the second of the Albam for an arm of the second saidly to the first and albam to the second of the second saidly to the first and albam to the second of the second saidly to the first and albam to the second saidly to the first and albam to the second of the second saidly to the first and albam, and the second saidly to the first and albam to the second saidly to the first and albam, and the second saidly to the first and albam to the second saidly to the first and albam to the second saidly the second saidly to the second saidly to the second saidly the second saidly to the second saidly the second saidly to the second saidly to the second saidly to the second saidly the sec

A rapid-growing, berry-bearing vine of great beauty. It is of vigorous growth and ENTIRELY HARDY. It begins to bloom in the late apring and continues blooming until frost. Following the flowers, the berries begin to form and increase in numbers until THE WHOLE VINE IS ONE MASS OF BRILLIANT SCARLET FRUIT, oblong in shape and about as large as a cherry; they remain perfect as late as February so that from August until late into the winter, it will be a mass of brilliant color. The CHINESE MATRIMONY VINE grows and theires in any situation either shade or suntlight, and will take root in any soil, in fact nature has given it all the exacutials for wide popularity.

Price: 40 cents each: 3 for $2.00. Price: 40 cents each; 3 for $1,00; 7 for $2.00; 12 for $3.00, DON'T FORGET, PREE, or CATALOGUE of EVERYTHING TO LES GAI ninining windrate contraction and all the contractions of the contraction of the contract

CELEBRATED FOR THEIR Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. SOLD OF RASY TERMS.

Old instruments taken in exchange. Write or catalogue and full information. 170 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

Beeman's Pepsin Gum THE PERFECTION

OF CHEWING CUM A DELICIOUS REMEDY INDIGESTION.

1-3 of an ounce of Pure Pep-sin mailed on receipt of 25c. CAUTION-See that the name

DEEMAN CHEMICAL CO., 28 Lake St., Cleveland, O. ORIGINATOUS OF PERSON CHEWING GUM,

HHE PINAULT

SELFFITTING MUSS APPROVAL' BOOK MAILED FREE, GEO.R. FULLER, ROCHESTER HY

10 CENTS "Agents" Directory" for the Year, Tanteenth of firms want addresses of persons to whom they can mail papers, magazines, patrons caren. do. FisteR enumples, and our patrons receive bushels of mail. Try layou full to Will I FLESSED with the small investment. Address T. B. LABFIELD, D. G. J. Bajleson, influen-

SHANDON SHANDON BELLS

NO OTHER

LEAVES A DELICATE AND LASTING ODCH.

For sale by all lyog and Pancy Goods Benium or il umble to proceed this wonderful some send 25c in stamps and receive a cake by return mail.

JAS. S. KIRK & CO., Chicago. SPECIAL Shardon Bells Walts (the popular lociety Walts) sent PREE to anyone sending us lives wrappers of Shardon Bells Scap.

TEO MORGAN ODORLESS BROILER

RELY. Sect to any part of RANTES BEATTER. DHITED STATES

the Gray FOR 10 CENTS

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

SEY STANFING CO., 496 P Street, KALARADSO, MACE

ACENTS WANTED. The Excelsion

Carpet Stretcher and Tack Hammer Combined. Can be used by anyone. NO We is the time to make big money. Sent Postpaid for 65 out in Postage stamps taken. Girculars free.

RICHARD W. MONTROSS. Callen, Mich.

SOUND DISCS DEAF similar devices combined. The same to HE AB interference of the spirit Police Series are blasses, are to the spirit Police Series are blasses, are to the spirit. Post-tirely invisible. Warn months without removal. B.A. Wällt, Bridgsperi, Sam.

RELIT WILL COST YOU NOTHING.
Send us your address on a postal and you will receive the finest entalogue of PIANOS and ORGANS in the world, it will PIANOS and ORGANS show you how to SAUSTACTOR THE OWN WITH THE CORNISH & CO. (Established) WASHINGTON.

CORNISH & CO. (Established) WASHINGTON.
New Jerrey.

A SAFE SOAP.

IN DECIDING WHICH SOAP TO USE, THE FOL-LOWING POINTS SHOULD BE ASCERTAINED: ITS

Zolor, Composition and Action.

NOW NOTE THE FOLLOWING POINTS REGARDING

Imolia

Color

That of the pure oils used in its manufacture.

Composition

Made from edible fats. Is a milled and not simply a boiled soap, like transparent soaps. Guaranteed neutral, and contains extra cream. Of choicest fragrance; no irritating scents. The only soap indorsed by "Lancet," "British Medical Journal," "Chemist and Druggist," etc. We publish full analysis, and should like to see others do so too!!! "Vinolia" Soap embodies the most recent advances in the chemistry and manufacture

Action

No other soap sets free so little alkali in toashing. Boiled soaps spoil delicate skins; milled soaps never. Yields a profuse, cleansing, emollient lather. May be used with safety for delicate and diseased skins.

When wanting a first-class toilet soap, see that you get a milled one.

Ask your druggist to get "Vinolia" for you.

3LONDEAU ET CIE., 73 & 75 Watts Street, N. Y.

GET A NEW

We can prove this to you if you will write to us for our new PIANO CATALOGUE. The finest in existence.

IT WILL COST YOU NOTHING. We send it free to any address. It fully explains our plan of EASY PAYMENTS.

and Organs delivered FREE on We Can Save You ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS ORNISH & CO., ("Id Established) WASHINGTON New Jersey.

eathers and Feather Pillows

Free from ODOR, DUST and OUILLS AND IN PERFECT CONDITION. ALL PROT-CLASS DEALERS KEEP THEM, IF YOURS DOES NOT, WHITE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.

PRULTLESS BEDDING

AND STEREOPTICONS utar filestrated PAY WELL

Barry's Tricopherous

egant dreading enquisitely perfumed, removes an seafron the scalp, prevents baldness and gray hair, neathe hair to grow Thick, Soft and Heastiful. In the curing eruptons, diseases of the skin, glands and heaves, Softing At. All Druggists or by Mail, 50 cts. BARCLAY & Co., 44 Stone St., New York. ESTABLISHED 1801

DRESSMAKERS We offer you

CHOTCHE BLOS DE COTCHE CO

HOW BABIES SUFFER

From Torturing Humors

When their tender SKINS are literally On FIRE with ITCHING AND BURNING ECZEMAS and other Itching, Scaly, and Blotchy Skin and Scalp Diseases, none but mothers realize.

To know that a single application of the Cuticura Remedias will, in the great majority of cases, afford instant and complete relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a permanent and economical (because so speedy) cure, and not to use them without a moment's delay, is to be guilty of positive inhumanity. No greater legacy can be bestowed upon a child than a skin without blemish and a body nourished with pure blood.

Remedies are the greatest skin cures, blood purifiers, and humor remedies, are absolutely pure, and may be used from pimples to scrofula, from infancy to age, with the most gratifying and unfailing success.

TREATMENT. - CUTICURA, the great skin cure, and CUTICURA SOAP, an exquisite skin purifier and beautifier, externally, instantly allay the most intense itching, burning, and inflammation, soothe and heal raw and irritated surfaces, clear the skin and scalp of crusts and scales, and restore the hair, while CUTSCURA RESOLVENT, the new blood and skin purifier and greatest of humor remedies, cleanses the blood of all impurities and poisonous elements, and thus removes the cause.

"ALL ABOUT THE BLOOD, SKES, SCALP, AND HAIR," mailed free to any address, 64 pages, yet Discuses, 50 Illustrations, 100 Testimonials. A book of priceless value to mothers, affording information not obtainable closwhere.

Curricus Research and throughout the world. Price, Curricusa, Soc.; Curricusa Soar, ago.; Curricusa Research See. Propaged by Potter Drug & Chemical Cour's, Boson, U. S. A.

Pimples, Blackheads, heads, and simple houses

red, rough, and oily skin and and childhood are prevented and cured by that most effective of all Skin Purifiers and Beautifiers, the celebrated Cuttenara Soap. Incomparably superior to all other thin and complexion soaps, while rivalling in delicacy and purity the most expensive of toilet and nursery scaps. The only forpentips of inflammation and cingring of the pares, the cause of most facial blemithes. Price, 25c.

ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS

Allcock's Porous Plasters are the only reliable plasters ever produced. Fragrant, clean, inexpensive and never failing; they fully meet all the requirements of a household remedy, and should always be kept on hand.

> For the Relief and Cure of Weak Back, Weak Muscles, Lameness, Stiff or Enlarged Joints, Pains in the Chest, Small of the Back and around the Hips, Strains, Stitches, and all Local ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS are unequalled.

Beware of imitations, and do not be deceived by misrepresentation. Ask for Alacock's and let no solicitation or explanation induce you to accept a substitute.

AN AROMATIC FRAGRANCE

parted to the mouth by the m dont. It is beyond doubt the cleanest, purest and best tooth wash ever offered to the public. No lady ever used Sozodont with-out approving of its cleansing and parifying proper-ties, and the flattering testimonials that have been bestowed upon it by eminent Dentists, speak volumes of praise for its merits.

SOZODONI

though efficient and powerful, is absolutely harmless, for it contains neither mineral nor acid; it is wholly vegetable in its origin.

Metal Tipped.

Will Not Cut Through. &

See Name "EVER READY" on Back of Each Stay.
Gutta Percha on both sides of steel. Warranted water-proof. Beware of Imitations.
mufactured by the YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFC. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich-

1847 Rogers Bros. At ® SPOONS, FORKS, KNIVES, Etc.,

Are Sold by all the Principal Dealers.

OTHER BRANDS OF ROGERS GOODS ARE SOMETIMES SUBSTITUTED FOR THE GENUINE "1847" AS THEY ADMIT OF A LARGER PROPIT.

If you are not sure where the genuine 1847 Hogers Goods can be obtained address THE MERLION BEST-ANNEACO, Newtides, Com. Blustrations of latest designs and valuable information will be mailed you. Westler this Negative.

OO REWARD!

Goods Economist," 78 & So Walker York, is nu-Louis Hermsnitz, Saxony by exposure to the sun or from I the feet. The stamp of on stocking or sock is the only ce that the article is perfectly dyed.

Excel all other makes. HARD WOOD. SIX WALLS.
CHARCOAL FILLED.
Patent air tight locks and exclusive device by which thorough cleaning is made casy.

Save your provisions and soe by getting this refrigerator.

Send for entalogue of over 50 new styles, combined with sideboards, china closest and kitchen cabinets, if desired.

We pay freight where we have no agents.

ds Refrigerator Co. TREET, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH,

360.000 SOLD

43 YEARS BEFORETHE PUBLIC.

SWEET TONED. SOLD ON MERIT.

TERMS REASONABLE. Every Instru-ment Fully Warranted.

MODERATE PRICES

EMERSON PIANO CO. 92 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK. 174 TREMONT STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

FLOUR FROM MOLD

Avoids the great inconvenience of reaching into abarrel or sack. No scattering. Saves time and waste. Oucc tried you would not be without it for many times its cost. Send for dreuler.

Prices / 25 in. $2.50 | Your dealer sells them to hold (200 hs. $4.00) or ought to. If he does to hold (200 hs. $4.00) not please write to us. SHERWAN & BUTLER. Macefacturers.

BICYCLES For either sex. Hickory wheels, roller bearings, coshion or postumatic tires. Send for estalogue

COMMON SENSE BICYCLE MFG. CO. 1219 Callowhill Street, Philadelphia.

A DELICIOUS PERFUME.

DELICATE BUT WONDER-FULLY IMPERISHABLE. Ask your druggist for it or send us 25 cents in stamps

C. B. WOODWORTH & SOMS Rochester, N. Y.

Will Not.

Cut

1500 Agents prefer to sell Thomas' Famous Cornet Waist. Send 2c stamp for terms. It. a. Thomas 2 Co. 462 Yan Surve St, Chicago, Ill.

PRAY YOUR FRUIT TREES VINES

Worms Freit and Leaf Blight of Apples, Pears, Cherries, EVCELSION SPRAYING Grape and Pointo Rot, Plum Curvalia, prevented by using EACELSION OUTFITS, PERFECT FRUIT ALWAYS SELLS AT GOOD PRICES, Ostalogue show, ing all injurious insects to Freits mailed free. Large stack of Fruit Trees, Vines, and Herry Plants at Bottom Prices. Address WM. STAHL, Quincy, Illa.

Through. Name "EVER READY" on Back of Each Stay. YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

Interesting to Ladies.

Equipoise Waist.

The beauty of woman is in the sense of her clothes. It is true that clothes do not make the woman, yet they help the appearance of the woman. Sensible dressing is always artistic and throws into relief the modest beauty of the figure. The fashionably modeled corset cannot make the figure fashionable unless the figure be naturally so modeled.

The corset may cover ill shape beneath, and give apparent graceful curves and lines, but a pinched-up waist and an artificial bust are neither natural nor artistic, and the woman who so attempts to build outside appearance is reckoned for what she is, frequently for worse than she She does not even deceive herself. The Equipoise

Waist has been worn by intelligent | women for fourteen years. No other corset substitute has ever given such universal satisfaction. It is recommended by sensible women everywhere and by the leading physicians at home and abroad. It fully embodies the true hygienic principle of support from the shoulders. The perfect modeling and careful adjustment of each part with relation to the others so equally distributes the strain and pull of the garments attached that their weight is hardly perceptible. The bone pockets are so constructed that the bones can be removed without ripping. The readymade Equipoise Waist fits the wearer as though especially made to her measure.

The materials used in its construction are of the best procurable quality. The Equipoise Waist is guaranteed to wear twice as long as any other waist or corset, irrespective of cost.

Made by George Frost Co., 31 Bedford Street, Boston, Mass.

Send Stamp for a copy of our finely illustrated book on sensible dressing, which contains a list of merchants who sell the Equipoise Waist.

If they are not sold in your city or town you can order from us by mail without extra expense.

GEO. FROST COMPANY, Boston, Mass.

SPECIAL SALE OF Baby Carriages FROM FACTORY TO CONSUMER Buy direct from the manufacturer and save the dealers profit. My prices this senson nearly below the general market for drat-class CHAS. RAISER, Mr., 62-64 Chybourn Ave., Chicago, III,

AGENTS WANTED. Carpet Stretcher

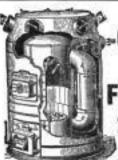

and Tack Hammer Combined. Inches used by anyone. NOW is the time to make big money. ont Postpald for 65 cents. Postage stamps taken. Circulars rese.

RICHARD W. MONTROSS, Callen, Mich.

Ladice' Henstüched
Handk'rch's, 5: 80 per dez.
Ladice' Henstüched,
Ladice' Henstüched,
very fine, 5: 40 per dez.
Ladice' Henstüched Se 40 per dez.
Ladice' Henstüched Handkerchiefs, 5: 80 per dez.
Ladice' Henstüched Handkerchiefs, 5: 80 per dez.
Ladice' Henstüched, very fine, 5: 60 per dez. On r ceipt of money order Linen to any part of the U.S.

Remit for samples and see if you can match value in any city this side of the Atlantic Ocean.

Handkerchiefs.

HOME STEEL HOT AIR URNACES GUARANTEED PREE PROM GAS, SMOKE, OR DUST!

MADE ONLY BY Wrought Iron Range Co. ST. LOUIS, MO.

Established 1864. HOME COMFORT STEEL RANGES.
Write for Cook Book-Mailed FREE.

"CLIPPER" IS THE ONLY PRACTICAL HOUSEHOLD KNIFE AND SCISSORS GRINDER. SIMPLE, EPPENTIVE.

Price, SC.50, Express paid. Any part of United States. Send for Circular.

MONTGOMERY & CO. MECHANICS' TOOLS,

SHANDON BELLS TOILET SDAP

LEAVES A DELICATE AND LASTING ODOR. An Ideal Complexion Soap

For sale by all Drug and Fancy Goods Dealers, or if mable to procure this Wonderful Song send 15 cents in stamps and receive a cake by return mail. JAS. S. KIRK & CO., Chicago SPECIAL -Standon Bells Waltz (the popular Society Waltz) sent FREE to anyone sending us three wrappers of Standon Bells Soap.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Vol. IX, No. 5

PHILADELPHIA, APRIL, 1892

Yearly Subscription, One Dollar Single Copies, Ten Cents

Mr. Beecher As I Knew Him

By Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher

IN NINE PAPERS

IE little nest at Mattenwan, under the high-lands on the banks of the Hudson, proved a delightful home for us during the sum-mer and autumn of 1857, and no one enjoyed it more than did Mr. Beecher. But, nevertheless, the place is ideal of a country in appreciation of all e, but always with the his is not the best yet, pot not far distant in cat would be better."

he kept looking for his

SIXTH PAPER

[All rights protected and reserved]

FARM

s leaving on a lecture part of March, 1850, lace for sale at Pecks-bile he was absent, to and report to him upon at saw at once that it l place. Accordingly f it until his return, kskill together. Mr., and it did not take mind that it was the · he left he closed the vas he to take possesi thought so much of moved our effects to ready to receive Mr. in his own home, s first home-coming.

s hist home-coming.
him as he stepped fairly pulled him in a kissed and greeted is apparent jollity a As soon as he could d so. With borned
the gravatch to the the grounds to the he felt alone with his erward that to own long a dream with tions had come true that he wanted to I better control his med me," he said, ne, and I wanted to here I could weep, gavers, the thankss, or the self-conse-on to his Father's h found their way se innumerable sehe found on that Surely, never did such true comfort ber realized in this riy thirty years be tion as his old tor-would allow him, nole year, he often

ROPS"

base of "Hillside
'I knew the place and crops of all in the preliminary but for which, at much as I should ere red or yellow. tude of the place t my fancy. It t be made to grow se seen off from it an grow rich by oad to wealth." ies constantly be-bing Bur that

him. But that d producing, of meciously, a very his early life at in Indianapolis, after buying the ir country house highest grade of veloped rapidly, ing beauty and ch miserable soil a marvel and an by his example.

ng the farm Mr. riously of build-ttle old cottage anted space, and o bring all the nily home with r, where no one at of sufficient red to show in what a country is. Yet he used everything just ilding whatever borne his burdens if they could. To secure this diversion of thought he began to take decided steps toward building. Nowhere could such a refuge be found from the annoyances through which it was sought to destroy him, as on this lovely hillside. It was at this time he called it "Hillside Rest"—and which to me was always the most appropriate name. All who knew and loved him saw that the place, his birds and flowers, and his great interest in building and perfecting the house, was a rest and blessing such as he could have found nowhere else during those cruel days.

AS A TRAVELING COMPANION

DURING six weeks of the year it was impossible for Mr. Beecher to remain at Peekskill because of his "hay cold," and we were accustomed either to go to the mountains for this period, or he would lecture in such localities as were most conductve to help him fight his annual foc. It was always a great pleasure for me to travel with

"Oh, ho!" he remarked, "been spying about the kitchen, have you? That don't do when you're traveling. But never mind; be sensible, and eat something. Try an egg."

sensible, and eat something. Try an egg."

I took one, broke it open, but finding it "inhabited," laid it aside.

"Well," he said, laughing, "you can't very well eat that, can you? Try a cup of tea!"

I poured out the tea, added sugar and milk that had been taken from a pan on the mantel over the fireplace. It was, of course, covered with ashes, and as I poured it into the hot tea it rose in a solid curd.

"You are indeed unfortunate" said. Mr.

You are indeed unfortunate," said Mr. cher. "But never mind; do as I mean to; est without being too critical. Now, this ham looks nice. Join me in trying a piece?"

But I had caught a glimpse of something under the slice as he moved it when preparing to cut it which I didn't exactly fancy. But us be had expressed his intentions of enting without being too critical, I simply declined, wishing to observe how far he would carry out his courageous intentions.

He cut across the middle of what was really the piece to put it on his plate saw what raising the piece to put it on his plate saw what had alrendy spoiled my appetite. With a comical expression he quietly laid down his knife and fork, and rising, said; "I think I'll go out and look after the horses."

HIS FEAR OF MENTAL FAILURE

HIS FEAR OF MENTAL FAILURE

M. R. BEECHER thus devoted his vacations in part to lecturing for the purpose of paying for the building of his summer home. He wanted it free from debt, because he wished in his later days to have it as a permanent home where he could rest when he ceased to preach. He was accustomed to say that he would retire from the pulpit at seventy years of age. His father's mental failure during the few last years of his life caused Mr. Beecher great sorrow, not only for his father's sake, but also anxiety for himself lest the same calamity should befall him; and while speaking very seldom of it, he determined—if spared

In a Favorite Attitude During Vacation at "Boscobel"

Mr. Beecher, for, when free from other cares, he was one of the best companions imaginable. Often he would lecture every night, traveling Often he would lecture every night, traveling all day; and to do this for six weeks at a time was very trying work. But he never lost his cheerfulness, and always infused life and pleusure into every trip. Little annoyances were turned by him into sport and reasons for amusement. Rough or dusty roads, scartly accommodations or delays never soured him. commodations or delays never soured. him, he did not allow them to sour those with him. A little good-natured teasing, quaint remarks, or jokes, kept all with him too pleasantly entertained to be disturbed by any of the discomforts inevitable when traveling. Books for all were plentifully provided; and if his book was of an anusing character his comments upon it were notice as entertaining as the book itself. it were quite as entertaining as the book itself.

WHERE HIS COURAGE FAILED HIM

WHEN at home his likes and dislikes re-VV garding table comforts were always carefully regarded; but when traveling this was, of course, impossible. Yet he would never com-plain. When with him I always carried tea and coffee, and the least cumbersome articles in which to prepare then; for when obliged to speak every night he felt the need of a good cup of tea or coffee made to his own taste. would put up with much discomfort at table when traveling; but I recall one time when even his nonchalance was conquered.

We had been riding nearly all day traveling by carriage, between two engagements, without a drop to drink, or a morsel to ent, until about sunset we came to a rather pretentious tavern, giving promises of rest and food. Mr. Beecher saw to the comfort of his horses, while I ordered supper. While he was outside and I was waiting, several things came under my observation that made me doubtful While be was of finding much comfort in our supper. When seated at the table Mr. Beecher passed a dish of food that I had unfortunately seen prepared, and I declined, I fear, with a slight from that calamity until he was seventy—that he would resign his charge of Plymouth Church and retire to the farm. It was not like Mr. Beecher to borrow trouble, but this fear he subdued often with great difficulty.

Not many months before Dr. Lyman Beecher's death he came to dine with us. In both words and acts his mental failure was more apparent than I had ever seen it, and I saw that Henry was deeply grieved by it. After dinner I walked bome with his father. When I returned Mr. Beecher was lying on the sofa looking very sad. I knelt by his side inquiring for the reason.

I have been thinking of father, and praying that if God should see best to bring me s low He would give me strength to bear it. can think of no other cross He may lay upon me that I could not say from my heart— 'Thy will be done.' But this—this I could not! I could not!" and rising, he went to his study. When some hours after he returned, his face was like that of an angel, and I knew he had conquered so far as to be willing to trust all to his Master. But after that I saw he grew more watchful of himself and more he grew more waterful of himself and more inclined to feel that his labors were less satis-factory. I once told him that I should surely see any such change as he feared before any one else, and the moment I did I should be as unwilling as he possibly could be to have him enter the pulpit again. Smiling he replied:

"How do you know but you may fail before I do, and therefore be unable to judge?"
"You have often told me," I said, "that I lacked faith. That is true; but in this matter my faith is stronger than yours. I know, so long as you need me, God will keep me near you and help me to judge of this for you better than you can for yourself. Don't, I pray you. talk or think any more of sending in your resignation. Will you not promise that you resignation. Will you not promise th will not do it without first telling me?"

He promptly promised; but for some time before we went abroad, in 1886, I saw that this fear still lingered.

CARRYING HIS RESIGNATION WITH HIM

WHILE in England no greater cordiality W HILE in England no greater cordiality and approximation could have been shown than Mr. Beecher received from all quarters, and he could not fail to know that it was honest appreciation. One day, after a delightful and enthusiastic reception, when we entered our room he called use to his side, and with that curious, half-bashful look so noticeable by those who knew him best when speaking of himself or anything be had done, which brought him tokens of approval, he said:

"Perhaps you are right, dear. The friends here can judge as correctly of my work as the friends at home. If there is any indication of mental failure they would not show me the cordiality and enthusiasm they have since we came. Comfort your heart; I will not worry over it any more. I am resolved to do the best I can, and work as long as God gives me strength, and borrow no more trouble."

This made me, as he well knew it would.

This made me, as he well knew it would,

very lappy,
"Well, then," I said, "give me that letter of resignation from Plymouth Church in your pocket, and promise use never to write another like it?"

With a look of curious surprise, he asked:
"How came you to know of the papers I carry in my pockets?"

I refreshed his memory by saying that nearly fifty years ago he laid upon me the command always to examine his coat pockets and see that he had no papers which he might draw out with his handkerchief when preaching, and drop on the platform. "I have always done so, and in following that command I know that and in following that command I know that you have this letter of resignation in your pocket. Give it to me, now."

He hesitated a moment, then drew out the letter, gave it to me, and tearing it into pieces I tossed it into the tire. I never saw after that any indication that he was anxious as to his mental capacity.

HIS FONDNESS FOR GEMS

MR. BEECHER'S fondness for brie-d-bruc, M. R. BEECHER'S fondness for brie-d-brue, genes, works of art, birds and flowers is well known. It was noticeable from his youth, and constantly being developed and matured as his years increased; but until be moved to Brooklyn he had little or no opportunity to see them. Yet be took great pleasure in reading descriptions of them, and by so doing was unconsciously preparing himself for a more perfect appreciation and enjoyment when, in the course of years, he had the best of opportunities to see, as well as read of them.

His interest in genus of all kinds was not as ornaments, but as friends and instructors. He often would sit silently and look at and study often would sit silently and look at and study them as a number of gens were spread out before him. Truly, any one seeing him thus absorbed would readily imagine that—as be often said—they talked to and influenced him, and through their influence his people received some of his most beautiful illustrations.

Diamonds had less attraction for him than other stones on account of their lack of rich coloring. I remember his saying to me once that genus spoke to him of God, and that he heard His voice more truly through the rich, that gents spoke to him of God, and that he heard His voice more truly through the rich, deep colors of a beautiful stone than through any other agent. When he had been intensely aroused, when every nerve vibrated, the effect that precious stones had to quiet him was singularly exemplified after some of the stormy battles he had in England in 1863. Like music, they were almost like medicine in their soporific effects, quieting his nerves and calming his perturbed spirit. On one of the hardest fights he had experienced, a three hours' struggle in the Philliarmonic Hall, Liverpool, when he finished and returned to his hotel, he went to his room with the prospect of a very restless, sleepless night. His voice was entirely gone; what should he do the next evening! He had with him an opal of unequaled richness and color. He took it in his hand and watched the wonderful changes as he moved it under the gas-light, and in the beauty and brilliancy of its color he forgot the tumult and violence of the evening and the indignation which had lifted him above his audience and compelled them to listen. All this extreme excitement gradually subsided as he watched this beautiful gen, and listen. All this extreme excitement gradually subsided as be watched this beautiful gem, and felt that his Master had, through it, spoken comfort and encouragement to his soul. Putting this minister of peace and courage safely away, he sought his bed, and at once fell asleep and rested all night undisturbed.

Rubies, amethysts, topazes, all were loved as friends, not altogether for his love of their color, but because he seemed to read in them a page of the great book of nature. There his mind that ever tainted this love.

All the ill The opal was a special favorite. All the ill omens that have been circulated about it had no effect upon Mr. Beecher's mind. I have no jewelry but what came from him, and until within the last ten years opals were all I had. The beautiful one that spoke such words of comfort to him in England he had set, on his return to America, and gave to me, and no day passed that I did not wear some opal Mr. Beecher had given me.

Prominent jewelers were very happy to allow him to carry from their stores some valuable gems, some richly, mounted and others unset-The latter be appeared to enjoy quite as much as those in the costliest settings. It was so well known he was seldom without some gems about his person that it is strange he was not robbed, and when he was away, or coming home late at night from a lecture, it was a source of great uneasiness to me. He thought this needless anxiety. Perhaps it was, for I had had ample proof that, fearless as he was, with this fearlessness he united a larger development of cantion than was usually sup-posed. I think the jowelers who so freely trusted such valuable articles to him had less anxiety about them than I had,

Mes. Beecher's seventh paper will appear in the May JOURNAL].

T is not so very long ago that strange doctrines prevailed even among the superior class of nurses as to the danger of fresh air and of soap and water; while many and grevious were the fashionable medicines that held sway in the nursery. Many such habits and maxims have now been swept away; nevertheless much has still to be learned, and many bud practices very generally in vogue have to be practices very generally in vogue have to be corrected.

It is with much diffidence that I offer these modest contributions to the discussion of the management of nurseries, having no greater claim to be heard than arises from the practi-cal experience of many years, and the advan-tage of much valuable advice from the late Sir Charles Locock.

I well remember that eminent physician I well remember that eminent physicians presenting me, more than forty years ago, with the little book "Coombe on Infancy," and saying as he did so, "Do not only read it, but learn it by heart." His advice has often been of service to me, and frequently have I had reason to thank my kind old friend while children and grandchildren have been springing up around me.

At the present "milroad pace" of life, a few brief practical suggestions may prove (Reproduced, by special permission, from the lates) pertrait taken) more useful than a series of long and elabo-rate dissertations. Hence the few hints I have to give will be pertinent.

THE YOUNG MOTHER'S FIRST STEP

WHAT is of the most practical import-ance for the preservation and develop-ment of infant life? And what intelligent reasons can be given why certain conditions are good or bad? This will naturally lead us to turn our attention to the healthy arrangement of nurseries, recognizing the primary importance of the subject, with a view to the well-being of the little ones.

In this matter knowledge and affection should go hand-in-hand; instead of which, how often ignorance leads to mistakes, even among loving mothers who would lay down their lives for their children, the very affec-

Trouble should be taken by every mother to make herself acquainted with the laws and principles governing the human body. She should learn the vigilant watchfulness without which she will never succeed in under-standing the tender organization of her child; standing the tender organization of her child; thus constitutions will be strengthened and lives saved. Instead of walking in uncertain paths in the dark, now over-coddling, now over-bracing, practicing experiments haphar-ard on the delicate little frame, the mother will be guided aright, for the laws of nature will be taken for her guide. And so beautiful and so full of interest are these laws that and so that of their study involves some sac-rifice of time, it will become a pleasure as it becomes a duty, and there will be ample com-pensation. For it is the Almighty hand that we must recognize, writing upon the very nature of the child these laws of its being and the more closely we follow that guiding hand, the more clearly shall we learn that the highest wisdom lies in assisting nature.

Entron's Note.—The substance of these articles were prepared some years are by Mrs. Glasticine as a series of remarks in connection with the "International Health Exhibition" of London. The material has now been revised and rewritten by Mrs. Gladstone especially for Trin Lances' House Joens's and is here published for the first time in any periodical. All rights are reserved by the publishers.

BEST SURROUNDINGS FOR A CHILD

I WILL begin with the consideration how best to secure a healthy and at the same time a pleasant abode for children. It is evident that the first thing to do is to

It is evident that the first thing to do is to make a wise selection of situation and aspect, though as to this, of course, people are not always able to choose. We are, however, planning an ideal nursery. Let us begin, then, by securing, if possible, asouthern aspect. Sunshine has undoubtedly an effect, upon children especially, akin to that of pure sir. It brings on its rays life, and health, and joy.

Those who live in towns will be amply resaid, even from an economical point of view

Those who live in towns will be amply repaid, even from an economical point of view, by the choice of a dry situation, rather than one which is low and damp. For the children of the poor especially, under-fed and overcrowded as they mostly are, how great is the importance of this point; the matter is often disregarded through ignorance or selfishness; houses are built in unhealthy spots, and no attention is bestowed on the nature of the soil, or the vital question of drainage.

The country is, of course, preferable to town;

soi, or the vital question of drainage.

The country is, of course, preferable to town; ret a country house too closely surrounded by trees, or in the neighborhood of stagnant water or undrained marsh, may have a sickly and melancholy nursery history.

A very valuable paper not long ago written by Dr. Squire, of England, contained the following remarks:

"The strong man, after free preparation out.

"The strong man, after free respiration out of doors, may pass through foul or damp air in the basement of the house with the inner in the basement of the house with the liner breath of his capacious chest untouched; he may sit in a close, hot parlor without enerva-tion, or sleep in a chilled bed-room without his vigorous circulation being seriously de-pressed. Not so those who stay at home; from these evils even the strong would suffer; delicate women, susceptible youth, tender delicate women, susceptible youth, tender childhood suffer most. The mature and robust childhood suffer most. The mature and robust bear cold well, so that the air be dry and pure; the young must have warmth. Another neces-sity for those much indoors is light. No room can be healthy, however well calculated for its inmates, unless, in addition to the requisite air-space, the air it contains is being constant-ly renewed; this is ventilation. Most import-ant of all these requirements is cleanliness."

HOW TO HAVE AN IDEAL NURSERY

THESE words bring me to the important THESE words bring no to the important point of the internal arrangements of our children's homes. With regard to this let us bear in mind that much may be done even where we cannot have perfection bridapting and contriving things to the best advantage. If possible, however, two rooms at least should be devoted to the nursery, so as to insure constant change of air, without risk of chills, and plenty of scrubbing without exposing the children to the dangers of damp floors.

While bestowing all possible care upon the floors.

While bestowing all possible care upon the main points of drainage, ventilation, etc., let us be careful not to neglect the little everyday precautions without which children brought up in palaces may and do fall victims to the very same blood poisonings that are chronic in the alums. For instance, there should be the greatest care as to trapping; the slightest blocking up often neutralizes the good of elaborate ventilation.

Children are the better for frequent changes of room; they have to spend most of their Children are the better for frequent changes of room; they have to spend most of their time in the house; they require short intervals between their menls, with quick transitions from play to rest. The menls should be taken where there is no litter of toys; a quiet room is needed both for work and sleep. Means of getting change of air, and of taking exercise within doors or under cover, are essential. In town houses of moderate size, the best place for welcome change is the drawing-room; it is often the largest room, and the infant may is often the largest room, and the infant may well spend some time there; all the children, under supervision, may be familiar visitors.

Home life to the younger members of a family and to the gentler sex means that by far the largest part of every day must be spent indoors, and half of it—at least for the very young—in the bed-room. No attempt should ever be made to rear children in a single room. More danger lies in this than many mothers imagine. The necessity of providing a full supply of pure and fresh air in youth, when change and growth are most active, is obvious.

Again, few carpets should be used, and those easily removed out of the way for the rooms to be scrubbed. Here we may again quote some very apposite remarks by Dr. Squire: "The details of nursery fittings must vary extremely in the different grades of society, while many of the same details of nurser management can be commonly carried out; the principles to be kept in view are the same in all stations of life, and may often be as well observed in the poorest as in the richest dwell-ings. No amount of grandeur will keep mansions free from noxious gases: the most costly chamber soon becomes unbealthy if constantly occupied."

Children thrive best with free and frequent access to the outer air; no attempt should be made to render any suite of apartments for the young independent of this, and any ar-rangement that makes it difficult for children to get out of doors should be rigidly avoided.

A warning may here be given as to the risks often run at the seaside and other health risks often run at the seaside and other health resorts. Under the impression (a most delu-sive one, especially in our English climate, and somewhat the same in America) that "the children will be out all day," indoor ar-rangements are often left very much to chance. We have known children stowed away in the smallest possible space, no thought taken about drainage and ventilation, and thus the benefit of the change of air almost, if not altogether, neutralized, and the sacrifice of time and money so cheerfully undergone for the sake of the trip entirely thrown away. Or a house will be carelessly taken which has been infected by scarlet fever, or some other disease, with disastrous and sometimes fatal effects.

Our nurseries should be on an upper floor our nurseries should be on an upper noor; in fact, the higher the better, only we should avoid placing them directly under the roof, an arrangement which secures the maximum of cold in winter, and of heat in summer.

[Mrs. Gladstone's second article will appear in the May JOURNAL.]

V.—MISS HELEN GLADSTONE

BY ETHEL MACKENZIE MCKENNA

OR some years past Miss Gladstone oR some years past Miss Gladstone has acted as vice-principal at Newnham College, and it is in connection with the college that her name is specially known.
Newnham College stands on the borders of Cambridge, in nearly nine acres of land. It consists of three red brick buildings, about which there is nothing particularly remarkable from an architectural point of view. The grounds are very well kept, great interest being taken in the gardens alike by principals and students, and several lawn-tennis courts, a fives' court and a gynanasium provide for the superfluous energies of the latter.

MISS GLADSTONE

It was in October, 1871, that Miss Clough, the present principal of Newnham, laid, in an abstract sense, the first stone of the college, by taking a house in Cambridge, in order to accommodate a few ladies, who, living at a distance, were yet anxious to take adorder to accommodate a few ladies, who, liv-ing at a distance, were yet anxious to take ad-vantage of the lectures for women which had been started in the previous year. It was not for some time, however, that the idea of a regular college for women arose from this in-formal "hall." but when, in 1875, Newnham Hall was opened, Miss Clough was, as a matter of course, elected principal, a position which she still holds. Students multiplied, and in 1876 the newly-built college was found too small to provide for the number of students small to provide for the number of students who were desirous of entering into residence. A second building soon sprang into being, and it was about this time that Miss Gladstone went to Newnham. She was then about twenty-eight years of age, having been born in 1849. She had never been to school, but had been educated entirely at home under the direction of her father and mother. Miss Gladstone did not, while at college, distinguish herself in any particular branch of learning, nor did she take a specially high degree, and there is no doubt that when she applied for the post of secretary to Mrs. Södgwick, it was the influence of her name that obtained it. When she had gained experience in management Professor and Mrs. Södgwick in management, Professor and Mrs. Sidgwick retired and left the students residing in Sidg-wick Hall, as the new building had been named, in the entire charge of Miss Gladstone. It was in 1882 that she was elected vice-principal, and she still occupies the post.

*In this series of pen-portraits of "Clever Daughters of Clever Men," examinenced in the November, 1801, JOURNAL, the following, such accompanied with portrait, have been printed:

100 November 1801 December " January 1802 March " Any of these back numbers can be had at 10 cents each by writing to the Joulanas.

It is in Sidgwick Hall, over which she reigns, that Miss Helen Gladstone has her rooms. They are fine, airy apartments, comfortably though rather simply furnished, for the vice-principal does not pay much heed to her surroundings. She lives very quietly, and does not go out much, and, indeed, except occasionally at a dinner party, she is scarcely seen in Cambridge society. Her life is an uneventful one, every day having its appointed round of duties, for although Miss Gladstone does not herself teach, the machinery of the college involves a large correspondence and does not herself teach, the machinery of the college involves a large correspondence and much hard work. As vice-principal she says that she suffers somewhat from want of personal knowledge of the "curriculum," but she manages to override such difficulties through the possession of two qualities quite as important, if not more so to one in her position, namely, tact and observation. As a ruler she is immensely popular, for without being severe in discipline she has made herself unquestionably obeyed while she has never failed to win the admiration and regard of a student in her Hall. Into the pleasures, as well as the studies in discipline she has made herself unquestionably obeyed while she has never failed to win the admiration and regard of a student in her Hall. Into the pleasures, as well as the studies of those under her. Miss Gladstone enters with an interest that makes her beloved by all.

In person Miss Gladstone is tall and rather ungraceful, a defect which is intensified by her carelessness in the matter of dress—a very unimportant item in her busy life; but one forgets her want of grace in the charm of her face, which, without being really handsome, fascinates by its earnest expression. The spirit of her father's genius shines through her eyes, and causes one to forget that her features are wanting in actual beauty. She wears her hair brushed from her face in rather severe style, and coiled in a knot at the back of her head. Her forehead is low, but well shaped; her mouth rather large, with full, expressive lips. Miss Gladstone is of a very retiring nature, having a great dislike to publicity of any sort, and is by no means the "strong-minded" woman whom one would expect to find at the head of a college. Although her views on most subjects are extremely strong, this fact only serves to intensify her individuality, without detracting from her sweet and womanly nature. Many of the qualities which have endeared the "grand old man" to those around him, reproduce themselves in his daughter, who resembles him in character as she does in appearance. His personality has set its stamp upon her; her nature bears the impression of his. No wonder that her strong feelings are usually in accordance with those of Mr. Gladstone is a great belief in the virtues of strong exercise, and though I have never heard of her assisting in his tree-cutting operations, she is an indefatigable walker, and endeavors to make her girls follow her example. Although her nature is a reserved one, and she is as a rule rather silent, she is, when interested, a most brilliant talker, and her powers of conversation constitute one of her would feel delighted a would feel delighted at being requested to take Miss Gladstone in to dinner.

Although a woman's college is much less of a social institution than a man's—for women do not go to college unless they mean to work—it is by no means the dreary place that the majority of people would have us believe, and a Newnhamite confessed to me that they have "no end of a good time" under the rule of Miss Clough, Miss Helen Gladstone and Miss Jane Lee. Recreations and sports are encouraged by the principal and her "Vices," and those who believe that a girl's love of dancing is greatly influenced by the opportunities which it affords for filtration would find an admirable refutation of their theory were they to see the girls dancing among themselves in the big dining-hall. The terrible portrait conjured up in our mind's eye at the mention of a Newnham girl is by no means a realization of fact. Every girl is expected to dance well, and those qualified to give instruction expend much time and trouble in teaching their less efficient sisters. Any sports that are feasible are taken up with great enthusiasm, and in spite of the admirable courts for lawn-tennis and fives, to say sports that are feasible are taken up with great enthusiasm, and in spite of the admirable courts for lawn-tennis and fives, to say nothing of the grannasium, the favorite game of the Newnhamites is a degraded form of hockey, played on a hay field with ordinary sticks. In the summer they may often be seen rowing on the Cam; indeed, some of them row particularly well and would put to shame many a so-called athletic girl. A most busi-ness-like amateur parliament is another popu-lar anausement, and the girls, by their powers of rhetoric, flow of language and logical de-bates, give ample proof of their fitness for political life. Parliament meets regularly one political life. Parliament meets regularly one position life. Farmanean mean regularly in inght a week, and on every evening the girls devise some anusement after "Hall." They have readings of French and English plays, debates and concerts, while the "wines" of debates and concerts, while the "wines" of a masculine university are replaced by "cof-fees," "tens," and "cocoas," which are not less enjoyed than their prototypes. Although ardent in everything connected with the forwarding of the higher education of her sex, Miss Gludstone has a very firmly rooted idea that the mission of a woman is to be womanly, and has a great dislike to the masculine type of girl. She has a strong belief that college life has no influence in robbing a girl of this, her chief charm, and often speaks with pleasure of a pretty little scene, which showed that learning had not deprived the girls of their maternal instincts. An old girls of their maternal instincts. An old student, proud in the possession of a beby, brought it to Newnham to be admired. The child was received with huge delight by the "blue stockings;" indeed, there was such an challition of baby worship that the poor little infant was in danger of being sufficiented by the rigor with which it was snatched from one pair of arms by another. The mother was obliged to intervene, and consented to allow each student three minutes in which to revel in sole possession of her child. History does not relate how baby bore its boosts.

By Mrs. Reginald de Koven

T would be difficult to find a city better provided with clearly accepted attributes than Chicago. No phase in modern civilization is so argent, so present, so tyrannous as Chicago. Like ancient Carthage, independent, isolated, magnificent in the city lies in the midst isolated, magnificent in at, the city lies in the midst ress of herself and of an Surely there is nothing a Chicago, and yet in the social life, the use of negadisory, and a liberal employax an inevitable necessity.

possessed of a few ideas in hicago society, a very few, I perhaps unfortunately, they ptions. This is partly the rejudice, that swelling, angry tide iows the fabled Star of Empire on and course as the ocean does the d partly the result of natural inferever has there been a better example ing that "things are not what they Frankly, the great western city is a sughold of materialism. It is girt the thick, compacted towers of trade, smoky banners of its army of conroad low and shut out the sky. The engy of the people of Chicago is eximpling up its material prosperity in high. Thus, while business Chicago harged with electricity, social Chicago from the lack of it. Rapidity, andacity, ginality characterize its business lifence of action and conventionality retard agress of its social development. It is satural, although not necessarily obvious outside world, that this magnificent in growth should bring about contrasts presponding depressions in its social life, when work, rushing, imperative and aical in its demands upon mind and claims the masculine half of the populacial day, it is obvious that little time less energy is left for what seems to the majority the unessential occupations of This is one, and the more important, on of this lack of electricity in the social occupation, and the predominant influence of New England element among the castern mists who compose Chicago is the other.

MRS. DE KOVEN

LTHOUGH disguised with all the appur- tenances of luxury and beauty in house oration, and expensive and beautiful dress, rritan New England lives again in the large of representative element which rules Chien society. Thus it happens that the social mosphere of this great, rusking western ty in its higher circles is purer and clearer in s tone-it is safe to say-than that of any ther city of equal size in the history of the sevelopment of civilization. It has passed into a proverb that divorce is easy and frequent in Chicago, but the fact is that only three divorce cases of people known to the world of society have been known in the history of the city. Tise old lines of duty to the domestic relations are inflexibly adhered to, and less counte-nance given to an easier interpretation of such duties than in any other of the large cities of America. Wealth also is so evenly and generally distributed that the possession of it to a lange extent is taken for granted, and judgment of character singularly little affected by it. This fact gives rise to another characteristic of Chicago society, and that is the unusual beence of that distinctive form of human ambition which has its aim wholly in social ad-varcement, an ambition which sets up false gods to be worshiped, and which nullifies the best interests of human nature.

[EDITION'S NOTE; The second of a series of articles on social life to sky of the foremost American cities, commonwed in the December, 189, issue, by Mrs. Borton N. Harrison, on "Social Life in New York" and continued by let in the January, 189, JOHNAL. Succeeding articles will follow on social life at other American centres, each city being sketched by one of the lewiers of society there.]

THE New England element in Chicago is the moral tone of the city, and is responsible for much good and some evil. For it must be said that unconventionality, freedom of speech, or originality of character are regarded somewhat sternly, and do not in some cases receive the welcome they deserve. A very clear notion has been developed as to what may not be done; what may be done is shrouded still in mists of donbt. The old feeling that whatever is amusing must necessarily be wrong lingers still in this transferred. New England. To be original in Chicago, brings about as inconvenient results as elsewhere to infringe the Decalogue, and he who is wary will besitate long before he speaks his mind. Herein lie the defects of the qualities which are of the greatest influence in determining the character of Chicago society. But the Puritan element, although determining the moral point of view, is not alone among the many elements which exist in this great, new centre of civilization. All the sections of America bave contributed to the growing magnitude of the place. The men soon assimilate into the well-known and recognizable type of netive, sharp-sighted, energetic men of affairs; not so the women, who remain very individual, and very consistently carry out, as far as may be, the ideas which are theirs by birth, training and environment. Chicago, in other words, is a great inland colony, developed into a very original and positive character from its business standpoint, but socially as yet unassimilated, and changing every hour. There is a curious reluctance always to be observed on the part of the outside world to submit to the very shortest process of reasoning in regard to Chicago, and yet it should be obvious enough that a city whose actual existence extends over scarcely more than fifty years, and whose population is, to a very large extent, born outside its borders, should not have adopted its customs from the aboriginal Indians, nor yet have departed from the traditions to which its people by type and social class

THE history of Chicago society divides itself into that of the first generation, which began its life with the beginning of the city, and is just now passing off the stage, and that of the present, which is only just commencing to develop an individual type. Chicago is divided into three sections, separated by the river which flows through the city into the lake—the North, South and West sides. These must each be considered separately, for they are individual in their respective characteristics.

must each be considered separately, for they are individual in their respective characteristics. The North side was settled in the early days of Chicago by a number of eastern people of good birth and family connections, and with the markedly New England characteristics alluded to above. Some families of the old Knickerbocker and Virginia stock, connected in many cases either by blood relationship or life-long intimacy, strengthened the influences which were exorted in the formation of the social and moral atmosphere of the new city. This section of the city was for a long time the centre of a great deal of neighborly intimacy of a very refined and singularly homogeneous character. Of late years it has rapidly increased in size and beauty. Many residents of other parts of the city have built their new homes there, and a large portion of the new-consers from the east make it their choice. The Lake Shore drive, which faces Lake Michigan and runs past St. Gauden's incomparable statue of the great martyr into Lincoln Park, may well be a cause of pride. Here stand rows of really splendid houses facing the lake, where perfection of living need fear comparison with nothing in America.

Michigan and runs past St. Gauden's incomparable statue of the great martyr into Lincoln Park, may well be a cause of pride. Here stand rows of really splendid houses facing the lake, where perfection of living need fear comparison with nothing in America.

The South side, spreading out with extreme beauty in length of avenues, in variety, number and importance of magnificent houses, was for many years the centre of the social activity of the city, and the home of its wealth and luxury. It may, I think, be stated that there is no avenue in any modern city which for extent and for beautiful houses can compare with Michigan Avenue. Prairie and Calumet Avenues, although less in extent, are nearly equal in beauty.

The West side, larger in compass than the

The West side, larger in compass than the South and North sides put together, contains a wonderful extent of comfortable homes, fortune and social position, and is, with some rare exceptions, socially contained within its own boundaries.

THERE is no doubt whatever that there are many more heautiful houses in Chicago than in Boston, New York, or Philadelphia, The influence of Richardson is very evident in Chicago, both in its public buildings, its palaces of trade and its private houses, and the latter are uniformly very interesting in atyle and correct in taste. Knowledge of house decoration has been very highly developed. If, as has been said, it is the ambition of the Chicago man to build a house, it is that of the Chicago woman to make it beautiful. For this purpose she travels the world over, and ports over "The House Beautiful" and such like authorities. The best talents of the most noted architects and the most original of decorators are called into requisition, and rooms correct in every detail in the Indian, Japanese and Pompeiian manner and in the well-known French periods are imagined and carried out with the utmost seriousness and the most unspairing expense.

THE standard of dress is very nearly like that of New York, the women of Chicago with scarcely an exception buying their more important gowns in Paris or New York, and following the fashions which are invented either side of the Rue de la Paix. In dress, in equipage, in beauty and laxury of house hold decoration, Chicago people have little more to learn; in the mounting and directing of their houses very much; but even in this respect it is the extremely inferior supply of good servants, combined, perhaps, with some slight reluctance of adaptation, which stands in the way. Knowledge is by no means wanting. Very much which had been begun toward the advancement of art and music was necessarily interrupted by the great fire, but an art institute, with a very well selected beginning of a gallery and excellent schools of instruction, now occupies a beautiful building created for its various purposes, and a very successful society of amateur musicians, together with Theodore Thomas's splendid orchestra, well represent the interests of those liberal arts. Society was also affected, as was inevitable, by that awful calamity, and there were many changes in fortune and position, but its customs remained practically unchanged and the same forms of entertaining prevailed.

Before that ern, and for some years after, in fact until about the year 1880, a certain unconventionality belonging to life-long and intimate acquaintance characterized society,

Before that ern, and for some years after, in fact until about the year 1880, a certain unconventionality belonging to life-long and intimate acquaintance characterized society, which was made up of the men and women who had gained their fortunes with the growth of the city, and whose children were growing up together. During these years there were many dances, suppers, sleighing parties, and much going to the theatre in parties, and sometimes without the now necessary and incritable chaperone. But the forms of enter-tainment have been altering rapidly since then; the city has been changing from a village to a town, from town to metropolis, has awakened to its dignity and importance, and has become as conventional as the most strictly interpreted of social codes could demand. There are always a number of subscription balls, called successively by different names, but supported by very nearly the same people. Of late years their number has fallen off somewhat. For while for many years the "dancing class," formed originally on the most simple and unconventional lines, and productive, therefore, of unlimited enjoyment, not every Monday night, its successors, under the names of assemblies, bachelors, and benedicts, etc., have given a smaller number of balls, later in hours, and more claborate as to cotillon, supper and dress. There are winters when the attention of society is distracted from balls to private theatricals, and from private theatricals to tobograning; and there are constant changes in the ranks of society caused by the new people who come in ever increasing numbers from New York, Philadelphia, Boston and the smaller eastern cities. These fresh additions are for the most part newly married, and bring to the west much charm of youth and energy and enthusiasm, and they are ably assisted by the almost unlimited number of young men from the east.

THE part the young girl plays in Chicago society is very important; in comparison with that taken by the young matrons and the older married people, almost too much so. It has been stated that society exists only as a matrimonial bureau, organized and conducted solely for the benefit of the dibutante, who lives a brief, butterfly existence in a shower of compliments and flowers before she marries and retires from view. This is an over-statement, but not so egregious a one as might be wished. Older people, with, of course, some notable exceptions, do not consider society to bold any obligations for them. There are very few houses where diamers are given with any reference to the bringing together of the men and women, who, in the prime of their lives, are influencing and determining the life of the city. Young and old people, also, are very rarely asked together, which is a loss to both—to the young of the desirable contact with minds of force, maturity and experience; to the old of the joyful, refreshing influences of youth. Hence it happens that the men see each other at the clubs, the women at their luncheon parties and literary societies, and a really regrettable separation of occupation and thought establishes itself.

EVERY possible protection is given to the but here, as elsewhere in America, she is per-mitted to follow her own inclinations in the question of her marriage. Early marriages are very frequent, and are made for the most part from the sincerest motives of natural prefer ence, with sometimes an almost astonishing disregard for worldly advantages. married people, as a natural consequence, very speedily retire from the world, leaving the field in the possession of their successors. The manner of introducing a young girl to society is precisely the same as in other cities, a ball or large afternoon reception being given for that purpose. Flowers are sent by friends to testify their interest and affection, but not so generally as in the announcement of an engagement, when the fortunate damsel is over-wholmed with blossoms. The average age when young girls make their début is a little later than elsewhere, but their social career is and to be shorter than in other cities, as early contringes are the almost invariable rule. The type of younggirl, which the present condition of Chicago society produces, is unassuming, conventional, intelligent, but rather lacking in aplomb, and distinctly deficient in imagina-She is extremely well dressed, and she never by any chance offends against the most rigorous rules of social etiquette. She less fine qualities, but in rare instances has she the tastes or the possibilities of the real femme du monde. The first temleracy toward such ambi-tions or such development would be met with disapproval, condemned as queer, and such condemnation would bring with it a defensive attitude, hurtful to a sensitive mind.

CLUBS of every imaginable kind form very important factors in the life of Chicago society. In fact, a very large part of the social life of the city is conducted through their medium. There is a very important and successful literary club for men, where papers on various subjects of interest are read by the various members, besides the usual men's clubs for purely social purposes. The women's literary club are extremely interesting, well developed, and successful. "The Fortnightly," founded nearly twenty years ago by Mrs. Kate N. Doggett, whose memory for this good work is still beld blessed, is an extremely important organization, most successful in its working, most powerful in its influence upon society. It numbers some two hundred women, who hold themselves in readiness to write the paper which with its subsequent discussion forms the fortnightly program. Upon these papers is expended all the labor, study and care of which the writers are capable. They are uniformly interesting, valuable and sometimes even literary. The discussions are at times more interesting than the papers themselves, showing in many cases a very remarkable command of language, and serious and original thought. The "Friday Club," which has its meeting place on the North side, occupies a corresponding place for the younger women of Chicago. It is modeled on the "Fortnightly," and has been in increasingly successful operation for four years. The use which these organizations have in the farther development of the young minds which too often return to a fallow state after the restrictions of school are removed, cunnot be calculated. These two literary clubs are further aided by several clubs and classes for the study of particular authors in active and multifarious operation in the city itself and in the suburbs. The "Woman's Club" is a very large and useful organization, with aims which are more definite and practical, and is a large factor in the charitable work of the city. The "Twentether Chentry Club," founded two years ago, meets in

THE women of the world, the leaders of social life in Chicago, are the women whose influence is strongest toward intellectual development. Meeting on this basis, their minds, under the influence of the great mind they have elected to study, and under the stimulus of the electricity of a simultaneous consideration of the same great theme, they develop into a power of thought and a clearness of expression which is as unusual as it is interesting.

There is, strictly speaking, no literary coterie in Chicago, the number of those who have written books being indeed limited, but the love of good literature has entered into society

There is, strictly speaking, no literary coterie in Chicago, the number of those who have written books being indeed limited, but the love of good literature has entered into society at large, and has been the cause of a widely-spread intelligence in regard to all literary topics, which is as delightful as it may be surprising. Charles Dudley Warner, during the months which he spent in Chicago, confessed a genuine and generous surprise at the enthusiasm for good art and good literature which the women of Chicago evinced. He stated also, with what must seem an entirely impartial judgment, that what Chicago stood most in need of was a more definitely organized society. The elements are all there, but the number of those who understand the uniting and manipulating of those elements is so small that a few natural and inevitable changes in the personnel of this responsible order, suffice for the overthrowing of a movenent, or a standard, which may have only just been established. It would be extremely difficult to prophety what will be the ultimate development of Chicago society. Up to this time sincerity, entrestness of aim, a conventionality which has leaned toward Puritanian, and among the women a strong turning toward intellectual cultivation, have been distinguishing characteristics of the place.

The demand for the Addresses by Prof. Henry Drummond has been almost phenomenal, and the sales have run up into the bundreds of thousands. Well! it's no wonder—they are all of sterling value and have done a world of good. The latest edition, an elegant silver-stamped Vellum binding, with silvered edges, is retailed at $1.00. The Journal has secured an immense supply which will be sent out at fifty cents each, postpaid; or, as a Premium for 2 yearly subscribers.

"HOW TO MAKE OVER OLD DRESSES!

A book worth sending for. By Augusta Priscort, Woman Editor of Frank Leslie's Newspaper. It tells new and pretty ways of doing it. Chapters on Dysing, Patterns, Fitting, etc. Sent for 12 two-cent stamps. Home Book Co., Box 2029 F. New York.

Dressmakers, would you like to double your income this year? Our plan will enable you to do it. No charge for particulars. Crescent Clasp Works, 45 Main Street, Aun Arbor, Mich.

A FEW SPARE DOLLARS

Can be profitably invested in lots in Griffith, thirage's coming great factory saturb. See map on the back cover, and notice the four radiconds.

A BRIEF PRELUDE

A Story. By Margaret Butler Snow

IN TWO PARTS - CONCLUDING PART

T was early when the party reached the little wharf next morning. They stood waiting in the de-liciously mild sun-shine. Helen leaned strine. Heren leaned against a large box, idly pushing the point of her slim, silver-handled umbrella into handled umbrella into the cracks between the weather-beaten and shrunken old boards. Jack stood watching her, inwardly reproaching himself for the injustice he had done her beauty in remembrance. It was incredible how much prettier she was than he had thought her. The discovery of each new perfection gave him a subtie, wonderful sense of joy. Every thread of gold in her bright hair gleamed as the sun scarched it. The scrutiny of this clear morning light brought out all her exquisite culoring, the red in her checks paling in ing, the rest in her cheeks paling in comparison with the vivid scarlet of comparison with the vivid scarlet of her lips. Her hair grew in an exquisite line on her full, white neck behind her small, tinted ears. He noticed that the narrow white rim of her collar accentuated the warm creaminess of her skin. Behind her, the blue of the still water met the blue and white of the sky.

Mr. Bell, who had pulled his soft hat over his eyes, scanned the horizon after the manner of an experienced seaman. He said if they had had the day made to order, it could not have been more perfect. When had the day made to order, it could not have been more perfect. When the trim little boat was finally under way, they found the breeze sharp, in spite of the dazzling sunshine. Parsons appeared laden with rugs and fars, in which Mrs. Grey and Mrs. Bell were shortly enveloped comfortably in a sheltered nook in the stern. Jack lingered with them, sitting on a coil of huge rope. Helen was walking the deck with Mr. Bell, and presently the captain joined them. He was a plump, pompous little man, with a painstaking exactness indicative of a desire to make every inch count. He had the inevitable predilection of a seaman for a pretty girl, and painstaking exactness indicative of a desire to make every inch count. He had the inevitable predifiction of a seaman for a pretty girl, and an air of gallantry as rusty as the anchor of his boat. Helen's tall slenderness was emphasized as she walked by his side. She had put on a dark close-fitting ulster, with heavy black for about the throat and down the front. Her lithe figure swayed, as now and then they caught the full force of the wind.

"How graceful Miss Strong is," said Jack to Mrs. Grey with frank enthusiasm. He wanted to talk about her. Indeed, if he could not talk about her, he did not care to talk. He wondered if Mrs. Grey meant to be unamiable as she replied, "Strungers always say so." He rebelled at being thus unsatisfactority classified. "Beautiful as she is," went on Mrs. Grey, "I have never heard her called anything but graceful. She is surprisingly so. She always says and always does exactly the right thing, and her manner of doing it is perfect. She is so completely satisfactory. Her tact always makes me feel so brutally frank and blundering! Indeed, she is unbecoming to everyone. She makes us all appear rude and clumsy."

"Her greatest charm to me," said Mrs. Bell, taking up the theme to Jack's delight, "is her entire naturalness. She is so unconscious of the effect her extreme beauty produces. Her simplicity is sometimes mistaken for hauteur. Most girls nowadays have so many manners that Helen appears almost austere at times, she is so free from affecta pose. She is as gny as a child, and as the struckers and the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and as the struckers are she as a child, and at times, she is so free from affectation and pose. She is as gny as a child, and as irresisti-ble. We are apt to find ourselves praising her," she added, with an air of apology, "she has been with us since we came abroad, five years ago, and now I think we are beginning to wonder what we shall do when we have to give her up

"You could not praise her too much," said

Jack, warmly. His tone announced plainly that in his opinion it would be impossible to praise her enough. Mrs. Bell scrutinized him with an unwelcome sense of discovery, as he watched Helen, who came toward them now, her cheeks glowing, her hair slightly roughened by the wind. Her eyes were like stars, and her face was so radiant, they all smiled involuntarily, from pure sympathy with her abounding life and joy.

"Isn't it glorious?" she cried. "How can you make munmies of yourselves in this fashion? This air is buoyancy itself. I am

"Consider me. Eliquette would appoint me your escort, and I must say I should with reluctance follow you. Let us walk the deck

They went away together, his tall, fine fug-ure a fitting match for her alim height, When an intervening smoke-stack had labiden them from view, Mrs. Bell and Mrs. Grey turned to each other in expressive silence. Each read conviction in the other's eyes.

"You saw it too, did you?" said Mrs. Grey.
"Well, if you saw it my dear".— She paused. Her eyes rested on the line of the distant horizon.

distant horizon.

"Don't be considerate, Kate," said her cousin, with some spirit.

"I suppose you mean that if I saw it anyone could." Mrs. Grey laughest.

"I wonder if Helen,"— suggested Mrs. Bell, hoping to be rebuked for her audacity. But to her consternation Mrs. Grey replied laconically. laconically: "Yes Helen-

"Yes Helen—has," and then added de-cisively. "Last night." Then after an inter-val she said, "I am quite sure." The two ladies sat awhile in complete si-lence, their novels and periodicals unheeded upon their law.

npon their laps.

"It's a great responsibility," sighed Mrs.
Bell, at length, "a tremendous responsibility!
I don't wonder that Mr. Strong was willing to be relieved of it for awhile. Not that he is,

Mrs. Bell frivolously. "Parents do not under-stand their children. They are fortunate if their children understand them."

Mrs. Grey acquiesced silently; the idea was not new to her. She had always thought parents less clever than they thought them-

"I don't know exactly why I think so, but this time it struck me that Helen".— She broke off. The fleeting expressions of the giri's innocent, transparent eyes, the tones of her sweet young voice, were not to be discussed as coolly as the colors of a painting or the shades of a sunsetsky. Mrs. Bell understood, She rose, shaking off with her voluminous coverings the impression of uneasiness which their conversation had rather served to their conversation had rather served to strengthen.

"Come," she said, impatiently, "let us not disturb ourselves. Let us fall back upon the comfortable cushioned doctrine of the fatalist: "What will be, will be, praise be to Allah." Later she laid her hand on her cousin's arm and said impressively. "Say nothing of this to Samuel." to Samuel.

Mrs. Grey shrugged her shoulders, the only French phrase she had at her disposal. She stendily refused to adopt the gentle formulas of Mr. Bell's native tongue, which the others spoke with case. When at times she found some single word indispensable, she pro-nounced it with an accent uncompromisingly

"And you were coming toward Oban, that is, toward me," he went on. "All day long the hours were bringing us nearer and nearer to each other. I wish I had known. I wish I could have dreamed that I should be standing here with you to-night."

She could not pretend to misunderstand him. He could see the color fade from her soft, round cheek. Her lips were trembling. She tried to smile and speak lightly, but her voice shook a little as she said:

"Would you really choose to know your future if you could? I am not so courageous."

"I am," he replied. The resolution of his tone struck her. "I am not only willing but anxious to know something of my future—something you alone can tell me."

She made a quick gesture of entreaty, and was turning from him, when he said quictly:

"No: you will not refuse to listen. Let me." "And you were coming toward Oban, that "No; you will not refuse to listen. Let me tell you what I want. I want you. I want you to make my future for me."

In spite of her trouble, the tell-tale dimple twinkled a moment.

"You are trying to shirk your responsibili-ties" she marroured demands.

twinkled a moment.

"You are trying to shirk your responsibilities." she murmured demurely.

"No," he said, audaciously, "I will assume yours. If you will make noy future, I will make yours. Surely that is fair," he plended. His tone grew more serious. "Nothing could give me the courage to speak to you as I do but the conviction, deep-scated in my soul, that we were made for each other. Do you not feel it, know it, too?

When the moment came, thousands of miles from home, we met. In the first instant I saw you, I said to myself. 'If she could be my wife!' I have not been a man who saw in every attractive woman a possible flancée. I have never loved before. I would have begrudged to any other woman the most infinitesimal part of my heart. It is all yours. How could I withhold from you your property? It would not be honest!"

"But what you say is impossible, preposterous," murmured Helen.

Her whole being was in arms against this sudden siege, and yet she was helplessly perplexed and indignant—indignant at herself because his words did not displease her more. She must be very light, she told herself derialively. It seemed to her that to answer him at all, to recognize his impetuous appeal, was to accord him an advantage he would not be slow to take. To consider seriously what he was so stremnously unring was really out of the question. His take. To consider seriously what he was so strenuously unting was really out of the question. His confidence was absurd, irritating. Why should be suppose—She turned toward him, impatiently defing his coercive gaze.

"How did it occur to you to say such things to me?" she as ked coldly. "You and I are strangers. You do not know even one of my characteristics, and I know only one of yours, your—audacity."

"Don't be unkind," he begged gently. "It is not like you. You see I know you better than any one in the world knows you."

She told herself there was something actually sublime in his assurance. She was curious to know what the he world are. But to ance. She was curious to know what else he would say. But in her heart she knew that was not why she lingered, her eyes upturned

"Love cannot be measured by time," he went on. "I could not love you more if I had known you always. Why do you put the conventional above the real? Why should I not tell you that I love you? Just because hours only instead of days, or weeks, or months, or years must measure the time in which my love has grown? Some or years must measure the time in which my love has grown? Some one who has known you longer, and loves you much less, may pro-test his devotion and you do not question it. Why then do you doubt me? Ab, Helen, I know that you will love you!"

you will love me!"
For a moment she had an overwhelming sense of unreality, seemed to her that she understoo him better than she understood berself. Her beart vibrated tumultuously, responsive to his imperious pleading, strangely combating

You must not say more, I cannot listen," said irresolutely.

"I will not say another word,—— now" he swered. The reproach in her troubled face touched him.

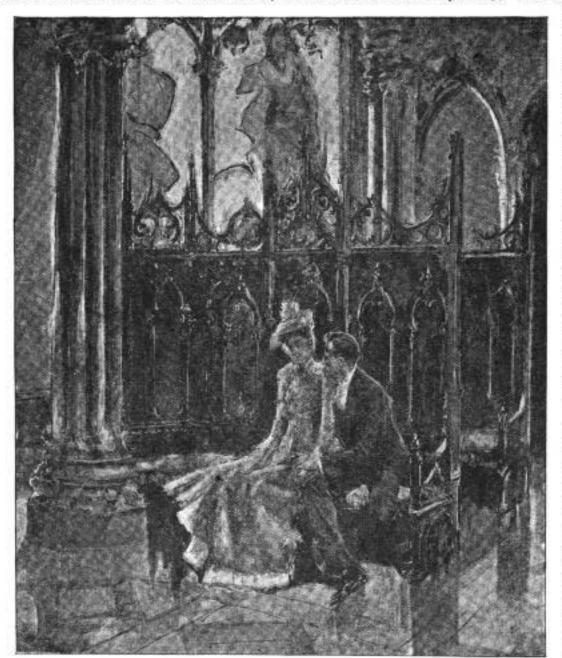

"But you will not say you will never listen, clen?" he pleaded. "We will forget what "But you wan not "We will forget wan. Helen?" he pleuded, "We will forget wan. I have said to-day, or pretend to, which will have said to-day. He made a preferre of full of tears. They

I have said to-day, or precent to, which while serve the purpose." He made a pretense of payety. Her eyes were full of tears. They turned to go.

"But I want to ask you one question," he said, besitating. "I know I have no right, but—you have been so kind. Do not answer if you are not willing. I must know if you- is there-- anyone else?

are you — is there — anyone else;

Helen's eyes met his fully. Her expression was more unkind than he had seen it, and her lips curled. Her answer filled him with despair, it showed him so clearly his offense. He wondered if she would ever forgive him. Her manner conveyed to him the idea that she her number conveyed to him the idea that she was resolving to be patient with him, not because he deserved it, but because her dignity demanded it. He felt that his question had quite obliterated for the moment any effect his ardest avowal might have made. He realized that it would be useless to attempt an explanation of the foreign is him that had in planation of the longing in him, that had im-pelled him to obtain some definite ground for

"Jack put his arm around Helen in the protecting gloom of the Cathedral and the music fell on their ears like a benediction."

though," she said a moment later, aghast with the sudden realization of his burden,
"He is responsible for us and our influence upon her! He has no way out of it!"

"No," said Mrs. Grey, grimly. "Children must be very — heavy," said Mrs. Bell somewhat lamely.

"Very," assented Mrs. Grey.
Presently Mrs. Bell suggested hopefully that they might be letting imagination run away with them. "We must not allow ourselves to grow suspicious," she said, "though I will admit our experience in the last five years would lead us to be. But there can't be anything in this—yet. It's absurd, impossible!"

"Nothing is impossible," said Mrs. Grey, with the air of one who has seen miracles, "And as for the absurd, I always expect it. I find that is the best plan. I do not think I flatter myself when I say that in my capacity as chaperone nothing — nothing could surprise me. I am hardened."

"I had hoped we would have a short season of peace after that last episode," said Mrs. Hell. "How many young men there seem to be! It is odd, and unpleasant—that they all want to marry Helen."

want to marry Helen."
"I am anxious that she should be happy."
said Mrs. Grey slowly. "If she only had a mother—I besitate to discuss these matters with her. I don't want her to make a neistake. If she were my daughter, now, I might understand her, and "----

"No, you would not understand ber," said

English. The shrug, however, she found irre-"Samuel will spenk of it to us," she retorted.

But for once she was mistaken, Mr. Bell had evidently noticed nothing.

One bright hour followed another with hewildering rapidity as the boat steamed on over the dancing water. After they left the locks behind, the sun began to send long, piercing mays from the west, tinting the sky as it sunk lower and lower. Jack and Helen stood up in the bow: her eves were fixed upon the gorgoous olors chasing each other among the fleecy

"I thought yesterday was perfect," Jack said, breaking a silence so eloquent that her face had flamed as she turned further from 'I did not know what perfection was, then. There were so many things I did know. Indeed, I wonder now how I ennot know. dured my empty, meaningless life-

"What were you doing yesterday?" asked Helen hastily, ignoring the translesome sig-nificance of his words and voice.

"I was standing just here, sailing up from tiluscow to Ohan," be answered slowly.

Here yes were lifted an instant in amaze-ment, but fell quickly before the expressive smile in his. He had turned his back upon the glittering sunset, and stood facing her. In his face was an expression of tender intent-ness. There were a few observers, who took a lenient interest in the tableau. Jack had forgotten there were other passengers on the boat.

"Do you think I would have let you say

"Do you think I would have let you say what you have said, if there had been anyone else?" she said icily. Then as his unhappy eyes met hers, she added gently, "I am surv you know there is not."

She woundered why she had been so undignified as to tell him. It was presumptuous in him to have asked. She should have refused to answer him. Her dissatisfaction with herself was extreme. She suspected berself of a most unworthy vanity. Her conduct had been indefensible. indefensible.

When they joined the others she found that she did not speedily regain her self-possession. Her checks were burning, and her hands trembled as she fastened her furs up about her trembled as she fastened her furs up about her throat. Jack talked to Mr. Bell with an air of perfect unconcern. She scorned her own emotion as she watched him. Perhaps he had been making an experiment, she thought, not without binerness. She was glad to be convinced, upon redection, that he had found her distinctly incredulous. She slipped her arm through Mrs. Bell's as they steamed slowly up the deep Clyde. Mr. Bell made ceaseless demands upon her attention, and she tried to listen to him with interest as he pointed out the great ocean steamers, standing like manuthe great ocean steamers, standing like mam-moth skeletons in the stocks, and the low green banks, almost even with the water's edge. She found that the wonderful harbor edge. She found that the wonderful harbor of Glasgow did not distract her attention. It seemed to her that all she heard was Jack's voice saying, "I know you better than you know, yourself. I know that you will love me." She was almost silent, but he was incessantly lively. She watched him in claudestine fashion, with an interest that provoked her fill and with the way interest. His splendid physique, the completenes of his masculinity gave her a reluctant thrill of proid. Once when he looked toward her he not her glance, and his eyes responded with a flash of satisfaction that made her face tingle. Impatiently she forced herself to join in their gay talk, conscious always of his ex-pressive eyes, though she ignored him with a pressive eyes, though she ignored him with a sources that amused him. It occurred to her that she was entertaining him. She could not understand how he had succeeded in making her so uncomfortable. The sensation was mored and not pleasant. She disliked him thoroughly. His assurance was amazing. His voice rangun her unwilling ears. "I know that you will have me." that you will love me."
When he came into Mrs. Bell's cozy little

When he came into Mrs. Bell's cozy little parlor that evening after dinner, Helen was not there. Mrs. Grey explained, with an inscritable expression that did not escape Jack, that a day on the water sometimes gave Helen a headache. She fancied it came from hereyes, perhaps. "A long sleep is all she needs. Common sense is my physician," she said, with the air of having a monopoly.

"Your physician certainly seems to have been successful," said Jack. "I have no doubt-Miss Strong's recovery will be immediate. I am sorry not to see her again. I go down to London by an early train."

Mrs. Bell gave Mrs. Grey a glance that said

Mrs. Bell gave Mrs. Grey a glance that said a number of things, as Jack turned to speak a number of things, as Jack tilrhed to speak to Mr. Bell. Mrs. Grey detected an irritating reference to her cousin's superior judgment, which did not, however, confuse her. She did not begradge Mrs. Bell the pleasure of saying "I told you so," especially as Jack's announcement simply strengthened her sus-nicions. She was too well used to the tactics picions. She was too well used to the tactics of the tender war of countship to be misled by sudden march or counter-march. She was by no means sure that they had seen the last of young Lochinvar, as she mentally styled him. She hardly thought that would be satisfactory. Under the careful indifference of the chaperone, she had discovered a lucking partiality for Jack, which surprised her considerably.

"What is there about him that is so—com-pelling?" she said to herself presently, when he and Mr. Bell had gone away together arm in arm. "He has bewitched us all." Mrs. Bell tempered her exultation with considera-Bell tempered her exhibition with considera-tion; she did not wish to appear unduly elated, though secretly she was not a little gratified to find herself in the right and her shrewd cousin so evidently wrong. This was rather a reao evidently wrong. This was rather a reversal of their ordinary positions, and she enjoyed the novelty. She could not, therefore, refrain from saying, "This will be a lesson to us. The next time a young man happens to look at Helen once or twice we will not immediately assume that he is in love with her. Imagine Mr. Callant's disgust if he knew of our suspicions. I am really mortified."

"Don't let it weery you," said Mrs. Grey, suppressing with difficulty a more sarcastic rejonader. She rejoiced in her superior insight. Life must be somewhat monotonous to the rejoinder. She rejoiced in her superior insi Life must be somewhat monotonous to people who never see through the hole in the peope who never see through the hole in the milli-stone, she thought with ironical compas-sion. "It's his own fault, anyway," she added gayly. "How could we suppose that he would not fall in love with her?"

When they went to say good-night to Helen they found her sitting by the fire, her gown of pale woolen cloth falling in straight folds about her plant figure, her cheeks flushed, her eyes bright with excitement. The room filled with the fragrance of noses, and held a great red bud with a long stem in her hand. "I am receiving the lowers of an invalid under false pretenses, 'she said, laughing. Look at the superb roses Mr. Callam has

"He was so sorry not to see you again," said Mrs. Bell, as she leaned over the flowers, drinking in their fragrance. "Samuel said be thought life business in London might be de-"Samuel said he ferred at least a day or two, but Mr. Callam was inexorable. Sommel is disconsolate,"

Mes. Grey was watching the light and color die out of the girl's face in diamay. Her shreadness was graffied at the expense of her comfort. She cavied Mrs. Bell her manapert-ing serenity, and thought that, after all, the responsibilities of a elever person were, per irksome. There were times when it might be even preferable to be stopid.

Sometimes, during the crowded days that followed. Helen wondered if she had dreamed that she shoul on a boat one evening, between daylight and dark, gliding swiftly along on smooth, tinted water, with a tall figure by her side, a face near here, dark eyes searching her own, and a deep, pleading voice in her cars. It was a vivid dream; an imperative dream, She could not forget it. At times it seemed to her that she could remember nothing else, But when she tried to recall with exactness the expression of his face, the tendencess of his brown eyes, they cluded her. She could not remember them with absolute distinctness, even when she sat alone, quite still, with her eyes closed and her hands folded in her lap. The tones of his voice still sounded clearly in her ears. She could recollect almost every word he said, although she told herself she did not care to understand him. She asked herself repeatedly why he had stocken and herself repeatedly why he had spoken, and why, after he had spoken, he had gone away so suddenly. She was conscious of an im-mense subsfaction in remembering her own share in the remarkable dialogue they had had; in her dream she liked to assure herself that she had succeeded in impressing upon him the realization of her entire indifference. It was the only thing he could have done. It It was the only thing he could have done. It was a romantic episode. She was glad it had been brief. The others had evidently forgotten him already. His name had not been mentioned since they left Glasgow. Their very silence spoke of him to her, but she could not bring herself to break it. She had grown curiously listless. She had told herself she was homesick so often, she had almost come to believe it. They were all a trifle dispirited. They said it was the result of too much sight-seeing. In undertaking to show treland to Helen in the weeks at their disposal before they sailed, some reminiscent enthubefore they sailed, some reminiscent enthu-siasm and been disclosed, which they wel-comed with amusement, contrasting it, in faint show of apology, with the apathy they had of late found more comfortable. They could not, any of them, have said why it sud-denly seemed of importance that not a lake or legend escaped them.

Mrs. Grey said she rather enjoyed masquer ading as an intelligent tourist; she believed they got the most out of Europe after all. She could understand how people contracted the habit of seeing everything there was to be seen, and doing everything there was to be done.

Mrs. field said she thought it was a most permicious habit. She said Ireland was larger than when she saw it last, and tiresome to a degree. They all admitted there were limits to their strength.

Mrs. Grey watched Helen with concern.

When she scolded herself for imagining that there was any reason to associate the girl's languor and restlessness with that attractive fellow-voyager of theirs from Oban to Glasgow, she would see again in remembrance the ex-pression of his eyes as they rested with elo-quent content on Helen's face. And again quent content on Helen's face. And again would come before her, in mute sustainment of her theory, the pitiful surprise in Helen's face the night he went away. The sparkle had not come back to her eyes since, nor the old irrepressible smile to her lips. At the end of every unsatisfactorily obscure soliloquy, Mrs. Grey said determinedly, "There was something!" But what, she was not exactly prepared to say.

They came down the river from Cork to Queenstown the morning of the day they were to sail. Mr. Bell was perceptibly pre-occupied. It struck them that excitement had made considerable inroad upon his usual imperturba-bility. Mrs. Bell asked him if he had had unwelcome business letters, but he told her that on the contrary he was about to close that on the contrary he was about to close successfully one of the most profitable schemes with which he had ever been connected. "And the most interesting," he added. "It is one of pure philanthropy. I will tell you and Kate about it presently. I want your approval." He went away smiling quizzleally. They did not sail until four o'clock. Helen said she would climb up the steep street to the queer old Cathedral and say a prayer for each of them before the altar of some saint. She had been gone about five minutes and the swarm of beggars had settled again upon the steps, blessing her as the "Beautiful angel," "Sister of the Virgin and all the saints," when Mr. Bell walked into the parior where his wife and Mrs. Grey were still sitting. Triumph was not unmixed with embarrassment as beled Mr. Cullam up to them. This latter were led Mr. Callam up to them. This latter wore a more successful smile, though it was evident that he confronted the bewilderment of the ladies with some little effort. It did not occur to them to mitigate the severity of their as-

"Please compromise with your surprise," be begged gayly, as he reached them. "Your amazement is disheartening. It seems to de-mand an adequate reason for my presence. I don't know that I have one——yet."

don't know that I have one —yet."
"We are glad to see you," said Mrs. Bell, politeness tardily victorious, "But who politeness tardily victorious. "But who would have thought of seeing you here. Why are you not over on the Continent?" "Can you not sharpen the point of your in-quiry, Esther?" said Mrs. Grey ironically. "Don't specify, Mr. Callam. We are more clever than we look." Jack laughed. "There is a charming Jack laughed, reason," he said, turning again to Mrs. Bell. "but I have not yet the right to call it mine."

"Oh 1" she exclaimed helpiessly,
"Miss Strong has gone up to the Cathedral," announced Mrs. Grey in a most matter-of-fact way. She turned to the window, but the "I shall follow her," said Jack, simply.

He held out a hand to each of the ladies.

"Wish me success," he said earnestly. "I know I don't deserve it, but I will live only to he worthy of her.

When he had gone Mr. Bell underwent a rigid investigation. He bore it with equa-nimity, explaining his share in the "conas the ladies irately termed it-with a composure and satisfaction that did not dispose them to more readily condone his offense.

"It strikes me as an incompreheashly undignified proceeding," said Mrs. Grey.

Why could not Mr. Callam have waited nntl) we were at home and gone about it in the ordinary fushion? But I rely on Helen.

She will not decide anything now."
"No doubt," said Mr. Bell drily.
"But how was it all?" demanded his wife, "But how was it all?" demanded his wife, finding her cariosity stronger than her dignity. "Did he propose to you first? He seems to be quite discreet."

"Very un-American," said Mrs. Grey.

"He proposed to Heien on the boat coming down from Oban," announced Mr. Bell.

Then there was no denying the fact that he found the situation enjoyable. The ladies found it extremely examination.

found the situation enjoyable. The ladies found it extremely exasperating.

"I knew there was something," murmured Mrs. Grey triumplantly.

"She would not listen," went on Mr. Bell.

"She was confused by his sudden, and as he admits, vehement appeal. But the interview did not leave him entirely hopeless. He got the impression from something in her manner, —the je ne suie quoi all invers value—that she might some day relent. So he went away to might some day relent. So he went away to wait awhite."

main some day reient. So he went away to wait awhite."

"I should have thought he would have stayed with her and let her learn to know him," said Mrs. Bell. "His methods are certainly unique." said Mr. Bell, with enthusiasm. "He understands his case. You will see. I have been watching Helen. Three weeks ago I would have said there was no such thing as love at first sight. I know better now. I have seen it."

"Well, of all the deceifful men!" gasped Mrs. Grey. "Samuel Hell, my confidence in you is completely undermined!"

"When did hetell you this?" asked his wife. "Hefore he left Glasgow," said Mr. Bell. There was an impressive silence.

"You will have to bear all the responsibility," said Mrs. Grey, finally.

bility," said Mrs. Grey, finally,
"I am anxious to," said Mr. Bell, cheerfully. "Kate and I can wash our hands of the whole matter," said Mrs. Bell, "Yes, I should think you might," he rejoined, not without saveasm.

"You must tell Mr. Strong," said Mrs.

Grey. "I have," he said coulty. "I wrote him "I have," he said costly, "I wrote aim from Glasgow. I gave him a succinct statement of facts, probabilities and desimbilities. Jack wrote him also. We also sent details to Mr. Callam, senior. O, this affair has been well managed," he continued serenely, "though we have not had the benefit of outside advice. I fairly there will be no streamous side advice. I fairly there will be no streamous and the senior of the senior will be no streamous. opposition on either side. They will make a fine couple. To tell the whole truth," he added, "I did not want either of them to be wasted on any one else, if I could help it." "How indispensable to Providence your assistance must be," said Mrs. Grey, scorn-fully

"I hope so," he answered,
"Samuel," began his wife severely.
"Yes, dear," he said, as she hesitated.
"Don't try to express yourself. It would be too much for you. Let this be a lesson to you and Kate. When you think I don't see anything try and resilise that I see everything.
All men are so." Presently he said, chuckling:
"I don't wonder you women enjoy match-"I don't wonder you women enjoy match-making. I find it hugely agreeable."
"I never made a match in my life!" cried

Mrs. Grey, indignantly.

Nor f," said Mrs. Bell with equal spirit.

"No?" he answered, politely incredulent.

"Then let me recommend it. You don't know

"Then let me recommend it. You don't know how much pure joy you have missed," Helen was sitting on one of the stiff, narrow benches in a dim corner of the musty old Cathedral when Jack finally discovered her after a pilgrimage through the shadows. When he softly spoke her name, she was not conscious of any structure. In that first conscious of any surprise. In that first moment of substied fulfillment it seemed to her that she had been waiting for him, even expecting him to come. It was not possible to imagine what her life would have been if he had not.
"I thought"—she stopped,

"I thought"—she stopped.

Perhaps she felt her eyes were doing duty for her lips. They were. He took both her hands in his and drew her close.

"Well," he said, as she did not speak.

He watched the color come and go in her sweet, pale face. No after moment of his life could compare with this, he thought, trying to realize his happiness.

"Then if you will not tell me what you

to realize his happiness.

"Then, if you will not tell me what you thought," he whispered with triumphant tenderness, "I will tell you what I thought. I thought—you would be glad to see me."
When he told her that he had arranged to sail with her in case she gave him her permission, her look told him all he had not yet carved her to see.

coaxed her to say. "You are a most presuming person," she said, her happy eyes approving while her lips rebuked. "You ought to have been sent sway disconsolate, just for the mere principle of the thing."

"O, this is much nicer," he said lightly,
"and, beside, I would have come again. You have savel yourself a great deal of trouble!"
She said she thought he ought not give up the course of study and travel abroad be had planned. She made a faint protest against such a sacrifice for her sake

He succeeded, after some angument, in conringing her that it would be at the sacrifice of his happiness if he went on with it. And finally she seemed to believe him, yielding contentedly to his invincible logic as he told her that she could teach him more in one hour than he could learn in Europe in a year. Suddenly the deep silence was broken by a glorious burst of melody that seemed to fairly envelop them. For down among the deeper shadows of the choir a young monk, with the face of an angel, sat before the organ, the flickering light from the candelabra shining on his sad, sensitive mouth, white forehead, and upturned, dreamy eyes, Jack put his arm around Helen in the pro-tecting gloom. The music fell on their ears like a benediction—a forecast to them of the harmony of their new life, which should be without a break or discord. THE COLLEGE GRADUATE AT HOME

BY HELEN JAY

HE young girl graduste on her return to her family after an ab-sence of four years has much to try her. The year fellowing day on which she received her diploma constitutes one of the perilous times of her life. Everything has changed in her home since she left it, and she must learn to readjust herself to new conditions. During her vacations she has hardly realized this fact, because she has been feted and treated like an honored guest. Her favorite dainty dishes have been set before her, she has occupied the pleasuatest room in the house, and her wishes have been consulted on every subject. Her mother, with the unselfishness so characteris-tic of mothers, has kept her in ignorance of many of the trials and troubles which the other members of the family have suffered. All the letters from home have been bright and cheerful, and contained no mention of the self-denial practiced in order that the daughter might have the buxuries dear to girlish hearts. The equality of college life, its freedom from domestic care, the absence of troublesome litdomestic care, the absence of troublesome lit-tile brothers and sisters, and a careworn, per-haps unpresentable, father, have unfitted the girl, in a degree at lenst, to take her place in the family circle. She has been spared so much that her moral muscles have relaxed a little, and unconsciously to herself she has come to believe that the very sacrifices made in her behalf elevate her above those who have made them. have made them.

After the first glow of the welcome home has cooled, the young graduate becomes discontented. The little sister who used to obey her every word has suddenly become a precocious girl with decided opinions of her own, and resents the appearance on the domestic stage of one who may dispute or usurp her rule. The brothers have outgrown the pretty stage of their boyhood and are inclined to be rough and untidy. In her heart she is ashamed of her father, or rather his manners, and sometimes the provincialities of the dear patient mother make her wince. The old neighbors and friends appear coarse and uninteresting, and she wonders how she ever endured them.

She feels that her education is being thrown away and the best years of her life wasted.

The first impulse that comes to a girl under such circumstances is flight. Sometimes she succeeds in getting a position in a distant city, and compromises with her conscience by sending home a goodly share of her scanty carnings. If for any reason she is compelled to remain with her family, she escapes as often as possible into all kinds of charitable and philanthropic regions. She joins associations, and works diligently for causes which take her thought and time away from the colling her thought and time away from the galling pettiness of her surroundings. Foreign mis-sions present a much easier field than the home circle. It is more gratifying to her systhetic sense to recognize her relationship to a king immortal, eternal, than to own be simple duty to a disagreeable earthly father.

Our young graduate has committed to her reping the answering of the questions: Does it pay for people in ordinary circumstances to send their daughters to college? Does not the highly educated child look down upon the less cultured parent until the bome life is made unlappy? Is it right that one member of a should receive so much more than the others?

The sole object of class-room training is not the development of the money-making facul-ties. The translation of culture into character is more important than turning an education into a salary. "The fitting of self to one's sphere" calls for as much mental discipline as any profession. If the young graduate will realize these facts and look about where God has placed her, she will discover several things. First that the mother whose selfsacrifice made possible her college life, has a more genuine love of knowledge for its own sake than she possesses. She has sent her child to a feast for which she has been famish-ing all her life. Now what shall be her reward? More mental starvation added to keen disappointment, or the delights of loving intimate intercourse with an educated woman, alert brained, suggestive and stimulating? Simply by her companionship the graduate can renew that dear little mother's youth and put her in touch with the outside world. Think what it means for a fired, burdened soul to have strong young arms about her and a sympathizing adviser in her domestic trials. Only the begal that is shared is blessed by a miracle. The daughter in her tender ministry learns more than her classics ever taught be and to her crude knowledge is added the riceness of wisdom.

She finds, too, that the little brother and sister need teaching quite as much as if they were objects of charity. Does not the one who has received so much owe them something, and shall it not be payment in kind?

The elder sister, too, by reason of the charm of her culture and young ladyhood, can gain influence over the boy just beginning to find home stupid, and save him for a home of his own. There is a demand now for educated young women, able to deny themselves a little of the luxury of philanthropy and the fad of unnecessary self-support, in order to do justly along the simple lines of family life.

XVI.—THE WIFE OF EUGENE FIELD

BY JOHN BALLASTYNE

RS. Engene Field is a remark-able woman. To appre-ciate this fact in all its dimensions it is necessary to know her husband, and to be familiar with his daily life. Mr. Field is one of those men who are said to be very "trying." He is free from what are commonly called vices, and he is affectionate and devoted to his family; but he is a genius, and when that is said all is said. A lady of wide experience and close observation once remarked that while a man of genius was one to admire and look up to, possibly to worship, he was generally "a great trouble about a house." This describes Mr. Field's case exactly. He is estimated and loved by all who come in contact with him, and he is worthy of the sentiments he inspires: but worthy of the sentiments he inspires; but he is nervous, dyspeptic, usually amiable n are an amen't and fair and tinder, Ocer brown aged Little anatheest suit hu , a tellow goubl and alcader, Justs to be your relation. - Engra Free.

MRS. FIELD

but at times extremely irritable, always out at times extremely irritable, always eccentric, extravagant, generous to the point of prodigality, a creature of impulse and a perpetual obstacle to orderly living, systematic housekeeping and good domestic discipline. He loves books, pictures, curiosities of every description, dogs, chickens and birds. Upon the inanimate objects he layer these already of this increase of a product of the contract of this increase and agent are already of this increase. ishes a large part of his incom-, and upon the living creatures the choicest viands that he can openly or surreptitiously extract from the larder. By a supreme exercise of her authority Mrs. Field has contrived to keep the chickens out of the house, but the books, dogs, birds and curiosities occupy every nook and corner that is not absolutely required for and corner that is not absolutely required for chairs and beds. No one realizes better than Mr. Field himself what Mrs. Field has had to endure by reason of his peculiarities, and he illustrates this by narrating a dream he claims to have had. "I thought," he says, "that I had died and gone to heaven. I had some difficulty in getting past St. Peter, who ex-amined my record closely and regarded me with doubt and suspicion, but finally permit-ted me to enter the pearly gates. As I walked up the street of the heavenly city I saw a ven-erable old man, with long gray hair and flowerable old man, with long gray hair and flow-ing beard. His benignant face encouraged me to address him. 'I have just arrived and I am entirely unacquainted, I said. 'May I ask your name?

"'Oh yes,' he replied, "I'm Job."
"'Indeed," I exclaimed, 'are you that Job whom we were taught to revere as the most patient man in the world?"

he said, with a show of hesitation, yes, I did have quite a reputation for patience once, but I hear that there is a woman now on earth who has suffered more than I ever did and has endured it with greater resigna-

* In this series of pen-portralis of "Unknown Wives of Well-Known Men," commesced in the January, 1881, 30038345, the following, each accompanied with portrait, have been printed:

POTTAIL, have been printed:

Mis. Tennas A. Eddect January 1901
Mis. P. Barnov S. Pederury " Mis. T. Barnov S. Pederury "
Mis. T. Barnov S. Pederury "
Mis. T. De Wirth Talmade Arell "
Mis. T. De Wirth Talmade Arell " Mis. CLAUNCHY M. DEFEW May "
Lady MacDONALD June "
Mis. Joul. Chandern Harris July " Lady Tensysos Agnot " Mis. William McKenley Gender "
Mis. William McKenley Gender "
Mis. William McKenley Gender "
Mis. Mis. William McKenley Gender "
Mis. Mis. William McKenley Gender "
Mis. Mis. William Mis. September "
Mis. Mis. William Mis. September "
Mis. Jenny Manakem January 1801
Mis. Charles H. Evonomis Mis. Mis. Charles H. Evonomis Mis. Mis. Charles H. Evonomis Mis. Asy of these back resubses on he had at 10 came each by writing to the Journals.

"' Why, said I, ' that is curious. I am just from earth and I do not remember to have heard of her case. What is her name?" of her case. What is her name?'
"'Mrs. Eugene Field,' was the reply. Just then I awoke.

Mrs. Field's trials have left no mark upon her face nor wrought any change in her dis-position. She is as girlish in appearance and as equable in temper as she was in her youth. The portrait which accompanies this sketch is from a photograph taken five years ago, yet a later one, taken last September in which her children are grouped around her, does not add a year to her age or a line to her face. She might rendily be mistaken for an elder sister of her youngest boy. Mr. Field touches very gracefully on this point in a poem written upon and relating to his thirty-ninth birthday:

"And you, dear girl, with velvet eyes, I wonder what you mean Through all our keen anxieties By Keeping sweet stateen."

By keeping sweet stateen."

Mrs. Field—Julia Sutherland Comstock—was born December 8th, 1856, at Bainbridge. Chenango County, New York. Her faftler, Alexander A. Comstock, was a prosperous merchant, whose fortune had been considerably augmented by a legacy from his elder brother, Samuel Comstock, a wealthy trader. Her mother, who still lives, was Ann Sutherland—one of the Sutherlands whose ancestors came from Scotland in the old colonial days and settled in the western part of New York. About 1867 or 1868, Mr. and Mrs. Comstock removed to St. Joseph, Mo., and it was there that Mr. Field met, wooed, won and married his wife. She was the second of five beautiful sisters, who are still spoken of in St. married his wife. She was the second of five beautiful sisters, who are still spoken of in St. Joseph as "the pretty Comstock girls." Mr. Field had been studying, or at least had been at the University of Missouri, at Columbia, and had become intimately acquainted with Edgar V. Comstock, a fellow-student. They arranged to go to Europe together, and prior to their departure Mr. Field was invited to spend a few days at the Comstock residence. He accepted, and there was introduced to Julia, then a girl of fifteen. It was a case of love at first sight. Mr. Field remained a month, and during the whole time devoted himself to the object of his affection. In a poem entitled "Lovers' Lane," not included in his published works, Mr. Field has commenorated the days of their wooing. It was written about a year ago, while they were in London. Here are two of the verses:

"Let us shawhile, beloved.

"Let us sit awhile, beloved,
And dream of the good old days, of the kindly shade the willows made Round the shaunch but creaky chals
With your head upon my shoulder
And my arm about you, so, Though exiles, we may seem to be In Lovers' Lane, Saint Joe.

In the Union Bank of London
Are firsty pounds, or more,
Which I'm like to spend ere the month shall end
In an anchoadan store.
But I'd givels all, and gladly,
If for an hour or so I exaid feel the grace of that distant place—
Of Lovers' Lane, Saint Joe."

To those who know the poet intimately, the line referring to the creaky chaise speaks eloquently of the depth of his passion. Mr. Field looks upon a horse as a savage beast, which, like the Scriptural lion, goeth about seeking whom he may derour. His regard for Miss Julia must have been strong indeed if it enabled him to overcome his prejudice and take her out driving.

take her out driving.

At the end of a month Mr. Field had declared himself and been accepted. It was arranged that the marriage should take place on ranged that the marriage should take place on his return from Europe, where he proposed to remain a year. He said good-bye to his be-loved and with her brother as a companion went to New York to embark. Somewhere in the east Mr. Comstock lost sight of him, and after several days of careful investigation learned that he had gone back to St. Joseph for another fond farewell. At last they sailed, but six months of absence was all that Mr. Field could endure, and at the end of that period he returned to America, hurried to the home of his little sweetherst and insisted on benne of his little sweetheart and insisted on a speedy wedding. Of course, he carried his point; men always do in such cases. He was then twenty-three; sh. was barely sixteen. On attaining his majority Mr. Field had come into possession of a handsome fortune, left to his possession.

come into possession of a handsome fortune, left to him by his father. At twenty-three he had contrived to part with large slice of it, and as he had no occupation and lived expensively after his marriage, the housekeeping bills made serious inronds upon the balance. Before it was entirely exhausted he engaged in newspaper work, but as his salary was paid in promises instead of currency his labors did not serve to check the drain upon his bank not serve to check the drain upon his bank account. However, he gained a knowledge of aper ausiness, and when his money was all gone he was enabled to take a position on a solvent journal. The income thus gained was small, but it served to support them after a fashion, though only Mrs. Field could tell the straits to which they were sometimes reduced. It was the experience of their early married life that made her the financial manager she is to-day. It is fortunate for the entire family that she profited by the lessons of that period of poverty, for they made no im-pression upon her husband. He is just as improvident a: ever, and although his income now a large one—sufficient to provide all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life—it would hardly pay the expenses of the bouse-hold, added to those of Mr. Field's mania for books and curios, but for her wise administration of the funds. There is only one weak point in her funds. There is only one weak point in her fundatial armor: she still reposes confidence in her husband. Notwithstanding reseated breaches of faith, she frequently intrusts him with sums which she has appropri-ated for specific and necessary purposes, hoping against hope that he may not divert them to other and unnecessary ones. A case in point occurred recently. She had with some difficulty scraped together the money with which to make a payment on his life insurance policy, and unwisely constituted him her agent for the transaction of the business. A few hours later he returned to the house accompanied by a man who bore eight large paste-board boxes on his shoulder. Mr. Field had board boxes on his shoulder. Mr. Field had come upon a very fine collection of butterflies —eight hundred specimens—and, forgetting all about the insurance, had purchased them. Although it was a seriously embarrassing mat-ter to Mrs. Field just at that time, her only complaint was expressed in these words: "Dear me, Gene, where on earth can we put all those things?"

Mrs. Field is always worken of as a little

Mrs. Field is always spoken of as a little woman, but, as a matter of fact, she is somewhat above the medium height and fully up to the medium weight. Her head is rather small, and her hands and feet extremely so, and and her hands and leet extremely so, and somehow she gives the impression of littleness. She has soft brown hair and eyes—velvet eyes, her husband calls them—and a complexion as clear and fair as a child's. She is the mother of six children, three of whom live to remind her that, in spite of her youthful appearance, time is fleeting. Her eldest is a daughter of fifteen, already taller than her mother. She is the Mary French Field to whom Mr. Field's "Little Book of Profitable Tales" is dedi-cated. The other two are how. French and "Little Book of Profitable Tales" is decli-cated. The other two are boys, Eugene, aged twelve, and Frederick, aged ten. The latter is the baby of the family. It was to him that Mr. Field addressed his lines "To a Usurper," written five or six years ago. In this little poem he has paid a deserved tribute to his wife's steadfast and loyal devotion. It occurs in the last verse:

" And when that other comes to you, God grant her love may shine Through all your life, as fair and true As mamma's does through mine."

in the last verse:

With her household cares, with the finan-cial question always present to worry her, with her children to bring up and clothe and educate, Mrs. Field has had no time to devote educate, Mrs. Field has had no time to devote to literature, and is content to bask in the light of her husband's fame. But if by any chance her private correspondence is ever given to the world, it will reveal a depth of feeling and a power of expression of which some of the foremost women writers of Ameri-ca might envy her the possession.

• II-BY GRACE GREENWOOD

I N my mind's eye, as I look back, 1 bell-id—at first, a quaintly attired, dark, alender, big-eyed, bashful little miss, so impulsive and maladroit as to be fearfully liable to say and do the ways thing. and do the wrong thing; absurdly trustful, oppres-sively affectionate, yet hottempered and morbidly sensitive; dreamy, moody sensitive; dreamy, moody, full of strange fancies and odd ways, and thought by the neighbors "a little queer." That's her picture; yet, somehow, I like the girl. She—that is, I—was excessively fond of, pitiful and "clummy" with, animals, and my menagerie of pets included everything petable that was also get-at-able. We were country folks then, living in central New York. My father, physician and secholar, was that hapless anomaly—a gentleman-farmer—"land-poor" in poor land, which took most kindly to crops of "Canada thistles," bushwood and boulders. The domain was picturesque—very. Artists would have got more out of it than ever we did. There was nothing romantic about our old mansion. It possessed no ghost; but I suspect it once had something as good at the haunting business—a mortgage.

To my parents, and the elder brothers and sisters, emigrés from New England, and accus-tomed to refined and intellectual society, life tomed to refined and intellectual society, life here must have seemed very primitive and poky; but all endeavored to get cujoyment out of such rustic and provincial interests and amusements as contented their neighbors. I remember delightful huskings and apple-paring bees, cider and maple-sugar making, spelling school contests, quiltings, sleighing and donation parties, and that immense annual occasion, the Fourth of July celebration in the village, when our short presided itself on village, when our choir wreaked itself on "Hall Columbia," a real congressman gave England a sound rating, and on the green was fired off a real Revolutionary cannon, which could be heard a quarter of a mile away when the wind was favorable. Occasionally we had an academy exhibition, at which real plays were acted, with costumes and scenery, the latter consisting mostly of druped clothes-horses and hemlock boughs. Once, when a favored, but badly frightened, little girl was al-lowed to "speak a piece" on the stage, and was applauded generously for what nobody had heard, her laurels would not let me sleep. Yet when, another time, my brother recited bravely, and with tremendous success,
"The Sailor Boy's dream," I felt that the glory of our family was assured.

I was a happy girl on the day of my first circus. It was a pre-Barnumite affair of but one ring, but that was a fairy ring, and the very queen of fairies was the wondrous girl in gauze and spangles who rode at full gallop a flery piebald steed, standing up—I mean the girl. My beart lesped with her over the bars and through the hoops. There was but one clown, but he was soul-satisfying; his fun being fresh and his nonsense new. In half a ing fresh and his nonsense new. In nail a century such things get a little stale. After this visit to the circus, which had thrilled me with a strange sense of daring but delicious wickedness, I hankered after the magic sphere of the saw-dusted circle, and actually cherished a secret ambition to become the cherished a secret ambition to become the champion equestrienne of America. I practiced long and diligently, in pastures and woods, with a gentle pony, and at last was able to ride "standing up," without chalked shoes, or any shoes at all, as a matter of fact. When I rode with the saddle I essayed some daring tricks, among them that of swinging myself low enough toward the ground to pluck wild flowers. I did not care to disturb daisies or violets, they looked so pretty where they were! The golden-rod was my favorite trophy. Accomplished at last in leaping and in horse management, I believed myself fitted to shine in the haute doole of equestrianism; to shine in the Aguts école of equestrianism; and then I somehow consed to think of it as and then I somehow censed to think of it as a means of money-making and glory-getting, though it was long my chief passion.

*The second of a series of articles commenced by Mrs. Amelia E. Barr, in the last December Journal, in which a sextette of the most famous women of America and Europe have been induced to bell low life looked to them in girlhood, what were their hopes, their dreams and their ambitious, and how they have been realized in later years. The other articles in this sectes will appear in succeeding issues of the Journal.

During the dull seasons, when no crops were out, no shows about, and no elections pending, the sensations which kept our rural society alive were, for the most part, religious revivals, or, as they were then called, "protracted meetings." I was allowed, after persistent teasing, to attend some of these, my good "other thinking I was too young to take in the unadulterated Calvinism them preached with ferry zeal and terrible cornest. preached with fiery zeal and terrible enruest-ness. But I got enough. I grew morbid and unhappy, grieving over my "total deprayity," and wrestling with the doctrine of predesti-nation. The ardent revivalists stopping at our house helped on this precoclous attack of niets by solerands constitutions are on my this our house helped on this precocious attack of piety by solemnly questioning me on my spir-itual condition, which they seemed to think precarious. They felt my moral pulse, and so mercilessly probed and percussed my immor-tal part that I could no longer say my soul was my own. Sometimes while "under the question." I broke into wild weeping, not so much from a conviction of my own sinful-ness, as of the cruel indelicacy of prying into the secret, tender feelings of a child toward her Saviour.

But this unhappy and unnatural religious excitement subsided after a time, as it always excitement subsided after a time, as it always does with children, unless it kills them and makes "memoirs" out of them, and I returned to my pets and dolls and play, only a little saddened by my soleum experience. Yet, though certain early beliefs have been modified, one profound religious feeling has remained with me always—the will, the fervent desire to do some little good in this, our Master's suffering world.

mained with me always—the will, the fervent desire to do some little good in this, our Master's suffering world.

Life stretched before me in my early girlhood a misty, illimitable expanse—a goodly, flowery land, but not without its rough places and lurking perils—pretty much as I have found it. I was not practical enough to form any distinct plans for my womanhood. When most serious I dreamed of going as a missionary to India, but really I could not leave my mother, and she declined to go. Then I planned to marry some time a popular revivalist, and travel with him, sharing his glory and reward. I thought that if I should prove a good, hard-working wife he would not worry me about my soul. But nothing came of that little plan, for lack of the minister.

My first journey into the great world beyond our hills was by the Eric Canal. There were them no milroads in our part of the country, but a trip on that wondrous watery highway by a fast packet, the horses always on the trot, was, I can tell you, something bewildering and exhibitating in its rapidity, novelty and variety. The "lock passages" were thrilling episodes. We were only five days in going from Syracuse to Buffalo! It reminded me of the "magic carpet" journeys in the "Arabian Nights."

I received my last modicum of school learning at Rochester, in the dear, old Collegiate in the "Arabian Nights."

I received my last modicum of school learning at Rochester, in the dear, old Collegiate Institute. While there I was, for a time, fired with the ambition to be a great teacher. "Great" was always a size qua uon in my plans. Arithmetic it was that checkmated me nere, overcame me with such utter defeat and humiliation that I felt before the blackboard as though standing in a pillory, in the midst of a jeering poptlace. As for the higher mathematics, I never dared to lift my eyes toward such tremendous mysteries. I took ardently to Latin, thought I had a grand passion for "the Prince of Latin poets," but it proved only a flirtation. only a flirtation.

I also took delight in two or three modern languages, toiling and togging at the roots of them bravely. Nowadays, some of these seem, by neglect and disuse, to have become disintegrated, in my desultory and distracted mind, into "words, words, words," a useless, straggling, polyglot lot. Yet, I doubt not, all the knowledge ever gained by honest study, and mourned as lost, is safe, lying pendu and dor-mant in dusky nooks and corners of the memory, to wake and come forth in good order, when the morning breaks.

Of my early literary aspirations and efforts
I have already told the simple story in the JOURNAL'S pages. My girlhood was shadowed by some sorrows and precedents anxieties, but it was blessed with much love and harmo-nious domestic relations. What there was to enjoy I enjoyed intensely, especially reading. Books did not then cram the world and bulge out over the edges as now, but were rare and costly enough to be prized and decently

Since those old, young days I have gone much up and down the earth, impelled by a restless spirit, a longing "strange countries for resiles spirit, a longing "strange countries for to see," a love of art, and by hero and poet worship. Oddly enough, in every ancient city, in the scenes of old romance, at the shrines of genius, in historic temples and palaces, even before boary ruins, my girthood seemed to return to me in all its fresh and peverent. enthusiasm and enger energies Where things about me were old, I felt young. and I humbly pray that when I reach the eternal city of the immortals I may find myself

ngain a girl- and product Digitized by Google

A SONG FOR EASTER-TIDE

BY HEZEKIAH BUTTERWORTH

ON the wings of the morning, my spirit, arise, And join the full chorus that gladdens the skies;

The stone from the tomb of the ages is rolled, The chains of mortality broken, behold! Let me rise, let me rise on the wings of the light,

And in antiphones new with the angels unite: The dumb tomb has spoken, and falls on our cars

The Song of the Morning that gladdens the spheres!

The skies are all glowing, unfettered the rills; The flowers of the south winds are lighting the hills!

But what were the glories of spring times that fade If the dead in the chamber of silence were laid t Arise, then, my soul, on the wings of the light;

Thy songs with the messenger angels unite: The dumb tomb has spoken i mortality hears The Song of the Morning that gladdens the spheres !

Celestial doors open, and falls on Faith's ear An anthem as sweet as the reeds of Judea, Now rising triumphant, the chorus of time And the bells of the blessed conjubilant chime. Arise, O my soul, on the wings of the light. In the songs of the Cross with the victors unite; The damb tomb has spoken i mortality hears. The Song of the Morning that gladdens the soberes :

The Cross gleams above us, below smile the

The tomb is a chamber of heavenly dowers New life glows within us, and it will not be long

That our psalms we shall sing in these prisons of song. Arise, then arise on the wings of the light,

With the skies singing o'er us in chorus unite; The dumb tomb has spoken, and falls on our ears

The Song of the Morning that gladdens the spheres t

A GLIMPSE OF FANNY KEMBLE

By FREDERICK DOLMAN

N the preface to her "Rec-ords of a Later Life," Fauny Kemble puthetically speaks of "her remember-ing days which may so soon by followed by the forget-be followed by the forgetting ones. Some years have passed since these words were printed, and it is to be feared that the "forgetting ones." have already come. The famous actrees still breathes the breath of life, but the divine afflatus has departed. She is still vital in the flesh, but the spirit, the bright and vivacious spirit of old, has vanished into the world of shadows. One comes to this sorrowful conclusion with the atmost refuctance, but it is one that cannot honestly be avoided.

ful conclusion with the atmost relactance, but it is one that cannot honestly be avoided.

Mrs. Butler, as she is known to her friends and family, has entered upon her forget-ting days; her retrespect of eighty-two years is blurred and dim. She forgets many of the most brilliant episodes and touching incidents of her life; she forgets her triumphs in America, and even the many warm friends that the most there. It is but catural recommenshe made there. It is but untural perhaps, that at eighty-two the mind should fail to retain a clear impression of the crowded scenes of such a career as has been Fanny Kemble's —that memory should rapidly sink into the waters of Lethe. There is many another veteran of to-day, however, with whom it is not so, and to many others hesides the great netress's and to many others besides the great netrees's personal friends there is suchess in the circumstances of her old age.

For although "the world forgetting," Farmy
Kemble is by no means by the world forgot.
To many of us younger ones Fanny Kemble may be hit a name, but it is a name around which has gathered our best impressions of the stage in the past. At times we may have tried to picture to ourselves the woman who maintained as marcelously the great trudimaintained so marvelously the great tradi-tions of her family; who as a girl of eighteen was the sensation of a Landon season as "Juliet," and who before the plandits of her "first night" could well have died away calmly recorded in her journal the distaste she felt for the scene of her triumph; who restred to m her fascinating profession after a brief and brilliant career of five years to seek that domestic happiness she was destined not to find; who from conscientious scruples afterward gave so seldom to the world the dramatic genius with which she had been born. In America, especially in Philadelphia had been there must be many who regret that in her old age she left the land, the city which for so many years in her prime was her home. Let for what she has exchanged the house in Philadelphia, the pasterni quiet of Lenox among the Berkshire bills, and the rustic beauty of York Farm in Branchtown, just ontside of the Quaker city of America.

The town of Limpefield is not yet to be found in the index of the time-table; ninetynine Lumbouers out of a hundred are unaware of its existence. Yet it is signated within thirty miles of Charing Cross, a strangling parish in the loveliest part of the esonty of Surrey. Its obscurity is not likely, however, to long continue. A mile from its borders a little town is rising, and during the just your its growth has been greatly stimulated by the opening of a branch rullway bringing down Louisley bosiness usen to their newly-built red-brick Elizabethan villas. More ominous still, the words "and Limpsfield" have restill, the words "and Lampeseed" have re-cently been added to the name of Oxice on the station board; the freshly-painted letters conjure up a vision of speculators, Sunday excursions and popular picules. This vision already has its terrors for the Rev. Canon Leigh and his amiable wife, the daughter of one who and his amiable wife, the daughter of one who changed her maiden name of Kemble to But-ler in the city of Philadelphin in the year 1834. "The Bower," wherein mother, daughter and son-in-law pass the pleasantest months of the year, does indeed seem too idyllic a dwelling pinge to be descrated by sight and sound of the matter-of-fact metropolitan world. At one corner of the four cross-roads, and but a hundred varils from a wayside inn, the house one corner of the four cross-roads, and but a bundred yards from a wayside inn, the house of the little family is not in absolute solitude. But above the high hedge-row only the gabled roof can be seen from the Queen's highway, and through the broad curriage gate only a side view can be obtained of the ivy-covered walls and the lattice windows, across which the twining plant has partially insinuated its way. The gate opens into a small old-flash-ioned garden filled with asters, dablins and other autumnal blossoms in abundance. The paving-stones in the porch, where countless paving-stones in the porch, where countless footfalls have carved smooth cavities, testify to the age of the house; the bell which one pulls is itself an allegory, metallic honey-suckles and roses being twined around the

Wire.

It is here in rooms old and crusted, with low ceilings and large chimney-corners, that Panny Kenable spends a large part of her declining years. From youth appears also professed a dislike for the life of London, and although for some years after her return to England she occupied houses at Hyde Park, Connanght Square, Harley Street, etc., this dislike has now become deep-noted. But for the fact that she could not then have her daughter with her, Canon Leigh's church duties of course necessitating residence in nown, the old inty would live always at "The Bower." As it is, she always leaves it with regret and returns to it with delight from the Canon's town house in Giourester Place, Portman Square. Perhaps one reason for this, apart from the quietude of the country, is the immunity from visitors which the obscurity of Limpstield secures for her. It is many years, of course, since she excommunicated society; a dinner party is with her a thing of the distant past, and even the afternoon " at home " has ceased to miss her presence. A more distressing sign of age to her devoted daughter is the aversion the other social queen now has to receiving any friends save the veriest, a privilegel, few who can be counted on the hands.

Many American visitors have felt keenly their polite repulse when endeavoring to re-It is here in rooms old and crusted, with Many American visitors have felt keenly their politic repulse when endeavoring to re-new the friendship or acquaintance they had formed with the brilliant actives when America was the country of her adoption. Only once in the last year or so has this apparent coldness been relaxed. A Boston gentieman sent to her an engraving which he had pur-chased as from a picture of "Miss Fannic Kenchased as from a pecture of "Moss Pannie Kem-ble," by Sir Joshua Reynolds, asking her to be kind enough to sign it. This she would prob-ably have declined to do under any circum-stances, Mrs. Butler always having bad the greatest objection to giving her autograph, But the engraving was found to be from Sir Loshua Respective sixty and to Joshua Reynold's picture of her sister, and to console the victim of the fraud Mrs. Butler sent him her photograph, with the signature attached. The incident showed probably that she retained her kindly feelings for the people among whom so many years of her life were spent, but it is to be feared that age has not recallified her account induced. odiiled her severe judgment of American inatitutions.

"My life here is that which I most love-monotony itself—with a person whom I have very dearly. I write infinite letters and son-nets on the American war, practice good music, which I play and sing very vitely, read Kingsley's sermons and Mendelssohn's letters, kingsley's sermions and Mendelssohn's letters, and harrowing French novels to my friend to cheer, and southe, and excite her." Thus did Fanny Kemble describe her doings in a letter from Hastings, where she was spending the winter, about a dezen years ago. The course of her daily life, whether in Surrey or in London, is now somewhat different. There is still more monotony and at least as much love, But she now never writes a letter with her But she now never writes a letter with her own hands, except to her daughter in Phila-delphia, when it is guided by Mrs. Leigh. The letters which duty requires or inclination suggests are written by her maid, and of liter-ary work there is now none. Music is no longer enjoyed except as a listener, while rending is limited to the Bible and a few religious books. Sometimes she will take the air in a brougham; less frequently she is induced to take a seat in the pretty pony carriage while Mrs. Leigh drives with masculine skill. The frosts and snow of last winter have enfeebled her more than many of those who have not seen her for a long period would suppose.

With her deep religious spirit and fervent faith in immortality it needs not her daughter's assurance to believe that she, who in years ter's assurance to believe that she, who in years and in deeds has been given so much to it should at length be tiring of life, passively waiting for its end. We remember rending in the first page of the "journal" of her first visit to the United States, "worked at my Bible cover till bed-time: "her diligent attendance at church in the suddet of harmssing thent-rical engagenessits; her consistent devolupt to rical engagements: her consistent devotion to the church when it came into conflict with the stage, and one leads to the conclusion that the marriage of her daughter with the reverend entern must have been the greatest happiness which, at the close of her public career, could have been wonchesfield to ber. But although Farmy Kemble herself may take now but small pride in that career, although the features in which we saw the beautiful "Juliet," or the tragic "Ophelia." are wosted and huggard, although she must soon be passing hence, her normary will be treasured as that of one who in becoming a great artress did not cease to be a good woman; who showed the church that on the stage she could still be one of its most devout daughters.

VERSES FOR AN EASTER BIRTHDAY,

BY ELIZABETH HUME

GOD gives us Lenten days of gloom and sadness.

With Easter morns of cheer, For unto every heart must grief and gladness Go to make up the year.

Thrice happy thou who kindly welcome giving All mornings, gray or bright, Makest thy whole round year of blessed living, One festival of light.

THE GIRL WHO BRAGS

BY KLLA WHEELER WILCOX

WITH all her charms, her good sense, her genuine worth, the American girl of the present generation has a habit of-well, I will say "brag-ging," to be ex-plicit, of which I wish she should correct herself for the sake of the American young man, and it is be-

Mas, Witcox cause the young men have confided in me that I make this men have confided in me that I make this appeal.

Young men and old men, too, for that matter, are much more frank and honest in their criticisms of our sex when talking with a married woman than when listening to some bright, coquettish girl who expects them to be gallant rather than sincere. The average man is an arrant coward, so far as honesty of expression goes, when he is in the society of a charming girl. He will allow her to startle and shock him without a protest; he will smile and compliment her upon her brightness when his heart is full of displeasance and disappointment. He will leave her wholly unconscious of his mental attitude, and go and reat his indignation or grief to some dowager or man friend. Let the married lady re-unconscious of his mental attitude, and go and rent his indignation or grief to some downager or man friend. Let the married lady report his criticisms to the young girl, with a desire to warn her from further offenses, and ten to one the young woman will accuse her of feminine jealousy, and the young man will lie himself gracefully out of the matter. Therefore I make a general appeal to the girls, as-aring them that every word I atter is true.

Only hast week I asked a delightful young bachelor who is comfortably situated in life, why leedid not marry? "Well, I will tellyon," he replied. "I want a home, which, of course, means a wife, but I am discouraged about making the venture. I admired a young lady greatly, and was beginning to think seriously of paying her court. She seemed to be my ideal. She was a model daughter, pregressive minded, intelligent, industrious. She was always nearly but simply dressed, and her cherefulness was like a sunny day. Recently I met her on the street just as she was emerging from a milliner's establishment.

liner's establishment.

"See my new hat?" she said brightly, as I walked along by her side. "Isn't it perty?"

"I had not noticed the new hat, but now I as a simple open-work straw on which reproved a few pretty flowers and a bow of ribbon,

"Yes, very pretty and becoming," I replied.

I have a fine-one being made, she continued.

This is only a back affair. I paid only twenty dollars for it. It is stylish, though, for the price, I think,"

"My heart sank at her light way of estimat-

"My heart sank at her light way of estimating cost. I have no sisters, and my mother possessed a knack of trimming her own bonners, so I had never known what Indies' hats cost. If that simple hit of straw and ribbon cost twenty dollars, what would be the price of the' liner hat being made'? Thirty dollars at least. I realized at once my inability to properly support a girl who paid fifty dollars for two hats in one fleeling season. What a fortune it would require to furnish all her wardrobe at that rate? Yet she is so simply dressed to all appearances; nothing at all showy about her. I suppose all girls in her station pay as much for their clothes, and so I think I will leave marriage for richer men. The average young man cannot stand that sort of thing, I assure you." My heart sank at her light way of estimat-

Now, I happened to know who this young woman was, and I happened to know that abe was not an extravagant girl. If she had paid twenty dollars for a hat it was an unusual expenditure for her, and would trouble her conscience and purse for many a day, and enuse her much self-deplal in other directions.

But she possessed the foolish idea, so prevalent in this age of great fortunes, that men admire women who use money lavishly, and who pay large prices for their garments. Yet I have never seen a mon so rich who as not made uneasy and troubled by this sort of talk from any woman in whom he was personally interested. It is an undeniable fact that men pay pronounced attention to expensively attired women. But these attentions do not mean respect, or admiration, or marriage in one cuse out of ten. The man who is seeking a wife is never attracted by one who talks of money as if it were free as the dust of the street, unless he is a furtune-bunter. I was calling on a young lady one day, and her brother and a using gentleman admirer chanced to enter the room just as she was showing me a most effective new dress, "It is beautiful" remark-ed the young man, "but I'll wager anything you liked the looks of the dress when it came home better than you did the bill." The girl laughed and tossed her head knowingly. After the young men had gone out she said to me: "I made every stitch of that dress myself, but I don't want him to know it. A man always admires anything so much more if he thinks it cost a lot of money."

"Dudes do, but men don't," I answered, but she did not believe me

"Why, you should have seen the men at one of our famous winter resorts last year," she said. "There was a girl there who wore one or two new costumes every day for six weeks, and the men just crowded about her all the time. It was the event of the day to see her time. If was the event of the day to see her come into the dining-room."

"Yes, and she is still single" I said, "and half a dezen girls who dressed simply that same year have made good marriages. I heard men say they would sconer commit suicide than marry such a girl as that."

"They may have a see year and time all the same."

"They gave her a very good timeall the same with their devoted attentions," answered the girl, still unconvinced. "It is my opinion a man likes a girl better if she is a little ex-man likes a girl better if she is a little extravagant in her tastes."

Another girl, who labored under the same impression, told a man in my hearing, when he complimented her gown, that "it ought to be pretty, it cost two hundred dollars."

"It is worth it," he replied, smillingly, but he grouned aloud after she had gone out, and asked me how women could expect men to marry when they talked of expense in that sort of way. "I should think a woman rould get up a pretty dress short of two hundred dollars," he said.

"They do, plenty of them," I mawered. "But why did you not talk in this way to her; instead, you encounaged her extravagant ideas by saying her dress tooked worth the price. It did not. I saw a dress last week which was far more beautiful and effective, and it cost just thirty dollars."

"I somehow never hear of those dresses."

just thirty dollars."

"I somehow never hear of those dresses," be said plaintively. "I always hear women talk of dresses in three figures, and of hats in figures above twenty, and it is awfully discounging to a fellow who hopes to have a wife some day, because it seems useless to think of marriage with less than a million of mothey."

"Two of the most attractively dressed girls in your circle tooke all their dresses, yet they keep it a profound secret, imagining it will militate against their opportunities to make keep it a profound screet, imagining it will militate against their opportunities to make desirable marriages. I have heard them smile when accused of extravagance for appearing often in new hats which were their own invertibous. They found more pleasure in being thought extravagant than economical."

"They are utterly instaken in their ideas of what men admire and respect in womes." he replied. "A few fops and dudes may like airl who brags about her expensive tastes and habits, but a usus is always distillusioned by her, and you want to tell your sex so."

And I have.

USE AND ABUSE OF THE NEEDLE

of bands silently folded in death, and then thought afterward of how busy that right hand had been making the flashing steel needle go in and out the fine go in and out the fine cambric, the delicate lawn, or the pretty sik? Haven't you thought that perhaps the many hours spent in the swing chair, near the light, but not always in the smeldine, may have shortened the life of this woman? And haven't you said in your heart that you would never lot anybody you loved sew in that way? Women have, from the very beginning, abused the needle. They have wrought stitches where they were not necessary; they have made fine frocks when simpler ones would have been in better taste, and they have grown bent and oht in not necessary; they have made fine frocks when simpler ones would have been in better taste, and they have grown bent and old in time with the persistent desire to put a little more embroilery on the gown or cloak of a baby than was on that of the rival baby in the family. Nowadays, thank God, our children and our babbes are dressed sensibly and simply; embroidery done by lund is out of vogue, and the most loving mother does not need to devote all her bours to making the little frocks and decorating the belongings of Master Baby and his older sister.

Needlework is essentially a womanly occupation, and of its nee not a word can be said. Just now we seem more likely to abuse it in the way of making the wonderful pieces of fancy work to serve as clever collectors of dust than in any other way. As an apostle of high art oncessiel: "Dust is the bloom of time," it may be that the blossoms of the years will be appreciated. But this is what I want to say, my dear woman, you who are my friend, and whom I dearly love, do sewing that is necessary. Have a bit of fancy work about you if you wish; but remember that the end and aim of your life is not to thread a needle with various shades of brown or green, and work out a conventional flower, but it is needle with various shades of brown or green, and work out a conventional flower, but it is to go out into the sunshine-to find the real to go out into the sunstance—to find the read sunshine of life, and to make your girls and boys, and that biggest boy of all, your has-band, share part of it with you. Let a book be in the basket with the fancy work; let pleasant thoughts be sewn in the muslin or the stuff that is used for the belongings of all the because of the part make yourself. the household, but don't make yourself a slave to the needle, even in high art work. You think this is inquesible. Look at some of your neighbors—make them your lookingglass, and see how important a matter is a piece of art needlework, and of how little importance is the gaining of the confidence of your boy or girl. To spend hours deciding on the exact shade of the chrysanthemum in fancy silks, the perfect outline of the lenf in crewel, and to give no passing thought to those around you, is an evidence of an absolute lack of heart. Do you want your children to judge you from that standpoint? The systematic woman is the one who rules her needle; the woman is the one who rules for her life is the one who is governed by the sharp-printed little individual who, while be keeps only one eye on her, sees that her servi-tude is as entire as it is unnecessary.

SOME ARTISTIC EMBROIDERY ON LINEN

[AS TAUGHT AT THE BALTIMORE SOCIETY OF DECORATIVE ART]

By Maude Haywood

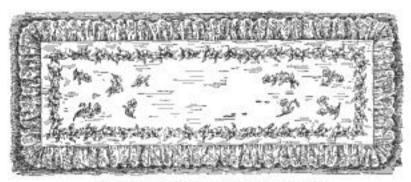

HE Baltimore Society of Decnatumore society of Decorative Art was started in 1878, in imitation of that already in existence in New York, and for the sense general objects. In its de-velopment it has naturally umed in detail a slightly different character, to sait the requirements of the special class of women whom it was chiefly to assist. In and near Baltimore there were, and still are,

EMBROIDERY ON LINES

NEARLY all the work given out in the manner described is embroidery upon linen, principally for the decoration of the table. Most of the designs for this purpose are made by a professional designer, who has been employed by the Society for many years. The patterns are all drawn upon the linen with pen and ink, no stamping whatever being resorted to. The subjects used are chiefly flowers, treated in rather a naturalistic fashion, ribbons being frequently employed together ribbons being frequently employed together a large number of ladies whom the war had left with broken fortunes or almost penniless, and in many cases with none to look to for support, they having not only been rained in the struggle, but also sustained the loss of husbands and fathers, who had died fighting for the cause. Upon such as these, not accustomed to work, nor trained in any useful art, their altered position fell doubly heavy, for however willing they might be, it often seemed as if there were positively nothing they could do to earn their living. The promoters of the Society had, in the beginning, many difficulties to contend with. At the present time they have reason to be proud both of their financial standing and of the good they have accomplished in autition the both of their Buancial stand-ing and of the good they have accomplished, in putting the means of livelihood into the hands of so many women. Their work also ranks well from an artistic standpoint, and communds a ready sale.

A GRACEFUL PANSY BUREAU COVER (Illus, No. 3)

The method of helpfulness

The method of helpfulness pursued by the Society is to give free instruction to pupils, in a course of eight lessons of three hours duration. These classes are each limited to five pupils, and are held from September to June. Those who having profited by the teaching prove themselves course. having profited by the teach-ing prove themselves compe-tent to undertake it, are after-ward supplied with work, which is paid for on comple-tion by the Society, which itself undertakes the responsibility of its subsequent sale. By this means many are given steady employment, and the advant-age to purchasers is that in consequence there is always a large stock of embroideries on consequence there is always a large stock of embroideries on hand to choose from. Work is also taken to be sold on commission, and payments are made twice a month for all sales effected, whether the money has been actually received at the time or not; losses sustained at any time through credit being given, are borne by the Society.

with the sprays and garlands. The silks em-ployed in the embroidery are principally filo-floss, and it is evident from the careful execu-tion of all the work that the pupils are well trained, and that a high standard of excellence is required of them, pieces of inferior work-manship being rigorously excluded.

A DAINTY CENTER PIECE FOR THE TABLE (Illus. No. 1)

DAINTY CENTER PIECE FOR THE TABLE

HE centerpiece for the table in Illustration No. 1, is embroidered in dainty Dresden china colors, and when enried out in this way is very delicate and pretty in effect. Another piece, similar in idea and treatment, but slight-ly different in design, had garlands of tiny flowers connect-ed by the bows of ribbon with floating ends, in-stead of the arrangement of wreaths shown here. A favorite imitate both the patterns and coloring of Dresden china. An adaptation of the conventionalized onion design was thus effectively ren-dered for a din-ner set. Such designs are very quaint, and where the artist is original, novel results may be produced, even where the ideas are not really new. Old-fashinned services or pieres of orna-noental china which have de-scended to this generation as herlooms, may in this way form the inspiration for designs in needlework.

WHITE UPON WHITE

N the opinion of those credited with the greatest taste and judgment in such mat-nothing is more artistic and suitable for table use than embroidery in white upon white linen. Most of the designs are suitably worked in this way, as well as in the natural colors, but that pictured in Hiustration No. 2 is ed in this way, as well as in the natural colors, but that pictured in Hinstration No. 2 is specially intended to be carried out entirely in white. The flower forms are embroidered solidly, and the leaves are partially filled in with long and short stitch. In this instance the white only was strictly adhered to in the execution; in some cases, however, an outline of gold thread is employed, and where the flowers are single blossoms the centers are frequently worked in pale yellow. A square having chrysanthemums for the subject, made a delightful harmony of yellows, browns, redis and greens. The flowers were drawn very simply, and were of the variety which have those straggling petals of which the curves are capable of very artistic treatment.

The great principle which this and kindred societies specially aim to inculcate is the necessity for excellence of design, and by their efforts and teaching they have done much to mise it. In many instances they may be said to have been the means of implanting the seeds of artistic impulses in both pupils and patrons, and to have opened up to them an entirely new realm of possibilities. The benefit also of the study of good specimens of foreign workmanship has been proved by the exhibitions such as have been from time to time held by the Society in Baltimore. Workers have felt that what has been done by others may be done by themselves, and a spirit of emulation and competition has led to practical progress and improvement.

A PANSY BUREAU COVER

A PANSY BUREAU COVER

SOMEWHAT different style of A. work is the bureau cover shown in Illustration No. 3. The material is in Illustration No. 3. The material is bolting cloth, made up over a foundation of yellow and finished off with lace, through which runs a thread of yellow silk. The pansics are pointed artistically in shades of yellow, brown, mauve and purple, the general scheme being kept delicate. The whole is then outlined in long and short which. For the counter can stitch. For the center can be made a pin-cushion to match, of the old-fashioned maten, of the old-tastioned oblong shape and edged with lace; scattered pan-sies and leaves are painted and worked upon it in a and worsed upon it in a similar way to those on the bureau cover. The effect is most charming and dainty. The same idea can be carried out with any suitable flower, according to the color scheme required scheme required.

A SET OF DOILIES

TLLUSTRATION No. 4 gives I one of a set of doilies, which work out very prettily. Each one of the twelve is slightly different as to the curves of the ribbons and in the shape and arrangement of the flowers, but arrangement of the flowers, but the general idea is kept to very closely in all of them. They are solidly embroidered. The flowers are white with pale vel-low centers, the ribbon is white outlined with gold thread, and the leaves are of a very delicate green. The coloring is the same throughout the set. They are finished off plainly with a hem stitch.

A CENTER PIECE OF VIOLETS

THE round center piece (Illustration No. 5), is a preity example, typical of a popular design. It is embroidered in very delicate shades of mauve, with pole green for the leaves and light yellow for the ribbon. Another arrangement of flowers and ribbon for a square piece had a good sized bow with loops and ends at each corner connect-ing garlands of Scotch roses, drawn the size of life. A very ar-tistic dinner set, of which the execution was particularly good, had for design sprays of thistle worked in soft coloring. The flowers were in deliente pink and pur-plish tones, and the leaves of the characteristic gray ish greens.

A DRAGON PORTIERE

A PAIR of hand-some portiers were recently made to order by the Society (Illustration No. 6). The material was plush of a cold bine tone. The dragons were embroidered in Italian stitch and simbed, each in a dif-ferent color, in tints that harmonized with each other and the ground. They were outlined with dark sitk of their own color and with gold thread, the latter being also used for the radiating lines. The finish is a beavy fringer containing all the tones employed in the embroidery.

A HANDSOME PIANO COVER

A HANDSOME and elaborate plano cover was embroidered in the work-rooms of the Society upon ecru colored silk tapestry canvas. It was for an upright pismo, of which the back was to be turned toward the room. The entire back was covered with a Louis XVI design, of scroll work, ribbons and floral forms. The cover for the top had the ends and the part which fell over the back worked with a design of garlands. The whole the part which follows the part of the covered with a design of garlands. was embroidered in delicate shades, and represented a great deal of patient and skillful work.

SIMPLE BUT PRETTY (Illus, No. 4)

A CENTER PIECE OF VIOLETS (Illus. No. 5)

The silk tapestry in its various shades is very much used as a ground for handsome needle-

During the course of its existence the Society has acquired a considerable collection of de-signs which include many that are good and signs which include many that are good and some that are extremely fine and artistic. That they have recognized the importance of the art side of their work, has doubtless been one of the secrets of their success. Among the designs are drawings from the Boyal School of Needlework, London; from the Associated Actists of New York; and also from William Morris, and other well-known artists, in addi-tion to many adaptations from cond examples

Morris, and other well-known artists, in addition to many adaptations from good examples of older foreign work.

In connection with the Society, and forming an important part of its work, are the art classes for drawing, painting and designing, in which free instruction is given to those who prove to have sufficient ability to profit by it, and whose circumstances render them eligible for such assistance. From time to time pupils who desired to make their living by artwork have been, after a period of study, trained as assistant leachers. The school used to be held in rooms attached to the showrooms, but as it increased was transferred to a rooms, but as it increased was transferred to a separate studio. It is under the superintendence of a teacher trained in the South Kensing-ton School of Art.

SHOT THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY

A STATELY DRAGON PORTIERE MISS NOTED BY GOOGLE

AN EFFECT OF WHITE UPON WHITE (Illus. No. 2)

Ed Tal

THE QUEENS OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY

By Miss E. T. Bradley

DAUGHTER OF THE DEAN OF WESTMINSTER

IN THREE PAPERS. THE SECOND PAPER: -THE 14TH AND 15TH CENTURY QUEENS

N the reign of Henry the Eighth, Skelton the poet took sanctuary in Westminster Abbey. He is said to have employed his enforced secluemployed his enforced seclusion by writing rhyming epitaphs on the Kings and Queens which hung, until the soldiers of the Commonwealth destroyed them, on ablets close to the tombs. Whether Skelton 7 as really the author or not, it is certain that iese quaint verses were written in the Sixenth Century, and all by the same hand. Each as concluded by an appropriate motto, such: "Learn to Die to Live Forever," "Learn to ve," which were applied to the two good ceus. Eleanor and Philippa.

5 GOOD QUEEN PHILIPPA

PPOSITE the tomb of Eleanor lies another faithful wife and loved queen, the dish Philippa who, like the Saxon Matida lion: we have spoken, was a "constant over of our nation." Isabella of France, ir of Edward III, sent a bishop and two sadors to select a wife for her son from the daughters of William, Earl of Haire daughters of William, Earl of Hai-The youngest, Philippa, was chosen, not good looks, since she was very plain, but fitness to be the wife and mother of kings. The good ecclesiastics were vived in their choice, for during a union years she was her busband's faithful on, and when unable to accompany is campaigns governed the kingdom wisely in his absence.

wisely in his absence, arriage took place at York February and the royal pair were crowned in ter Abbey the first Sunday in Lent.

'the close alliance of her family to of France, Philippa, we are told by ders, strenuously supported her hus-l claims to that kingdom. She was a the famous occasion of the siege hen Edward would have ruthlessly welve chief burgesses of the city, ut to him with ropes round their se keys in their hands, had it not slipps, who threw herself at the egry King. She refused to rise till to spare the lives of his prison-ard at last yielded to her impor-

teen children one only was able it his mother's death-bed. This if Woodstock, afterward smoth-wo feather beds by his nephew. oders, and was buried close to dendid monument. King Ed-as with his wife to the last, and touching account of her dying ding the King's right hand in a her last wishes and entreated should please God to call you of choose any other sepalchre hat you will lie beside me in stminster." Philippa died on

CLOSE by lies the youthful and dearly loved spouse of Richard II. Anne of Bohemia, daughter of the Emperor Charles IV and sister of the "good King Wenceslaus" of the Christmas carol, was married, aged seventeen, to Richard, then in all the pride of his youth and beauty, in St. Stephen's Chapel, and crowned in the Abbey January 14th, 1383. Various ill omens attended the marriage. Scarcely had the bride left her ship at Dover than it was dashed to pieces on the rocks before her eyes. Then the wedding had to be delayed a mouth while Richard quelled the rebellion of Wat Tyler, showing a presence of mind and a courage which made him the people's idol for a time. To celebrate the King's nuptials jousts were held for many days at Westminster, in which "the Englishmen showed their force and the Queen's countrymen their prowesse." Soon, however, the bright picture faded, and while the young sovereigns remained popular till Richard's foolish favoritism lost him his people's confidence, the Queen's Bohemian followers were the cause of much jeniousy and grumbling. Among the foreign inhorations introduced by them at Court, Stowe chronicles: "The detestable use of piked shewes, tyed to their knees with chains of silver and gilt. Also noble women used high attire on their heads, piked had the bride left her ship at Dover than it heads, piked borns with long trained gowns and rode on sidesaddles after the example of the queen, who first brought that fushion into this land, for before women were used women were used to ride a stride like men." Until Cromwell's men stabled their horses in the Abbey, an example of this strange and ungraceful headdress might have been seen on Anne's figure, but it was then broken and de-stroyed. For the twelve years of their married life Richard was seldom to be torn from his Queen's side, and unfor-tunately for himself, while he was enjoying his life In happy indot-ence, his people and discontented. On June 7th, 1394, Anne died of the plague at Sieen, and her husband in a passion of despair razed the palace where she died to the ground, besides cursing the place of her death. Richard, we are told, "so servently loved her, yea usual ad amendion, oven to a kind of madness," that he was almost heade himself with grief and anger. In order to be the more magnificent the funeral was put off till August 3d, and the peers with was put off till August 3d, and the peers with their wives were required to accompany the body from Sheen the day before the burial. A great deal of wax was got from Flanders, till the whole Abbey was reaplendent with flambeaux and torches, and the illumina-tion was so great that "nothing like it was ever before seen." The Earl of Arundel was late for the ceremony, and even in his grief the unfortunate young King could not curb THE UNFORTUNATE QUEEN ANNE NEVILLE his basty temper. When the Earl hurried up to him and asked, late as he had arrived, if he to him and asced, are as he had arrived, it is might leave before the funeral was over. Rich-ard struck him to the ground so roughly that his blood stained the sacred pavement. While the funeral was conducted with prodigal ex-pense, the King was no less lavish in the con-struction of the beautiful tomb in which he intended to be laid by his dear first wife's side. The town was completed in 1922 before Rich

INTERIOR VIEW OF CHAPEL OF HENRY VII SHOWING TOMB CONTAINING HENRY VII AND ELIZABETH OF YORK

The tomb was completed in 1397, before Rich-ard's troublous reign was concluded by his im-prisonment and murder, but it was not till many years later that the body of the wretch-

THE unfortunate wife of another and very different king the third Richard, lies beneath the payement in the south ambulatory. This Richard and this Anne are a con-trast to the other royal pair, for there is little to show any affection on his side, and he is even suspected of having poisoned his wife in order to be free to marry Elizabeth of York. Anne Neville, daughter of Warwick the King-Anne Neville, daughter of Warwick the King-maker, had been betrothed to that young Prince Edward, son of Henry VI, so barbar-ously slain at Tewkesbury field. Anne became the ward of Edward's uncle, the Duke of Clar-ence, afterward done to death by Richard's orders, who strenuously opposed the match when Richard, then Duke of Gloucester, sought her hand. A romantic story is told that the fu-ture usurper, always determined to gain his end, discovered Anne, disguised by Clarence's wishes

Clarence's wishes as a kitchen maid for safety, and re-moved her to the sanctuary at St. Martin's Church till their mar-riage could be celebrated. When by foul means and through the blood of nephews and relatives Richard won the land, he and his submissive consort were crown-ed with "pecu-liar splendor" in the Abbey July 6th, 1483. The train of Queen Anne was borne by one of whom we shall speak later, Margaret, Countess of Richmond, mother of the future sovereign Henry VII, then in banishment, and one can well imagine

TOMB OF MARGARET, MOTHER OF HENRY VII

In that proud Countess's bosom as she assisted at the coronation of her son's rival. The new King and Queen, as a symbol of their humility, a hu-mility which belonged to Anne alone, had previously walked barefoot in procession from Westminster Palace to lay their offerings on St. Edward's shrine. There is no doubt that Richard became tired of his wife, especially since the death of their only son loft him without an heir, and he was besides unxions, for political reasons, to wed Elizabeth of York. But in truth there is no foundation whatever for branding the usurper as a poisoner. Anne was very ill for some time before she died from natural causes, but an eclipse the sun which took place the day, March 16th 1485, she died, corroborated in the superstitions minds of the lower classes the sinister rumors

SHAKESPEARE'S QUEEN KATE

HAVE purposely placed Anne Neville out A of her proper order, since it seems more fitting that the ancestress of the Tudor line, fitting that the ancestress of the Tudor line, Henry V's, French wife, Katherine, should be coupled with the mother and wife of Henry VII, our first Tudor king. This young French Queen, daughter of Charles VI, King of France, and given as a prize of victory to the English conqueror, Henry V, is best known to us in the pages of Shakespeare. But strangely enough, her importance in history comes not from her marriage with the famous victor of Agincourt, but from her second union with a plain Welsh gentleman, Owen Tudor, who claimed descent from the Welsh kings. By this marriage she became the grandmother of Henry VII, and it seems incredible that, as we shall see, her remains were allowed to remain unburied, a scandal to the Abbey, for over we shall see, her remains were allowed to re-main unburied, a scandal to the Abbey, for over three hundred years. Henry V was and still deservedly remains a popular hero, and when Katherine re-married and demented berself, as deservedly remains a popular hero, and when Katherine re-married and demeaned herself, as was thought, by so low a match, she was perforce obliged to keep it secret. She spent her last years in seclusion in the Bermondsey numery and died, aged 38, on January 3d, 1437. Her body was first placed in the Church of St. Katherine, near the Tower of London, then (on February 8th) carried to St. Paul's Cathedral, and finally buried under a marble tomb in the old Lady Chapel in the abbey. When the chapel was pulled down to build a new and more splended one in the reign of Henry VII. Katherine's open coffin and her corpse, "badly apparelled," was placed by her first husband's tomb, where it remained till 1776, when it was put out of sight beneath the Villiers monument in the Chapel of St. Nicholas. Finally, by Dean Stanley's care, it was buried where it now remains, above Henry's tomb in the chantry, with the old altar slab for a cover to the monument. Many reasons are given for this neglect of Katherine's remains, but none seem adequate. One legend relates that she was been adequate, one legend relates that she seem adequate. One legend relates that she was left unburied by her own wish, since, contrary to her husband's expressed commands, her son, Henry VI, had been born at Windsor, "the place which he forbade," on account of an ill-omened prophecy. Others say that she was thus left exposed to view because of her ill-assorted second marriage, but this seems increasible, since, her own grandshild. Henry residule, since her own grandchild, Henry VII, would scarcely have wished to dishonor her memory or acknowledge the Tudors to be of low rank. Later, visitors to the Abbey used by special favor to be allowed to gaze upon all that was left of the once beautiful Queen; in the Seventeenth Contury Dart says the bones. the Seventeenth Century Dart says the bones were "firmly united and thinly clothed with flesh, like scrapings of tanned leather," and Pepys, the journalist, boasts that he "did kiss her mouth, reflecting upon it that I did kiss a

THE VENERABLE LADY MARGARET

THOUGH no queen herself, I cannot pass A over Margaret, Countess of Richmond, the mother of Henry VII, the venerable Marthe mother of Henry VII, the Venerable Mar-garet of noble memory, foundress of two col-leges at Cambridge (Christ's and St. John's) and of the professorships of divinity at Ox-ford and Cambridge which bear her name. Wedded at fifteen to young Edmund Tudor, the grandson of Queen Kutherine of Valois, she was left at seventeen a widow with one child. Henry, afterward King of England. No young woman of rank could remain without a protector in those turbulent days, and Margaret was twice married, but she had no other children, and on her only son all her affections were cen-tered. Her third husband, the Earl of Derby, was at first a supporter of Richard III. and Margaret was obliged to appear at the usurper's court while her own son, whom she considered the rightful heir. languished in exile. She was obliged also to look on passively at Richard's machinations to ob-tain the hand of Elizabeth of

Elizabeth, eld-st daughter of Edward IV, was person in the succession to the English throne; to win her in marriage was therefore essen-tial to consolidate the claims of either candidate,

Richard or Hen-Margaret's husband, Stanley, Earl of Derby, turned against his former master before Richard had had time after his wife's death to conclude a marriage with Elizabeth, and the battle of Bosworth left the field clear for Henry's undisputed succession and union with the representative of the House of York. Elizabeth was essentially a child of Westminster. She was born at Westminster Palace and baptized with much pomp in the Abbey, Warwick, the King-maker, as he was called, standing sponsor, never dreaming that in future yearthe child be held at the font would be an unwilling rival to his own daughter Anne.

[EDITOR'S NOTE: The next instalment of Miss Bradler's papers on "The Queens of West-muster Abbey" will appear in the June JOHRNAL.] Digitized by Google

TOMB OF QUEEN PHILIPPA

s children on the und's monument. seventy figures of orating the tomb: unit into Henry I in 1857 by Sir I the Queen, by undoubted por-ere is no trace of milition has ever with good looks, then she died, a Yet one may ble character in her tomb, and er comely and e foundress of efully rememcurrent as to her husband's part in her decesse.

the storm of suppressed rage

01 to the Table 1 to 1

THE BROWNIES THROUGH THE YEAR

A NEW SERIES OF 12 ADVENTURES OF THE FUNNIEST LITTLE MEN IN THE WORLD

By Palmer Cox

NUMBER SEVEN

THE BROWNIES

IN APRIL A 40 % evening when the fields were bare And milder grew the April air,

The Brownies met with faces bright In pleasant sport to spend the night. Said one: "The month at length is here, To every youngster's heart so dear, Because the country, far and wide Has flung its winter coat aside, And they those pleasures can renew That were denied the season through,

Again the sidewalk, marked with chalk, Tells where to hop, or skip, or walk; Again the hoops are rolling spry, Again the kites are soaring high, Again the tops on every street Are spinning round the people's feet, And Brownies should not be behind At having sport of every kind."

Another said: "The truth you speak New life now glows in every cheek Penned up for months, without a chance In open air to run and dance; They must, indeed, with pleasure half The time when outdoor sports prevail. As for ourselves, we little care: Through all the year we have our share Of fun; however cold or hot The months may be, it matters not. But still some play may not be wrong, That to the present days belong. The time of year is now at hand For troops to march in order grand; To tramp about as soldiers do Might well become the Brownie crew; For me, I like that sort of thing, To step erect, to wheel, and bring Myself around in proper pose To either face my friends or foes. But some, I know, would rather hop, Or spin for hours a buzzing top; While others still prefer to stoop And chase for miles a rolling hoop; There's no accounting for one's taste. Some like to skip, more like to paste A kite, and watch it proudly sail Above the town with streaming tail,"

A third remarked:
"We might indeed
To different kinds of sport proceed; But I know where we can provide Ourselves with hoops to roll and guide With careful hand, until we prove Who best can keep one on the move, And if I don't mistake my man You'll see me bounding in the van

Until a given point I gain."
This brought replies from half the band,
And all declared they could not stand Such talk while they, themselves, were blest With speed not second to the best. This wordy war, as one might know, Soon made them all decide to go And get the hoops, and prove, indeed, if one could all the others lead. Ere long the Brownies' fun began As in an anxious crowd they ran, All striving to keep well controlled The hoops that fast before them rolled. In vain each Brownie in that race Would try to hold the foremost place, For in the midst of all their pride, Some feet would trip, or hoops collide, Which often to a tumble led; Then some one else would shoot ahead, And those

A place in front, and for a while Be wearing a triumphant smile.

At times they left the dusty road And through the fields endurance showed, With many a tap and harder whick To give the hoops the proper tack. Thus sport went on, with here and there whose chance was counted

slips or falls

would thus

Secure

Through

An accident, or sudden scare, Which still is likely to be found Where daring Brownies scamper round.

Some broke their hoops, and had to stop To mend. and far behind would drop; Some lost their hats, and others tore The strongest garments that they wore; Until it seemed as if the play Would prove expensive in its way, And bring the tailors of the band Next morning into good demand. One strange mishap occurred that night, For though the stars were shining bright, While chasing hoops, some Brownies fell Headforemost in a curbless well. The fearful downward dive was fast.

But water broke the fall at last. Tis sad to gaze into a place Where friends have met with sore disgrace,

And are immured in durance vile Without a fee, a saw, or file, Or aught that might assist them there

But sadder still to see one's friend A proper place upon the sweep, into a prison hole descend Where neither saw, So thus assisted by their weight it might uplift the burden great; nor file, nor fee, Can be of use In fact, when comrades are distressed, to set him free. A mightier spirit stirs the rest, And quickens the inventive min Such was the scene, and such the woe With grand results, as oft we find Now up no sooner than they wished, The victims of the fall were fished, That struck the band a telling blow-And stilled the heart, And safe, though in a dripping plight, in course of time they came in sight and paled the face, Of every Brownie Then shouts went up from all the band. And many stretched a willing hand To aid their comrades in the race. To think of friends who side by side Ifad dared the steep from the swing That brought them from the icy spring. Oh, happy hour! when they could bina Safe in their arms toboggan slide; Had on the ocean Had rode upon the And in a thousand spread their sail, spouting whale, other ways Had won from all the highest praisecompanions kind, Now taken quickly While fun was at its From evils that from their sight, no life had cost. greatest height, To struggle in a Though all were place that gave Small promise but Now wild alarms to be their grave? looked upon were quickly spread there in dread, as lost. And comrades gathered And for a moment tried in vain A glimpse of those But though their eyes below to gain. could naught behold, the shouting told and would be glad The splashing and They still had life. If prompt assistance could be had. looked, indeed, Then for a time it As if the Brownies must proceed nightly pranks diminished ranks. Thereafter to their With grievously

But Brownies, bless them! how they spring To save from harm the slightest thing, Much more to rescue three or four Whose loss they deeply would deplore; No lengthy rope was thereabout With which to draw their comrades out, Who proved by many a thrilling note They managed still to keep afloat. But soon the cunning Brownies planned way to lend a helping hands Indeed, delay in such a spot Would soon prove fatal to the lot, Because the well was deep and old, And water at the time was cold, And would not please one as it might Upon some sultry summer's night. The lofty sweep that o'er them stood, Was made to render service good: To this, ere many moments passed, They made an empty barrel fast. Meanwhile a few took time to throw Encouragement to those below And told with words of hope and love How work was going on above. The active Brownies jumped around, Each aiding where a chance he found;

How soon the parts were all supplied, How firm and fast the knots they tied, Then lowered with a cheering yell The life-preserver down the well, The wretches who received the fall Were glad enough in this to crawl, Then Brownies climbed aloft to keep

With feeling spoke a Brownie bright— Our friends we seldom value right, However well they may be tried, Till they are taken from our side: We then can estimate how blest Were we who such true friends possessed, And graces name and virtues find To which our eyes were wholly blind!"

Then all around a fire of wood To warm themselves those Brownies stood, Still thanking friends for timely aid And praising them for skill displayed: But scarcely was their clothing dry When signs of day showed in the sky. And all were forced with lively feet To seek at once a safe retreat.

Hzed by Google

ADIES' HOME JOURNAL

rated Family Journal with the Largest of any Magazine in the World. Published Monthly by RTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY 435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Rooms at 401-415 Appletree Street

Edited by

EDWARD W. BOK on with S. LYMAN ABBOTT ("Aunt Patience") S RUTH ASHMORE RGARET BOTTOME ERT J. BURDETTE TE UPSON CLARK-TER COATES UDE HAYWOOD 44 M. HOOPER s. Louisa Knapp OY F. KNAPP EL A. MALLON EA PARLOA I E. REXFORD ABETH ROBINSON SCOVIL T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D. TANNATT WOODS Advisory and Contributing Editors. entatives at London and Paris.

BRANCH OFFICES: otter Building, 38 Park Row Temple Place, Cor. Tremont St. 5: Chickering Hall Building Francisco: Chronicle Building

ONDON OFFICE: sildings, Ludgate Circus, E. C. sh Subscription Prices: see; per year, 6 shillings, post-free

Iphia, April, 1892

WITH THE EDITOR

HE American girl can get some very peculiar notions into her pretty head at times, and she has one today. It is not a new one, it is true, but what it lacks in noreity it makes up in a dangerous tendency of becoming very general. and it was struck very vigorweeks since, when a very id to me, "Do you know that times whether it is just the a girt to be so very prudent her deportment, and strict in every social law? Just look and see. The girls who are a little careless in their are the most popular and tringes, while those who are tringes, while these who are are scarcely noticed by the er sought by them, and in the most ordinary alliances, not. Let me tell you that are turning this thing over am not alone," coming from a girl whom be sensible and refined, is And yet here are sentiments and yet here are sentiments the minds of more young many of us either know, to believe. It was only a at another girl of enviable ugs and splendid personal the first amounts to this. girl of to-day to be so in-ul correct in her every re cannot be popular."

"What do you mean?"
"drawing her out."
"I mean can a girl be

I mean can a girl be nd hope to make a good criters can say just what is what every girl looks a desirable marriage as I do that men do not and excessively cautions ry is it that they always bemselves in a drawing sk them out, and bestow words quoting the senti-re called "society girls," fair types of the great, d fond of their homes, the pleasures outside of Now, to what extent do rath? Is the girl of to-Is the girl of toin in the outer world it in her deportment? cial laws in order to be un the girl of cautions run after and court her as to her exact status best and truest in yoong t these girls say is true, usent themselves to the ug person. That there these questions among is a matter that admits somer the matter is for them and for those vir present, and shape

THERE is a forcible truth spoken by one The first is a second that appear by one of the girls whom I have quoted, and it is that the majority of girls look forward to the time when they shall marry. I know it is a popular sentiment for writers to express, when discussing this subject, that marriage should not be the aim of a girl's life. Neither it should, but on the other hand to ask a girl, where we were writers to live here the strong that the strong the strong that the strong the strong that the strong the strong that the st as have some writers, to live her girlhood without a thought of the day when she shall that she must not look forward to that time when she shall have a little nest of her own that she will call home, that she must smother the desire which God implants in the soul of every good woman that there will come to her a day when other wouths will speak the words a day when other mouths will spenk the words which now she speaks to those who gave her being, is unnatural. I confess I have no sym-pathy with those theorists who tell our mothers that they must educate their daughters so that they shall be independent of marriage. It is the destiny of eighty per cent. of our girls to marry, as the most accurate statistics show, and to take that thought out of the minds of and to take that thought out of the minus of our girls is to shatter their sweetest dreams and happlest anticipations, and make unhappy what should be the brightest time in their lives. I believe every girl should be taught that women have lived nobly and grandly without entering the married state, that there is such a thing as contentment outside the marital relation, but she should also know marital relation, but she should also know that a far greater percentage of women have found happiness in marriage. It is wrong for a girl to make marriage the sole thought, aim and purpose of her existence, coloring her every thought and action, but no one has a moral right to hold it up before her in the light of an improbability, or as something without which she can be just as happy and far more, what is generally termed "independent."

WHATEVER we may ask of our girls, it is nonsense to ask them to be unnatural. It is astonishing how agt we are to ask of others what we cannot possibly do ourselves, and our very examples show we were incapable of doing. It is always an amusing fact to me to see a father counseling his son never to smoke as he sits ejecting the curls of smoke from his own cigar. And it is just as inconsistent for a mother to warm her daughter about marriage, and almost ask her to relinquish the idea. I have known some mothers to talk to their daughters on this subject in such a manner as to actually give me a doubt to talk to their daughters on this subject in such a manner as to actually give me a doubt as to their own married happiness. Now, my good woman, in all probability your daughter will some day marry, and it is right that she shall, just as you thought it was right that you married. It is well to caution her, but don't frighten her. It is your duty to tell her of married duties; of the shoals that are en-centered in the sea of marriage. But don't paint the shoals into ragged rocks which wreck every ship that strikes them. Were they of such a death-dealing nature, you wouldn't be alive to describe them. In other words, don't show a girl only the dark side. words, don't show a girl only the dark side. You know there is a bright side, a beautiful side. Mix the coloring a little. Tell her of things as they actually are, and then she will be prepared to encounter what really exists.

I T has been said, in criticism of the Ameri-T has been said, in criticism of the American girl by foreign writers, that her conversation always partakes of young men, and that she is never content with friendships among her own sex. Or, to quote the expression of an English writer: "She has young men on the brain." This is hardly true. I have heard young men form as large a part of the conversation of English girls as that of any American girls I have ever talked with. At the same time, if our young men and young any American girls I have ever talked with, At the same time, if our young men and young women enter more into the lives of each other than those of other lands, it must not be for-gotten that in America boys and girls grow mp together side by side. The American play-ground recognizes no distinction of sex. In some lands children are kept apart; in America our most popular games recognize the particisome lands children are kept apart; in America our most popular games require the participation of both girls and boys to be successfully played. From her earliest childhood, the American girl knows her opposite in sex, and as she grows to young womanhood the bonds are loosened only so far as social laws require them. A child is quick to detect unfairness in a playmate, and he immediately throws down the toy and announces that, "I won't play, because you cheat." And artifice in a young woman, a laxity in her deportment of those laws which keep intact our social life, is just as quickly detected by the boy when he reaches young manhood.

THE great trouble underlying this whole I matter is the inability of girlhood to distinguish between the real and the unreal. Let a young man be, in the slightest degree, attentive to a girl for a single evening, and the first thing that pops into her inexperienced little head is that he is in love with her; there is absolutely no half-way station between being a stranger and being a lover. Friendship is never thought of; at once it is love. A young woman is coquettish, or "smart," as it is called nowadays; she attracts the eye of some young man who is looking for an evening's enjoyment, and the girl actually thinks she has made a life conquest. She never stops to think that what pleases and attracts man will not always hold him. The bewitching glance of a woman will attract a man just as a bright-colored toy will cause a child's eye to sparkle. But the child soon tires of the toy; ditto, the man. What a man enjoys in a drawing room is not always what he enjoys nt home. Quail on toast is a toothsome dish; but let it be served at each meal for a month and it loses its palatable flavor. There is a tremendous difference between what we enjoy There is a and what we esteem. A man may occasionally seek the woman who amuses him, but, he returns to the woman he esteems. a good dessert, but it makes a poor dinner.

WE have in our society of to-day young women who are what is called risque. We have no exact word in the English impagage which just fits their case, and so we borrow from the French a polite term for follies in a woman. These girls are not wicked, nor are they improper. They are just a little careless—especially enreless in their attitude toward men. They tell "smart" stories; they narrate little experiences which just depart from the good—just a very little, you know; they tell you that a girl can safely depart just a step from the straight path proknow; they tell you that a girl can safely depart just a step from the straight path provided she is chever enough to get back to it undetected; they like to be referred to as girls who have seen a great deal. They are good, but they never overdo it. They puzzle men, and occasionally they meet a man of their own intellectual level who happens to be wealthy, and they are married. Next day our cautious and prudent girl reads all the particulars of the wedding in the papers, the costly presents, the lovely women present, the splendor of diamonds and radiant gowns, and she says to herself, does this little inexperienced miss: "See what a desirable marriage enced miss: "See what a desirable marriage she has made!" Desirable! Ah, little heart, how she has made!" Desirable! Ah, little heart, how much of the glitter of this life must be removed; yet before you see the hard and cold tinsel underneath! There is many a wedding the grandeur of which ends with the newspaper accounts next day. And then! Well, my girl, you may not have as many bridesmaids or guests at your wedding; your reception may not be so crowded, the newspapers may not herald your new name so far and wide; but what you lack on your wedding day will be more than fulfilled in your life thereafter. There's many a picturesque road opening through the woods which leads up to the stump of a tree just a little beyond. just a little beyond.

It is true that the girl who is cautious in her deportment, who believes that certain laws were made for her own good, and respects them accordingly, may, to all appearances, not be sought after as her more dazzling sister, but her day will be longer when it does come. A girl who is at all times respectable—and, after all, that word covers it all—who, what-cover her autromofines is the true little after all, that word covers it all—who, what-ever her surroundings, is the true little woman she wants to be, carries with her the surest lever in this life to complete happiness. Such a girl is always safe, and she can make no greater mistake than to be led to the belief that perfect propriety in behavior is unpopu-lar with the right kind of young men. The fact is, that nothing in the world will increase their respect for her more than just this qual-ity in her. And the closer she adheres to this belief, the closer she cements herself in the esteem of young men whose esteem is worth esteem of young men whose esteem is worth anything. Now, Philadelphia is called "slow," her people are termed "conservative," but I notice that when national financial enterprises of great moment are conceived their creators prefer Philadelphia capital. The creators prefer Philadelphia capital. The Quaker is cantions, but he is substantial. And I have noticed that when the substantial young men of this country marry, their choice is pretty certain to be from among the so-called "proper" and "conservative" girls. And so it is with all things in this life. In youth the highly-polished brass ring attracts us; but a little later we see the sham and it repulses us. A girl had far better mould her character of true gold at the start; then, as she grows in years and wisdom, she will have no after regrets. no after regrets.

OUNG men should be made a study by Y girls before they accept them as a reality in their lives. They will find them very peculiar creatures in some respects. Very often what they apparently most desire a girl should grant them is precisely what they most desire she shall not give them. That sounds incongruous, doesn't it? But it is true, nevertheless. I have known yourse most to recent theless. I have known young men to resort to every artifice their minds were capable of conceiving to kiss some girl of their acquaintance. The more strongly she refused, the more ardent became their wish. But when they seemed it? Well, it is just in such a case we see very aptly reflected the truth that the most desirable things in this world are those we cannot get. Once secured, however, how much of their value is lost! So with the familiarities which foolish girls allow but wise ones refuse. "Pshaw!" said a girl, lightly, to me once, "what is in a kiss? It doesn't burt a girl to be kissed." No, it doesn't burt her exactly! But it is astonishing how much of the freshness of a girl's lips is absorbed in that first kiss in the wind of the absorbed in that first kiss in the mind of the young man; he never strives so engerly for young man; he never strives so eagerly for the second one. And, somehow or other, his eateem for her decreases just as his energy diminishes. He may return again to her after a while, but why? Because she gives what other girls withhold. Young men soon lose their respect for such a girl exactly in propor-tion as she allows them any familiarity.

WHAT our girls should understand more than any other fact, is the great truth that the majority of our young men have to make their way in the world. These are the young men whom ninety-five per cent. our girls must marry, if they marry at all.

And the carving out a successful career is too cornect a task to be shared in by a girl who is earnest a task to be shared in by a girl who is just pulling the other way than that which leads to success. The number of young men-born with gold spoons in their mouths has been growing less each year. The great ten-dency in this country is not toward a social aristocracy, or individual wealth, but to a social and monetary equality, which necens the greatest good to the greatest number. The potent power in social, in necessitile, in polit-ical life to-day lies in the average bornes of ical life to-day, lies in the average homes of our country, where comfort reigns rather than luxury. I was especially struck by this fact last month while traveling through the west -that new empire which will in the future be such a potent factor in the further development of our American life.

I N New York city, where the standard of salaries is as high perhaps as in any American city, it was recently shown that of the young men in good commercial positions the young men in good commercial positions seventy per cent, earned $2000 per year; and only eight per cent, exceeded $3500 per year. Upon these incomes all the home comforts of married life are possible, but only by good management. Girls with frivolous ideas of life make failures of such homes, but the carnest girl can make happy herself, her lanshind and her children. Into these homes our girls are daily going as wives, and it is apparent that young men must be careful in their choice. The young men whom our young women meet in the nicest homes of our largest cities, are those who are earning the incomes referred to above. Large revenues are few, and if by a "desirable" marriage is only meant the alliance to young men of dazzling salaries, just about one girl in every thousand will make a "desirable" match. Facts such as these most be taken into consideration by the girl of to-day, and when they are, it will as these must be taken into consideration by the girl of to-day, and when they are, it will be more clearly understood why young men are apt to be frightened from, rather than at-tracted to, the girl whose chief idea of popularity is to be "smart" in her chat and "care-less" in her manner. Let a girl be ever so graceful in the dance, let her be ever so elegant of walk across a drawing-room, ever so bright in conversation, also have no ever so one other of walk across a drawing-room, ever so bright in conversation, she must possess some other qualities to convince the great average run of young men that she can be the manager of his home, the pilot that steers his ship of state, Frugality, womanly instincts of love for home, an eye to the best interests of her husband and the careful training of her children.—these are the truits which make the good wife of to-day, and which young men look for in the girls they meet. Men may sometimes give the impression that they do not care for common sense in their sweethearts, but there is nothing they so unfailingly demand of their wives. mand of their wires.

Society in general, to which we all be-long, helps on much of the wrong ideal which forms itself in the mind of the young girl of to-day. A young man is seen with a girl twice or three times in public nowadays, and nothing in the world will convince some people that they are not "engaged." What used to be known not many years ago as a girl's friend, is now known by the vulgar term of her "company." I have heard young men bitterly complain of this—this inability of re-and people are beginning to talk and ask me questions. Now, I respect the girl highly, and it hurts me to have any action of mine lay ber open to talk which must be unpleasant to a sensitive girl. She regards me, I know, as only a friend; but the world looks upon me as her steady escort, with things about nearly settled between us. Do you think this sort of thing is right?" Right? Of course it lan't right; it is all wrong.

THERE are some people in this world alto-A gether too auxious to settle the affairs of others; whereas, if they would only settle their own it would be a great relief to many of us. The theory that it is always much easier to do the planning for others than for ourselves applies with special force to this particular than the force of ticular class. And to settle the future of young people seems to offer them a specially delectable bone just brimming over with marrow. These people always remind me of cats, in that they are forever purring either at you, or about you, to some one else. The desire that some have to "help things along" between two young people, gives me the im-pression that somebody "belped" their cause along in youth, and they want to seek revenge on some one else. I have actually had people prate to me for an hour to advorate long en-gagements, and then deliberately ask me: "Did you notice last evening at the theatre that Miss — was with Mr. — again? Wonder when it will come off?" That's the sort of woman, my friend, who makes men ask: "Is woman consistent?" and I can't blame them. What difference does it make to now and to me what Miss — thinks of Mr. world are those which have ripened with time 0

THIS senseless gossip which so many are prone to, has wrecked many a life and broken up many a home. It is bad enough when directed at any one; but when its batteries are turned upon young budding lives it becomes a crime. At this beautiful Easter season let us at least make one resolution typical of the Christ; that we will be considerate of others, and enter into their lives only to help them and make their paths easier. Let each of us, as a member of the great social body, do what we can to make clearer in the minds of our young women that proper deport-ment in a girl is her great and only safeguard, and the one which will win for her the esteem of her own sex, and the respect of the best and truest men. Let our girls have a chance to know our young men, and vice versa. Their home training will be their best safeguard while as to the intentions of the one toward the other-well, my friend,

"Love will find the way."

"Perhaps il may turn out a song, Perhaps turn out a sermon."

AM debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbar-ians," said the great Apos-tic. And we Christians of a leter day, who are not much better than Paul, attleach we have to see much better than Paul, although we hate to own it, we, too, are debtors to the old Barburians who invented our Easter festival for us. It is the survival of the fittest. Easter, the old, or rather, young—who ever heard of an old guddess—Teutonic goddess of spring, has been laid away in the museum lo, these many years but the festival heartifully. spring, has been faid away in the museum lo, these many years, but the festival, beautifully consecrated to holier ideas, we keep. God bless the Barbarian then. What! Shall a Christian quarrel with his creditors? Rather it behoveth uato make friends with the mamon of unrighteousness when we are deeply in his debt. A happy thought of the Barbarian—it could not have occurred to the Christian—to mingle the worship of raiment with our other prayers, and cause this festival to fall on good Saint Bonnet's day. Ah, well, it is pleasant to say one's prayers in a garden, even though bud and blessen be the handiwork of art, which feeble nature vainly strives to insitate. which feeble nature vainly strives to instate. We cannot make the almanac religious. Is it our fault that we see the iricle standing on his head when we look to find the arbutus lifting hers? We must be debtors to the arrivation as well as to the Barbarian; i'fackins, we are. There be Easter designs in the sloop windows this blessed Easter-tide that for grotesque profamity and brazen irreverence could not be surpassed by the malignant creations of the most benighted Barbarian that everate a missionary. The Barbarian is inving his revenge; he is forectosing his mortgage; he is getting his festival back again; for he it must be who designs some of the Easter "novelties." Never mind; so long as they sell; what has the trade to do with the church? If people demand startling and cominal novelties in the way of Easter fads, what once we for the pulpit so long as we please the pews? That's one of many blessings of living in America. benighted Barbarian that ever ate a missionary.

We cat and drink, and scheme, and plod, And go to church on Sunday, And many are afraid of God, And more of Mrs. Grundy."

LOVE OF DISPLAY AND NOVELTY

WHAT a shameful, ill-timed growl over the sweetest festival in the Christian VV the sweetest festival in the Christian year, for all its little taint of Barbarian vanity and love of display, which is its inheritance by heredity. That's the trouble in making over a pagen holiday to fit a Christian church; it's the new cloth in the old garment that makes the patches show so plainly. And a made-over suit never looks quite so perfect in the fit and style as the new one. But perhaps it is bester to wear the made-over sait, turned and let out and taken in until the original design only faintly discloses itself in creases and sunburned faintly discloses itself in creases and sunburned streaks here and there, rather than go in fig leaves. If we can have no gala days and cos-tumes without going in debt for them at the old-established costumery of Greek, Barb & old-established costumery of Greek, Barb & Co., why, let us open an account and have the things charged. It is a pity if we are not smart enough to beat a Barkarian firm out of a bill for holidays. If he does get judgment, it will go hard if we do not beat him on excention. Our Easter is a joyous feelival, kept joyously and devontly by thousands of sincere Christians, and if you are not satisfied with the way the rest of us keep it, there is one consolution for you. In this land of religious liberty you can take any day of the year and observe the Easter festival to suit yourself.

EASTER-TIDE OF LONG AGO

NAY, you may organize a church of your own—the Church of the Holy Growlers -and abolish all feasts and festivals, and calendar observances, and be parson, clerk, choir sexton all your lone self. And you'd break up in a row before you were through the first service.
If you doubt this, just try the experiment,
How the restless demand for novelty changes our mode of keeping our feasts! I notice this each year as Easter dawns upon the world. For one thing, I observe that "Easter emes" are quite a feature of the festival. Now, when I was a boy we had no such nonsense. We had 'nigs' always. "Ensternigs," usually pronounced in one word. We used to color them with calico; fast colors. A week before Easter somebody would go to the store to buy the calico with which to print the "aigs," "Is this fast colors?" And the clerk would lift his hand to benven and swear that the delage couldn't finde one ray of the brightest delage couldn't fade one ray of the brightest tint in the figure. After securing his affidavit, we would the "nig" up in a bit of that print and boil it. The calico would come out of the ordeal pure, spotless, whiter than snow, and the "sig" would be a thing of beauty in dots and leaves and twigs. Oh, "sig" of the by-gone years! Oh, Easter-tide of long ago! Oh, blessed clerk who has been writing circulation affidavits for daily papers ever since he got out of jail! Owe for several things we haven't time to pay for! we haven't time to pay for

"If I can't pay, why I can own, And death makes equal the high and low."

RIGHTS OF THE OUTLAWS

HAVE well-bred people uniformly good nanners? Well, yes, I do not think. Not more than two hundred years ngo I saw a group of Italian immigrants stray into the waiting room of a great railway station that had been erected in the place which William Penn forgot to designate for that purpose. The wayfarers were tired, rather dirty, somewhat bewildered, but they had not yet assumed that beterogeneous rag-bag style of pot-pourri raiment affected by the American pensantry, and heterogeneous rag-bag style of pot-pourri rai-ment affected by the American peasantry, and so they made a very picturesque cluster of humanity. Ladies and gentlemen came over to their corner, atoud before them, gazed at them—common people would have stared— made comments, undgave place to other well-dressed and respectable ladies and gentlemen, who in their turn gazed, commented and re-tired. Now, just suppose the Italians had tired. Now, just suppose the Italians had grown weary of the exposition—and no doubt they were tired of it before it began—and had gone into the ladies' waiting room and stood before their intelligent and refined critics and before their intelligent and refined extics and stared at them. A policeman would have been summoned, or more likely would have come without a summons, and bustled the intruders out of that room with more violence than ceremony. Why? Well, I hope to be good if I know. But that's just the difference. There are lots of things in this world which, on general principles, are the same, yet are they entirely different.

RECREATIONS OF GOOD SOCIETY

RECREATIONS OF GOOD SOCIETY

I'dent been two years since a "society" recreation was "slumming." People in good society, wealthy, refined—well, let us say wealthy—formed little parties and without saying "by your leave," entered the homes of the vile and wretched creatures who inhabit the slums, stared, commented, jested and came away. Now, suppose Bill Sikes, Nancy Fagan and "The Dodger," and Toby Cruckit and Bet, should get up a little party some evening and visit Mrs. Lofty's parlors, just to kill time and see how "the other half" lived and amused itself when it was at home? Anybody knows what the result would be. A platon of police and the patrol wagon would platon of police and the patrol wagon would be sunmoned in charge of the sergeant who escorted Mrs. Lofty and her party to Bill Sikes' home the night before and compelled Bill and home the night before and compelled fill and Nancy to receive their uninvited guests, and the whole party—gang, it would be called—would get not less than six months or a year on the island. Why? I give it up. For the life of me, I cannot see why the home of wretched-ness, powerty and vice is not as much a home to the criminal as well as Mrs. Lofty's mansion— old Lofty wrecked two railroads, and stole one-third of an Indian reservation to build it—is third of an Indian reservation to build it—is a home to ber. If I lived in the slums I would be an Aparchist. And if a slumming party came to my lair without my invitation i would try hard to amuse them while they

WHO ARE THE CRIMINALS?

JUST think how annoying these slumming parties may sometimes be. Some evening I am ready to start out house-breaking; my pal—they call him partner when we wreck railroads instead of blowing up safes—is waiting for me, and lo, a party of respectable peaks are to be provided in the contract of the contr ing for me, and lo, a party of respectable people swarm in on me, my business is interrupted, and my children may have to go without breakfast, just for the idle amusement of people who do their robbing by dnylight; who steal my time to kill their own. Not only these robbers, who break in on my manualing, which is of a nobler kind than theirs, because every step of it is attended with danger and overshadowed by prison walls—but other people, who come to see how I live that they may warn other people against me. As though a man need walk down his pulpit steps to find a "horrible example." Being a professional burglar I am not supposed to know much about these things, but I read in the Book that they Jesus of Namreth, who used to preach in the street, wanted to find his "borrible exin the street, wanted to find his "borrible exin the street, wanted to find his "borrible examples," he went into the Temple to look for them. And there he found them. He used to dine in the slums now and then—at least the best people in the good society charped him with it—but the only time he scourged anybody was when he whipped a lot of brokers and exchangers out of the sacred precincts of the Temple, which he accused them of turning into a den of thieves. I am afraid we look in the wrong places to find the worst people. About the greatest sin of which we find a man or woman to be guilty is to be we find a man or woman to be guilty is to be different from ourselves. Many people who would recoil with horror from cutting a burnan creature's throat, which really does not hart very much and only lasts a moment, will murder a woman's good name without will muster a woman's good name without remores or companction; and that hurts worse than death for a life-time. It is a meaner crime than murder. We cry out, and rightly, too, against the sensational and depraying habit of making heroes of robbers and cat-threats. It is a horrible thing to do. And yet I have less of hatred and loathing for the late Jesse James than I have for some people who have never been convicted of a capital crime, but whose tongues, we know, are worse than any knife that ever severed a human

SOME BIRTHDAY MUSINGS

A ND so this is your birthday? Sure enough; it is indeed the first of April. Had it not occurred to me I should not have mentioned ist Yes indeed; this is the glad day that hailed the auspicious beginning of your bright and useful career; your first day's murch in this vale of tears. Vale? It was a continental water system. If you wanted anything, you wept for it; if you did not want it when you got it, you wept the loader; and when you did not know what you did want, you made Rome howl. Weeping and walling and grashing of not know what you did want, you made Rome howl. Weeping and wailing and guashing of gums were your three languages, and you could, nay, usually did, speak them all at once, People residing on the same street were convinced that after you reached your fifth year you could never again raise a tear from the briny depths of your pumped-out eyes; no, not with an artesian anger. That is where people were occams away in their diagnosis. You can weep now to much better effect than you could then. You do not make so much noise about it; land no! If you should yell now as you used to we would throw you into an asylum for the insame. Maybe that is the an asylum for the basase. Maybe that is the reason you do not do it. And you do not make such horrible inces about it, either. No indeed, at your time of life—which is the very biossoming time of womanhood—if you should let your mouth and checks run wild in your weeping, as you did then, you would cruck every mirror in the room. That, per-hans, is another restraining influence. I do haps, is another restraining influence. I do not think, indeed, you cry so much with your mouth these days. Because you never cry now, unless there is something to cry for. When Mark Antony yells—

"Other I were Upon the hill of lineau to outrour The borned herd."

he is only furious, and that does not hurt much. Trouble that a man can how! away lies for the most part in his mouth. Words are the best plasters for such a wound. The crying of the baby gives his hugs exercise. But when you begin to cry with dry eyes and quiet lips and a sore heart, that hurts. You never cry that way until you are a woman.

REFLECTIONS OF THE GOAT

HOW doth the busy little girl, Improve each passing hour, By chewing slabs of tulu gum, With all her jawful power.

How cunningly she mads it up: How quick-

How cunningly she wads it up; How quickly she turns it o'er; Shifts it from port to starboard, Then she chews it more and more.

Who taught the little girl the way to work her busy chin? Who showed her how to twist her jaws, Such weird grimaces in?

Who taught her deft prehensile tongue The lasso's work to do? To corral the clusive gum, And chew, and chew, and chew?

Ah me, she learned the art at school, Matriculation day. And hadn't learned a great deal culation day, And lastn't learned a great deal more, What time she came away.

Then let us all, with heart and will, Keep gum on hand to chew, And find some occupa-tion still, For idle jaws to do.

A GOOD TURN

D<sup>0</sup> you know, I've just thought of some-thing which you women who are long-ing for an active share in the world's work night take hold of and turn to good advantage? Doorknob.

REST FOR THE WEARY

M.R. Heavybead," said his wife, reprouch-fully, "it was a shame for you to go to sleep in church this morning. Such a short sermon. Dr. Wunwordmor's manuscript only covered two sheets."

"Just what I always go to sleep between," replied Heavybead, with the tone of a man who had driven a clincher.

REACHING THE SUMMIT

I THINK I am getting along," remarked the Reformed Reformer, "I wrestled with myself for three years and learned to keep my word; thee years more of hard lighting enabled me to keep my temper, and I have been at it two years now, and hope soon to learn how to keep a lead pencil during business hours."

GONE WITH THE PINS

Where is the thrill of last night's fear? Where is the stain of last week's tenr? Where is the tooth that uched last year?

Gone where the lost pins go to; For last night's riddle is all made plain, The sunshine laughs at the long-past ruin. And the tooth that ached both lost its pain-That's what our troubles grow to.

Where are the clothes that we used to wear? Where is the bald-head's curling hair?

Gone where the pins disappear to; For the style has changed and the clothes are tiew.

The skies are wearing a brighter blue.
The hair doesn't snari as it used to do. And the parting has grown more clear, too.

Where are the bills that our peace distressed?
Where is the pin that the baby "blessed?"
Where are the doves in last year's nest?
Where have the pins all gone to?
On the old bills paid are the new ones thrown.
The baby's at school with her pins our grown.
And the squals are repution a test of their And the squabs are running a nest of their

You can't bring 'em back if you want to.

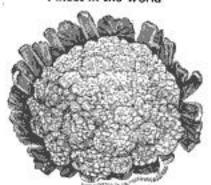

We can stand the smart of yesterday, To-day's worse ills we can drive away; What's was and is brings no dismoy

For past and present sorrow; But the burdens that make us grown and swent, The troubles that make us fume and fret, Are the things that haven't happened yet The pins that we'll find to morrow.

Robert J. Burdette

THORBURN'S GILT EDGE CAULIFLOWER

Without any Exception the Finest in the World

By sowing Thorburn's Gilt Edge Cauliflower, the difficulty of calsing this most deficious of vegetables is entirely removed. The strain is sore to head and can be grown successfully wherever cabbage thrives. In order to have it become more generally known we will mail a sample packet containing about 300 seeds for 12 cents in stamps.

J. M. THORBÜRN & CO. No. 15 John Street, New York City.

BURROWES'

WIRE SCREENS.

Our New Brick Screen Pactories are

THE LARCEST IN THE WORLD.

THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

BURNOWES IMPROVED WIRE WINDOW AND DOOR SCREENS are an effective bar against the most been supported by the most of the most been fasted the most of the most been fasted and cutors of mosts is beautifully fireithed, specially like black committed wire next ingain and handsome hardware. Our Window Screens slide as solver part. Ninetentils of our work is making sorwers to order for new houses. We have surveyed more than 26,000 houses in 59 States. Among them are the residences of Thomas A. Edison diventor, Gen. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, Geo. M. Pullman, (palace care), Geo. P. H. Sherkhin, We sell directly to owners of touses from any locality. We sell directly to owners of thouses at lowest wholesale prices. We pay militias freight. Our prices are no higher than charged by carponers for chasp work. If you want to bay Screens, and will send you our catalogue, sundes, prices and direction. We have offices and salesmen to show samples in all large cities. Direct and fallesses: E. T. BURKOWES & CO., Forthand, Mo.

Steamen are sno send from this both then from surthing yet published. Sent Prepaid for $1.00.

FRANK P. ALLEN, Architect, 6: & 62 Old Houseman Elk. Grand Rapids, Mich.

WE believe a pleased customer will send us others. We sell only such goods as we can guarantee, and spare no effort to give entire satisfaction. We

No. 804, $28.00 Enameled in colors with have new and original Pearls and Diamond designs in gold and diamond Jewelry, Watches, etc.

HENRY ABBOTT & CO.

14 Maiden Lane, New York,

GALES CYCLES

MODELS A and B STRICTLY HIGH GRADE $100.00

SCHOVERLING, DALY & GALES 303 Broadway, New York.

BICYCLES ON EASY
NO extra charge. All makes new of the hands Lowers price guarantee of the hands Lowers price guarantee to the hands Lowers the part of the hands and olders the large of the Ag's, wanted, hour, samed to, for the first of MONEY. SELL OLD GOLD and SILVER form mail. Est. 1880. H. HART, BOXISI, Bochester, N. Y.

8 FIRST GOLD MORTGAGES. Psychic in Gold. City and Farm Loans. Best of sequency. Highest safe targets. Address Targets, Systematic City, Earnest, Mach. Digitized by Google

The purpose of this Department is to bring the members of the Order of The King's Daughters and its President into closer relations by personal and familiar "Talks" and "Chats." All letters from the "Daughters" bearing upon this one and special purpose only, should be addressed to MRS. BOTTOME, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, and she will be glad to receive them. Please do not, however, send letters to MRS. BOTTOME concerning membership in the Order, or business communications of any nature. All such should be addressed direct to the headquarters of the order, 158 West Twenty-third Street, New York city, and prompt attention will be given.

HEART TO HEART TALKS

PRIL! Yes; spring is here! I was reading the other day of one of the early birds. In April it seems to say: "Plow it! plow it! Hoe it! hoe it!" It made me think of the lines I shed many tears over once, lines tears over once, lines which ought to bring comfort at this sub-lime season of the year, when all Nature seems waiting for the touch of God's hand:

"Fret not that thou art seamed and scarred, and torn,
That clods are plied where tinted vetches were;
That long sorms craw to light, and brown rifes bare
Of green and tender grasses wheley yourn.
God's hand is on the plow, so be thou still;
Thou cannt not see Itim, for thine eyes are dim;
But wait in patience, put thy trust in Him, Give thanks for love, and leave thee to His will."

Yes! the plowing time is only a prepara-tion for the coming flowers and fruit. The soft rains will come, the genial warm sun, and some day you will be glad for the plow-ing. For there is an agriculture of the soul, as well as of the land.

AGRICULTURE OF THE SOUL

AGRICULTURE OF THE SOUL

I REMEMBER a spring, long ago, when we wanted to have a garden in front of our little house. The ground had been neglected, so the soil had to be enriched, and I sat at my window and saw load after load of dark looking staff thrown on the garden where I wanted to see beauty; and if I had not known that my fature flowers were connected with what looked so dismal and unsightly, I would have said, "O, is this the way to make a garden?" But I knew that so the soil was being enriched; and even so must the soul be enriched. I read in a paper a little while ago something that interested me greatly. "Why am I not happy?" said a gentleman to a friend who had been his classmate at college. "I have everything to make me happy—wife, children, a happy home, money, success, position; and yet I would give everything I possess to have one whiff of my boyish feelings again. Now, why am I not happy?" His friend answered: "You see nothing but dollars and cents in every walk of life. You want a great reaction, and God may bring back that old-time feeling." "I do not know what could," he replied, "unless a great sorrow; that might!" The remark made me think of what so many of you will see at this season of the year—the plowing, the agriculture of grief. When you feel the plowing going on in your heart, let your prayer be

"Keep me my fight I pray, I cannot see,

"Keep me my falih I pray, I cannot see, I fear to intermeddie with Thy work; the though I wince and fret, I would not shirk. The discipline that is so good for me!"

VICTORY OVER SORROW

THIS is also the month in which we keep the beautiful festival of Easter; and that I. the beautiful festival of Easter; and that means victory over sorrow. It means remained; it means all that is beautiful—the blossoming of all our hopes. Now, God seems justified for all the plowing he has led us through; it all meant this—all the darkness, all the underground life meant this; all was necessary. Every Easter lily seems to say, "I needed it all. Sometimes I felt almost discouraged pushing my way on through durk and dirt; but I reached the light, and then I was content to grow, just to grow! till at last I am a lily." And some of these lilies will listen to the Easter music; and then, nechans. I am a lily." And some of these lilies will listen to the Easter music; and then, perhaps, listen to the Easter nausic; and then, perhaps, be carried from the church to whisper words of cheer and hope to sick poor ones at home or in the hospitals; they will feel that their work is done and be ready to die. I wonder if I ever told you that somehow I feel responsible for flowers that come to me in all their perfection. I know they can only stay a short time, and they seem to say to me: "I was so long in getting to where I am that I should like to be as useful as societies do but made."

so tong in getting to where I am that I should like to be as useful as possible; do let me do all the good I can."

So I feel as if I must send them where they can cheer and comfort the tired and weak ones; and if they stay with me I keep them alive as long as possible by giving them plenty alive as long as possible by giving them plenty of water. Other when they fall, looking as fresh as when they were given to me, I think they would rather die thus than wither away. But this is the month to talk of living, instead of dying. I hope you all know that little poem of Whittler, where he tells us that all is coming back, and all will be perfectly natural. God does not give us strange flowers every year. We shall look for our violets and lilies of the valley just where we saw them last year, and we will find them there as fragrant and beautiful as ever, "for, lo? the vinter is post, the rain is over and gone!" HUNTING FOR SILVER LININGS

A CHARMING mother found her two little A CHARMING mother found her two little children, who wear the Cross, the other day looking unusually grave, and they had evidently been talking about something that had made them sad. When she asked them what was the matter, a sweet face was lifted up and the answer was "Mamma, we've been hunting for sliver linings and we can't find them." The true mothersaid: "Perhaps I can help you," and she took her seat beside them and they told her of the dark clouds where they could see no silver lining. But the mother did, and showed them what they could not find.

find.

My first thought was about the blessing of a My first thought was about the blessing of a good mother who can chase away the shadows that come into very young lives, and then I thought of the One who says; "Like as a mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." There are many sad besides these little children (who felt the absence from home of the dear brother as one dark cloud and could not see the silver lining 'till the mother showed it to them) older people cannot sometimes see the silver lining to the very dark clouds, and yet, I am sure, if we only thought of God as like a mother, and would be simple enough to tell him we could not see any silver lining, I am sure He would show it to us. I cannot tell how He comforts, but He does. The little children were so ready to tell their mother, but, alas! our God is not near to many of His children, or rather He seems far off, though He is night unto all. We pray "Our Father, who art in Henven," and we are too apt to think of Him as out of our reach; in another sphere of life entirely. But it is true; it is so true, we have a father here, where we need him as much as in the besvenly land. The longer I live the surer I am that few know practically the meaning of the words." Our Father." good mother who can chase away the shadows

THE LOVE OF GOD

WHAT would I not give to be able to make all my circle full of joy. And sometimes I think most of you would say to me if you could, "I want more life, a kind of abundant life, fullness of joy." I sympathize most with enthusiastic natures. I remember when my children were little, I could not bear they should be in the least unhappy. "Have a good time," was generally my parting word, and now, after all these years, I think I was right, I think God wants happy children. Alas, sometimes I think He hasn't many compared with the unhappy children. "Well," you say, "how can I be happy? If you knew my circumstances you would not wonder that I am not happy." Suppose a great love should come to you in the midst of your circumstances—something beyond anything you ever dreamed off. There was such thing you ever dreamed off. There was such a love came to Madame Guyon in the Bastille in Paris, and the stones in her prison looked to her like rubies and diamonds, and you know she sang

"A little tierd I am Shut from the fields of air,
And all day long I sit and sing
To Him who placed me here,
Well pleased a prisoner to be Because, my Lard, R pleaseth Thee."

ACKNOWLEDGE YOUR INFIRMITIES

WAS walking along Broadway the other I day when a friend of mine, a lawyer in the city, accosted me. "I am glad to meet you. I want to tell you how much good your department in THE Labres' Home Journal does me." "I was surprised that he read it. He said "Why, my daughter takes it, and I read all that you have to say." I then told him have to say avenue of usefulness it had opened to me, and of the many sad people there were to be comforted. Just then he stopped the car, and as he handed me in, he said: "Tell the sad ones maybe it is their 'infirmity.' "As I took my seat I repeated over the word "infirmity." Then I remembered the Psalmist of old talked of his "infirmity;" so I thought I would look it up, and I do hope my lawyer friend will read how much good he did me. I looked at the concordance in my Bible for the word "infirmity," and found it was in the 77th Psalm, and then I saw what my friend meant. The first nine verses are all about David's troubles—he couldn't sleep nights; be said his sore ran in the night (mental sores the sad ones maybe it is their 'infirmity.'" said his sore ran in the night (mental sores are always worse in the night); he thought God had forgotten him, and the thought of God troubled him instead of comforted him. He prayed a great deal, crisal unto the Lord with his voice; and he felt God beard him, but it his voice; and he felt God heard him, but it didn't seem to help him much after all, for after all his praying he wombered whether God hadn't forgotten him. But he seems sud-denly to stop, and then, follows "This is my infirmity." Maybe it was a physical infirmity that affected the mind. I have known such trouble to make sad havor with one's religious feelings. Anyway, he reached the conclusion that it was his infirmity. that it was his infirmity, DELIVER US FROM TEMPTATION!

I THINK if we would pray naturally, speak right out to God, as the Psalmist did, it would be very helpful; but we somehow think it enough to read how David cried unto the Lord. We had better begin crying ourselves. Where are our psalms? David had his. I have often thought of the little fellow who were suffering with spinal trouble; his his. I have often thought of the little fellow who was suffering with spinal trouble; his mother overheard his prayer and it was this:
"O, Lord Jesus, if you care the snap of your finger for me, put me to sleep." And in a few moments the little fellow was fast asleep. Many a victory I have had in my life by turning the key and saying, "I will have the victory over this matter." I like to see people get desperate and declare to Him they will not go on in this way any longer. The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.

force.

This battle of life means something more than parade. There is a fearful word that we speak of so glibly, but to me it is an awful word: Temptation. And we pray, "Lead me not into temptation." It does not mean that God will not lead you where you cannot be tempted; for character can be made in no other way than by temptation. Did you ever seriously think that Christ was led up by the Spirit into the wilderness for the curpose that tempted; for character can be made in no other way than by temptation. Did you ever seriously think that Christ was led up by the Spirit into the wilderness for the purpose that he might be tempted by the devil? And you need not expect to escape temptation. And know where your weak place is, and plant your batteries there.

Only think of what thousands would have escaped if they had said; "I know I have a peculiar liking for wine, or for what intoxicates, so every care must be taken just there. I, no matter what others can do, I can never taste it!" I heard some years ago, and I know it to be true, of a young man in this city who has never tasted anything that can intoxicate. When his mother was dying she called this boy, a mere baby, to her side, and with all the earnestness that seemed as if given her in those last moments, made that boy promissher he would never touch wine or anything that could intoxicate. She had him lay his little hand on the Bible, and then she prayed and commended him to God and died. She knew he might have in him the appetite that took his father to an early grave. That child never tasted liquor. And he told a friend (who said of him he was one of the neblest specimens of manhood that walked the streets of this great city) that the smell of the liquor, as he passed the saloons, was like fire in him, and that he knew if ever he tasted it he was gone, and he added: "I can never tell the agony of desire I have when I catch the fames of the liquid fire." But he never yielded. There are many temptation; you are not wise if you noust say "No!" with all the power God will give you. At no time of your life can you nest say "No!" with all the power God will give you. At no time of your life can the dreadful hours of His life of temptation, as when you are tempted. Tempted He was in all points, like as we are, and He did not sin. And let me say this: the stron

"The mark of rank in nature is capacity for pain. And the anguish of the singer Makes the avectness of the strain!"

Fight your fight, gain your victory and wear your crown of triumph. Be kingly! Walk the earth a conqueror! Stand with those who have overcome!

THE LIFE EVERLASTING

I am so sure we have never fully comprehended all that is coming back to us! I wonder how the angels can endure our lack of faith. We do not act so in regard to the spring; we know it will come back, and we say to the March winds, blow on, your time is short! April and May are coming. But, alas! we do not act that way about the winter of the heart. We put on our mourning, and we look and act as if it were all gone forever; when, instead of that, it is all coming back, and the voices of nature, and the look of nature, all say Resurrection! Resurrection! We do not heed. Our eyes are too dim with weeping; we have been so accusdim with weeping; we have been so accus-tomed to looking down instead of looking up, that we do not see God's face or hear His voice in nature all around us. I have so longed to get the dear Daughters to hope, and hope has to do with the future. Now, this month, with the beautiful Easter in it, nonin, with the beautiful Easter in it, calls for hope; and will you not leave your tombs of sorrow and come forth to life and useful-ness? We must leave our graves and grave clothes, and let others say of us, in our meas-ure, "She is risen! She is alive; a new crea-ture!"

A VERY PRESENT HELP

I DO so love to look at Christ after the Res-intensely human, so loving! breathing peace on his disciples every time be met then. Ab, yes! Whittier is right, and we feel it

Ab, yes! Whittier is right, and we feel it especially at Easter time, when he says Christ

No fable old; nor mythic lore, Not dreams of hards and seers; No dead bark stranded on the stane of the oblivious years; But warm, sevet, reader, even ye. A present help is He. And fath has still us officer. And for the fable.

B. & B.

IT PAYS

One order sent to our

Mail Order Department

will demonstrate that it will pay you to buy your

DRY GOODS

of us, no matter where you live.

Our importations of new weaves of

Spring Dress Goods

is very large and elegant, including

Vigognes, Vicuna Cloths, Serge Diagonals, Trouville Bedfords, Plisse, Tweeds, Jacquard Cheviots, Scotch Mixtures, Etc.

in all the latest Paris colorings.

New Bedford Cords-Spring weight -50 inches wide, $1.25 per yard, in the new shades of violet, sage, tan, beige, rose, steel-gray, navy, myrtle, etc. Special value.

Samples upon request. Write for copy of Spring Catalogue-ready March 15.

BOGGS & BUHL 115, 117, 119, 121 Federal Street ALLEGHENY, PA.

IN SHEER INDIA LINONS PRINTED EFFECTS

APROVE & R45mins

WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY FAST

DRESS AT ALL LEADING DRY GOODS STO LIFTER PARENTED ALL OVER THE WORK

A Special Adjustment, also, for Trained Skirts G. H. LANGE & CO., ENGLAND NEW YORK OFFICE, 108 WORTH STREET, CITY

The correct Writing Papers for society, foreign and every day correspondence are BOSTON LINEN, BOSTON BOND, and BUNKER HILL. Superior in quality, modernate in price, If your dealer does not keep them, send us your address and see add forward you our com-plete samples free, SAMUR!, WARD CO., the & SI Franklin St., Boston, Mass.

SHEPP'S "SHEPP'S PROTOGRAPHS OF THE PHOTOGRAPHS ** OF THE WORLD

U NOOCHTERLY the obsupest place to tag reliable Hair Grock. Bump of natural early hair, small size, H.50; median size, F.50; on E.50. Switcher, Warer and Bange in natural dash and give shades a specialty.
Historical Catalogue sent from, Goods sent by mail everywhere. S. C. BECK.

Importer and Manufacturer of HAIR GOODS, 36 Sorth Eighth Street, Philadelphia,

"PARTED BANG."

be of married CURLY HAIR material beausing to halles who were; hair parted, $6 up, alcording to said color. Fourithing Mark, with westers, $5. Hair Goods, One or, etc., seek C. D. auguston, the the manufacture for Hamman principals. E. H. E.M.R.M., 71 State St. Prairied Maste Hall, Chicago.

tural Carly Bangs, St., Parted Bangs rees, for Hilderic Ladies, St. 50 to $4.60. her. St. 50 to $10, according to length gentley of hair. Ladies' and Gents $0.00 to $10.00. Send antiple had to $10.00 to $10.00. Send antiple had to you had been and Funder for Complete. O courte such. St. 6, STRIBL & 40., Lakach Avenue, Chicago, III.

FASHIONABLE HAIR.

We will until goods to reliable parties throughout the United States for approval. The ness-est styles and best of goods at lowest prices. No meany re-quired until they are received. No obligation to keep goods if unsatisfactory, Send Se-circular.

JOHN MEDINA.

Digitized by Google

TH blooming fily and tulip and crocus, the earth throws off the icy embrace of win-ter and welcomes the first barbinger of spring-time. How litting it is that the flowers should first spring forth into beauteous bloom to welcome the day of a resurrected Christ! Easter day has always had for me a singular suggestive benuty; a time of the year when I feel as if the goodness of God is closer to me than at any other. Full of beauty is the Easter-tide, and fuller still of the lessons it can teach us!

CHRIST AND MARY IN THE GARDEN

THERE are one or two things which the world and the Church, I think, have not world and the Courch, I think, have not noticed in regard to the resurrection of Christ; especially, our Lord in gardener's attire. Mary Magdalene, grief-struck, stands by the rifiel sarcophagus of Christ, and turns around, hopsarcophagus of Christ, and turns around, hoping she can find the track of the sacrilegious resurrectionist who has despoiled the grave. As she turns she finds some one in working apparel come forth, as if to water the flowers, or uproot the weeds from the garden, or set to reclining the fallen vine—some one in working apparel, his garments perhaps having the sign of the dust and the dirt of the occupation. Mary Magdalene, on her face the rain of a fresh shower of weeping, turns to this workman and charges him with the descention of the tomb, when lot the stranger responds, flinging his whole soul into one word, which trembles with all the sweetest rhythm of which trembles with all the sweetest rhythm of earth and heaven, saying, "Mary!" In that peculiarity of accentuation all the incognito fell off, and she found that instead of talking with an humble gardener of Asia Minor she was talking with Him who owns all the hanging gardens of heaven. Constellations, the clusters of forget-me-nots, the sunflower the chief of all, the morning sky and midnight aurora, flaring terraces of beauty blazing like a supposer wall, with coronation poses and a summer wall, with coronation roses and giants of battle. Blessed and glorious mis-take of Mary Magdalene. "She supposing Him to be the gardener." What does that mean? It means that we have an every-day Christ for every-day work, in every-day ap-parel. Not on Subbath morning, in our most seemly apparel, are we more attractive to Christ than we are in our every-day work dress, mannging our merchandise, smiting our anvil-plowing our field, tending the flying slut-tles, mending the garments of our household, providing food for our families, or tolling with weary pen, or weary pencil, or weary chisel,

FOR THE LOWLIEST OF THE EARTH IF Christ had appeared at daybreak, with a L crown upon His head, that would have seemed to suggest especial sympathy for monarchs; if Christ had appeared in chain of gold, and with robe diamonded, that would gold, and with robe diamonded, that would have seemed to be especial sympathy for the affluent; if Christ had appeared with soldier's sash and sword dangling at His side, that would have seemed to imply especial sympathy for warriors. But when I find Christ in gardener's habit, with perhaps the flakes of the earth and of the upturned soil upon His garments, then I spell it out that He has hearty and pathetic understanding with every-day work, and every-day anxiety, and every-day fatigue. Roll it down in comfort all through the homes of the hand. Tell it in the darkest corridor of the mountain to the poor miner, tell it to the factory maid in most poor miner, tell it to the factory maid in most unventilated establishment: clearer of roughest new ground in Western wilderness; tell it to the sewing-woman, pricking a stitch in her side for every stitch in the garment—those women whose cruel emthe garment—those women whose cruel employers have no more right to think that they will get through the door of heaven than that they could through the eye of the broken needle which has just dropped on the bare floor from the pricked and bleeding fingers of the consumptive sewing girl. Away with your talk about hyperstatic union, and soteriology of the Council of Trent, and the metaphysics of religion which would freeze practical Christianity out of the world; but passalong this gardener's cout to all nations, that they may touch the hem of it and feel the along this gardener's cont to all nations, that they may touch the bem of it and feel the thrill of Christly brotherhood. Oh, the world wants a Christ for the office, a Christ for the kitchen, a Christ for the shop, a Christ for the banking house, a Christ for the field, a Christ for the garden, while spading and planting and irrigating the territory! Oh, of course, we want to see Christ at last in royal robe and beliamoust a colestial consertion. robe and bediamoned, a celestial equestrian mounting the white horse; but from this Easter of 1892, to our last Easter on earth, we must need to see Christ as Mary Magdalene saw Him at the daybreak, "supposing Him to be the madener." to be the gardener."

EASTER DAWN, NOT EASTER NOON

NOTHER thing that the world and the A. church have not observed in regard to this resurrection, and that is, it was the morn-ing twillight. If the chronometer had been in-vented, and Mary had had as good a watch as some of the Marys of our time have, she would have found it was about half past five o'clock, A. M. Matthew says it was the dawn; Mark says it was the dawn; o'clock, A. M. Matthew says it was the dawn; Mark says it was at the sunrising; Luke says it was very early in the morning; John says it was while it was yet dark. In other words, it was twilight. That was the o'clock at which Mary Maghalene mistook Christ for the gardener. What does that mean? It means there are shadows over the grave unlifted, shadows of mistery that are hovering. Mary stooped down and tried to look to the other and of the cryst. She gave hysteric outers: stooped down and tried to look to the other end of the crypt. She gave bysteric outery; she could not see to the other end. Neither can you see to the other end of the grave of your dead; neither can we see to the other end of our own grave. Oh! if there were shadows over the family plot belonging to Joseph of Arimathea, is it strange that there should be some shadows over our family lot? Easter dawn, not Easter moon. Easter dawn, not Easter noon.

WAITING FOR THE MORNING TWILIGHT

SHADOW of unanswered question! Why SHADOW of unanswered question! Why were they taken away from us? Why were they ever given to us if they were to be taken so soon? Why were they taken so suddenly? Why could they not have uttered some farewell woods? Why? A short question, but a whole crucifixion of agony in it. Why? Shadow on the graves of good men and women who seemed to die before their work was done; shadow on all the graves of children, because we ask ourselves why so beautiful a craft was homehed at all if it was to be wrecked one mile outside the harbor? But what did Mary Magnialene have to do in order to get more light on that grave? She had only to get more light on that grave? She had only to wait. After a while the Easter sun rolled up and the whole place was flooded with light. What have you and I to do in order to aget. What have you and I to do in order to get more light on our own graves, and light upon the graves of our dear loved ones? Only to wait; it is not the evening twilight that gets darker and darker. It is the morning twilight that gets brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. I write it to you to-day. Sunrise over Pere le Chaise, sunrise over Greenwood, over Woodlawn, over Laurel Hill, over Mount Auburn, sunrise over every country graves. Auburn, sunrise over every country grave-yard, sunrise over the catacombs, sunrise over the sarcophagi where the ships lie buried. Half-past five o'clock among the tombs now, but soon to be the noonday of explanation and bentitude. It was in the morning twilight that Mary Magdalene mistook Christ for a

AS WE SHALL KNOW EACH OTHER

A NOTHER thing the world and the clearch have not observed: that is, Christ's pathetic credentials. How do you know he was not a gardener? His garments said he was a gardener. The flakes of the upturned earth scattered upon His garments said He was a gardener. How do you know He was not a gardener? Before Easter had gone by He gave to some of His disciples His three credentials. He showed them His hands and His side; three paragraphs written in rigid or depressed characters; a scar in the right polm, a scar in the left palm, a scar amid the ribs! That is the way they knew Him; that is the way you and I will know Him. Ay, am I saying too much when I say that that will be one of the ways in which you and I will know each other—by the scars of earth; scars of necident, scars of hard work, scars of battle, scars of old age! When I see Christ's resurrected body having scars, it makes me think that our remodeled and resurrected bodies will have scars. Why, before we get out of this world some of us will be covered with scars all over. Heaven will not be a bay into which float summer ynelts after a pleasuring, with the gay bunting and with the cm-NOTHER thing the world and the church into which float summer yachts after a pleas-uring, with the gay bunting and with the em-orotdered sails as fair as when they were first unfurled. Heaven will be more like a may-yard where men-of-war come in from Trafalgar and Lepanto, men-of-war with masts twisted by a cyclone, men-of-war struck on all sides by seventy-four pounders, men-of-war with decks scorched of the shell, old Constituwith decks scorched of the shell, old Constitu-tions, old Constellations floating in discharge from service to rest forever! In the resurrection thrist credentialed by scars. You and I will be credentialed, and will recognize each other by scars. Do you think them now a disfigure-ment? Do you think them now a badge of endurance? I send you the glorious thought at this Easter-tide, they are going to be the means of beavenly recognition. means of beavenly recognition

THE DEAD THAT ARE NOT DEAD

ANY of us, too, I think are apt to over-look in the resurrection of Christ the IVI. look in the resurrection of Christ the fact that Christ from Friday to Sabbath was lifeless in a hot climate where sanitary prudence demanded that burial take place the same day as death, and where there was no ice to retard dissolution. Yet, after three days the comes up so healthful, so robust, and so rubicund Mary, Magdalene takes Him for a gardener. Not supposing Him to be an invalid from a hospital, not supposing Him to be a corpse from the tomb, but supposing Him to be the gardener. Healthful by the breath of the upturned sod, and by a perpetual life in the sunshine.

Charles the Fifth, of Spain, with his ser-

the sunshine.

Charles the Fifth, of Spain, with his servants and torches, went down into the vault of the necropolis where his ancestors were buried, and went deeper, farther on until became to a cross around which were arranged the caskets of his ancestors. He also found a casket containing the body of one of his own family. He had that casket opened, and there by embalmer's art he found that the body was as perfect as eighteen years before when it was entombed. But under the exploration his unind and body perished. Oh, my readers, do not let us morbidly struggle with the shadows of the sepulchre.

not let us morbidly struggle with the shadows of the sepulchre.

After Christ's interment every cellular tis-sue broke down; and nerve, and artery, and brain were a physiological wreck, and yet He comes up swarthy, rubicund, and well. When I see after such mortuary silence such radiant appearance, that settles it that whatever should become of the dead bodies of our Christian dead, they are soing to come on the newser dead, they are going to come up, the nerves restrung, the optic nerve reillumined, the ear drum avibrate, the whole body lifted up, with-out its weaknesses and worldly uses, for which there is out its weaknesses and worldly uses, for which there is no resurrection. Come, is it not al-most time for us to go out to meet our re-animated dead? Can you not hear the lifting of the rusted latch? Oh, the glorious thought, the glorious consolation of this subject when I find Christ coming up without any of the lacerations, for you must remember He was lacerated and wounded fearfully in the cruci-fixion—coming up without one. What does that make me think? fixion—coming up without one, that make me think?

AFTER OUR GOOD FRIDAY HERE

THE grave will get nothing of us except our wounds and our imperfections. Christ went into the grave exhausted and bloodless. All the currents of His life had poured out from His wounds. He had lived bloodless. All the currents of His life had poured out from His wounds. He had lived a life of trouble, sorrow, and privation, and then He died a lingering death. His entirebody hung on four spikes. No invalid of twenty years' suffering ever went into the grave so white and ghastly and broken down as Christ, and yet, as I said in a paragraph just before, here He comes up so rubicated and robust she supposed Him to be the gardener. Alt! all the sideaches and the headaches and the backaches and the legaches and the heartaches we will leave where Christ left His. The ear will come up without its dinness, the eye will come up without its dinness, the eye will come up without in oppressed respiration. Oh, what races we will rain when we become immortal athletes! Oh, what circuits we will take when all centrally imperfections subtracted and all celestial velocities added, we shall set up our residence in that city which, though vaster than all the cities of this world, shall never have one obsequy!

Almost within a few days of another again.

than all the cities of this world, snan never have one obsequy!

Almost within a few days of another anni-versary of the day which celebrates the shat-tered masonry of our Lord's tomb, I point you to a world without hearse, without muffled drum, without atmulus, without catafalque, and without a tear! Amid all the cathedrals of the blessed no longer the "dend march in Saul," but whole libretti of hallelu-iah chorus. Oh, put trumpet to lip, and finger inhering Sain, one whole invertible and finger jah chorus. Oh, put trumpet to lip, and finger to key, and loving forebead against the bosom of a risen Christ! Glorious Easter! Let the memory of the day come to each of you, my readers; and if I cannot sound the bugle-note of joy to you by voice, let my pen be the in-strument of my jubilant expression.

7. be with Talmage

GIVES a GENUINE OXFORD TEACHERS BIBLE, Containing, 1450 Pages, and measuring open, lass incinded, 7x11 inches, Free to all New Subscribers at $2.00.

It is Lenther Bound, GBt Edge, Over-lapping Edges, and Contains ALL THE HELPS, Including CONCOR DANCE, 40,006 References, Subject Index 18,000 References, TWELVE COLORED MAPS, and Other Valuable Helps.

T. De Nitt Talmage of so, so, so, so, so siste soors, sew rose out.

THE NEW MODEL "HALL." PREFECT TVPEWRITTER, HEST MANIFOLDER,
Terms to Agents Liberal,
buttable, INEXPENSIVE,
WRITTS ALL LAND AUE.
Send for Catalogue and Address N.T.YPEWRITTERY.
Off Washington M., Business

Off Washington M., Business

but in the experi-ence of physicians and mothers and those en-trusted with the bringing up of children, nothing has ever proved so valuable as In-pexial Granum. It has stood the test of time and is to-day more popular than sever PERIAL GRANUM. It has stood the test of time and is to-day more popular than ever. As a pure nutritious food for children, it has no equal. Lots of the strongest and healthiest children are often pointed out as Granum babies and they are fine living testimonials of the value of this food. We can speak from our personal experience and endorse everything that is said in its favor. Imperial Granum is equally valuable as a food for invalids, giving a maximum of nutrition with a minimum of tax on the digestive organs.—
The American Hebrew, N. Y., May 22d, '91.

Sold by Druggiste, JOHN CARLE & SONS, New York,

"There are as many lovely things, As many pleasant tones, For those who sit by cotings hearths As those who sit on thrones,"

You can avail yourselves of the services of an experienced chef by simply purchasing any of the following varieties of

Cowdrey's Soups

Soup and Begilli Terrapho Macaroni Beef Vermice(8) Clam Broth Puree of Green Turtle

E. T. COWDREY CO., Boston

by Google

onducted and edited by RUTH ASHMORE, who cheerfully invites questions in which her young women readers may desire help or information. TH ASHMORE, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

every one of my girls te may have a happy Easter day. And not just alone a happy Easter day
but an Easter-tide that extends over that extends over all the year. By this I mean that in this I mean that in the life of each one there may be a burial of all the un-happiness and of all the faults and a resurrection of all joy and all virtues. The lesson of Easter is always the same is always the same hopeful one. It is the barial of the r may spring forth; it is t is earthly and the resurspiritual. It is the hapyear, because it is the one year, because it is the one t of that gracious virtue, y one of you to think over ie resolutions in honor of f Jesus Christ, who was ed and rose again for you

SER COMMUNION

utiful part of it. It isn't only le world; it's for you, my me, that all this great sufferigh with. If you will think I make you seem nearer, it make you seem nearer, it make you will feel that because ou and for me, that each one ag right in Him. A right to out roubles, and never to fear be sent away empty-handed. our troubles, and never to fear be sent away empty-handed. In Easter more when you get in do its tribute, and think of ou kneel to make your Easter a promise to Him who died it live, that you will bury all and then, by His help, you will ing up where sin has been, but God, it will be no more.

IPORTANT COMMANDMENT

aice girl wrote to me and said ne wished her mother was like nothers, for then she could commend would know just what was not wasn't. There have been two is who have written that same that I want to say to them is this; sink it possible that the fault is Jon't you think it possible, as you is the habit of confiding in your it she is not to biame if she does ery much sympathy when some uclude to go to her? The wise girl who tells her mother everything—joys, her little sorrows, who has rinterested in all the events of her whose tirst inclination is to let know of the coming pleasure, or know of the coming pleasure, or serrow. Don't you know that it you such a long time ago since "was a girl herself? And if you will o her and make the young part of be born again you will find that she be born again you will find that she pathize with every ambition, that she interested in every pleasure, and that be just as delightful and ever so many one so than any girl friend you ever be Commandment that I had in my then I began to write this was: "Homather and the mother," and the promptions. Do you know what honor ir mother means? It means not only be that descriptions and descriptions are descripted. o her her dearest companion and closest but it means thinking of her happi-n more ways than one. It means not ng her even the lenst inattention, and ofy it means never speaking to ber, or r, in a slighting manner. It means givr, in a slighting manner. It means giv-er of your best—your best love and rev-e. Who will ever sland by you as your ser? Nobody. Who was "last at the said earliest at the grave" of Christ self? His mother! And you, who think can't go to your nother and tell her of relaily life and its pleasures and disappoint-its—you who have allowed a wall of re-ter to be built between your mother and its—you who have allowed a wall of rere to be built between your mother and it break it down. You must do it if you aid be happy, and you should do it bere-you are the younger of the two. A stier will help you in this work, but you ast legin it. And you are auxious to, are at not? You may have to do it a brick at time, but the day will surely come, if you seever, when you and your mother will it only be face to face, but heart to heart all your undertakings, and when you will alize exactly what is meant by the Comalize exactly what is meant by the Com-andment. You and I make promises and eak them; God never does that, and when e had upon you the command that you ould honor your father and your mother e gave this promise, "And thy days shall long in the land which the Lord thy God ath given thee."

WHAT SHE SHALL DO IT was Easter just a year ago that she got married to the "dearest fellow in the world"—this is true becauseshe says so. And now what she writes about is this: She says: I married to the "dearest fellow in the world"—this is true because she says so. And now what she writes about is this: She says: "His people are differently and what I want to know is, have I married his family?" To me that sounds just a little bit vulgar, and so I concluded to say something about it, so that the girls who are going to be married to the dearest fellows this Easter may not ask such a question. It is, of course, most natural that you should love your own people best, but you must give your husband the same privilege. He loved his mother and his sisters long before he ever saw you, and though you may have his strongest love now, certainly the love of his youth are of little worth if they can be forgotten so soon. You have taken his name, consequently those bearing his name must be honored else you dishoner him. It is possible they are different from you and have different ideas. Few families are exactly alike. But if you will only do right there is no reason why your ideas and theirs may not agree, if they do not absolutely grow alike. Be courteous and considerate of your husband's people as you would be of your own. That is due to him, as well as to your own self-respect. Do not think that every disagreeable word, every fault found, is directed at you. And do not go among them expecting that they will not like you. Make up your wind they shall, and so ignore the disagreeables, and so treble the agreeables that, even against their wishes, they can't help it. I know some young wires are placed in very trying positions. I know that many times they suffer agonies because they think they do not please their busband's people. Dun't gossip about his people to your husband. Tell him of the pleasant things they do and not of the unpleasant ones, and don't try to keep him from them. Encourage his devotion to those of his own kin, and you can show no greater love and tenderness to your husband than by giving and inviting love and respect from his own people. You will never regret it; you will never regret

THE MAID OF HONOR

SHR is going to be maid of honor at the Easter wedding of one of berdear friends, Easter wedding of one of berdenr friends, and she wants to know what her duties are. Well, they are not very one one. She walks alone, just ahead of the bride, in entering the church, or wherever the ceremony is to be performed. Her dress must be a little more claborate than that of the bridesmaids', but not, of course, as rich as the bride's. When the altar is reached she stands just beside the bride, holding her bouquet. At the moment when the ring is to be assumed she hands the Bouquet to the first bridesmaid, and assists the bride in taking off her glove. All this time the bride has been standing with her veil over her face, but just after the service is over, when the bride rises after having been blessed, the maid of honor throws back the filmy cloud maid of honor throws back the filmy cloud and the bride stands facing the bridegroom and realy for his kiss. The bouquet is then handed back to the maid of honor, by her given to the bride, and as the procession retreats she walks just behind the bride and groom, leaning on the arm of the best man.

After that it is her duty to have as good a time as possible, to throw the first shoe after the happy pair, just as the best man is throwing the lirst handful of rice.

HE has come to make his first call, and he In is so overwhelmed with the fear that he will not do what is right that it depends on you, his hossess, to make him comfortable.

Don't take any notice of the little mistakes he makes. If he comes in the parlor with his overcout on let him take it off and put it where he pleases, but you ignore its existence. When he sees that other men have taken theirs off in the hall be will know what to do next time. If he drops his handkerchief or the album that he is looking over, or seems to sink into contemplation of his hands and feet, you talk on just as merrily as possible, and try your best to find out what he is interested in and what he can talk about. It may be pictures, or it may be pig iron, but whatever it is when you do find out what he really has at heart, he will talk well about it and you will discovery he will talk well about it and you will discover that the outer veneer of bushfulness only covered an awkward boy and not a stupid one. Have patience with him, and never permit yourself to be rude enough to laugh at him. You can make a friend of him by being a gracious hostess, and friends, my dear girl, real friends, are not so plentiful, and it is never wise to throw aside the chance of making one. And, if you can make a friend of the bashful man, be sure he will remain one.

WHAT YOU WANT * * TO KNOW * * *

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any question I can, sent me by my girl readers—RUTH ASHMORE.

P. C. and Origina-I cannot give addresses in this column.

C. F. D. -A tady cortainly would not take advantage of Leap Year to propose to a man.

V. T.—A girl should know instinctively how to tell a man that he must not be too familiar with her.

COBENNE K .- It is not be good taste to correspond with a man friend without your betrothed's knowledge. Jrr-I cannot advise anything to be applied to the cyclashes, as the danger of injuring the eyes is too great.

Barraneastes-I do not approve of young somen giving their photographs indiscriminately to their men fricuss.

Ellen-A general care of your cotire system, proper attention to baths, diet and exercise will prevent pro-tise perspiration. ASDEST ADMIRES—Address the author referred to, "care of the Labriss" Blook Journal," and the letter will be forwarded to her.

Many—Neither "My Dear Mary" nor "Dear Mary" are formal at alk if you wish to be formal commence its letter "My Dear Miss Smith."

6. B.—Make your dress after design No. 2, shown on page 21 in the March Journaut; trim it with velvet photon exactly as it is on that model.

NKLL—The question of going to evening parties is one that your mether should decide for you. A girl of diffeen should wear her skirts to her ankles.

Manage—A red more is often the result of indigestion, and I would suggest your paying some attention to your det in addition to being regular as to exercise and bathing.

HETH-When you know that the young man is en-paged to be married, I do not think it would be in good aste to accept invitations to go to places of anotserorest with him.

HEA-It is quite proper when you are invited by your betredbed's mother to wish her to accept the invitation, but I would not live too many visits or too great familiarity.

R. D. C.—I do not advise the use of any patent medicine to redope fiesh; instead, consult with your physician, be careful as to your diet and take pleaty of regular exercise.

PANNE 8. E.—Dust your hands with glove powder every time you put on a padr of gloves, and you will find that your hands will not perspire and consequently your gloves will not be stained.

CONSTANT BEADER AND OTHERS—There is no danger whatever in bathing the basi and their rubbing it as a most of development; of course, in using this treatment one should be gentle.

From B.—It would be perfectly proper for you and your eleters to keep house together, and I think you are wise to make a little bone for yourselves to which you can retreat when the day's work is over.

C.S. R.—As you do not wish to make a formal an-nouncement of your engagement, why not simply bell it to one or two of your lutimate women friends and not ask that it be kept a secret? In this way the news will be beld.

AN ANXIOUS SUBSCRIBER-I cannot advise the inarriage of a girt to a tian who is younger than be-self; at the same time costs marriage is so thoroughly personal a matter that a stranger our really give as ad-vice about it.

Asserting — If you are really anxious to learn intoic, and have only enough money to persult your going is a class, then you should not be advanced if, because of your lack of knowledge, you are forced in go into a class with young children. Green-I would suggest your going to a doctor to have the wants removed, for then there would be no scars, and they would not be agt to return. A girl with dark-brown lear and lashes, this eyes and a light skin would be called a blonde-brune.

Inquisess—My dear girl, you are one among a thousand who troubl like to get some light and pretty work to do at both. I can give run to excountermental about this, and doubt if work for which good pay is given is often done to that way.

Energy M.—It is not necessary to serve any refresh-ments to visitors making a first cult, noises, indeed, it should be your reception sky, and then they will be treated like other visitors. For an ordinary "at home" every week, bea and light wafers are sufficient cul-iation.

E.I.a T. C.—Throw a lump of borax in the water in which you buthe your face and you will find that your none will be less shipt, (2) You can arrange your halr so that it may look as if it were low, but it may be doubted it, after childback, the hair can be trained to really grow low on the neck.

HASEL P.—There would be no impropriety in your writing to the gentleman, if the question you have to ask him is one of importance. Yes: I think girls should give their entire confidence to their mothers. Thus proves the friendships that are true and those which are not, and time alone can decide.

Hazarita S.- Thank you very much for your kind letter and for your expression of Italian my talks with girts. I empy them myself because I was taught long ago to believe that "a girt was worth tentines a boy," and it is a piecesure to find myself in harmonicus curvers with so many dear, loving girts.

Nona-The paper most in vegte is a large square sinet of clear white which faids once and fits into a square extradage. A cipher or small monogram in gold or silver is liked, though a minuter of people have the house address on the flap of the envelope so that if the letter is misdirected 8 can be returned.

A CONSTANT READER-Choose butter is noft and rather suggestive, in its color, of refined land; it may be green in almost any drug store in whatever quantity you may desire. Keep it in a small jar and in a cool place, else it will soon grow rancid. Initised well into the skin it tends to cleanes and whiten it.

Wearant a construct of a ring on the third finger of the left hand does not of nearwaity mean that one be congaged to be married, although that is the finger on which the congagement ring is worn. The ring listif is usually one set with a pervious stone, the plain gold ring being only suintie for the creding ring.

J. M. R.—If you are a good mandcure and willing to go from house to bouse, you should be able to get a suffi-cient number of customers to make you a good living. Will you just remember this? Never brank an appearance. More manicures and hardressers lose their customers by paying to attention to time than for any other reason.

other reason.

JYNNIK AND OTHERS—A great many girls have written to me asking how they aboutd apply to hospitals to become trained nurses. Where a training school is attached to the bospital they need only address. "The Manager of the Training School for Nurses," but when-they are uncertain a letter addressed to the doctor is charge of the hospital, and in which is enclosed a stampand self-addressed envelope, will undoubtiefly receive an answer. Hospitals Section 2.

L.B. B. -1 do not recommend the Turkish, but rather the Bussian belts, and do not advise your going to either without first witting the opinion of your doctor. The vapor of the Bussian hath turks to make the side while, while the shock experienced in the civil agray makes the flesh firm and healthy. The chief advantagegained from the baths is perfect dentitiess. One can diet to reduce thesh without starting; it lake care not to est any vegetables containing starch, but do not be admit of meets or green solads. Le not under any discussioness permit yourself is firth vinear. This will not thin you and will upset your digestion.

THEW

SEASON 1892

$\Gamma$ oile du Nord"

The most popular, durable and attractive of all the

Wash Fabrics

Women's and Children's Wear.

For sale by every leading retail Dry Goods House in the country. Samples furnished on application.

PARKHILL Mrg. Co., Fitchburg, Mass.

It will be easy for you to make gown, jacket and hat, a most beautiful and stylish spring color, by using Dlamond Dyes. They dye fast colors on and almost everything. Their colors are simple, sure, and strong. Do your dyeing at home with the reliable Diamond Dyes, and see how easy and profitable it is.

Cecton, Wood, Silk, Feathers, Mixed Goods,

Send stamp for free instruction book of home dye-ing and # samples of colored cloth, WELLS, Harmannesco & Co., Burlington, Vt.

THE READ UMBRELLA

filk umbrellas of special qualities at very low prices. livered free on receipt of price. Send at once for our five illustrated cutalogue, which contains full information. We guarantee satisfaction.

CHARLES F. READ & CO. 45 BROAD STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

Knitting Machines

With the Branson Knitting Machine you can easily and quickly kalt mitts, socks and stockings of cotton, silk or wood, for yourself, your family. your neighbors, better and chesper than either you or they can buy them. Our catalogue tells everything. Free. JESSE L. BRANSON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

MUSIC PROF. RICE'S SELF-TRACHING
STRIEM. All can learn music without the sid of a teacher. Rapid, correct.
TAUGHT. accumpaniments, thorough base laws, see Ten Lessons 10 cents. Circulars free.
9. S. RICE MUSIC CO., 248 State Street, Chicago.

MR. COATES cheerfully invites questions touching any topic upon which his young readers desire help or information. Address all letters to POSTER COATES, care of THE LADIES' may desire help or information. Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

HIS month I shall ask the many thousands of boy nders of THE LADIES HOME JOURNAL to accompany me into new fields through which I have for some time been rouning, so to speak, and where I have found much pleas-ta little profit. Durious have found much pleas-ure, and, I believe, not a little profit. During this 'time I have been, in a figurative way, dwelling in the kingdom of birds and animals, and a most pleasant domain I have found it. I have known many boys, good and bud, since I was a boy myself, and I have never known a good, sound, healthy, well-constituted boy who was not found of animals, or birds, or both. Some of my earlier years were seent in the Some of my earlier years were spent in the country and upon a large farm where all sorts of fowl and stock were bred and reared, and in a part of the country where birds of all kinds were to be found in their season. There kinds were to be found in their season. There was not a boy of my acquaintance who did not have his pets, either furred or feathered. Some of them had veritable museums in their way. Others had a pet helfer, or a favorite coit, or a fleck of pigeons, or a more than ordinarily intelligent dog. One boy, a small and atroclously ugly negro, the poorest of us all, had a lame crow only. Yet there was not one among us who did not ency that boy his prize, for the crow was half white, and such a knowing bird never, in my opinion, lived before. ing bird never, in my opinion, lived before. Fabulous amounts of marbles and tops and numbers of pigeons and pets of one kind and another were offered for that crow, but the small negro would not part with him.

THE DAYS THAT HAVE GONE MY research of the past few weeks has made a boy of me again so far as my love of animals is concerned. I have renewed my acquaintance of some old friends who are skilled animal trainers, and have been not a skilled animal trainers, and have been not a little surprised to find how the business—it is a business now—of educating birds and animals has been developed since 1 was a boy. At that time the circus, that favored institution of boys, used to have about with it a trick mule, a young elephant taught to take peanuts from your pocket, an ape or monkey that could ride a horse and do a number of annis-ing things beside, and perhaps an educated pig. We have altogether outgrown that sort of thing now. I saw a young man the other day, a handsome frunk-faced boy in fact, who is not yet thirteen years old, but who is one of the most successful trainers of animals in this coun-try. His name is Leon Morris, and he has charge of a lot of trick horses that for some time have figured in a theatrical attraction in America. figured in a theatrical attraction in America. True, he was practically born in a circus, for his father was in that business, and for that matter is in it yet. By the time Leon was able to walk, he was on good terms with elephants and monkeys and all sorts of queer birds and animals. He fell in love with the business of handling them, and old circus men say he can do almost anything with them.

SOME EDUCATED PONIES

HE now handles twenty-two poules, all of them highly trained. I saw him en-gaged in a rehearsal with them a short time gaged in a rehearsal with them a short time ago, and a more pleasing performance I have yet to witness. The ponies had to go through the form of saying their prayers, they wrestled with each other, and one of them, named Banner, wrestled with a colored man, and threw him, too, just as he has to do in the play. Then they ran races, and finally went through a military drill. And what is more, they seemed to think the whole matter the highest sort of fun. Master Morris told me that his method of handling his pets was very simple. "In the first place, you must be very mattent "In the first place, you must be very patient with them," be said. "It is of no use to panish a pony if he does wrong. Sometimes a few sharp cuts with a whip are necessary in teaching a dog, but that will not do with pouries. With them the easiest way is the best, teaching a dog, but that wan not do who ponies. With them the ensiest way is the best. If you have a trick that you wish them to bearn, keep at them patiently until they begin to understand what it is that you want them to do. As soon as they do, pet them a little and give them an apple, or a banana or a lump of sugar. You will find that they remember both the trick and the apple, especially the apple. They will bear in mind the trick, too, though, for they seem to understand that through it they receive a reward. A pony, or, for that they receive a reward. A pony, or, for that matter a horse, does not learn as quickly as a dog does. But then what a horse does learn, he remembers, while some dogs forget very To me it is astonishing bow the interest in animals of one kind and another has grown within a few years. In London, when I was there some months ago, I was surprised by the amount of attention, of a substantial kind, that was there paid to a couple of institutions where homeless and friendless cats and logs are cared for. Then again, in New York there are more than a score of men who earn their living as physicians to dogs and cats, while the number of surgeons whose business this to treat the diseases of the burse will probably run up into the hundreds. More than this, there is a hospital for sick horses and dogs, and other domestic animals.

INTEREST IN BIRD AND BEAST

A VERY clever writer, not so long ago, total the story of a horse's life called "Black Beauty." His object was to lead men and women to be more kind to the mute creatures who serve them so well. I was told the other day, by a well-known publisher, that this book has had the largest sale of any hook since "Uncle Tom's Cabin" flashed upon the world and book Cabin" flashed upon the world and took it by storm; and this, it seems to me, is pretty good proof that we are taking a very considerable interest in our four-footed riends, not to speak of our two-footed ones who wear feathers. But there is more cri-dence beside. There is one locality in New York city given over to bird and animal fan-ciers; and there you can buy anything in the bird inne from a siskin, which is a bird some-what smaller than a canary, up to the largest what smaller than a canary, up to the largest of American eagles, and where you may also purchase any four-footed animal from a white mouse—if those conning little rodents can be called animals—to a fall-grown elephant. There is one dealer in animals in New York city whose business runs into the hundreds of thousands of dollars in a single year. He has agents almost everywhere on the globe where agents almost everywhere on the globe where curious birds or animals or reptiles can be found; he has another headquarters in Belgium, which is the center of the wild animal trade in Europe, owing to the Belgian King's large interests in interior Africa, where most of the curious species are now discovered. There is another institution in New York that is one of the "curiosities," in a way, of a great city. It was founded by an Englishman named Harvey Jennings; he was a dog fancier mainly, and probably knew more about dogs, in a general way, than any man alive, although he was an expert in handling all sorts of animals. He had a wonderful collection of pets at his place; there were dogs of all sizes and breeds, living cheek by Jowl with rats, and ferrets, and white nice and cats, and even squirrels and rabbits; and what is nore, they made up twelve as well-behaved a family as you could wish to see, scarcely ever having as you could wish to see, scarcely ever having

HORSES WORTH A FORTUNE

FROM the foregoing my young readers will perhaps conclude, as I have, that our damb friends were never more appreciated than now, and never so well treated. On the occasions of dog and horse shows in New York now, men, and for that matter, women, and for that matter, women and wealth and position from all parts of too, of wealth and position from all parts of this country, and from Europe as well, attend them, and go fairly wild over the splendid animals that are exhibited. And men of wealth now do not hesitate to pay twenty-five thousand dollars for a yearling colt without any record if it has the right pedigree; while for horses with great records, Robert Bonner and other lovers of horseflesh will pay from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Bonner although overselve the record of the pay from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Bonner although overselve the record of the pay from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars. fifty to one hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Bon-ner, although opposed to racing, paid forty-five thousand dollars for "Sunol," the rare horse, St. Bernard dogs of high degree are now valued St. Bernard dogs of high degree are now valued as high as seven and eight thousand dollars. The men who own valuable horses pay great salaries to the men who train their animals for them. These men are hardly ever away from their charges; in a way they sleep and ent with them. They study their every mood. James Rowe, who has trained many of the greatest horses that this country has ever produced, thoroughly trained horse is as sensitive as an intelligent child, appreciating kindness, and either shrinking or sulking under ill usage. The mee horse known as "Tenny," one of the speediest, but most variable tempered anispeediest, but most variable tempered ani-mals ever seen in America, had to be bandled with the most exquisite care, and his every mood had to be studied. Even then he would sulk at the critical point in a great race for no apparent reason, and lose to an inferior horse through sheer ill temper.

WITH KINDNESS ALL THINGS ARE POSSIBLE SUPERINTENDENT CONKLIN is the best known handler of animals in the United Barnum and other famous circus men have wintered their animals under his care. He enjoys a line reputation and a good income, owing to his knowledge of all sorts of birds and beasts. He has handled and he knows the habits of every specie of birds and of every quadruped from a mouse or a Maltese kitten up to an elephant. I asked him in one of my talks with him what animal was least susceptible to kind treatment and harriest to train? "There is no animal that cannot be trained," was the reply. "The great difficulty is that some animals forget easily and that others are treacherons. You cannot for a moment depend on one of the cat tribe with the exception of the lion, and not always on him. The most treacherous of them all is a puma or cought. A lioness is not made inclined to make friends on her own account, yet she appreciates kindness to her cubs. But she is al-ways suspicious, and will quarrel with her best friend upon very slight provocation. As for a tiger or tigress they are never to be trusted, although they can be trained, for like all animals of the cat tribe they have a high coder of intelligence. order of intelligence.

FIRMNESS, KINDNESS AND PATIENCE

THE elephant and the camery bird are very like in some respects. They are both meelligent, and yet both are flighty and nervous in their different ways. The canary is very intelligent, yet it is a nervous, eccentric bird in its way. The elephant is at once brave, magnanimous, and a coward. He will risk his life to help his keeper and he will shrink in terror from a mouse. So creat shrink in terroor from a mouse. So great is the elephant's fear of mice and rats that we keep a small terrier dog in the stalls with them to drive the mice away. And those ter-riers really have it all their own way with the elephants, and the great beasts favor the small ones with an affection and respect that is simply wonderful, and at the same time anusing. The rhimogenes is another annusing. The rhinoceros is another beast that is hard to understand. He is usual another by the most lazy, indolent, and good-natured of brutes. But now and then he has most wonderful fits of bad temper. Then he will salk, but yet a short time after that he will be in a good humor again. When he is in a good in a good humor again. When he is in a good humor he smiles in a most impressive way, as becomes an animal who can mensure his mouth by the yard. But all birds and animals," this expert went on, "can be trained in various ways. But not all men are fit to do this work. The first qualities needed are firmness, kindness, and absolute patience. The same qualities are as necessary in training a canary as they are in handling an elephant or a lion." At this point the expert turned to a picture that hung on the wall a few feet away. It was a photograph of Crowley, the famous chimpanzee who could do almost everything but talk. "That" he said, "was probably the most wonderful animal that was ever known by our experts. He was as near human any the most women'n animal that was ever known by our experts. He was as near human as anything of his specie can be. And in-deed, he may have been more human than any of us know or can know."

WOMAN WHO KNOWS ANIMALS

ONE of the best trainers of animals, wild O or domestic, in this country is a woman. She came to the United States a few years ago from Ireland. She was a ready, self-reliant young woman, and when she looked about her it seemed to her that the lines of work commonly opened to women were over-crowded. She then did what was rather a strange thing for a woman to do. She took up the profession of training animals, and being an energetic, persistent woman obtained a position energetic, persistent woman obtained a position connected with the menageric in Central Park, New York. Some little time later she commenced, in a small way, to buy and sell animals, both domestic and savage. She was successful. Then she hired a form outside of New York, and arranged buildings there and started into the business of importing furred and feathered curiosities. Superintendent Conklin, who for many years has had charge of the animals in New York's "Four Hundred," thought she would fail, but she did not. And what is more, she is Mrs. Conklin now. And what is more, she is Mrs. Conklin now, She still keeps up her own training school for animals, and in addition she assists her hus-band in caring for his own charges. I saw her a few days ago with her husband in Cen-tral Park; she did not look like a woman who was of much use when lions and tigers are about, but I was assured that she knew her business, and that it was under her direction that an aching tooth was pulled from the jaw of a rather bad-tempered lion a few months

PROFIT IN TRAINING BIRDS AND BEASTS

BUT, you may ask, Is this business of study-But, you may ask, is this business of study-ing the ways of animals, and training them, one that can be followed with profit? A couple of months ago I would have an-swered that question in the negative, and I would have been wrong. There is more in this line of industry than I knew then; more, for that matter than I knew now; for it takes this line of industry than I knew then; more, for that matter, than I know now; for it takes more than a few weeks to get full information on this subject. Robert Bonner is perhaps the best known horse fancier in this country; yet he says that neither he nor any other man thoroughly knows this wonderful animal. For years he has given all his time and attention to studying what—think you? A horse's foot. Paul Dana, son of Charles A. Dana, the famous editor of the New York "Sun," has given not a few years to the same Dana, the famous editor of the New York
"Sun," has given not a few years to the same study. What was the use of this study of a horse's foot? some of my readers may ask.
The question is natural. Mr. Bonner is a millionaire, and Mr. Dana will succeed his father as the bead of a great daily newspaper.
But if the improbable should happen, and fless men should find themselves shorn of wealth, they would have but to open a blacksmithing establishment where valuable horses would be scientifically short. They could command their own prices, and the income year by year as great as that of a milroad year by year as great as that of a milroud president. Of course, these men will never take any step like this; but I think that you will agree with me when I say that in this period when horses sell for thousands upon thousands of dollars, some as high as one hundred thousand dollars, the boy who will give up some of his time to studying the ways of these animals, their moods and habits and allowed will be the studying the ways of these animals. ailments, will find bimself reckoned a valua-ble man in the end.

Very interesting to my mind are these bird and animal friends. Very useful, too, are many of them, while the weaker ones who cannot work for us as does the horse, are still not without their own value. Who among us have not known the sweet voice of a small song-bird to brighten up a sick room and momenturily ease the pain of some bedridden suf-ferer? And so why should we not appreciate them and be kind to them?

SOUND, PRACTICAL ADVICE TO YOUNG PEOPLE

A BUSINESS education is necessary to business success. Every person should sindy book keeping, business forms, penmanship, letter writing, business law, or shouthand: at home, by mail. Successfully taught by Bayast & Sysarton's Coulson, 410 W. Main St., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for Prospectus.

HAVE YOU

AN ORANGE SET?

The Knife divides the Orange Spoon is so shaped that each section is re-moved with case, and so daintily that Grange cating is a luxury.

PACKED IN SATIN-LINED CASES

STERLING SILVER INLAID SPOONS and FORKS

have pieces of Sterling Silver inhaid in the backs of the bowl and handle, then plated entire. All wear at these points prevented. Guaranteed to wear E years in family use.

Ask year Jewsler for them, or send for Catalogue. Take no substitute.

THE HOLMES & EDWARDS SILVER CO., Bridgeport, Cose.

American Rambler Bicycles

BEST AND MOST LUXURIOUS

Only Perfect Anti-vibration Safety Made.

#3" Handsome 62-page catalogue and 5 page pamphlet" Bicycling for Girls from a medical standpoint," sent on receipt of two-cent stamp.

GORMULLY & JEFFERY MFG. CO.

221-229 N. Franklin St., Chicage, III. BRANCHES:

116-179 Columbus Ave., 1885 14th St., N. W., BOSTON, WASHINGTON,

We are the People At least that's what they all tell us.

with such a line of Safeties as we have to offer? Our Sprinter has the Lutang Special 1½ inch half retord easition tire, bollow rims, and being constructed to this manner, the results are a light, damble tire, with great resiliency. Our pneumatic tire is absolutely correct, and we guarantee both for one year.

We have the larguet assortment of Bicycle Sandries and novelines in America, and the prices are tight. Litheral discounts are given to the trade.

Luburg Manufacturing Co. 321, 323 and 325 North Eighth St. Philadelphia, Pa.

UMBRELLA DRIP CUP

A long-fest need supplied. Made of Rubber, and in-stantly attached to say Unbrella to each the water that runs off. Also the HELPTING HAND, for handling cooked articles while hot. Just patented. Selling like hot cakes. Our Agents actually and easily make from Twenty-five to Neventy-five Bullars a week. Sample of either by mail with terms and price-list for Ex-or both for Exc. Secure year territory at cases. Address

THE STANDARD NOVELTY CO., Winter Street, Warcester, Mass,

Tasty Wall Papers

costs no more than unity designs. You can buy the best, no master whose you live, from our immense mack. By our system the United States that brings our store to you, Namelon of beautiful selected outputs and/of for right posts, A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St. Phila. Pa.

WALL PAPER at Manufacturers' prices : 20c, 30 samples froe. B. B. WATSON & CO., Chicago, H.

A LADY experienced in European Travel will accompany a wheet past; to Europe on a three months tour, salling May 18th. The party will also communities services of a longistic and conductor. References exchanged. For particulars address.

MISTAKEN LITERARY SUCCESS

By Wolstan Dixer

ANY young writers, especially women, are being described by the apparent success of a certain class of books which have come to figure fargely on the news-stands of this country, and have even gained a considerable footing on the counters of quite conservative book stores. These overheaded "rousances," as courtesy permits them to be called, though they are as far from true romance as the east they are as far from true romance as the east is from the west, create an inumense amount of talk, and provoke from book reciewers a degree of attention which is sometimes confounded with criticism by thoughtless readers.

Much has been said about the debasing effect of meretricious literature upon the public mind; but there has been a neglect of the consideration that writers themselves suffer as much in this respect as their readers. The public may be trusted to take care of itself; but who can estimate the reactionary influence of a cheap thought, cheaply expressed, upon the author's self, and upon the immediate circle which surrounds and strives to imitate?

It is a surprising fact—and almost incredible to those who have not inquired into the subject—that many of these emotional and sensational stories written by women do not, by any means, proceed from a low mind or prarient imagination; these writings frequently arise saids frequently arise saids from a result missemble of the saids frequently arise saids.

rient imagination; these writings frequently urise solely from a total misapprehension of what is the real province of literature, and a lack of judgment as to its sensible restrictions.

what is the real province of literature, and a lack of judgment as to its sensible restrictions. Thus, the better intentioned of these women writers do an injustice to themselves. They lead the public to misunderstand them, and then in turn they and their imitators misunderstand the public, and so the misupersheusion grows. The hubbub raised over a sensational story by a certain noisy set of commonplace minds, is mistaken for the rear of public applause. Each effort to croke this upwar leads to a more stremuous attempt against good laste, a grosser violation of literary propriety, a still wider and milder perversion of legitimate resources, until the public comes to believe that these efforts are the outcome of natural deprayity, the anthor comes to believe that these efforts are the outcome of natural deprayity, the anthor comes to believe that the public taste has been exactly hit, and a large class of would-be popular story-writers look up to the notorious ones as models of literary success, making it the chief aim and object of their existence to go and do likewise. And to such aspirants this word of warning is especially addressed: for among the most deplorable results of that sort of writing which has come to be known as the crotic school is the false standard of public soutiment which is thereby set up in the minds of younger and aspiring writers. They reason that if that class of writing sells the minds of younger and aspiring writers. They reason that if that class of writing sells

They reason that it that class of writing sells it must be popular, and just about meets the ideal of a majority of readers.

But this is a sad mistake. Such writing is not popular in any genuine sense and never can be as long as human nature contains so large an admixture of practical decency, and so long as the ideals of mankind are ever purer and nobler than its actions.

There is a wide difference between notoristy and fune, and any young writer is altorether.

and fame, and any young writer is altogether on the wrong track who imagines because a certain sort of book excites considerable com-ment and exchamation that it is really regarded with approval or esteem.

People buy these super-sensuous emotions just as they go to a freak innscent to gaps and griffor a few moments in half-discusted wonderment and pity that any one—particularly a woman—should be willing thus to exhibit for pay her unwomanty mature and deformed imagination.

These works are not looked upon as literature, either by the critics or an intelligent pol-lic, and the authors of such stuff are consid-ered at least a tride below the average human being, not only in point of propriety, but is ability. The public feels that the young woman who publishes an immodest story has woman who publishes an immodest story has an impure mind, and is obliged to make capital out of it because lacking all other resources. No matter how far from the trath may be this public estimate of an author's nature, he or she will stand or fall by it—and particularly will size, for it is next to impussible for a woman to divorce her individuality and sex from her literary work.

A young woman who really wants lasting

A young woman who really wants lasting A young woman who really wants lasting reputation and substantial fame con never do better than to follow her own best instincts and noblest inspirations, disregarding the channer of "the pallery," and thinking only of what appeals to her own nature as purest and worthlest. Fame hides and rans away from those who pursue with a flourish of trainingsts and beating of driving, but comes to those who strive in silvage and observation by those who strive in silence and obscurity to be morthy of her.

There is a public—of tremendous proportions—that loves to read what is refined and enaching; that craves, with a healthy apperite, the literature which deals with the most beautiful and excited phases of life, the "short and simple annals," not only of the poor, but of the page. poor, but of the pure.

There is plenty of rich literary 'material' for those who so consider the life about them, in which predominates brightness, humor, pathos, and all dramatic effect—everything that is enlivening, stimulating, uplifting and replete with human interest, yet not in the least dependent upon that form of spacemodic.

least dependent upon that form of spasmodic, by sterical emotion supposed, by many mistaken roung authors, to be a necessary ingredient of popular fiction.

Look for what is genuine, hearty and sincere in life and human nature. Depot the more wholesome and normal types and experiences. Select subjects that may be handled without gloves; thoughts and feelings which need not be bluebed for or expressed in whispers. Believe that human nature has a world of good in it. Explore and reveal that world, and leave to itself the over-exploited half world beneath.

THE GIRL WHO WRITES POETRY

BY EDWARD W. BOX

F it be true that poets are born and not made, this is certainly a wonderful generation of poets, if one may judge of the number of manuscripts in verse which flow into the editorial offices. In a bundle of one hundred poems taken haphward, two-thirds were found to be from self-declared young women. That the girl of poetical desires is on the decided increase there is but little dould. certainly a wonderful gen-

THE first thing which a girl, who believes she has the divine afflatus within her apparently, does nowadays is to write a poem, and in that very act she unikes her first mistake. Four lines that jingle do not make a verse: yet this is what hundreds of our girls think to-day. The art of writing poetry—so difficult that only a few in a generation completely master it—is attempted by some girls with an andacity that is surprising, to say the least. Fortunately for the public, only the atlenst. Fortunately for the public, only the at-tempt is made; were there any results, they would be something harrowing. The editor only sees them, the public never does, and on the basis of the greatest good to the greatest number this is as it should be with a slight disadvantage to the editor.

It is an amazing fact how many girls who might write cleverly in prose spoil their chances of success by essaying poetry in their first literary effort. To the great majority of these girls, poetry has in it only the meaning of rhyme. They do not stop to consider that verse is the most difficult form of literature, and that it requires a nature peculiarly full of harmony. Instances constantly come before me where the writer's nature is no more saided to writing verse than is a bricklayer capable. to writing verse than is a bricklayer capable of painting a picture.

I AM told that many young women of literary desires read the words printed on this page. If this is so, let me say a few words to you—words been of experience with many of your manuscripts. I have no desire whatever to can't the literary aspirations of a single girl or waman who believes she was "born to write;" on the contrary, I wish each and all of them a bearty God speed. But, do let me say this and in your own interests: Unless you feel in your very nature that you must sing, unless no other form of expression will shape your feelings, don't write poetry. To be a successful post calls for a great deal, You must, in the first place, have melody in your soul, in your mind and in your ear; you must know thoroughly the art of rhythmic construction, one of the most difficult things in the world; and even if you possess these natural attributes of a poet, you must begoverned by the laws of poetry, have which are so essential that without them you are like a radderless ship at sex. Because something beautiful in nature appeals to you, don't jump at the conclusion that there is poetry in your soul.

DOETRY is one of the most beautiful forms of expression in literature. Only a few are born, however, to do it justice. You can be a poet, and a good poet, without being a Longfellow, a Whittier, a Holmes, or a Tenny-son. Only becomed there is born a soul so full of melody as these writers. But good poetry calls for a high standard. There are a thouwhere there is one who can write good proses where there is one who can write even acceptable poetry. If you near sing in literature, well and good, but be sure that the most is there. It was force your soul to sing when it only wants to speak. Many a good thought has been utterly spoiled by being put in lead always.

I THINK I know whereof I speak in these matters. During the past two years over three thousand poems have passed in procession before me. Again and again have I seen talent abused and genius misused. In scores of cases, had poose been adopted rather than years results as adopted rather. than verse, results would have been different. Poetry is an art, my dear young friend, a rare art. Likewise is prose; but not so difficult as poetry. Thur't spoil in verse what might have ornamented prose. If your pature insists upon bursting forth in song, adopt poetry; but he sure you too lerstand your own nature—and

*LITERARY * QUER!ES

Under this heading the EDITOR will endeavor to answer any possible question concerning authorship and literary matters.

C K.—The last work boned by Lew Wallace h "The Buythood of Christ."

E. H. W.—Edmand Du Boisgilbert is the now de plusse of Ignatina Bonnelly.

G. M. L.—Any letters sent in cure of the Jouinnas. for Mr. Palmer Cox will be forwarded to bis address.

F. M. C.—There is a play called "Ingomer, the Barbarian." I do not know of any novel by that name.

A MOTHER. For a boy three years old, read to him out of "The Nursery," "Babyland" and "St. Nicholas."

J. C.—Theodore tailt in the non de piume of Mrs. Theodora Boulger, who was born and passed her youth in the smaller islands of Oceanka.

6. O. —I leave from a currespondent that "The Raptist Flag" is now published upder the name of "The American Raptist," and is issued in St. Louis.

M. M. T.-Jerome K. Jerome is the author's real mage. He wrote "Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow," "Three Men is a Boat," "Stage Land," est. L. P. - I cannot give you any information regarding the literary merits of "The Problem of Haman Life Here and Hernafter," by Dr. A. Wilford Hall.

Its-George Ellot was the soes de plume of Marian Krans, Mrs. George Cross. Hhe wrote "Romola" and "Admin Bole," which are considered her best works.

PENELOPE - George Ellot and Charlotte Broate are two different authors, (2) "Bip Van Winkle" is considered one of Washington Irving's masterplaces.

F. E. D.—William Carleton is the author's real name. He was born at Hudson, Michigan, in 1845. He is the mither of "Ferm Ballads," "Farm Festivals," and other books.

A. D.—In Deaner Kirk's book "Pectodicals That Pay Contributes," you will find a complete list of nations and addresses of gradicates which supply faction, etc., to newspapers.

M. R. -You can address the following teachers' agen-cies: Nobermerhoru's Teachers' Agency, I East 1th Street, New York, and Mrs. M. J. Young Follon, 2 Union Square, New York.

A. B.—See M. M. T., this estimate. A aketch of Mass Mary Dickets, eldest daugities of Charles Dickets, will shouly appear in the Jac in the series of "Clever Daugities of Charles Man."

B. R. T.—Your first question has been answered in a previous issue. R. D. Blackmore was both in England in 18th. He is the applier of "Lottis Donne," "Midd of Sker," "Alice Lorraine," and many others.

B. L. O. If your manuscript is accepted, and you are so notified, it is not necessary to acknowledge the re-cept. In the costress of time you will receive your check from the publisher if it is to be paid for.

R, W. S.—It is impossible to give you the cast of publishing abook. A thousand and one details will affect the estimate. You can readily obtain one from any printer. Select a sample book and ask for an estimate.

To Many Legitimens—I am always glast to receive omidiations. But bear is mind they must possess eriginality, he brief, sharp and so the point, full of mont, as it were, and, show all, suitable to the wants of the Jucana.

P. R. -I deabtvery much if you can make any prac-tical new of the newspaper clippings regarding persons and pieces, etc., which you have collected. You cannot see any copyrighted material without the consent of the owners. M. J.—Syndhades formed for literary paypress are always auxilous to secure good material. As a general thing, they require a certain clare of manuscript. Write to any of them and they will send you full requirements than regarding their wasts.

M. H.—Marie Corelli was born in 1861, and it said to be the pseudonym of a daughter of Charles, Mackay, She is the author of "A Homance of Two Works," "Ardah" and others, Any fetters sent in care of the Jun MAL will be forwarded.

Mas. J. H. S.—You say your "nevel is excitain of suc-cess." If that is the case, I would advise you to publish it yourself, binaring all expense, as your profits will be the greater. Of course, you can send it to any publisher. Try some in San Prancisco.

QUERTE-Dick's "Book of Tossis," price, 50 cents, is a good work. (2) Crawford's navel, "Kladed" is generally protestinced "Kuy-lod," (3) Ayer's or Ibraell's "Sevenpaper Directory" will give you all desired laster tossion about newspapers, etc.

M, Y,-1 would advise as the proper course in sending large manuscript to publishess to first write, asking permission so to do. It will be greatly to your advan-age, especially if you give them an idea at the time of the nature of your manuscript, Recent -Str Edward Arould, who recently becomed in this country, is the nather of "Light of Asia," "Pearls of Faith, ""Light of The Weeld," said many others. Mot-thew Arould, is the nather of "Literature and Degma," "God and the Bible" and others. Both are English.

Book works "Senemer in Britany," by Anthony Teollope, and "Britiany and its Beways," by Mrs. Berry Philiser, are both piblished in England. The pelce of the fortuce is $4.00, and the latter $6.00. These can be obtained through the Joy Exat's premium de-partment.

V. M. D.—If the publisher owns the copyright of a short story, no one can use II, except by permission. If you are collecting a sectes of such, weighten by you, you will have no difficulty in gretting permission to make it one of your collection. Most publishers prefer to seem the copyright of their publications.

E. E.—The art of "Bichary-criticism" is a profession, and requires long and careful training. There is no emphision of payment, Some service a stipulated salary per anoma, while others are paid so much per column, of so many hundred words. The rate of payment varies.

H. M.—If the editor pays no attention to your frequent request for acknowledgment, or return of your roantoscript, I cannot say what he intends doing. It may be mishaid, on event which sometimes serue. A personal rail at the edite, by someons in your behalf fixing in the tentity, might be advisable.

L. A. O.—I cannot advise you as beany special method whereby you can obtain propagation from editors of Sanday papers or others to which you have been ad-rised to contribute. The same rule applies to all mains-eripts. Send them and areal developments. The greatest writers have been compelled to do this.

A Branen and others - President Schultze's "Books of the Bible Analyzed," is the Bible in a cast Social as is seen a compenhensive and sacrifact priority of the Bible Students of the Bible Students and Sunday school teachers. It can be had for twenty cents from the 250 manals Book Department.

ProtoNa.—Von should not besides to write to the journal in question and set if your measurerist has twen received, in all well-confincted poblications becausely wind an acknowledgment of receipt. (2) Nearly all periodicular of inch have material protoglical in land in advance for one or more years; in fact, each number is stands up from two to three months in advance of publication.

SARRES GAMP—A "reader" for a publishing hone-should be stell feed and theoreachly assisted on authors and their modes; the different literary schools and include, and be able to judge from manuscript, wheather it contains meritar too taken, he must be posted as to the feet of the public, and schooler there is a market for the intended publication. It requires long training in he an expect and valued "regular,"

NOW READY-THE APRIL PART OF THE YOUNG LADIES' JOURNAL

The best Journal for Ladies and Pamilies, con-tender the LATEST AND BIRT PANERONS, PROFESSION BLOTESTED: A MANMONE COMMENT OF PROFESSION PASSIONS: NUMBEROUS COMPLETE STORIES of absenting interest; each the beginning of a NEW AND GRIGHEST AND ASSESSION STORY, STORY & Florence Maryal, mailed "CATHERSTONE; besides New Made, EMBRUIDERY BESIGN, Mr. The ma-capites seguides for hadio pathiated. Price, 30 Centra. Yearly, $4, including the Christians humber, All newsballer, and Yearly, $4, feeleding the Christope brander. All newschalders, and THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK.

NEW NOVELS 16 Cents FAMILY LIBRARY MONTHLY.

OF All Newstenlers and THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK. 87 and 85 Dunine Street, one door East of Broadway. Spheriphers Ecolved for any Publishal, Feetige or Descrip-

until May Ist Special Send us the addresses who do Fasor Work. THE MODERN PRISCILLA

3 Months Free
All the latest designs in Parry Work Illustratest on Patherin for Kalling and Cracketting. Birections of Pathering, or the reduced studies at reduced rates. Painting, with colored studies at reduced rates.

(This Offer good only until May lef.)

Address PRISCILLA PUB. CO., Lyan, Mass.

"GERMANIA"

A Fortnightly Magazine for the Study of the German Language and Literature.

Subscription Price, $2.00. Sample capies free. P. O. BOX 151, Manchester, N. H.

Bestov Appendix : "As a beligful companion to those beginning the study of German, we can com-mend "Germania." The plan of this excellent little periodical is a very wise one, and shows a very thorough comprehension on the part of the editor of the needs of home students of the German language."

METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC,

LEADENG WINICAL INSTITUTION OF ARERICA.

Planto-fieto baccased certificates. Examiners: William Massot, Mus. Inc., A. C. M. and Albert Ross Parsons. A. C. M. Budley Hack, Prededuct; H. R. Pelmer, E. Agramonto, H. R. Schelley and C. E. Hawdig' are among the declaquished members of the Faculty. Circulars sent on application. Address 18th St., New York City. H. W. GRIECENE, 19 & 21 East 18th St., New York City.

CHORT-HAND Bend for Cutatogree ELF TAUGHT for Sectional Little for BENN PITMAN and JEROME B. HOWARD, THE PHONOGRAPHIC INSTITUTE, CINCINNATI, CORO.

CINCINNATI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

Miss Clarks Harrs, Birretress, Established 1867, Ladies from a distance may bourd in the Conservatory, where they are under the personal supervision of the feteress. Stillenia may enter at any time. For rais-bute, address Miss Charla Actil, Chrimath, Obio.

SHORTHAND The 08G00DBY SCHOOL OF STENOGRAPHY, Rockeeder, N. Y. In-struction by unall only. Terms, $10.00, including thecessary heaks. Instruction thereugh and complete. Symapsis for 2-cent stamp.

THE HUMAN HAIR, Wife It Falls off, Turns Grey and the Remedy, By Frof. HARLEY FARRER, F. A. S. A. T. Lesse & Co., 1913 Arch St., Fellada, Pr.

POCKETBOOK Worth se cents, and made of finitation Scal; also Elegant State Catalogue, sent on receipt of 21 cents produce Inch 12 APICA N.S. PALJER HOUSE SHORE STORE, Chkago, III.

CROCHET WORK Latest and Complete Instruction Book, 134 pages, blustrated. All kinds of Crecheting. Cotton, Libert, Silk and Weel J. WHITE & LU., 210 STATE STREET, Chicago, His

WHY AM I A UNITARIAN ? Charles, From Address

BABY. An Hibetrated Journal for Mothers, $1.00 a year. Cut this set and send it took Herodway. New York, and you will receive a sample copy free.

Historia

A monthly temperature of instructive, conversating results; for rooms people. The labe of historical docts, was and advances. Instructs instructive, and advances. In per News. Sand for semple ones. Address HISTORIA, D d81. Chicago, III.

NOW READY-THE APRIL

FAMILY HERALD!

Price, 15 Cents Monthly; $1.75 Yearly. For sale he all flook and Newsdealers.

The laternational News Co., New York.

DO NOT STAMMER.

John Warsamaker, Postmaster-General, and George W. Childs, prop. Phila. Ledger, will testify to permanency of cure. Send for istonge pampidation. B. S. Johnston. Institute. 1823 Spring Garden Street, Philadelpois, Pa.

Digitized by Google

Miss Maude Haywood will be glad through this Department to answer any questions of an Art nature which her readers may send to her. She cannot, however, undertake to reply by mail; please, therefore, do not ask her to do so. Address all letters to Miss Maude Haywood, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

PAINTING IN WATER COLORS

STUDIES OF INTERIORS

HE study of painting of interior effects, whether of public buildings, churches, studios or dwelling nome, offers a wide scope to those who have a keen ap-preciation of culor, light and shade, and who are gifted with that most valuable of one, artistic facilities that most valuable of all natural endowments, artistic feeling and perception. What more inspiring theme need one desire than the richly-decorated in-terior of a church, sembrely lighted through its windows of stained glass, or perhaps with the sun streaming through them, suggesting light and warmth outside, in contrast to the cool stillness within, the brilliant coloring of those postions touched by the arm's recomthose portions touched by the sun's rays em-phasizing the dim shadows beyond? There is phasizing the dim shadows beyond? There is a peculiarly attractive influence to some natures in the very atmosphere of an ancient cathedral and its precincts. Its time-worn stones and columns, its defaced inscriptions and crombling decorations, seem to imbue the mind with a sense of mystery, of age, of solemn dignity, which with a true artist is bound to find expression in her work; to be in harmony with one's subject, to respond to the feeling of it, is an important essential to success.

DELIGHTFULLY artistic results can be gained from cottage interfors, especially in old-fashioned country places, from shulio arrangements of properties, draperies and briefabrac, or, more commonplace yet, from the rooms in our own houses. Especially effective views can often be obtained of a room or conservatory seen through an open doorway, the duller coloring of the foreground in shadow throwing into relief the well lighted portions of the picture. Apparently impossible sub-jects can frequently be rendered most interest-ing by judicions lighting. Let beginners choose simple subjects that will not tax their undeveloped energies in too many directions at the same time. The study of a piece of stonework, of architecture, a "corner" with artistic feeling, is worth infinitely more than the most elaborate picture that is incaningless, flat and colorless, or, worse yet, crode.

THE first requisite of good work, is, of course, to insure correct drawing. For this branch of study, an elementary knowl-ledge, at least, of perspective is necessary, or egregious errors will be the inevitable result, and at the outset render valueless any merits the subsequent painting may possess. First sketch in broadly the main features of the subjudgment must be exercised in filting in the details, as to what is best left out, in order to maintain the unity of the whole, for it will be noticed that simplicity of files is an unvarying attribute of success. Where are historials interiors are the object of study, it is well to make larger sketches in outline, or in black and white, of the various kinds of ornament used in the decoration, in order to gain a knowledge of their individual features, so that in the or their incivious services, so that it the finished picture, although duly subordinated, perhaps merely suggested, they may yet retain their essential character. All the details should be most carefully drawn, moving the easel if necessary much closer to the subject for this purpose, for the aim is to represent detail blurred by shadow or distance, not the lack of it altogether. Hence, without fault, the drawing may be may-like, however broad and simple the effect of the completed study is interded to be.

IN order to preserve the drawing, it is best to begin the painting by putting in the shadows, leaving the lights and local color at shadows, terving the lights and local color at first, until all the forms have been secured. Then when this is absolutely dry, boldly, and with a full brush, float in the tints, getting them as nearly like the original in color and strength as possible. Put in first the highest lights and the deepest shadows as key-notes to start from and work up to. Remember that cool lights about have warm shadows, and vice versa. In pointing stonework, notice the vice versa. In painting stonework, notice the variation of color in the general grayness of the whole. This is to be obtained by putting all over it a light wash of pure colors, red. vellow, blue and emerald green, very wet and allowed to run one into the other, and over that, when dry, can be painted the peneral gray tone required. The brighter colors underneath will required. The brighter colors innocement, will always glow through and prevent a flat or dull effect. Sometimes, although otherwise good, a sketch will have too cold a feeling, this may usually be remedied by a washover the whole of orange cadminm, very jude. When the distance has a hard offect, with a lack of atmosphere, a light wash of cobalt will often supply the defect. Aim for variety of color always. If the particular object in a study is to get a contrast of brilliant light and deep shadow, keep that view steadily in mind. Paint in the bright parts with the daintiest, most delicate tints, and leave them then entirely alone; and although they should be broadly dark, still get plenty of color and richness into the deeper tones. Realize that on a sunny day the reflected lights will be warm and best obtained by means of orange cadsunny day the reflected lights will be warm and best obtained by means of orange cad-mium, probably. If through over-conscien-tiousness in detail the picture is becoming too hard relentlessly wash it together. The pre-vious work will not have been wasted, for it will always tell. Should the picture seem too gray in effect, take the brightest colors on the palette and paint them into it. Garishness or crudity of tone can be readily subdued by a general wash of a neutral tint. Where the crudity of tone can be readily subdined by a general wash of a neutral tint. Where the color is too heavy or dark, a portion of it can readily be removed by wetting it theroughly with clean water and absorbing it with blotting paper. Never use white paint if it can possibly be avoided; it destroys the transparency of the pigments. Leave the paper untouched where necessary for the high lights. Keep the washes clear, avoiding all minimizes a "called and the paper was a second as a paper with a second and the paper was a second as a paper was a second as a paper was a second as a paper was seering. Some have been finish without losing the freshness and vigor of the sketch.

LILIES FOR EASTER DECORATIONS FOR EASTER GIFTS

N painting gifts for Easter, lilies may certainly to counted among the most appropriate and character-isic subjects that can be chosen for their decoration. The principal varieties now in segson, and of which studies can therefore be made from which studies can therefore be made from nature, are those which are commonly termed the Easter lity, he cold lify and the filly of the valley. One or other can be adopted for almost an decorative purpose. In evdesiastical work, or where religious symbolism is intended, the first manned must be used, and is usually treated in a more or less conventional manner. The rendering of the larger kinds in oil painting should not prove a difficult matter. The blooms are single, bold and simple in drawing, and capable of extremely effective handling. The principal fault in color to be avoided is that of crudity. The allver white employed must be mixed with a very little tenou yellow for the boral tone, as the flowers are by no means absolutely dead white, like the pigment as it comes from the tube. In the same manner the shadows should not be too black nor cold in color, lett extremely delicate and pure in effect. but extremely delicate and pure in effect.

The range of tints required can be obtained by the mixture of raw umber, cobult and white, with a very little black added where necessary. and of yellow other, cobalt and white; lemon yellow and black will also be found a useful combination. The calla lily is yellower in tone than the Easter variety, and must be painted accordingly. The foliage noted in each case be drawn and painted with extreme care. The leaves of the calls, although very decora-tive and most effective when well rendered, will not prove very easy to the inexperienced. They need more skill, as a matter of fact, than the flowers themselves. They must be treated boldly, and the variety of tint and the con-struction as indicated by the markings and veins must be accurately copied, with as little apparent labor as possible. The directions for the coloring required have been frequently given. The palette may be set with indigo, Antwerp blue, cobalt, raw sienna, yellow ochre. Indian yellow, yellow cadmium (or yellow chrome), lemon yellow (or lemon throme), silver white and ivery black.

In painting lilies in water colors on paper or any white fabric, leave the high lights untouched, and aim for great transparency and parity of tint. The colors to be used correspond parity of lint. The colors to be used correspond almost exactly to those suggested for the oils, except that the white pigment is omitted from the mixtures. Dainty Easter can't may be rapidly executed in a very decorative manner by employing the metallic gold sold for use with water colors. The design is first sketched in peroil and tinted delicately in washes. The outline and markings of the whole, including the stanners of the flowers and the veining of the leaves, are then put in with the gold, with which also some appropriate inscription or greeting may be written. The rough water color carris sold by most dealers in artists' materials are both inexpen-sive and suitable for treatment in this way.

In china painting it is very difficult to make white flowers effective unless the background is tinted or the folings so arranged as to throw up the flowers sufficiently well. A delicate ground is most frequently employed, a tint being laid all over the piece, which has of course to be afterward carefully removed from the parts covered by the design.

HELP IN IYOUR OWN WORK

Under this heading I will be glad to answer, every month, questions retaining to Art and Art work. Maude Haywood.

A. N. C. - Make the drawings in India isk on Bristol-based.

F. L. F.-The artist you mame was certainly a modern

To Vancors Inquiness. The pyrography outfits are obtainable at tive dollars each.

8, c), 0, -A knowledge of drawing is indispensable in order to make a good painter.

A CONSTANT READER—The act of vontieling gold jewelzy is an entirely different process.

A READER OF THE JUCKNAL - I BIT BOL DESCRIBED SENSELLED WITH the school you refer to.

CLARK-Write direct for circular and other informa-tion. The address or the school is Twenty-hird Street, New York City.

M. C. E. Drawings on lines are made with mark-ing ink where they are intended to be including. (2) I o not know of a handbook on the sutject.

Mas. A. B. M.—The color of the plush abould depend anowhat on the general tone of the room. Old gold is retry and soldom clashes with its surroundings.

Mns. B. M. R. - As I do not know what you may mean by the "new process of pixels painting," I con-not tell you anything about the colors employed.

M. E. L.—If you mean French tapestry policing in indelible dyes, the Grenin colors are used upon weater canyon and affectivated fixed by the action of steam.

H. R. A.—Ptense explain to what kind of French art work you refer, as the term is tub crimprolected we for has to be able to understand Jost what you wish to know.

Legeson. —I certainly make no exception whatever with regard to my statements in the article that you refer to. I cannot cepty to you more definitely on the subject.

8. J. W.-Your questions as to French tapestry pointing shall be associated in an article of some fixture fine. (2) The handback you speak of, soid with the Gridnit dyes, is very practical and comprehensive.

BETTERE-You would probably have to wait about a year before a vacancy occurred after sending your name into the institute referred to. I do not think that flavorition exists in the marter. Write for particulars to the superintendent.

Figure 5. They a present of the constitute of the first section of the first positive of the first section of the

M. S. J.—Colors never book the same in artificial light as in darlight. With a little experience some arrive unmage very well in working with a good lamp. An ordinary pushwarer gives so yether a light that the tipts appear greatly changed.

baxon a sun-The china you refer to is Limoges ware. The pointing is done in Jacob's colors and fired in a kills, in the manner described in the series of articles on the subject published has year in Thir Jounnal, and commencing in the March number.

Constant Readen-Bead the answer to K. T. For newspaper work drawings that are to be repreduced by photo-engraving must have the lines very clear and the shading open employing as few strakes as possible. A good Knowledge of the principles of drawing is indis-nersable.

L. E.—Write to the school you speak of for their circular. I do not happen to know of the drawing backs referred to. Draw constantly from nature, making careful studies of flowers, fruit and foliage. The birds on the scheet in the forms at for May, 1888, would probably prove heights.

M. B.—To get the dell garple of the thistle in oils use Antiverp blue, crimson lake and white, looking the unit-ture as required with a little yellow actor. The local color of the leaves is gravish in tone. Yellow ochre, estalt and white, and also lemon yellow and black, make pretty shocks of given.

A Description Beaden—It is difficult to advise yet. Everyone has to make their own stringle for success. I know little of the possibilities in your part of the country, but shows recommend that each one should take whatever work offers, even if necessarily, in order to make a bestgoing, however humble. If you cannot get a start in the line you wish, try sense other hepath where wurkers are needed.

M. M. D.—The recipe for making Bornan gold is generally regarded as a trude secret. It is bast, as a role, for annature to buy the gold ready prepared. (2) When gold scales off after dring it is offen because there was not oil enough mixed with E. Prepared gold down not become fat with keeping, but sometimes the oil dries up and it gets hard and until for use until it has been nucleid and a little more oil added.

K. T.—The materials necessary for pen and ink drawing are India ink and Bristolebeard, or emouth paper. I hope, at seize future time, to publish a series of articles containing full instruction for beginners, but could not articled to cover the ground in this column. A good way to teach yourself is by correlatly studying good examples of pen-drawings in first-class magazines, remembering that the originals are usually drawn two or three lines as large.

I form—It is very difficult for a stranger to give advices such as you ask on behalf of your friend. Not knowing anything of her talends, nor as to low much peach call experience she has bud in an work, and not being sequalated with her individual surroundings or apportunities. It is impossible to give more definite captured than that already published to the articles, "Women as fillustrators" and "A Few Words to Designers," but of which appeared in the January Journal.

B. S.—The drawings ought to be made in India lak on white paper or lirisate beard, in order to be suitable for reproduction. The letter designs are not particularly original, nor sufficiently effective. Some of the bende have a certain mark. You are so young that there is no reased, why you should not make an Observator, but you need instruction and experience first. You could beach yourself a given dual as to pen and ink work by studying the librariations that appear in the first-class sourcecles.

E. C.—Read the article on "Women as Hisstra-bors" in the January Journall. (2) These are the ordinary difficulties of a beginner trying to make a start. Do not be discouraged, (3) It is most necessary that the drawfans should be effective in light and shocks. (4) The name of the picture or any noise for the other or engeneer may be written along the edge of the Hirk-tol-band, but not too close to the drawing. (4) Editors are not agit to send out manuscripts to artists wholly en-known to these. For various reasons, (d) Address them in the editor, and enclose stantage for their colors if un-suitable.

H. R. AND R. E.—The act of printing photographs on show is called exystolerm. Some yours are it had a stort period of extreme popularity, but it is so little done now that the subject has ceased to be of general interest. The painting is done raper convex gineses. Upon the first the photograph is fixed and the small details of the painting is done; and on the second the either amount of the collecting including all the leen) that of the face, dress and background. The centre process, with directions how to reader the photos trans-parent, is bus long to be given here, but will be found in any learshook on the subject.

Mus. J. R. M.—The reason, prohably, that you do not always set autofactory results is that there are several culous in your box, that you had better never use, for becames, it is always where to saily your own greens for the follow, mother than to use those sold reastly made. I would advise your getting Antiversy or Results blue, Emerald green (the only green buildes serve that it is necessary to have. I more yellow, and, if you can affect them, one or more of the cadmituses, The ferrer and the simpler the colors employed, the better the result, both in parity and harmony of tint, (2) Work some rose madder into the samey site of a peach.

H Chawknit

EXTRA-FINE COTTON HALF-HOSE

Worn With Marked Satisfaction

PREFERRED TO FOREIGN MAKES.

THE MOST POPULAR STYLES ARE THE PAST BLACK (3'4), THE MOTTLED SLATE (3'10) AND THE DRAB VARIETIES (6'3).

LOOK FOR THE TRACE-MARK ON THE TOE-FOR SALE OF THE TRACE GENERALLY. POST-PAID PRICE-LIST TO ANY ABDRESS. SHAW STOCKING CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Normandie

ADAPTED TO ALL KINDS OF

HAND AND MACHINE WORK

LACE AND EMBROIDERY, now of so much interest to the Ladies, especially considered,

SOLD BY ALL RESPECTABLE DEALERS IN THE COUNTRY.

ASK FOR BARBOURS

WE have been ap ing greats for the earth for the World's Fair Official Pictures, in 22 Colors by Charles Graham, Artist with Harper Bross.) First plates cost over Brosson, Gernal Britis-Eye trew cestre bettletings and grounds, size, and x 44, as they will appear in the Seet, prepaid, all-her $1.20, C. C. D. Befer by permission to Han, Geo. R. Davis, Director General, Col. M. Director General, Agents wanted.

POR CARPET RAGS Peerless Turkey Red

IS ABSOLUTELY FAST. Something new. Single package 10c. Write for Sample Card to

PEERLESS DYES, ELMIRA, N. Y.

OLD RAGS Colored with PERFECPION" Byes will make bountful carpets and rugs god are guaranteed not finds. If you mention this pager we will send a package each of "PERFECTION". Dirkey-Bed, Green, Wine, Medium-Brown, Rese and Orange Crems Byes, with new stample cards and cafalogue, for 40 cents, bingle parkage, for cents.

W. CUSHING & CO., FOXCROFT, MAISE.

DO YOU PAINT?

Or do Pancy Work? Ingulis' Home and Art Magazine is a Text Bask on Palating and Fancy Work. Single captes, if court side per year. We will stirl you a Samilia Curv of the Magazine, also 3 Commun Stringths by Lida Charleson, all for 8 two-cent stamps (He.) Address J. F. 1864ALLS, Lynn, Mass. Box J.

MUSIC SALE To reduce our stock of smarke we will send by places full abeet music size, including soting, finall, post paid, 484 walkness, quadrilles (with calls), etc., by Meandelsschu, bleschoten, Monart, stc., all for only 25 cts. Yes. (Y) RADES is included. 300 places of Violic misses, before a subspective glaranteed as wanny refunded. Send the addresses of five missical friends and we will include, 300 songs, words and smark. Q. L. HATH-AWAY, 300 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

THE SYMPHONION MUSIC BOX

Has changeable steel plates which makes it more desirable. Sond for calcium pow. FRED H. SANDEN, 140 Congress Street, Boston, Mass.

Stamping Patterns

Any one who wants Stamping Patierus can have them son to select from on agreement to pay for what they level and return the rest. Address HENRY MITCHELL, North Reading, Mass.

2 POUNDS of the Best Linan Society STATIONERY Delivered at your nearest Express Office, for Dorman, the Stationer, New Haven, Ct. $1.00

LA Should write to Ufford & Son, 12 West St., Boston, Se circulars of their superb Bress Pigures. Warranded one's exact style and size Ladies using them pronounce them "Invaluable."

LACE CURTAIN Catalogue, 1 cent, and samples of Wall Paper, 4 cents. WM. DEAUSES, Cincinnati, O.

"MUSIC MADE EASY," Learn at home large clust (14.4 2) 5 times, 5 tendors No. PROF. JAS. Mac MANTER, 26 Walnach Ave., Chinago

OLD MAIDS made offer by "Prof. Haxler's In-yearhon." Pr. Mr. 1.5t of orang plays FRIER, BAKER'S, 23 Winter St., Socion, Macc.

LILY DHESS SHEET ARE THE BEST MADE

"Fix ER Semples modest for Sick Headsche." Become-des. Dyspepils. Dentar's System Post Con thresholdly Google

ING A DELICATE BABY

MONG the questions that are poured into the "Mothers' Corner" and come up for discussion in the "Mothers' Council," there is none more often asked than "How shall I feed my baby?" When the mother is unable to it seems a difficult matter to be for the natural food, that gested by the tiny stomach, rtant problem, for the baby's is life depend upon its satis-

ee points to be considered:—
'ood,

en at once the meals.

must, of course, depend it agrees with one cannot , while it exactly suits a pt is one tablespoonful of fuls of cream, two table-ter and three of boiled a tiny pinch of milk c warm, and the food s is sufficient for one y sized boby until it is that gradually increase anging the proportion > satisfy the child, try espoonfuls of milk , or oatmeal gruel if stipation. To make ne tablespoonful of boiling water, with e barley in a little s, stir it into the mer slowly for an I dilute the milk gruel, mix three al with one pint Ily until it boils, > > r when it is abmilk is pure, done by steamany germs, or Have eight eight table-new corks n, new corks the prepared and each, and water, about on the fire, ls cork the Remove the bottles a little, or in the ice n a bottle und corks d then in > > > e prepa-tised, or I to the lers of ther of soda e suiteight

EDUCATION AT HOME

IN TWO ARTICLES - SECOND PAPAR

BY CAROLINE B. LE ROW

HE farther the training of the child advances, the greater becomes the variety of the provision which must be made for vision which must be made for it, but the kindergarten provides a satisfactory foundation for the work from seven to sixteen years of age. The reason for this is that the child's memory has been trained by his effort to retain facts which have been made clear and interesting; he has acquired quick observation and apprehension; some power of reason; facility in tracing resemblances and differences, in recognizing and defining forms; some idea of the relation between cause and effect, the relative and the absolute, the abeffect, the relative and the absolute, the ab-stract and the concrete. What can constitute a better preparation for the young pupil who is to become a student of books?

Is to become a student of books?

The number of reading books is almost infinite. Best among them is the "Franklin Primer," published for ten cents, or bound with the "First Reader" for twenty cents; there are five readers, graded, in this series. Grube's "Methods in Arithmetic" is an invaluable book for beginners in this study. It is arranged by Louis Soldan, superintendent of schools in St. Louis, and published for twenty-five cents. twenty-five cents.

Geographies are almost as numerous as readers. One of the best of these is "Swinton's Introductory," forty-four cents, to be used as preparation for the "Primary," forty-five cents, and the "Grammar School Geography."

five cents, and the "Grammar School Geography" at one dollar.

It is cause for rejoicing that grammar is now taught by much simpler methods than the ones formerly in vogue. "Swinton's Language Primer," twenty-one cents, "New Language Lessons," twenty-eight cents, and "English Grammar," forty-two cents, are as good books as can be used for this purpose.

Spelling, too, has been simplified. Monroe's "First Steps in Spelling," fifteen cents, and "P ical Speller," twenty cents, are fine books f his instruction. As soon as practicable, child should make acquaintance with Sucadon's "Word Studies," twenty-one cents, and continue the acquaintance till the end of his school work. It is speller and dictionary combined, very valuable and helpful in many ways. ful in many ways.

Drawing is one of the most important things

Drawing is one of the most important things to be taught to children, and there are but few who do not enjoy and profit by the instruction. Drawing becomes almost as easy and natural as writing to children trained by kindergarten methods, and they can use to advantage almost any of the numerous drawing-books in the market. "Prang's Motiels," costing from forty-five to sixty cents a set, are excellent for this work.

Harper's new graded copybooks—tracing course, two numbers; primary course, seven numbers; and grammar course, eight numbers—are sold at an average of sixty-five cents a dozen. It is well to let children use ruled a dozen. It is well to let children use ruled books for the first mechanical formation of letters, in order that they may make sure of form and proportion; after this is secured it is better to have all writing done in the shape of simple letters and compositions, with which shall be combined practical instruction in spelling, capitalization, punctuation and para-eraphing.

graphing. Children should be early taught how to Children should be early taught how to use a dictionary, and be required to use it continually. The habit, once established, will never be abandoned, and will be a great source of satisfaction as well as information to the statement. Cyclopedias should be used freely, and the child taught to realize the great value of the epitomized knowledge they contain.

The imagination and sentiment of children should be constantly cultivated, and for this purpose good fiction is wholesome mental food. There is the best sort of ethical instruction, a positive moral tonic, to be found in ...

best publications for children. The reach g habit is of itself a liberal education, and cam. 4 be too early formed. The preference which a child shows for special lines of reading wid often furnish a clue to his peculiar ability, and guide the parent in the selection of some par-ticular line of development. It is the part of wisdom to ascertain as definitely as possible for what the child is best fitted, and conduct his studies accordingly.

his studies accordingly,

Regularity is one of the great features of success in all intellectual labor. There is a success in an intersection taker, There is a law for the consuming and digesting of mental as well as physical food. When instruction is carried on free from the artificial restraint of school rules and school bells, the value of of school rules and school bells, the value of this regularity is too often overlooked. Com-panionship, too, is desirable, and when the children of different families can be brought together for their lessons at some definite time and place, more will be accomplished than by each one working alone. In all education one cannot be too constantly mindful of the fact that it is the accumulation of reasoning power, keepness of observation, close attention, and keenness of observation, close attention, and comprehensiveness of mental grasp that should be the aim of all training, and which is far more valuable than the accumulation of any amount of mere facts.

A UNIQUE DOLL

THE young lady in question was made en-tirely of corn stalks. The voluminous skirts, the wide sash, the full high sleeves and the tiny hat were all of leaves stripped from cars of core. The hat was trimmed with wild crasses, and a houquet of the same was carried the hand. The reddish-brown hair was of tra-silk. The whole effect was a striking in-unce of what can be accomplished by taste of skill with the most unpromising material.

THE LADIES' Home JOURNAL will supply the books whosed in this article to any reader.

I am afraid that some of the mothers who come to the Mothers' Corner for advice and assistance are disappointed at not receiving it assistance are disappointed at not receiving it is sooner. A question cannot be answered in this column in less than three months after it is received. Letters requiring immediate attention should contain a stamp and the address of the sender to insure a personal reply.

COLIC IN BABIES

If If I.E. nursing babies are very dependent upon their mother's self-denial in certain articles of fixed for comfortable stomachs. Not until my third little one came did i realize this, but now I find that if I whit to keep my beautiful six-months old bay happy and free from hard crying spells, I must not include in the coarser vegetables, nor in beaus, neither in apples nor apple sauce. This is as far as I deny myself, not knowing further need, excepting, of coarse, in sour pickers of all kinds, Dominium Mills.

THE VIRTUES OF FULLER'S EARTH

I WOULD like to tell all these inexperienced mothers, and perhaps those of more experience than myself, of an excellent powder for taby's use. It is simply "perchitated Fuller's Earth," My little boy was so badly challed several times during the first two or three months of his little life that some of the challed parts bled. But in three days after 1 began using "Fuller's Earth," he was entirely bracked, and his skin has been in perfect condition ever since.

CURE FOR BOW LEGS

CURE FOR 80W LEGS

M. Y boy began to walk when only a little over ten months old and being very heavy the weighed thirty pounds when six months old) he became very bow legged. A lady slopped me on the street one day when I was taking him to a doctor for advice, and gave me her cure. It was simply to stretch his limbs out straight every time I halt him down, rub them down the outside and press them together. "Do not get thred doing it," she said, "and never forget it; sponge them off with pienty of cold unier and rub them hard with a Turkish towel, now, every day," I did 2 for over a vear and to day my boy, in his twelfth year now, has no straight, shapely limbs as any I ever saw. L. D. II.

A SENSIBLE LAYETTE

A SENSIBLE LAYETTE

FURST the bands, which I only use three mentls, and I always pin the diaper to them after effecting the band. I the the shirt a fingre's length up the front and pin the diaper fronty to that, thus kerping the bowds always warmly covered. The soft kalified bands of Saxotiy are the best, as they do not redden the soft tender skin. I always use three soft wood shirts, which I should not a some pleases—or for a summer haby nothing can be nicer than the thin silk-and-wood shirts, which I beought for my loot baby, been in July.

Three flammed skirts: I buy the themsel embrodered on one edge, and have only the clusting sease. One and a half yards is the usual width sold for intend's skirts. I gather this on a half-high—or just a little lower than the dress—wast of flamed with sleveres coming to the bend of the elbow, for winter. For summer I buy signin thin flamed and put on a walst of cambrie, sleverless. I find that this plan is not extravagant, for the little thick flamed skilets are all rendy for use the pext winter, and the thin skirts also for the following summer. The same kind of walst I use for my naissock skirts, half high and sleveless, and one usually requires four If they are in constant use. The dresses are all made with pokes, either Mother Hubbard or with the round or square yokes, full sleeves gathered in a coff or narrow hand at the wrist; the dresses are three-quarters of a yard from the next, to the edge of the skirt; the skirts one inch shorter. Friends have exchained at their shortness, but they cover the feet perfectly, and that is all that is necessary. I have from six to uselve dresses, and one come get along with the first member. I make half a dozen little slip-aight-grownsopening in front, trim them prettily and bady wears them the first two months entirely; under those I have farmed slips made in the same time. These with a pale of wood er silk-and-wood socke, a knitted band and diagees are all my haby wears for the iten two months of his life; after that the slips are

TURNED-OVER EARS

PLEASE tell me if you know of a cap for bables to wear which puts the ears back into shape when they have become bent over?

HATTES.

Such a cap could easily be made by tying a straight strip over the ears and under the chin and fastening a connecting band to pass behind the head below the ears. The mus-cles require strengthening. Try the treatment recommended for how legs.

CURING A BAD HABIT

WHAT course would you suggest with a child of sen months who has always been sursed and rocked to steep, whose mother new desires to gut it to bed awake? Can a child be made to steep without the sid of drugs?

WEARY MOTHER,

Like all habits this is a hard one to break Like all habits this is a hard one to break off. It will cause you and the baby a great deal of trouble, which might have been avoided if baby had been laid in his crib alone from the first. The only course now is to put him to bed awake and let him stay there until he goes to sleep. He will cry and it will be a hard struggle but there is no other way to accomplish it.

Most certainly. It is estimated to size 4......

Most certainly. It is criminal to give drugs to a child to produce sleep, unless in case of illness and under the doctor's orders. It might injure the child for life.

CHAFING AND SCURF

CHAFING and scurf are two altogether unnecessary of evils. The rough, soilly substance which sometimes appears on the head does not at first roughen the scale, but appears in time, yellow spots, which only a careful eye can detect; these soon-develop into the scurf, which spouds over the entire head. At once, upon observing the discolarations, saturate them thoroughly with sweet oil or uncelline; after removing carefully with sweet oil or uncelline; after removing carefully with the little conds, wash the head in soft, some sink. As for challing if the parts every night are thoroughly greased, subbed with usselline, also down the spine and around the raivel, all dancer of challing will be avoided, and the howels kept resular.

Never rate the leafwey, but on taking from the bath wrap in a blanket, which absorbs the water, then with soft linen torcel part the damp skin dry, generously powder, and lasely vigorously rule the entire body with the palm of the hand until it is agion with heat.

You no Mothers.

BABY'S FIRST TWO YEARS.

BY HER MOTHER

My baby is now two and one-half years old, and a brighter, sweeter child is seldom seen.

The first few months of her life, this little one suffered tortures from eczema. Our most eminent physician, Dr. J. F. Croston, treated her, lancing several large abscesses. It is no wonder that we were completely discouraged. Yet when our hearts were saddest, there came relief, and in a wonderful way. We had tried relief, and in a wonderful way. We had tried nearly all the foods sold by our druggist, but atterly in vain. Our physician recommended something else. We tried it, and noticed an improvement after the first three meals. There was no further need of medicine, for this food made our little girl so strong and healthy that the dread cruption was soon cured. This food is called Lactated, and I want every mother to know of it.

At the time of my baby's sickness, the en-tire head was a mass of scabs. It looked as though she would never have a particle of hair. But the picture shows that she possesses a head of bair that is the envy and admiration of many a mother.

Her teeth all came with little trouble, she

Her teeth all came with little trouble, she has had no trouble from indigestion, and her sleep has been sound and unbroken.

We have used fifty two boxes of Lactated Food, and our buby's life and happiness are due to its nourishing qualities. I feel it my duty to help mothers know of the food that makes babies happy, healthy and hearty.

The history given above was written by Mrs. Morris A. Smith, 32 Race Street, Haverhill, Mass. The picture of her baby proves all that Mrs. Smith has written about its present good health. She is but one of the thousands of mothers, who, when all earthly help scenned in vain, have seen their little ones come back to health simply through the use of this pure food. Yet Lactated Food is not a medicine—it is simply a pure food that keeps the well baby strong, and in a natural way makes the sick baby well.

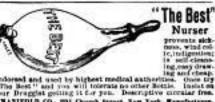

Lactated Food is sold by the best druggists, or mailed on receipt of price, 25 cts., 50 cts., $1.00. Interesting book of prize habies and beautiful birthday card free to any mother sending her baby's name to the proprietors.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. The history given above was written by Mrs.

MIZPAH" VALVE NIPPLES WILL NOT COLLAPSE.

Make nursing easy, and prevent much colle, because they admit air into the bettle as the milk is drawn out, and prevents a vacuum being formed. Sam-ple free by mail upon request, with valuable information for cleansing and keeping nippies sweet and bealthy. WALTER F. WARE 20 S. Third St., Phila., Pa.

MANIFOLD CO., 291 Church Street, New York, Hanufacturer.

WARDROBE PATTERNS

DAD I Complete outfit, S improved patterns for infants' clothes. Also S of short clothes. Either set with full directions for making, amount and kind of material, by mail, sealed, Si ceuts. Patterns absolutely reliable. HINTS TO EXPENTANT MOTHERS, a book by a tuilned muse, free with each set of patterns. book by a trained norse, free with each set of patterns. Mrs. J. BHIDE, P. O. Box 2033, New York.

BOLEVEY SAL A MOBIL P. Consisting Y improved A strice; per feetilt Infants I outfit, 25 pst. 50c.; short elethes, 25 pst., 50c.; kind, am't, met'rl required, valuable hygienic information by professional norse, and portfolio of bables, from life, free, with cath. See lagitact Patters Ca., 5 Pealingty Vt.

BREAST SUPPORT FORM. By its use the weight of the breasts is removed from the dress waist to the shoulders, giving ventilation and a perfect shape bust, free and easy movement of the body. ALL DEFOURENT SUPPLIED. When ordering send bust measure. Price, free by mail.BLOO.

Mrs. C. D. NEWELL,

BABY'S HEALTH WARDROBE. Complete outfit in-facts clothes, 25 pat., 30 cts. Short clothes, 26 pat., 30 cts. Full directions, kind, material, required. Patterns improved 1892. No. F. E. PHILLEPS, Kees, S. H.

BABIES MUST NOT BE FRETTED

The Dector says, with course wool shirts woen next to the tender skin. It is very unbealthy—makes the babies cross, sick and fretful. The Silk and Wool, all Silk and Pine Saxony Shirts and Banda made by T. O. GARDNER CO., Boston, are healthy, soft, clastic and make the babies healthy and happy.

EDITED BY MARY F. KNAPP

This Department alternates each month with "Artistic Needlework," so that both of these branches of woman's bandiwork may be distinctly and more fully treated.

CROCHET CHATELAINE FOR SCISSORS

MATERIALS: Sixteen brass rings, one inch in diameter, one yard and a balf of inch wide satin ribbon, and four skeins of twisted embroidery silk.

Cover each ring in single crochet with the silk. Sew one end of the rib bon through one of the rings and pass it through oneside of a pair of scissors, then up through the same ring and down through theother baif of the scissors; then up through the same ring. Take another ring in the right hand and bring the ribbon up through it from the under side, then back again through the un-der side of the that ring through the second ring from its upper

Take a third ring and hold it. a little back of the second ring and * bring the ribbon up through the space between the second and third rings from the under side.

Place another ring behind the third one and repeat from "until all the rings are used, and a few inches of ribbon will be left from which a bow is made at the end to conceal a safety pin, which attaches the chatelaine to the

CHEMISE YOKE IN ANTIQUE LACE

BY MARY F. KNAPP

ATERIALS: Spool cotton No. 24 and a steel crochet book. For the back of the yoke, crochet a strip of the spiderweb insertion.

For the sleeve crochet a strip of the same insertion, and finish off at one end with 15 rows of the open squares, made rows of the open squares, made by ch 2, 1 d c in d c, etc.

Join the strip together so that the 15 rows of open squares will form a gusset.

The front of the yoke is made the same width as the back for six rows, then widen each row until you have six webs down the side of the front. Continue without widening until you have three and a half webs across the bottom of the front, and then narrow and finish to match the first half of the front.

After the sleeves have been sewed to the

After the sleeves have been sewed to the front and back, a narrow edge as in illustration may be exceleted around the entire yoke and sleeves, except on the lower edge of the back, where none is needed.

A narrow ribbon inserted as in illustration is a pretty finish. For a slight person eight webs will form the back, twelve the sleeve and a row of nine across the top will form the front of the yoke.

If more convenient, the edging can be crocheted separately and sewed on. Make a chain of 8 stitches: turn, and put 1 d c in 4th st., ch 1, 1 d c in same; skip 2 stitches, 3 d c in next st, ch 1, 3 d c in same. This makes a shell.
Gb 4, 1 s c in last st of chain.
23 row—8 d c under ch 4, shell in shell, 1 d c between 2 d c, ch 1, 1 d c in same place, 1 d c at end of row.

c at end of row.

3d row-ch 3, 1 d c ch 1 and 1 d c between 2 d c, shell in shell, ch 4, 1 s c in space next to the shell.

Now that fashion decrees the revival of the long discarded chemise, the above directions if they are followed out in white crochet silk will make a very handsome yoke.

wearer. There are about four inches of plain ribbon between the scissors and the first ring.

A PRETTY MOUCHOIR CASE

MATERIALS: Two pieces of heavy card-board ten and a half by eight and a half inches, twenty-two brass rings, one and a quarter inches in diameter, light-blue cable silk, two yards blue gros-grain ribbon, one inch wide, and five-eighths of a yard of silk. For the bottom of box cover one piece of the cardboard with blue surah; gum neatly over the edge to the depth of an inch.

A piece of lightweight pasteboard, ten by eight inches, is then covered with a layer of wadding, well perfumed, over which is a fulling of the surah neatly gummed over the edges. Cover the rings with blue silk in single crochet stitch, and join all together in a row.

These rings form the sides of the box, and are factened to the edge of the puffed liming. The ribbon is worren in and out through the rings, and finished with a bow at each end. For the box lid, cover the other piece of heavy cardboard with kid on both sides, gumming the inner over the outer edge, and fasten at the back by two half-inch corcheted rings, gummed to the cover and sewed to the box. gnormed to the cover and sewed to the box.

NEEDLE-BOOK IN RINGS

BY LILLIAN HARDING

MATERIALS needed: Fourteen one-inch bruss rings, four skeins embroidery silk, half bunch steel or gilt beads, half yard baby ribbon. Crochet over these rings, using seven for each cover of needle-book. Sew together in a cir-cle, using one for the center. String the bends across each ring and then again at right angles. Cut two or more pieces of flannel same shape, and button-hole stitch with silk and secure all together with ribbon.

Pretty tollet cushion covers are made of rings crocheted with silk. Take thirty-six rings size smaller than those used in making the needle-book; have six in a row, and six rows. This forms a square. Finish this square by sew-ing a two and a half inch wide lace round it, fulling it at the corners, and put a prerty butterfly bow on each corner, under the lace. Lamp muts made in the same way, with boby ribbon run in and out through the last row of rings round the square, tied in a many-looped bow at one corner, are very taking.

A PAIR OF INFANT'S SOCKS

By Mas. S. W. STILES

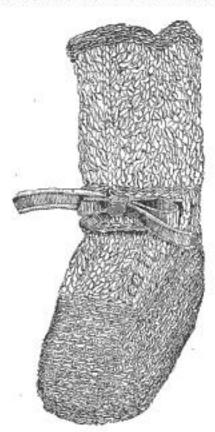

NE ounce each of blue and white Saxony yarn, four medium-sized steel knitting needles. Castup 46 stitches with the blue, and knit the first row plain.

2d row-parl.
3d row-plain. Then join on the white yarn and knit the 4th row plain.

5th row—purl. 6th row—knit 1, narrow twice, * over, knit I, over, knit 1, over, knit 1, over and narrow

4 times, repent from star until 5 stitches remain, then narrow twice and knit I.
7th row—purl.

Sth row—plain.
Sth row—parl.
10th row—same as the 6th. Repeat from the 7th through the 10th row, until you have 6 rows of holes from the top of sock, making 38 rows in all. 26 rows in all.

27th row—parl.
28th row—plain.
29th row—plain.
29th row—parl. Join on the blue and knit the 30th row plain.
31st row—plain. Join on the white and knit the 32d row—plain.
33d row—parl

33d row-puri.

34th row-knit 1, * over and narrow. Repeat from star to the end of row.

36th row—purl.
30th row—plain.
37th row—purl. Join on the blue, and kuit
the 38th row plain.

39th row-plain. Jo knit the 40th row plain. Join on the white, and Alst row—purl.

41st row—purl.

42d row—knit 15 stitches, then with a third needle knit 1, narrow, over, knit 1, over, knit 2, narrow twice, knit 1, over, knit 1, over, knit 1, narrow, knit 1, leaving 15 stitches on the needle from which you have been knitting. The third needle contains 16 stitches, which are the foundation for the top of the foot, and on these knit with the 4th needle.

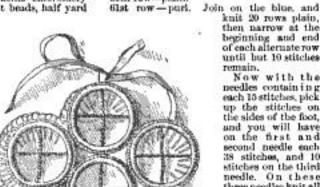

43d row—nurl.

43d row—part. 44th row—plain. 45th row—purt. 45th row—same as the 42d.

Repeat from the 42d row through the 45th until you have 5 rows of holes, making 58

59th row-purl.

60th row-plain. 61st row-puri.

Now with the needles contain in g each 15 stitches, pick up the stitches on the sides of the foot, and you will have on the first and second needle each 38 stitches, and 10 stitches on the third needle. On these three needles knit all yound 8 news plain. round 6 rows plain. Now narrow at the end of the first needle, in the middle of the second needle, and the beginning of the third needle, every alternate row, until but 3 stitches remain on the mid-dle needle. Divide these patting 1 stitch on the first needle, and 2 on the third needle. Make the number of stitches equal by narrowing. Narrow at the beginning and end of each needle each alternate row until you have knit 6 more rows, then place the two needles together and bind Sewing the back.

Upholstery Fabrics

Spring of '92

We offer this season:

New Designs and Colorings in Armures for Wall and Window Hangings.

Large Lines of Muslin and Lace

Curtains for Summer use. Complete assortment of Soft Drapery Silks in the latest high art shades.

Inexpensive Stuffs in great variety for Furniture Coverings.

Samples, Drawings, and Estimates on application.

Mail orders receive prompt and careful attention.

W. & J. Sloane,

Broadway, 18th and 19th Streets

ACKSONS We pay Multi and Express charges with a CKSONS of the water man PHEET to any post of CA. SAMPLES from the Multi-State of CA. SAMPLES from the print, order and SAMPLES. From the Multi-State shock and the Multi-State sho SILKS.

BLACK DRESS GOODS.

Solician Company of Solician Company of Solician Company Compa

GREY DRESS GOODS.

WASH DRESS GOODS.

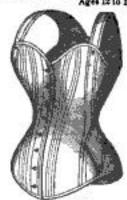

Secieli Cinghama, per yd., from French Sellmes, per yd., from Batiste and Pungees, per yd., fro Bengistehed Side Hand Lewis, pe

CHILDREN'S. or BOYS and GIRLS. Ages 3 to 10 years.

YOUNG LADIES'. For GROWING GIRLS, Ages 12 to 15 years.

LADIES' Style 52 (White and Drab), Imperial Jean. Style 62 (White and Drab), Satteen. Style 72 (Fast Black), Italian Serge. Style 72 A VERY SATISFACTORY CARMENT.

WHY? Because it Supports Stockings and Underclothes from the Shoulders, and bas no stiff cords: fits with perfect case and freedom. For sale by leading dealers.

LADY CANVASSERS WANTED Send for Illustrated Price List. THE POT, HARMON & CHADWICK CO., Brecklyn, M. Y.

$500 Per Year. Side of per booth; $78.00 per week, clear of a species with white he corned by lady agongs can weeking for the BELIANCE CORSET COMP'Y. of Jackson, MRH., who make the interesting of Dress Reform Corest Walsts, any factory in the United States, tipe for borner, minisque & prist 1985 gents wanted in every lown and city

KENSINGTON CROCHET TWIST comes in 51 beautiful colors. Ask for it, or send in cents for large ball to C. G. HUBERT, ES WALLEST, New York GOOGLO

DRESS MAKING BY EMMA M. HOOPER

> MISS HOOPER invites, and will cheerfully answer any questions concerning home dressmak-ing which may be sent to her by the JOURNAL sisters. While she will answer by mail, if stamp > is inclosed, she greatly prefers to be allowed to reply through the Journal, in order that her answers may be generally helpful. Address all letters to Miss Emma M. Hooper, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

EW COTTON FABRICS

OR the early spring sewing the merchants are show-ing striped, lace, corded, checked and plaided foreign and domestic ginghams, cotton Hed-ford cords in round and flat ribs, crinkly crepons, Lawns, batistes, organdys, cambric, mous-ite goods, as dimity, nain-l and printed flouncings, patterns, having sufficient embroidery for the trim-are black and white ef-land actions on life like lored stripes, or life-like laite, ecru, pink, blue or ly all of the cottons are de now, and vary from cents a yard.

COTTON FROCKS

urg and nainsook emall and close designs, rk, which is work not ed for yokes, pointed , bracelet and deep s and collars. The iled Point de Genes and is used for the the more elaborate he very handsome made up over silk ted with this thick iffles trim most of he dress goods, cut be washed, blas if red. Velvet, satin worn as bretelles, Is ending in tiny and loops at the very stylish on black hair-line le those loving

FROCKS

re worn than t the enmbries knot wreath ving flowers m and teru tade, with a few gathers k the close sige, which yo an inch, " an inch hirt waist ronts, five llar, and fastening are used, ether on for the be waist e, with which gold. fronts. d genriped , and and

DRESS AIDS FOR MOTHERS

THE PIRST OF SPRING SEWING

HIS is sure to be the little cotton frocks for the small chil-dren of all ages, and they can be gotten out of the way before the more important garments are begun. Girls frocks must visit the washtub regularly, so bear this in mind and sacrifice fuss to cleanliness. Buy sufficient goods for new sleeves, and turn up-deep hems, for cotton will shrink, and children are equally determined to grow. Trim with embroidery, Point de Genes lace—this lace use very sparingly—and funcy cotton braid, which is so easy to iron when mother is tired and the day so warm. In lace of minute buy cotton conjugary be as plenwhen mother is tired and the day so warm. In place of piqué, buy cotton corduroy; be as plentiful as you can with striped and plaided ginghams, slip in at least a couple of white dresses, a dimity and a nainsook, or an embroidered flouncing, and do not forget one or two pretty resebud, violet or forget-me-not combries. White guimpes, of tucked or feather-stitched nainsook, may be worn with any and all of these frocks, and they may be with or without the white sleeves, ending in a tiny rolled cutff. The white ones are clean and dainty in appearance, but add to the washing; and when making upclothes in the spring I would advise everyone "doing them up themselves" to think abead how they will fancy ironing all of these "extra touches" on a July day.

LITTLE GIRLS' GINGHAM GOWNS

Interest of the series of the skirts are gathered, two breadths are gathered, and three beings in the skirts are gathered, two breadths answering for the timest tots, and three beings to the skirts are gathered, two breadths answering for the timest tots, and three being in the skirt of a girl of five years. The low-neck waist of a girl of five years. The low-neck waist worn over a guimpe has a frill of gingham or embroidery, and if made high-necked, the frill may simulate a bertha. Coat sleeves, full at the top, have an edging or turn-over cuff of embroidery, while with white sleeves attached to the guimpe, the dress sleeves are tiny andiat the top, have an edging or turn-over cuff of embroidery, while with white sleeves attached to the guimpe the dress sleeves are tiny puffs. If a belt is worn have it of insertion, though many of the gathered skirls are sewed to the round waist, which buttons in the back, and has only under-arm and shoulder scams. Over a guimpe of tucked nainsook the low walst is perfectly plain, or gathered, top and bottom. A little vest of embroidery is sometimes seen, also bretelle frills of gingham, or edging from the waist line in front, over the shoulders, to the waist at the back. High waists are trimmed with narrow vests, a square of tucked nainsook, jacket fronts finished with edging, and opening over a flat front of embroidery, or a plaited one of the gingham. Other waists are full from the shoulders and crossed at the waist line in surplice fashion over a V of embroidery. Girdle pieces, forming a point in front, are sewed in the side eeams, and tacked fronts also appear. The collar is of narrow edging turned over. White or èeru Irish point lace trims some elaborate cotton frocks, as a yoke, cuffs and girdle.

FOR GIRLS OF TWELVE TO SIXTEEN

FOR GIRLS OF TWELVE TO SIXTEEN

A T this age larger plaids and stripes are allowable, with trimmings of embroid-ery or Irish point lace. The latter costs more than the former, but is newer and more dressy in effect. At fourteen years, ribbon, canvas or leather belts may be worn, if preferred, to those of insertion or gingham. The gathered skirts have a ruffle four and a half inches deep, or simply a hem, and should be amply full, five breadths of thirty-inch goods going in a skirt for a girl of fourteen years. The round waists have high-topped coat or full shirt sleeves, with a turn over, plain or band cuff of embroidery. The collar is high, and the waist opens back or front. Yokes and girdles of embroidery are worn, also short picket or zonave pieces around the armholes, bertha and bretelle frills. The waist bas-shoulder and arm seams, and is cut sufficiently long to tuck beneath the skirt belt with a draw-string bolding it to the figure. The front is full, top and bottom, lapped at the waist line has a tucked volce with the full. front is full, top and bottom, lapped at the waist line, has a tucked yoke, with the fullness uncaught below the chest; or one of embroidery, square, round or V-shaped. The hirt waists have a pointed yoke at the back, daffed fronts, five-inch wide plaits, aluri evers and a high or rolling collar. These dout require any triumning, except stitched ges. Comfortable waists of both gingham deambrie are of the sallor bloops shape, the alumn value collar and the Vin front of th a lune sailor collur, and the V in front of broidery. Glughnus in attractive patterns the Tulle du Nord, at a shiiling, the French ics at seventy five cents, and a happy men, tise Parkhill asphyrs at twenty-five cents.

DRESSMAKERS CORNER

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any possible question on Home-Dressmaking sent me by my readers. EMMA M. HOOPER

Mas. B. E.—Put soft kid shoes on your baby. They are defined with short clothes, as the channels socks are not fit to walk in.

Mass, J. T. R.—Your postmark, was too faint to be read and the address in the letter blurred, but a letter was sent to two Brightons and returned "unclaimed." ZELLA R.—"Bell" skirts have a bias samm in the back, but some have side gures and others do not, so you are correct in thinking both styles a "bell" design.

M. H. H. - Nainsook, organdy, dimity, crépon, Bed-fard cording, embroilered factoring, checked and striped all white goods. (2) Your question was answered in article on "Colton Gowns."

M. D.—Moth spots around your mouth indicate a torpid liver, for which consult your physician and not your "favorite paper." (2) Avoid strong perfumes, and use the faintly scented waters.

DRIAA P.—Read answer to "Country Girl" and "Early Sewing." (2) All wool challies make very pret-ty and cool home gowns; when soiled, a French dyer can dry clean them without ripping.

Mas. Catas. R. S.—Velvet girdles are worn on Bitle girls' dresses of crépon and castimere. (2) Guimpes of salmonés are worn with all dresses. (2) In place of pape get cotton Bedford cording or corduroy.

DAMNEL—A light erosmy tan all wool cheviet, heavy looking but really light u-light, costs §1 a yard. fifty-two inches wide. (2) Remode the Henrichin with sleeves, draped vest and skirt ruffle of bengaline silk.

GUSSER S.—White crèpen or China silk. (2) SSR pet-ticents of "undoubted style" are of black or colored changeable tablets silk. (3) Have a yeke of frish point lace for your pretty house dress of blue silk warp Hon-riette.

MAUVE.—This is a lovely and stylish evening color, but very few can wear 2 unless it is a pure guiden—not reddleh—bloode, without much color. (2) The Barritz gloves are without any palm sitt or buttons, and should fit toosely.

ENNA K.—A pure silk drapery net cannot be had for less than $1.85. a yard. (2) Use sade curtains of dotted Subs on the bed-room windows. (3) Sphashers, wash-stand and bureau covers of linen, with bemsittehed and subroidered cods.

Mus. A. F.—Bond answer to "Subscriber," (2) Jes and your tan Bedford will be in the height of style. (3) A jet girdle having deep fringe in front costs from $1.56 to the sud 66 boys a very pretty one; they are very drossy on a lace net toilette.

dressy on a necess non-re-May L.—June is a prettier month to be married in than May, even were it not for the old saying "To be married in May is to rue it for pay." (2. For such a journey have a bire serge reefer and "bell" skirt with bloose walsts of flannet, silk and cambric.

I. W. V.—Black bats will be much worn this coming senson, as the dress goods are so light that they peed dark beadgear to tone them up. (2) builds kill for less wear and glace for ordinary wear. Four buttons for the latter and eight buttons for the suide.

EARLY SETTING—Be not buy your woolen dresses before the middle of March. (I) Have a bengaline, not a faille. (3) A black taffets slik petitionat at $0, is made of slik at righty-five cents a part. (4) Grt the Sea Island gloghams, cotton crépons and Bedford corts.

Miss. Dictoriata 6.—Nice cambries always wash and wear well, and this season they are in locally Pempadour and Lesis XV floral designs. 12. Have your willie gowns of the corded dimity, embeddered dissisting and selection and laws, and trim with Valencienness large and embrodery.

M. E. M.—Your letter arrived after the "next issue" had gone to press. (2) Nothing but the dyer's art, which they very properly refuse to divulge, can permanently remove the gloss. This comes from the sitk warp rubbing ability in one case, and in the fronting wearing through in the other.

Countray Gree.—Tan is the preferred color. (2) Either diagonal or lengthwise stripes are more becom-ing than checks to a figure only five first in height. (8) China silks will be very fashionable this summer in back, blue or cream grounds especially. If you prefer a blue get it with white figures.

Mus. Cot., Carten—I hope you are no trying tokeop up appearances like the famous "Col. Carter," but in spite of your fisht in my ingensity I hardly know how to lengthen the skilet unless you peec it at the bottom and bide that with a ruffle and then piece down the top, which will be hidden under the deep coat basque. Directly in front where the basque is pointed the jet gardle baving a deep fringe will concoul all that piecing.

Superminus—The coming season will witness prin-cess gowns. Ruseim biouses, round bodices, pointed busques having a deep, coat-tail hack, and becopes with the coat effect from the side seams around the back, and short, round or pointed fronts. (2) I am sorry to say that the skrirs still dip in the back, (3) Feather edging will be rather wintry for a spring seit; rather have narrow for gluop and bengaline vest or corselet.

M. A. K.—Combine veivet a shade darker or black with the sample, using it for a corsole, collar, cuffs and a skirt border, unless you profer a gathered ruffle on the "bell" skirt, but as you are small a flat border on the skirt will prove more becoming than a ruffle. (2) A corsoled as described in answer to: "Eleanor," and should reach to the lower part of the best. (3) A black lace hat so tone of fine straw trimmed with more ribbon, lace and flowers. (4) Could you not have your lace enawhered and freshen is or do it yourself in gin and water, dilitied alcohol or green len? The slik lining should be as a "bell" skirt and short basque, with ruffle on skirt, high sleeves, etc. Bead answer to "Eleanor" for farther directions regarding the making of the dress, as to the conselet and ribbon bow, or you might prefer velvet to slik garniure.

ELEANOR—Make your slik skirt in a "bell" shape, with bias ruille on the edge; then over this hang he drapery net, using four widths, and arrange it gracefully boutfont is front, though not really fill, as plain effects are still almed at for the fronts. Have a four-inch hem, and make it half an inch shorter than the slik skirt, as nets will sag after one or two wearings. The slik bodies has the usual number of seams, and is just a triffe below the waist line, with the least point back and front. The net has only side and shoulder seams, with the fainces in tiny points at the waist line. High sterves with two rows of jet at the wrist; same on the collar. V and correlated seams and hooked over to the other, we also not not side seams and hooked over to the other, separation like the point, is sirright across the top, well boned and softly deaped. From the side seams, blowing the outline of the sheet bodier, have black sain fibour No. 16 falded to the point from where it falls in long ends and loops. If you wish to introduce a color have a plastron in front of colored crips or cliffon.

EXCRITARNY—Press a law of librity menths in long ends and loops. If you wish to introduce a color have a plastron in front of colored crèpe or chiffigs.

L'ACERTAINTE—Dress a boy of librty menths in singhams, contou, cordurer and finance, (2) Make the credwing freeks with a kill skirt and jucket said to plage used to be worn, and trim with pearl brittens and solutionizery. The glughams should have a gathered skirt, round, high-necked wast, and simple embrashery on the mek and wrists; in addition in this have a vest of turked laws. Another sectly dress for boys has onto take lacket freeds estays in addition in this have a vest of turked laws. Another sectly dress for boys has onto take lacket freeds estays with entireletery. (I builde saids for such manage have a kill or gathered skirt and loose bloone, with a large collar und a V of creatmasting material if desired. Finite white, there and striped flame like west. (If The pointed sack will do, mid the losse front of the lorse-gown, but add a V in the back from the collar to the vasiet time of black brecarded said in severity-dive centers a jour yard. Then have the full input part of the sice of the broomic and deep, closus fitting with or candinater, reduce of brounds, and a smaller V in the sice of the broomic and deep, closus fitting with or candinater, reduce of brounds, and a smaller V in the sice of the broomic and deep closus within. From the side seams to be body, following the point, fold black south No. 28 vibbon, and at the point in the limit of the lorse front to the different management bedough of the order. If you are willing to gut more expense on the good, but the large radie is families ment at about saxy, the courts, but the large radie is families ment at between the the other. If you are willing to gut more expense on the good of the broomic math the point and deep chart in a point up the reduce of the broaded you maght use verifical at about saxy, the courts, but the large

LANGDON & BATCHELLER'S

Glove Fitting

CORSETS

Genuine Thomson's

The high Standard of material and workmanship is still maintained as in the past; the very best quality of French Horn Stripes being used as stays.

These goods are sold by all First-class Retailers throughout the United States at the following prices:

Young Ladies'	43	$ 75
R-H. Three Longths		1 00
N. Nursing		1 00
K. Extra Long	1	1 00
Ventilating. Three Lengths		1 00
L. Extra Long	- 10	1 25
O. Extra Long, Black		1 25
G. Medium and Extra Long		1 50
G. Nursing	4	1 50
Abdominal		150
Abdominal, Sizes above 32	9	175
E. Three Lengths	8	1 75
E. Three Lengths, Black .	82	175
B. Two Lengths		2 25
B. Two Lengths, Black		2 50

Money refunded if NOT satisfactory.

We warrant "GLOVE-FITTING" CORSETS.

BEST&CO.

Gingham Dresses.

We are showing new spring styles for all ages. The 2 and 3 year sizes for 75 cts, $1.48 and $1.75 are specially good values-larger sizes 4 to 14 years from $1.00 to $4.00.

Colored Sthograph short showing several of these styles sent upon application—also illustrations and full description of the intest styles for Says, titrle and Babies including everything from flats to Shoos. Mail orders

60-62 West 23d St., N. Y.

For sale by all Leading Retail Dealers. Send for Illustrated Catalogue.

L. L. LOOMER'S SONS, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Sample pair of either style mailed on receipt of 25c. L. R. KLEINERT RUBBER COMPANY, 26 to 32 E. Houston Street, New York.

ACME A complete garment, worn mode to complete garment, worn mode garmen

ATTERNS, $30 given nowy May flist to Carbon Pheet (18 c.21) for Best Fancy Design Draws all stoca and styles, Simple and oney. Boys and give a change for you. $500, postpadd. £50 Blift) DERV PATTERN MPG. (XX, Chienge, III.

Standard Fashion Catalogue Now ready for Spring pages over 100 observations. By mail, only the present over 100 observations. By mail, only the present the page of the page o

Digitized by Google

A TASTEFUL LACE-TRIMMED BONNET (Illus. No. 3)

SOME EASTER HATS AND BONNETS

Br Isabel A. Mallon

HE woman whose head does not find a comfortable cover-ing in the last sold off the counter, certainly should be happy this season, for, where one hat is noted already make, hundreds of pieces of made, hundreds of pieces of straw braid are seen to be sewed to the desired shape. The average milliner seems in the past to have counted it as a personal insult if one's bend happened to be a little smaller, a little larger or a little differently shaped from the average one, and she did the necessary taking in or letting out under protest, making the unfortunate buyer feel that there must be something wrong with her in every way, because her crawrong with her in every way, because her cra-nium was not the exact match of her neighbor's Now, however, it is more than possible that one may have a bonnet which is really comfortable, being not so small that one fears it is going to fly off one's head, and not so large that one feels extinguished by it, but of the right size, and resting comfortably and properly in its place. ly in its place,

THE BRAIDS IN VOGUE

THE somewhat heavy Milan steam, with its "HE somewhat heavy Milan strare, with its yellow tint, is most favored for the ordinary hat or bonnest the very durable straw generally known as the English one being its only rival. Chip, which it was predicted would obtain largely, is noticed in only a few of the season's chapeaux, and is not likely to be popular. Both open and face benids are shown in great quantities to be made up in the desired shape, the close ones, of course of view. desired shape, the close ones, of course, giving a heavy effect that permits a simple trimming and a more weighty one.

The lace braids have glints of gold here and there among them; tiny jet beads are set in them and so are the small straw buttons that give to a bonnet or hat such a pretty look. The very elaborate jewels used during the last season are not in vogue, except in the shape of buckles or crown pieces.

A SMART WALKING HAT (Illus, No. 1)

THE SIZE OF THE HATS

THE SIZE OF THE HATS

PRESCIPPOSING that hats embrace bounds, it may be said that the tendency is toward the small ones; that is, while the hats are not ting, still they are smaller than those shown during the winter, and the bounets are not much larger than the plateau which has been found capable of holding so much that is decorative although it is so small in size. A hat that recalls the old poke bounet is pretty and has not the stilf look of that bounet, as while the front comes forward and shades the while the front comes forward and shades the face the sides are narrower and do not narrower and do not bend down. The capote is alightly more oval and is very generally de-veloped in lace, or at least has an elaborate lace trimming upon it. The stiff English walking bat is in both black and white straw, and will ble worn for shopping and travel-ing, but it is decidedly trying, and while it has what is called a stylish air it can searcely be cited as dainty. However, with a cloth suit it does give to the wearer that peculiar trigair that is alwaysuggestive of a tailor and a hatter rather than of a dressmaker and a milliner. The Alpine hat in dark blue or black felt will continue in come and will find vogae and will find its appreciation among women who count stand the extreme severity of the square crown hat. As the Alpine hat may be lent up to be very narrow, or broadened out to be wide, us it may have a receite or a couple of wings just on one side, or may be extremely severe, its becomingness is merely a matter of personal arrangement.

THE SMART WALKING HAT

A N illustration of this hat is given in No. 1. It is of black English straw with a low square crown and a narrow brim that curls up at each side. This brim is smoothly faced with black relvet; about the crown and within helf an inch of its top is a band of heavy white satin ribbon, a dead white being chosen; this is drawn to the front and is there armaged in two very arranged in two very narrow stiff to ops with a long paste backle, the ordinary square shape, glitter-ing between them. If this one were a white bat its trim-mings would be black and the backle would be of finely yest jet. Undoubt-sily these hats will be popular, and as they are easy to as-situe, and hide any disarrangement of disarrangement of the bang, it is not very difficult to discover the reason for the general liking accorded them.

FLOWERS OF SPRING

VATURE herself tever dream-ed of more beautiful flowers than those shown by the mil-liners. If you are difficult to please it does not matter, for from the orchid, in every variety, to the huge chrysamthe outin, from the great erimson rose to the tiny wild one, from tulips and annuacia-tion lilles down to the tiny violet and tinier forget-me-ned, every flower of the field and hot-house is represented, and you can take your choice. The violet-were so popular last year that it seemed as if they could not have the same favor shown them again, but it is certain that they will be just as much in terrace. just as much in vogue, the preference being given however, to the dark Russian rather than the light ones. Small wreaths and bou-deaux of flowers are seen, and as they can be arranged on a hat to form the trimming they appeal to the amateur milliner. Very often the wreaths are quite small and are in-tended to sit up on the crown of a bonnet, giving it a higher and narrower look than it would otherwise have.

A VIOLET HAT

A WOLET HAT

A PRETTY hat (illustration No. 2) that is not either very large or very small, is of yellowish straw with a rounding brim that is turned up in the back. The crown istaken our and a soft, flat one of golden-brown velvet inserted; at the back, above this crown, are masses of deep purple violets that trail down to each side of the crown, where they terminate. At the back are a few loops of brown velvet, and from under them starts one string of two-lock velvet ribbon; this has on its end a tiny hunch of violets fastened in a careless manner. bunch of violets fastened in a careless manner, and the ribbon itself is brought about very loosely under the chin, carried around to the side, and caught high up against the hair. The effect of this hat is most artistic, and as the ribbon is loose enough to fall easily, the siff look which too often results from a single tie

THE USE OF LACK

L ACE bids fair to overflow everything in riotons waves, fine and jabets. The shade chosen is oftenest that matching the though the patterns that are very light are given the preerence over tibe heavy ones. A few bonnets are made entirely of lace, but they are very often so thoroughly deco-rated with it that it is difficult to decide where the lace begins and the straw ends.

A typical lace-trimmed bonnet is shown (Himstration No. 3). In shape it is an oval expote of black lacestraw with nn edge finish of a roll of black relyet; just in front is a black lace butterfly. poised as if for flight, while at the back is a high full quille of black French lace.

The ties of black velvet ribbon come from the back and are knotted in a prim bow under the chin. The veil worn is a fine not one, with small stars of black jet upon it. By the the chin by, he careful in getting a good quality of this not else the stars will be failing one- and the result will be a ragged and most untidy look-

VERY broad moiré ribbon is shown on V some of the new bounets for ties, the intention being that they shall be arranged under the chin in stiff loops and with long ends. But it is doubtful if this will be a fushion that will obtain. Our climate makes these heavy, broad ties uncomfortable, and almost all women will remove them and substitute narrow velvet ones in their place. The velvet ribbon is more becoming, as its tendency is to soften the skin, and certainly the narrow ties are more comfortable than the wide ones.

Fentbers will undoubtedly be used in com-bination with flowers, but they will not have the vogue given them that has been theirs that has been theirs during the winter months. Everybody is getting a little tired of the Prince of Wales plumes, and that would seem to be the only disposition possible where many flowers are in use. Stiff black aigmettes spring out nigrettes spring out from rosettes of lace, or round bunches of or round bunches of flowers, and have good air, but both lace and flowers would look equally well without them on the large hats, funcied for small people, and the finion the people the larger the hats. Very stiff rosettes of the ribbon called Tom Thumbare considered the most suitable trimare considered the most suitable trimming. Two are assulty placed well down on the brim and one just at the back of the crown; a stiff nigrette matching the ribbon and hat in color, springing from the rosette at the back, forms the most effective of trimmings. tice of trimorings.

Y ELLOW and pink alone or together will be extremely popular, the yellow that is funcied being a perfectly pure shade and rather light. Frenchmen, who are nothing if not patriosic and polite, have dubbed this shade "Cronstadt," as a recognition of the kindness of the Cray of all the Russias to the French fleet last summer. A very heavy veil-ing, a square mesh alternating with solid squares which is warranted to protect one either from sun or wind, also bears this name. The yellow will be generally used in connection with white, black or golden-brown, and will oftenest take the form of flowers themselves, or will be in the soft crope used for drapery.

AN ATTRACTIVE ROSE BONNET (Illus. No. 4)

A BLACK AND YELLOW HAT

THIS hat (Illustration No. 4), which is of black Neopolitan braid, is a veritable platter shape. From the back, about two inches from the edge of this brim, comes a soft fold of yellow crepe which is drawn to the front, knotted just there and has standing up from the knot two small reflow roses. At the back are loops of the crope and a great mass of yel-low roses, while from studer the crown come long broad black velvet ties.

WHAT IS CERTAIN TO BE

A LTHOUGH just at first so many of the bonnets and bats seem elaborate, it is ertain that simpler and plainer styles will be restain that simpler and plainer styles will be shown a little later on, and they are ofteness what you and I want. Small straw bonnets not unlike the old-fushioned cottage shape will be worn, and a simple ribbon or flower trins-ming is all that they require. Although heavy reiling is shown the lighter veils will be used, especially with bonnets, add row just remem-ber this, the summer is long and sunshiny, and so don't be in too much of a harry to get a bonnet that will grow thresome and faded long before the golden days are over.

SILKS

and SILK Goods

The finest and most complete catalogue of Silks and Silk Goods in the world, is that published by the large exclusive Silk House of Chas. A. Stevens & Bros., Chicago. It now takes an enormous edition of many hundred thousand copies to supply the demand each season. This Spring's edition will be ready to mail April 1st, and every lady interested in Dress Silks, Silk Waists, Silk Skirts, Silk Laces, Silk Parasols, Silk Veilings, Silk Ribbons, Silk Gauze Fans, Silk Handkerchiefs, Silk Hosiery, etc., etc., should send a postal card request at once and receive one, free, as soon as they are printed. Address, mentioning THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL,

CHAS. A. STEVENS & BROS. 111 STATE ST., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES' HOSIERY. SPECIAL!!

i.—Ladier Fine Brilliant Liste Thread Hoss, embreddered insteps in different patterns, guaranteed stainless, black boots, high crobred tops, plots, beliotrope, lemon, occupe, blue and rest, worth $1.25. Our price,
the court per pair,
—Ladier printed hose, guaranteed stainless, in various designs, including polika dots, crossents, horseshoes, etc., etc., worth by cents. Our price, & evols per pair
—Ladier brilliant liste hose, lithelien ribbed black tanisless boot with high extered tops, roch as pink, light blue, heliotrope, tille greet, lesson, cardinal and almost every desirable black, worth to cents. Our price, & cents per pair.

NEW HOLIDAY CATALOGUE

resigning thousands of hunderene lithelexions and Containing thousands of humboone liftsdestions and full description of thousands of articles that can be bought by mail, will be reads about March 1, and will be SENT FREE upon application to persons remote from the City. Apply sor. Always address BLOOMINGDALE BROG. Sewice the Secules. Bd Ave. and 59th Street, S. Y.

MAGIC CORSET, CLASP. OH! MY! WHAT A COMFORT.

Easier Opened WOMEN ٥ Tighter Lac BOON

UNHOCK TOP AND GOTTOM MAGIC BOES THE REST, HOCKS LIKE A COMMON CLASS

Can be opened without removing the clothing. After since using this clasp you will rever use any other. For sale by all leading retail dealers: but if your merchant does not keep them, send 25 cents in statings, and we will send you use by mail.and when you try it, tell all your friends about 2. Address.

THE MAGIC CORSET CLASP 441 Broadway, New York.

The New Shape in Hosiery.

The Most Durable. The Only Comfortable.

The toes are not distorted as by the old style stocking, and the big toe, having room enough, stays inside.
Sold by Benlers or by Mnil.
Men's: I pairs of medium extent; 2 pairs for cost ton; 7 pairs of Lisle, merlinor worsted, $1,00 Women's: Black cotion or Balbriague, 50c.
Hoution since shor, and whether man's or woman's.
Hindrated Backlet on application.

WAUKENHOSE COMPANY, 76 Chausey Street, Boston, Mass.

INFANTS GERTRI DE PATTERNS, BOS stars in Bress Return. Outlits mark-up cheaper by this method than any other. Material-for complete outfl of 20 pleases siz. Send 2 cents for samples and entalogue. H. J. SPRACC & & Co., Chimago SHOPPING Deliver filled. Degrees plade without the property and chester. Store Likeling specialists without the present store and chester. Store Likeling specialists stored to the complete stored to the chester.

A PRETTY VIOLET HAT (Illus, No. 2)

THE SMALL BELONGINGS OF DRESS

By Isabel A. Mallon

MRS. MALLON will be glad to answer any question about woman's wear which may be sent to her by Journal readers. She asks, however, that she be permitted to inswer through this Department in the Journac; though, if stamps are inclosed, she will reply by mail. Address all letters to Mrs. Mallon, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

ITH the early spring days comes the desire to go away for a little change. And the little visit from one house to another, is highly recommended by all doctors to the women of nervous organization, who have had a busy winter of it. Of course, if one can go some distance of it. winter of it. Of course, if one can go some dis-tance away from bome, it will be so much the better, for then the absolute change of air, scenery, people and food is obtained. The first question asked after the resolution is made to go away is, "What shall I travel in?" Now, a gentlewoman wants to look well when she is traveling, but she thoroughly under-stands that her fine clothing and her jewels are intended for other surroundings than those afforded by the car, no matter how sumptuous are intended for other surroundings than those afforded by the car, no matter how sumptions they may be. First of all, I do not advise traveling in a new gown, for the bodice will tire one, and the consciousness of a new frock does not tend to make one seat one's self comfortably. A cloth gown that has been worn and which may be feesboard up a spitable included. may be freshened up, a suitable jacket, and a hat or bounet that may be removed, if the journey is a long one, are desirable. A very plain black silk gown also makes a comfort-able traveling dress, and if the bodice worn with this should be more elaborately trimmed with this should be more elaborately frimmed than one would wish for wear upon the train, then a blouse, a fitted one, either of cashmere or surah silk, is in order. For a long or a short journey it is always desirable that the traveler should be as quiet in her appearance as she is in her manners, but the quietness need not suggest dowdiness.

THE maid of honor at an Easter wedding will wear a gown of white surah trimmed with three narrow ruffles of yellow chiffon. The bodice of the dress is round, and over it will be a Marie Antoinette fichu of yellow chiffon, while on the head will be a large hat of Leghorn trimmed with yellow chiffon and white roses. The shoes are of soft yellow kid, the stockings of yellow silk and the long gloves of yellow undressed kid. This is to typify that it is really an Easter wedding, because the jonquils and daffodils, though stately ladies of the field, come first to tell that the spring days are at hand.

THE plain skirt, round waist, broad sash and full sleeves affected by the young woman who is slender and who likes to dress in a picturesque manner, will be the design used for the lovely mulls that have on their clear white ground huge yellow or pink chrysanthemums that look as if they might have been taken out of old chests where they were treasured by the ladies of long ago.

HANCY combs for the hair are growing smaller and narrower. Those of gold are noted with emeralds, sapphires or diamonds set in them; these, of course, are only intended for evening wear.

A VERY feminine chatelaine is an elaborated rately carved silver case which holds a tiny pair of scissors, quite sharp enough to cut even the mystic thread held by the Three Fates. If one of these should be sent as an Easter gift, the penny returned for it can be made a thing of beauty by submitting it to the skillful jeweler, who after covering it with gold will set upon it a tiny diamond, ruby or sapphire, the setting being done in the fashion known as "thrown," that is, it seems to have accidently lighted just where it is. have accidently lighted just where it is.

THE American bride, imitating ber French sister, has her wedding gown made high in the throat and long in the sleeves, and she carries, instead of a bouquet, a white kid pray-er-book elaborately mounted in silver.

THE material which used to be known 1 some years ago as "grass cloth," and which is a sheer, durable linen, is again shown, but this time it has stripes of bright plaid ribbon woven into it; a suitable quantity of plain cloth accompanies the more elaborate material, and much individual taste is shown in their

THE girl who is given over to wearing plain cloth skirts and jackets cut away in front, to show a linen shirt, is much exer-cised about these shirts. Those that are counted the most proper are made exactly like a man's—that is, they are open all the way down the front, small white enumeled buttons down the front, small white enameled nutions being used to fissen them, and the cuffs and collars are on the shirt proper. Of course, these shirts have to be made to order, else the collar will not fit. Plain snameled sleeve links are worn, and the pin stuck in the silk scarf must have oddity to recommend it rather than

THE daintiest suchets for the bureau draw-ers are those made of butcher's linen hemstitched at each end and having eyelets through which ribbon may be drawn and tied. In these cases are slipped the cotton wad full of layender, orris, violet or whatever may be your favorite perfume; at the least sign of be-ing soiled the slips may be taken off and visit the laundry, from which they will return looking just as good as new.

IT would seem as if all the town was sud-denly struck with the beauty of the pink of perfection. Pink bonnets, trimmings, flowers and bits of pink color are seen every-where, and it is more than likely that the rosy where, and it is more than likely that the rosy shade will have a special vogue given it dur-ing the summer. The shade of pink pre-ferred is the real rose Du Barri, the most deli-cate of tints. It combines very effectively with pale green, and a most charming large hat is elaborately trimmed with pale grasses and velvet roses of the proper pink shade.

THE black broadcloth coat with a long A swallow-tail back and the regulation short cut front is seen again this season, but instead of a flat waisteest a blouse one of soft surah takes its place. Only a woman whose figure is extremely good can wear a coat like this, and it is, by the by, named after the Princess May.

THE clear, pale, decidedly trying blues of this season are called Saxon. Entire gowns of them are only becoming to those women blessed with rosy cheeks and dark hair; however, they are very smart when combined with black, and their use in this way will be greater than will their development into entire garments.

I T may be doubted if a mustard plaster canparel, yet after all one is put on. A very sad experience has made me want to give my knowledge in regard to these plasters to the world at large. It is this: never mix anything except the white of an egg with the mustard in making your plaster. One like this will, while it does its duty, not even draw the bloom from a peach, and so the skin is left unbroken and unburned while all the heating influence is gained.

BODICES cut out round or pointed are very dainty when they have a frill finish of chiffon or fine lace. The effect of either is softening to the neck. This arrangement reculls the old-fashioned pictures of the Queen of England when she was a young and happy bride.

A WELL-shaped head is shown by a very simple arrangement of the hair. At the back it is taken up loosely, and the knot formed of three or four soft loops. The front hair is parted and waved slightly, and about it is a fillet of white ribbon tied in a tiny bow low on one side of the hair.

VERY dainty fan to give to a bride is of A white gause with pearl mounts; the gause is thickly studded with silver sequins and has, wrought out very delicately, a pattern of marguerites. Of course, this present is particularly applicable if the bride's name should be Margaret, Marguerite or Daisy.

THE newest bracelet is made of a curb chain of gold with a fleur de lis wrought in some precious stones, and so placed that it will come just on top of the wrist.

THE general liking for leaves the color of those that belong to the lily of the val-ley has made that flower very popular both for bonnets and for hats. How many people know that in some parts of England, and also in Germany, it is still called by its old name, which is "May bell."

DEOPLE who find slik, lawn or cotton night-gowns too thin should be satisfied nowadays, for very beautiful ones are noted made of white stockinette; the decoration used is torchon lace; an elaborate collar of it is about the neck, while a dainty ribbon bow fastens it just in front. The monogram is worked in white, high up on the left side, and a belt of torchon confines the front. The riba belt of torchon confines the front. The rib-bon running through it does actual duty by drawing it in to fit and being tied in long loops and ends,

THE stiff round square hat with its dis-mond or paste buckle just in front, is made to look stiffer by having two black wings placed just against the back in the most formal manner possible.

IN wearing a veil just remember to draw it up softly so that it will wrinkle a little over the face, tending not only to give the half revealing effect, but also to conceal any little imperfection of the skin.

L INEN collars and cuffs bid fair to be great-Is an equal to be greatly in vegue during the coming season.

The collars that turn over with, of course, the cuffs to match, and the high collar with its straight cuffs are equally fashionable, the question involved merely being which is most becoming.

THE very high glasses, that is those that stand three feet, and are shaped like the old-fashioned champagne glasses, narrow at the bottom and widening at the top, are called "chrysanthemum glasses" because they are specially suited for the long-stemmed chrysspecially suited for the long-atemmed chrys-unthenums. Of course, any other long-stemmed flower may be placed in them, but they are given this name. They are shown in clear white, pale pink, pale blue, and very faint preen glass and make a most desirable acquisition to a woman's dainty dressing table.

Important Store News!

NO catalogue of the store's first spring goods this season! Perhaps you won't be sorry to learn, however, that instead of spending the usual $4,000 for the 90-page spring catalogue, we've determined to adopt a new idea, namely, to distribute said $4,000 among the store's mail order customers by placing the following list of things at very much below customary prices. We will also prepay postage on any of them that the Post-office will deliver.

Note.—Out-of-town orders only will be filled at these prices:

New Black ground Moiré Antique with Colored Satin Stripe, Changeable Taffetas and Surah Silks, full line of colors,
Figured India Silks, 300 designs, 24 inches wide,
New Wash Silks, full line of colored stripes,
Spring Bird's Eye Maple Cloths, choicest tints, 35 inches wide, Cheviot Homespuns, pure wool, Spring colors, 38 inches wide, Scotch Tweeds, Chevron and Cable Cord Wenves, 36 inches wide, Saxony Suitings, mixtures and solid colors, 36 inches wide,
Saxony Suitings, mixtures and solid colors, 36 inches wide,
Cashmere Henricitas, 38 inches wide, newest shades,
An Easter Special—Ladies' 7-Hook Kid Glove, colors only Ladies' Hand-embroidered Hemstitched Handkerchief, 25c. quality,
New Patterns in printed India Dimities, Printed Linen Lawns, this sesson's importations, Imported Silk and Wool Stripe Flannels, sultings and shirtings, Ladies' Cotton-ribbed Vests, low neck and no sleeves. Ecru only.
All sizes, 39c. quality. Yours $2 50 to $4 00 yard 1 00 to 2 00 " 49c, to 2 25 " 60c. 98c. pair 30c. yard 25c. 49c. " All sizes, 39c. quality, Ladies' Fine Cotton-ribbed Vests, high neck and no sleeves. Ecru 3 for $1 00 Ladies' Fine Cotton-ribbed Vests, high neck and no sleeves. Ecru only. All sizes.

Ladies' Cotton-ribbed Vests, high neck, long sleeves, Drawers to match.
Ecru only.
Ladies' Gauze Vests, high neck, no sleeves and high neck and short sleeves. All sizes.

Ladies' Paris Kid Hand-turn Patent Tip and Stay Oxford Ties, $3.50 quality
Ladies' Bright Dongola Button Boots, 5 Lasts, Opern, Common Sense, Waukenphast, London Last and Spanish, hand-sewed, $4.50 quality, Turkish Toweling Dressing Sneque, pink, blue, gray and tan stripes, Ribbon Tie to match, 36 to 42 bust, Children's Fine Lawn Short Dress. Size, 1 to 3 years. Waist of tucks and beading, embroidered collar and edged cuffs, Yeddo Crèpe, in delicate shades of pink, blue, heliotrope, corn and black,
Novelty Zephyrs, in lace effects, woren designs and silk brocades,
Soc. to 96c, yard
Standard Domestic Gingham, including "Toile du Nord,"
Our own Importation of Laces, Point de Russe, Point de Ireland and Point de Venise, in black, white, cream, ivory, beige and ècru; at very low prices. Per yard, according to width, from Fine Cut Jet Edging, Gimp, Gailoons and Ornaments, Parisian Novelties, Veilings in every imaginable creation and color. 200 styles, all new,
Moiré Ribbon, colors and black, No. 2, 8c.; No. 3, 10c.; No. 5, 13c.; No. 7, 17c.; No. 9, 20c.;
No. 12, 25c.; No. 16, 31c.; No. 22, 40c.; No. 30, 48c. yard.

In making the above exceptionally generous offer we feel

In making the above exceptionally generous offer we feel whatever else you may require for home or personal use (from our 67 different departments and $1,500,000 stock) you will order from us. Prices will be the same as if you stood personally at the store's counters!

Samples and information sent on application

BROOKLYN, N.Y. WECHSIER AND ABRAHAM. BROOKLYN, N.Y.

Spring Jackets, Coats and Dresses

You need to in no doubt as to what kind of Spring Jacket or Wrap to purchase if you have our new spring catalogue and samples before you. Jackets, $4.50 up; three-quarter length Jackets, $4.50 up; Reefers, $4.50 up; Long Capes, $4.50 up; Usters, $6.50 up; Box Costs, $6.25 up; also many other styles and higher qualities, all libratrated in our catalogue. We make every garment to order, thus insorting a perfect it, and pay all express charges.

We will mail you our catalogue, together with a tape measure, new measurement diagram and a full assectment of samples of the coths from which we make the garments to select from, on receipt of four cents postage. Among our samples are Chevists, Reidford Chotia, Chay Diagonals, Devonshires, Corkscrews, Rasket-cloths, Kerseys, Broadcolubs and all the Rashonable cloths in the newest spring shades. You may select any style garment you wish, and we make it to order for you from any of our cloths. We also sell cloth by the yard, or will make my Jacket or Wrap for you from your way material.

We have opened a department for making sells and dresses from Indies' own material only and from designs selected from any fashion plate or magazine. Lastes residing in or near New York City should visit our salestroom.

THE NATIONAL CLOAK COMPANY,

21 Wooster St., New York City.

MOTHERS Health Corset, Superior to all by all Shape Leading Bust. Retailers. Mailed Free on receipt of pri LADIES MISSES, CHILDREN Ferris Bros. Marshall Field & Co. L Broadway, NEW YORK. CHICAGO, Windows Western Agents,

SOME PRETTY JACKETS FOR SPRING

By Isabel A. Mallon

S our climate is not one always adapted to going about in one's figure, that is, without an outside wrap, the spring days, and indeed those of the early summer, demand a pretty closk or given to the jacket, everyone a preference seems given to the jacket, either made with the extreme simplicity liked by the tailor, or the claboration fancied by the mediate, for everywhere are the smart-looking jackets seen. All the light shades of biscuit, mode, steel blue, gray, navy, and, of course, black, are chosen in the smooth surfaced cloths, while a preference is shown for black and blue in the rough serges. Heavy-weight camel's hair is made up in close-fitting, very plain jackets for wear on really cold days, as well as among the mountains.

THE DESIGNS PREFERRED

T.IE shapes most funcied are those having the long coat effect, those showing the mannish waistcoat, and the Wattean, coat with its loose back and semi-fitting front. For general wear the double-breasted reefer jacket general wear the double-breasted reefer jacket is liked, although this season it is somewhat longer than it was last year, and upon it are enormous white pearl buttons that are, by the way, much more conspicuous than the gilt ones, and not as pretty. The Louis Quinze coat is being developed in heavy black silk with lace trimmings; it is, of course, a very dressy coat, and, if one wished a coat that one might look much dressed in, it is most to be commended, but it cannot be said of it that it has the januty nir, or the look of warmth which should be attributes of the spring jacket proper. I cannot commend it to young women, as it has an air of dignity suitable to proper. I cannot commend it to young women, as it has an air of dignity suitable to older women. A facket may be all that one desires and yet quite simple, the money spent being on the cloth, its cut and its lit.

A JAUNTY SPRING JACKET (Illus. No. 1)

TRIMMINGS AND LININGS

TRIMMINGS AND LININGS

Flancy braids are used upon light cloth coats, but about trimmings it must be said that they are not necessary to give to the jacket an air of style, because every design demands certain decorations, and a number of them demand that most effective of all, absolute simplicity. Coats covered with braiding are no longer in style, but a fine braiding are no longer in style, but a fine braiding are no longer in style, but a fine braiding are no longer in style, but a fine braiding are no longer in style, but a fine braiding are no longer in style, but a fine braiding are no longer in style, but a fine braiding are no longer in style, but a fine braiding are no longer in style, but a fine braiding are no longer in style, but a fine braiding are not longer and the pocket laps, is frequently noticed. On silk coats, jet, steel and lace are used with great profusion; lace skirs, finey sleeves, jabots and cravattes of French lace of guipure and of and cravattes of French lace, of guipure and of a fine quality of point desprit are noted on coats that have the especial approbation of famous dressmakers.

The silk coats are almost invariably lines with a thin quality of black silk, but the cloth coats show linings of glace silk in such combinations as blue and brown, red and blue, lavender and green and lavender and blue.
Bright plaids are liked for the reefer or any plain style of jacket, though plain red, blue, or silk matching the cloth in color is also counted good style.

A VERY JAUNTY JACKET

VERY jaunty Jacket (Illustration No. 1), A VERY jaunty jacket (Illustration No.1), that is at once very stylish and very simple, is here shown. The material used is dark blue cloth, as smooth as possible. It is close-fitting, and has quite a deep added skirt of the same material. In front it turns away in mascalline fashion and displays a waistcost of white cloth with small blue figures upon it. This is closed all the way down the front, and extends to a short distance below the unist line, with bullet buttons of white pearl. The edges of the revers and of the entire coat are defined with a very fine blue sitk cont. The high collar is of the same material as the waistcost; the sleeves are mixed high on waistcost; the sleeves are mised high on the shoulders, shape into the arms, and have as a finish a fold of material like the waistcost, which shows from just under at the wrist. The hat worn with this is a squarecrowned walking one of dark blue straw with a band of white about it, and a paste buckle just in front. In black cloth with a waistcost of starlet and black, in gray with a fancy waistcost of any sort, this cost would be pretty, but as blue is greatly in vogue, the cost pictured shows a combination that will receive most favor. most favor.

THE WATTEAU COAT

THE WATTEAU COAT

WHILE the Watteau has an air of novelty, still it must be confessed that it is neither very rich nor very natty-looking, and then, too, it is strongly suggestive of a dressing-socque. Developed in very handsome brocade with an elaborate lace decoration in front, there is an odd air about these coals that is presty, if they are only seen once or twice, but they are a style of which one tires very soon I do not think that you or I, my dear general woman, will be foolish enough to spend our money on a cost that is merely the caprice of the moment, and which ought not to be possessed by ought not to be possessed by any woman except by the one who, to encourage business and put money in circulation, will have eight or ten coats in her wardrobe. Just re-member that the Wattean coat, unless it is developed in very rich materials, is uny-thing but pretty. And re-member, too, that I credit you with having better sense than to buy a cout of that style made up in cheap stuffs.

THE SILK AND LACE COAT

A LTHOUGH coats of silk A and lace were much worn last season, still they bid fair to have a decided rogue given to them this year. They look so extremely well over a plain silk or lace skirt that the liking for them is easily understood. Very often ribbons are combined with ribbons are combined with the lace, and then an extremely elaborate effect is achieved. At illustration

No. 2 is shown a jacket of this kind. The coat proper is of black silk, and fits the figure closely, both back and front. The added skirt is of point d'esprit lace, quite half a yard deep, and having set upon it three rows of inch wide gros grain ribbon, so that the effect of insertion and ribbon is given. The slevers are of plain black silk, finished with flaring cuffs edged with lace and having above them deep caps of lace like that of the coat skirt decorated in the same way with ribbon, and gathered high on the shoulders to form epaniettes. The collar is a high one of the silk, covered with jet, and just in front, us a finish, is a deep square cravaite of lace. The hornet is a small lace one, decorated with a cluster of crimson roses and tied under the cluster of crimson roses and tied under the chiu with black ribbons. Freuch women, in place of the black silk, have black velvet, but they are much more willing to suffer to be leastiful than are their sisters of any other tration, and velvet is rather warm looking for the summer days.

A VERY SIMPLE JACKET

JACKET whose beauty is in its sim-plicity is pictured in fillustration No. It is made of bisemit-colored cloth, is quite long, fits close-ly in the back and is y it the care and is semi-loose in the front. It is outlined by a double stitching done in silk a shade darker. The closing is a little to one side, and buttons and for and buttons used for this purpose are round, flat, white pearl ones. There are two long slit packets finished with stitch-ing like that on the edge of the coat. The skeyes are high on the shoulder, assume the ordinary cost shape and have their cutts finished with cutts finished with the stitching. The collur is a high one, and relied over as shown. The lining is of glace silk in lavender and green. The list worn with this is a flaring one of bismit collured. of bismit-colored straw decorated with brown relyet and yellow roses. Of course, such a cont could be developed In any material desired, and it is a style of which one will not tire soon. In black serge, broad cloth, serge, around loth, cames shair, or whatover may be your SIMPLE AND YET S' favorite material, it will look well. If it were wished, a velvet collar could take the place of the plain cloth one, but as the keynote of the garment is simplicity, that seems like on unnecessary decoration. Indeed, it is no decoration, for a trimming without apparent use is not decorative.

SIMPLE AND YET STYLISH (Illus. No. 3)

JUST A WORD OR TWO

In choosing the material for your cost, just remember that it must be becoming not only in color, but also in material. A very smart plaid material, or a close check may be suitable for your friend who is tall and slender, but on you, who are short and plump, it will have the effect of making you appear at least an inch shorter, consequently you want to avoid that. On stout women, generally, a smooth, plain cloth is most desirable, but I do not advise either the light greys, the biscuits, or the wood colors, for they seem to add to the flesh, take away from the beight, and be overything but what they should be, becoming. Another thing that the stout woman must beware of is the over-lapping seams and large buttons noted especially on the English box coats. ox coats.
The light cloths are most becoming to women who have dark hair and clear, rosy skin; they make pale women look sailow, and sallow women resemble a lemon. Here is another suggestion for the stont woman. Do not make the mistake of having too long a cost, else you will look as if you were all body and no legs. The slender girl will be wise if, in a smooth fitting cost, she has inserted a waistoost, for then she will apparently gain breadth, and the long, well-titting outline is not interfered with.

A DRESSY SILK AND LACE COAT (Illus. No. 2)

not interfered with.

For general wear, that is, for a cost that is to be put on and thrown down rather care-lessly, the sort of a coat that is supposed to lessly, the sort of a coat that is supposed to take care of itself, nothing is as much to be commended as heavy serge. Personally I can recommend the dark blue as standing no end of ill treatment and never recenting it. Of course, it does not grow shiny, and as long as it hasn't reached the ragged state the dust will come out of it at the slightest sort of brushing. Keep two brushes for your coat, a soft one and a stiff one. The first to be used on the velvet or silk collar and cuffs, the second on the coat proper. For the early spring when you are certain that you will not remove your coat when you go out, I would advise the keeping of an old the keeping of an old silk or satin bodies to be worn under it, for nothing so quickfor nothing so quick-ly makes shabby a pretty basque as the encasing it in a cost, whereas over the old silk it goes easily, one's basque is kept in good shape and condition to show at its best when the air is warm enough to permit the going out in one's figure, and so much has been gained. For the many recentions which come at Easter time these jackets may not be as orma-mental as the more dressy wrap, but for ordinary occasions they are exactly what the average woman needs. Do not needs. Do not make the mistake of getting coats that are too elaborate for the places you will wene them and the frocks with which they will be worn. Instead, choose a simple coat of good material that is well made and is well made and which will be becom-ing to you. Never baves cost too light; it may fit perfectly without requiring an effort to button it, and need not sug-gest to the looker-required for its uson that a shoe-horn was required for its as-samption. The coat that fits without wrinkling, or dragging, which does not pull at the seams, nor show great strain on the buttonholes, and yet which seems close fitting, is the one that is really the smart jacket.

"Baby Ruth"

Does not wear Silk Gloves yet, but it is safe to say that when she does, she will wear the best.

Do you wish to know which are the best, and why? The . "Kayser Patent Finger Tipped"

are the best, because with each pair you are given a GUARANTEE TICKET entitling you to another pair free of charge should the "TIPS" wear out before the gloves.

If you cannot get this glove from your dealer, notify the manufacturer, JULIUS KAYSER, New York, and he will see that you get them.

PRINTED BATISTE,

36 inches wide.

King Philip Mills.

Send two-cent stamp for samples of

Cambric, Lawns,

Nainsook and Batiste.

KING PHILIP MILLS,

85 Worth Street, New York, N. Y.

ORDERS EASILY FILLED BY MAIL.

Bedford Cords.

The fashionable printed Wash Dress Material for this season. We offer 12,000 yards-made exclusively for us-in handsome patterns. The goods are yard wide and excellent quality. Nine yards is enough for a dress pattern. Price,

15 cents per yard

This, with postage added, makes the entire cost of a dress, delivered through the mail to you, $1.50. Send for SAMPLES.

SHEPARD. NORWELL & CO. BOSTON, MASS.

CLEOPATRA MFG. CO.

59 West 22d St., N. Y. City The Cleopatra Corea and direlle is the only embodiment of grace, case and comfort ever law ended Endorsed by leading sectedy and professional ladies. For singers and regisper provis-the Girille is an indispensable acticle acticle
The Cornet especially adapted for stout ladies.
Marros our pares.

FREE, TO LADIES! A Leaflet, about stylish ways of using

FAIR & SQUARE, 67 Greene St., N.Y.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED. Any Lady Can new Learn to Out Perfect-Pitting Dressus. No de Ming a Chart or Sease age of the Chartest From McDewell Garatest From McDewell Garatest Francisco and Perfect Flying Garatest Garatest and Perfect Flying Garatest and Perfect Flying Garatest and Perfect Flying Garatest and From Sease and From Anti-Chartest From McDewell and Perfect Flying Garatest and From McDewell and Perfect Flow And Chartest From McDewell Chartest Flow McDewell Garatest Flow McDewell

Send III cents for copy of our elegant French Fastium books explaining how to cut latest style garment.

Very Special Offer of Embroidery Silks: remre fell length skeins Einhredery Sük, omer full length skeins Filoselle, omer full length skeins Osline Sük, omer full length skeins Osline Sük, GREAT BPECIAL OFFER.

$1.75 All the above sent on receipt of One Bollar. Ver can have asserted radors if you perser, or any cour you new desire. CLISTON STAMPING CO., Box ( 3, Irvington, New Jessey.

Ladies, Send Stamp for Primer.

1 do shopehic of all kinds. Nino years' experience; best reference. Nantonia NXVIII, tol Septice St., Picta Google

DOMESTIC HELPS AND CULINARY HINTS

Helpful Suggestions from Experienced Minds

A FEW SAVORY RECEIPTS

CONTRIBUTED BY SKILLED HOUSEWLYES

STABLE is given a bandful of good receipts of all sorts, selected from hundreds which have come to us. These receipts, grouped together, can be earnestly recommended as being in every way not only savory in eaker but delicious and satisfuctory in substance as factory in substance as well, and will repay those who try them.

DELICIOUS MORNING CHOCOLATE

PUT four ounces of chocolate, dissolved in a little hot water, into a saucepan with three cups water and two ounces sugar. Set over the fire. Beat yolks of two eggs to a foun in a cup of water and stir; then add a small teaspoonful of rose water, also one of orangeflower water. Let it remain on the fire several minutes to simmer but not boil; serve with toasted rusk or coffee cake.

GOOD COCOANUT SOUP

GRATE very finely one-quarter pound of the white of a fresh cooxanut, and let simmer gently for one hour in two quarts beef broth. Strain the liquid and thicken with one-harf cup ground rice. Season with a little salt, cayenne and mace. Just before serving add a cupful of thick cream.

ESCALOPED EGGS

FILL the egg dish with the whites beaten, make a hollow in the center, and put in the unbeaten yolk; scatter over the top a little salt and pepper, and lay a small piece of but-ter on the yolk. Bake about two minutes.

TO MAKE ASPIC JELLY

TO MAKE ASPIC JELLY

BOIL two onions, two small carrots, a few sprigs of paraley and a little solt in one pint of water; when done strain and stir in two dessertspoonfuls of beef extract, put back the liquor in a saucepan, and add one ounce of gelatine soaked in nearly one pint of water, boil up and let simmer for twenty minutes; strain through a jelly bag and pour into a mold to cool. Tarragon vinegar may be used for flavoring if liked.

PASTE FOR TOAST AND BROILED BIRDS

MIX equal parts of curry powder, powdered truffles, bread crumbs and browned flour, the yolk of one hard-boiled egg, grated rind of one-half a lomon, one tablespoonful Chili sauce, a little butter, and a testspoonful of lenson juice. Season with salt, cayenne pepper and entimeg to taste. Stir over a slow fire until quite brown and thick.

WHIPPED CREAM SAUCE

FOR any pudding, take one teacupful of sweet cream, whites of three eggs, three tablespoonfuls powdered sugar. Have the cream previously set on the ice to get chilled; whip the cream then, and return to a cool place. Beat the whites to a stiff foam, add the sugar, then the whipped cream, beating all together. This is very nice for fruit puddings or to serve with cake.

GLAZE FOR PIE-CRUST

To prevent any juicy neixture scaking into the cruse, best an egg well, and with a brush or bit of cloth wet the crust of the pie with the beaten egg just before you put in the pie mixture. It also gives gloss and beauty to biscuit, rusk and ginger-cake, by first adding a little sugar to the egg.

A DELICIOUS TARTARE SAUCE

ONE-HALF pint French mayonnaise, one-half cop best cider vinegar, one table-spoonfol capers chopped fine, six small cu-cumber pickles chopped fine, a little garlie or onions chopped fine. Mix all together.

RUSKS FLAVORED WITH ANISE

EiGHT ounces white sugar, six ounces seed, four ounces almonds. Mince almonds fine as possible without taking off the skins; mix them and the anise seed with the dry flour. Beat the eggs and sugar until light, then stir into the flour. Bake in long narrow molds; when a day old, slice and brown the slices on both sides in the oven.

A RECIPE FOR LEMON CHEESECAKE

BEAT to smoothness a quarter of a pound of good butter and one pound of granulated sugar; then add six eggs (tearing out the whites of two) and the grated rind of three lemons, with their juice. Put all into a pain over a moderate five and suit corasionally. Let it simmer until the sugar is dissolved and the mixture assumes the consistency of honey: then pour into pots or jars to cool. It may either be used immediately or covered for fature use, and will keep for any length of time. For the pastry make ordinary short or puff poste and bake in small patty pans, after-ward filling each with the chemecake.

RUSKS FOR THE MORNING TABLE

MIX together one pint of warm milk, one teaspoonful of salt, the beaten yolks of three eggs, three pints of flour, and one teachpful of good yeast. Best it well and set it to rise over night. In the morning cream half a pound of butter with three quarters of a pound of suft angar, add three eeg whites besten to a stiff firsth and half of a level traspoonful of soda dissolved in a tempoonful of boiling water. Mix into the dough thorough-ly with the hand, at the same time knewling in one pant of flour. Set it to rise again. Then mold into rolls, flatten out somewhat with the rolling pin, put in buttered pans and when light prick with fock and bake in quick oven,

SOME SUGGESTIONS ABOUT SOAP

BY ELISABETH ROBINSON SCOVIL

OAP is an indispensable article OAP is an indispensable article in the household, and so much is necessarily used that it is no inconsiderable item in the expenses of a large family. A good quality costs six or seven cents a pound, and this quantity does not go very far, particularly in the hands of servants. It is by stopping the little leaks, and cutting off the little waster in the domestic economy, that the ends.

wastes in the domestic economy, that the ends, which it is sometimes so hard to make neet, can be brought together. Lady Holland, in her memoir of her father, the celebrated Syd-ney Smith, tells an amusing anecdote. It happened nearly fifty years ago, but it has not happened nearly fifty years ago, but it has not yet lost its point.

"Have you never observed what a dislike servants have to anything cheap? They have saving their master's money. I tried this experiment with great success the other day. Finding we consumed a great deal of soap, I sat down in my thinking chair and took the soap question into consideration, and I found reason to suspect that we were using a very expensive article, when a much cheaper one would serve the purpose better. I ordered half a dozen pounds of both sorts, but took the precaution of changing the papers on which the prices were marked before giving them into the hands of Betty. "Well, Betty, which soap do you flad washes best?" 'Oh, please, sir, the dearest, in the blue paper; it makes a lather as well again as the other, "Well, Betty, you shall always have it, then.' And thus the unsuspecting Betty suved me some pounds a year, and washed the clothes better."

better.

Soap can be made at home by a trifling expenditure of time and labor, out of materials that otherwise would be thrown away, or sold below their real value. A much larger saving can thus be effected than was possible even to the ingenuity of the great wit by his manipulation of the wrappers in his Yorkstire kitchen. Fat, water, and an alkali are the only ingredients absolutely necessary. Others can often be added to improve the appearance of the soap, and some may slightly increase its efficiency, but there alone make an excellent compound for cleaning purposes. This simple soap is pleasant to use and does not roughen the hands.

Every particle of fat that is not fit to use in ple soap is pleasant to use and does not roughen the hands.

Reery particle of fat that is not fit to use in cooking about the cardeily saved. If raw, it can be tried out by putting it over the fire in a thick iron succepan, and stirring it frequently to prevent barning. When done, strain it into a clean jar. A little boiling water can be poured on the straps, and after boiling a few minutes set aside. When cold the cake of fat can be taken from the top and put in the jar. The remains of dripping, the fat skimmed from soop, or gravies, or any similar material, should be treated like the scraps. Stir frequently while it is boiling, and the impurities will shuk to the bottom, leaving a clean take of fat on top when it is cold. The contents of the jar should be often inspected in warm weather, and heated again, without water, if there are traces of mould or an unpleasant smell. Scap grease should be as pure and sweet as suct, or butter, used for cooking. Any good brand of concentrated potash can be used. Caustic sola is equally as good, and much cheaper, but it can usually be obtained only from wholesale druggists, or at a scap manufactory. Crude potash is said to be excellent, but of this the writer cannot speak from personal experience.

A large pot is very desimble, as the scap froths up at one stage of its manufacture, and is apt to boil over if in too small a vessel. A tin wash-boiler can be used, without injury to itself or its contents.

If, after a fair trial, the scap is liked, it will be warth while to have a wooden box lined to liself or its contents,

If, after a fair trial, the soap is liked, it will be worth while to have a wooden box lined with zine to run it in. Any enrenter can make it. One, eighteen luches long, twelve unches wide and six inches deep, inside measurement, will hold a batch of hard soap. The zine is neatly fitted to the bottom and sides, turned over the top and nailed on.

A GOOD HARD SOAP

HIVE pounds of grease, three gallons of soft, hot water, one pound of concen-rated potash. Let these boil together for five or six hours, adding water as it boils away to keep up the original quantity. When done it is a dark yellowish-brown, clear like jelly, almost transparent. If the tongue is touched to it the taste is smooth and not unpleasant; it is sharp and acrid if not sufficiently holled. It should be frequently stirred white boiling. Poor it into the sipe-lined box, and leave it to harden. In twenty-four hours it will be a solid mass of nearly white soan. Turn it out on a table and cut it in thin bars lengthwise. It it is desired it can then be divided into squares. If this cannot be bad a knife, heated in boiling water, will answer the purpose.

SOFT SOAP FOR THE LAUNDRY

TWO pounds of caustic soda, ten pounds of A grease, eighteen gallons of water. The souls and grease may be boiled with one-third of the water, precisely as in the preceding re-cipe. When done, pour it into a half barrel, or any large receptable, and add twelve gallous of botling water. Sir until thoroughly blended, and it will be when cold, a soft jedly-like paste, very pleasant to use for many purposes, and particularly useful in the

In using any of these receipts, if the grease floats and is not absorbed, the alkali used is too weak, and more must be added.

GOOD RULES FOR THE SERVANT

E punctual. Keep your brooms, brushes, dusters, pots, kettles-and pons clean and sweet.

and pais clean and sweet.

Obey your mistress in every particular; go to her when you are in doubt.

If your fellow servants shirk their duties, and their doing so affects your work, take the first opportunity you have of explaining this to your mistress, being careful not to exaggerate.

Do not do rough work while wearing a whate apron. Have large gingbars aprons for such purposes, and keep your white one hanging where it can easily be getten at.

Never give away anything that belongs to your mistress without first obtaining her permission.

naission.

If you wish to invite a friend to ent with you, first obtain permission.

During the day, when opportunity offers, devote a little time to the care of your bedroom; see that it is kept well nired.

Do not take hold of the pots and pans with your apron; it is a dirty and dangerous habit.

If you break anything tell your mistress at once.

Let your working dresses be made of ma-terial that will wash.

Retire early; rise early. Be truthful.

He truthful.

If you have a lover, confide in your mistress and obtain her permission to have him spend his evenings with you; do not meet him on the street, or try to "smuggle" him into the Ritchen.

Be careful of all that is entrusted to you while in service; when the day comes for you to leave it for a home of your own, you will find any lessons of economy and neutroes that you may have learned very valuable, and any good habit that you may have formed very helpful.

GOOD RULES FOR THE MISTRESS

HEN engaging a servant be careful to explain ber work to her, and let her understand that the work must be done in your way and not in the way of any former mistress she may have had, and this explanation must be unde so that it shall not reflect upon the routine of any other household.

Try and arrange the housework so that each servant may have an opportunity to attend where on Sunday.

When your servents do well encourage them to do better by a few words of praise.

Do not allow them to have visitors until after certain hours in the evening.

Give your orders for the day to the cook as early in the morning as possible.

Insist upon being informed when anything is become less.

Insist upon being informed when anything is broken or lost.

See that the chambersonid wears & clean apron while making the beds, and that she knocks at the bedroom doors before entering. Order the maid who opens the door not to leave visitors standing in the hall, nor to give parcels to strangers without previous instruction.

When you reprove, do so firmly and decidedly.

Only allow your rules to be broken once;
let dismissal, with customary notice, follow
the second offence.

the second offence.
Retain your temper under all circumstances.
Insist upon the punctuality of the family as well as upon the punctuality of the cook.

Be kind to your servants when they are ill, and thoughtful of them always; in nine cases out of ten the considerate mistress will be rewarded by faithful service.

Pay your servants' wages regularly. Do not allow them to go out without first obtaining your permission.

WOMAN'S BAKING COMPANY

Six weeks ago we offered 2000 shares of our Capital Stock at par, $25 per share, and now less than 500 shares remain unsold.

If we only make one-half a cent a loaf on bread and 1 cent a pie on pies, with 25 bakeries, averaging 3000 leaves of bread and 1000 pies daily, our annual profits will be $183,000, which will pay a dividend of $18.55 on each share of stock.

An ordinary bakery in this city, with a capital of $55,000, paid a dividend last year amounting to $20,000, and its stock has advanced ever 700 per cent. above par.

We own the right to equip as many bakeries as we may desire with the only patented machinery that successfully kneeds dough and separates it into boxes of bread.

The actual cost of labor in monutacturing one barrel of fixer into bread without this machinery is $2.50, and the actual cost with this machinery is 50 cents. It will thus readily be seen that we have a MONOPOLY wherever we see fit to openie.

STOCK SOLD ONLY TO WOMEN.

Absolutely Non-assessable, and there is no liability beyond amount invested. Price, $25 per share, payable, if desired, in monthly instalments of $2.50 per share.

Send a deposit, no matter how small, to show us you are in carnest, say how many shares you would like, and we will reserve them until you have time to fully investigate or arrange your money matters.

Send for our paraphlet. It contains full information, and a portrait and biographical sketch of each of our officers. Do not delay, as stock is selling fast.

Mrs. Louise Rockwood Warener, (of the Illinois Industrial School for Girls), President.
Mrs. Louise Rockwood Warener, (of the Illinois Industrial School for Girls), President.
Mrs. Lavia Rock Rearter, the well-known Vesaliss), Vice President.
Mrs. Mas. Mary A. Woodernord, Deer's of the World W. C. T. U., Vice-President.
Mrs. Carolinus A. Hullino, (President Wocking Woman's Improvement Association), Secretary.
Mrs. R. A. Kardons, (Secretary Woman's Lecture Bereau, W. C. T. U.), Treasurer.
Mrs. Prayers E. Owyces, (Publisher of the "Owen Chek Rook"), Auditor.
Mrs. Phayers E. Owyces, (Publisher of the "Owen Chek Rook"), Auditor.
Mrs. Phayers E. Owyces, (Publisher of the "Owen Chek Rook"), Auditor.
Mrs. Checks and Money Orders Psyable to

THE WOMAN'S BAKING COMPANY, 161 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

THE "FERRIS" FAMOUS HAMS

WHEN THE WINTER BRABON HAS PROGRESSED THUS PAR, POULTRY AND PRINK MEATS LONE A LITTLE OF THEIR SPECIAL ATTRACTION, AND THE ENTERPRISHOO BOOFFEEFFRE IS LOOKING OFT FOR HOME PLEASING VARIETY.

FOR A WINTER DUNKER, SAY ONCE A WEEK, A DE-IJCHORS "PERRIS" HAW ROASTED WILL PROVIDE A ROST TEMPTING "PIECE ON RESISTANCE."

INSIST THAT YOUR GROCER SHALL PURNISH YOU A PLUMP, ROUND JOENT, FRESH PROX OTH CAPACIDES SNOKEHOUSES, WEIGHING 13 POUNDS ON MORE, HAVE IT A LITTLE PAY ALSO, IF YOU WOULD FIND IT TEN-DER AND JUICY, WITH OUR COMPLINENTS

TO THE COOK:

let us suggest how it should be handled:

With a very sharp knife shave off cleanly the hardened surface from the face and but of the ham. Fut it over the fire in cold water and let it come to a moderate holl and keep it steadily at this point. A ham weighing 13 pounds will need to bell 5 hours. Many cooks serve ham underdone.

Remove the skin, which will rendily peel off when bolled as directed. Have rendy some dried bread or crackers of which roll fine and sift a teacup full. Break in two eggs and stir well with one tem-poonful of sugar. Use a little water if the eggs do not sufficiently moisten it. Spread this evenly over the fat and dress with pepper and opices. Put the ham in a pan with a wire bottom, or, if that be not at hand, block up the ham so that the flesh shall not rest on the pan. Have the even hot and send the ham to the table as soon as it is browned. In carving, cut in very thin slices,

PARK & TILFORD, And all Leading Grocers have our beand.

PERFECTION START TEXT, lossy betteren, Cabre removed without breating. Steedy paring business for good across. Sumply Set, Mr. Executations Mrs. Co., Bath, N.Y.

Makes an every-day convenience of an Contains No Alcoho old-time luxury. PURE and wholesome. Prepared with scrupulous care. Highest award at all Pure Food Expositions. Each package makes two large pies. Avoid imitations—always insist on having the None Such brand.

If your groom does not keep it, send acc. (or stamps) for fell size package by mail, prepaid.

MERRELL & SOULE, Syracuse, N. Y.

es puckage with every purcha HAS AN ANNUAL SALE OF 3,000 TONS. Coffee, Spices and Extracts direct from Importers to Consumers. For 16 years we have been offering Fremiums to Clabs and large buyers of Dinner. Ten and Toller Sets, Silver Ware, Table Linen. Lace Curmius, etc., of a see one experience, and bought for Cash direct from mainfacturers. Our fully Unstanted 136-page Catalogue will interwill be pleased to mail YOU one upon the address.

LONDON TEA CO., S11 Wash. St., Boston

Digitized by Google

MISS PARLOA will at all times be glad, so far as she can, to answer in this Department all general domestic questions sent by her readers. Address all letters to Miss Maria Parloa, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Cooking receipts are not given in this Department, hence do not ask that they be printed, and do not send manuscripts of that nature to MISS PARLOA.

ARE floors of some kind, with the addi-tion of rugs, are more and more taking the place of carpets. This means a sweeter and more healthful house, and one less hard to care for. It is true a bare floor will show all the dust and list, which is not the case with a woolen carpet; with a woolen carpet; but the labor of wiping up the dast is very light, a child's strength and skill being equal to the task. A knowledge of the best methods of caring for such floors is, therefore, quite essential. Many beautiful floors are ruined through ignorance; painted floors are the least theoriful, but are the easiest to care for. Next to these come floors that are stained and varnished. When the wood is stained and varnished it gives a soft, handsome floor, but the most beautiful of all are those made of the natural woods, and polished. natural woods, and polished.

CARE OF PAINTED FLOORS

CARE OF PAINTED FLOORS

SWEEP the doors with a hair brush. After taking up the dirt, pin a large piece of old fiannel, or Canton fiannel, on the brush, and go over the floor again, thus removing every trace of dust. If there be any spots, wise with a damp cloth, and then rub with a dry cloth until perfectly dry. Always keep water away from a painted floor. If well painted and varnished, a floor thus cared for will keep bright and handsome for many years. A floor that has been stained, and then varnished, requires about the same kind of care as if painted. You must, however, be very careful not to spill liquids upon it, as it spots more readily than the painted wood.

STAINED AND NATURAL-WOOD FLOORS

WHEN a floor is polished with wax, or some of the many preparations that contain a large proportion of wax, it is soft and beautiful; but the work of caring for it is much more laborious than when the wood is painted, or stained and varnished. If the floor be light, all stains show. A drop of clear water, if allowed to remain on the floor, will make a mark, while water dripping from an umbrella, if not wiped up quickly, will leave a black stain; therefore, a light pointed floor is not a good kind for a vestibule. A polished floor scratches easily. All the furniture must have thick pieces of felt pasted under the legs; no castors can be used on these polished surfaces. A long-handled, weighted polishing brush is necessary for the proper care of these floors. Sometimes a dark mark will appear on a light surface, which neither the dry or damp cloth will remove. In that case wet the spot with turpentine and rub until the mark disappears. The turpentine will remove the polish, so that it will be necessary to rub a little fresh polish on the spot, and then to rub until perfectly smooth. Once a week the floor should be rubbed with the polishing brush, all the spots being removed first, and polish being put on wherever needed.

With this kind of care a floor will require a WHEN a floor is polished with wax,

With this kind of cure a floor will require a thorough polishing only twice a year.

WHEN DOING THE WEEKLY POLISHING

REMOVE all but the beavy pieces of fur-niture from the room, and sweep and dust thoroughly. Now, wipe the floor with a clean flannel cloth, which has been wrung as dry as possible out of hot water. This is to re-move every particle of dust. If there be any spots that cannot be removed by the damp-loth, me the turnentine. Now rub policie on spots that cannot be removed by the damp cloth, use the turpentine. Now rub polish on any parts of the floor where it has worn off a good deal. Begin at one side of the room and polish with the brush (rubbing the length of the boards) until the surface is so smooth that the brush slips along with little effort. Be very particular to have the parts where the polish was put on thoroughly rubbed. The cloths and brushes should be perfectly clean, as is spoils the looks of a light floor if particles of dust be rubbed into it.

A good polish is made by enting a pound of beeswax into thin shavings, and mixing it in a tin pail with three pints of turpentine. Stir well, and in two days it will be ready for

Stir well, and in two days it will be ready for use; or, it may be melted over a kettle of hot water if one be in a burry. This makes a thick wax, which answers for a thorough polishing. More turpentine will give a thinner polish, which can be put on more readily, but which must be renewed often. For my own floors I use an excellent polishing wax which is made in Boston. It saves a great deal of trouble deal of trouble.

WHAT IS REQUIRED TWICE A YEAR

PREPARE the floor as for the weekly pol-PREPARE the floor as for the weekly polishing. Now, have the polish where it will be warm. Spread a little of it on a piece of flannel and rub on the floor, being careful not to leave anywhere an undissolved piece, no matter how small. When all the floor has been rubbed, fasten a piece of carpet on the polishing brash, and rub until the surface is smooth and glossy. Take off the carpet and go over the floor with the brush. It is well to have a man do this work if you can. If a regular polisher be too expensive, any man who is careful can do the work under the supervision of the housekeeper.

I have a man, who does odd jobs for me, do this semi-yearly polishing. I put the wax on the flannel, having two cloths, so that as soon as he has rubbed it off one cloth another is ready. This insures the wax being put on properly, and bastens the work.

Some time I will give directions for staining

Some time I will give directions for staining floors. I have found that the runner in which the stain is put on, and then polished, makes all the difference in the world in the beauty or the floor, so I wish to give more space than would be possible in this number, for the sub-ject is worthy of it.

FOR DUSTING FURNITURE

ONE of the best things for dusting highlypolished furniture is a piece of soft old flannel, such as the French flannel that comes for dress goods; next to this comes a soft, old slik handkerchief. Some flannels and silks are hard, and will scratch the furniture.

For all common dusting, cheese cloth is very useful and cheap, and it is well to have a duster of this material in every room. Pretty fancy bags for holding them, which can be hung in an inconspicuous place in the room, are convenient. Have dust cloths washed at least once a week.

A feather duster and two brushes somewhat

at least once a week.

A feather dister and two brushes somewhat resembling a painter's brushes, will complete the outfit. One of these brushes should be pointed, with bristles short and compact. This is for tufted farniture. The bristles of the other should be long and loose, as this is for dusting any kind of furniture, but is particularly for picture frames, curred woods and the open work in the various pieces of wooden furniture. These two brushes ought to last twenty years or more. Wash them occasionally in water in which a tablespoonful of household numonia has been added to a quart of tepol water. Rinse the brushes well, and hang up to dry.

For dusting the walls and ceiling, a long-handled feather duster is light and convenient; but as it is expensive, and will wear out quickly, It is not within the means of all housekeepers. it is not within the means of all housekeepers. Make two or three Canton flannel bags that will fit over a broom. Put four strings on each bag, that it may be tied on the broom. Brush the walls and ceilings with this, and when one bag is soiled, remove it, and put on a clean one. These are really better than the light feather dusters, because they hold the dirt and dust, instead of floating it off to another place of lodgment. Most housekeepers will not mind the extra labor of preparing and handling the broom when they realize that it saves them work in the end.

A subscriber asks what is the best thing with which to dust slik tapestry furniture? A feather or silk duster, if the furniture be plain; but if it be tuffed the pointed brush may some-but if it be tufted the pointed brush may some-times have to be used,

WHEN CREAM WILL WHIP WELL

LADY asks how cream can be whipped to increase it to three times its original volume?

A very thick cream will not increase much A very thick cream will not increase much in volume, and a very thin quality will have such large and fmil hubbles that they break as soon as touched. A cream so thick that it will hardly pour should be diluted with the same volume of milk; this will give good whipping cream. Such cream as is sold at the creamery as "beavy" cream will admit of this amount of milk. The thin cream, as a rule, has not body enough for whipping. If one have her own cream, particularly if from a Jersey cow, it will beapt to be too solid, and must be strained after being thinned. and must be strained after being thinned.

The cream should be very cold. Put it in a large bowl, which place in a pan and sur-round with ice water. It can be whipped with a whisk, or with any of the patent one beaters; but while the cream can be whipped to a solid, light mass, it will not increase in volume as with a whip churn, which is a tim cylinder with the bottom and about an inch of the sides perforated. A tin dasher inside is also perforated. In whipping the cream, tip the churn very slightly, and let the down stroke be heavy and the up stroke light and short. SOMETHING ABOUT AFTERNOON TEAS

SUBSCRIBER asks just how tea and waters are served from the little tea

A waters are served from the little teatables in the pariors; also, if it be proper to serve tea other than on your day "at home," Have your kettle of water boiling over the alcohol lamp. Pour boiling water into the teapot, and let stand for a few minutes; now pour out every drop of water, and put in the dry tea, and pour upon this tea the boiling water. Let it stand for a few minutes before serving. Have the guest's cup about two-thirds full, and offer cream and block sugar. Very thin bread-and-butter sandwiches, fancy crackers, lady-fingers, or any small dry cakes very thin bread-and-outer sandwiches, takes cruckers, lady-fingers, or any small dry cakes may be offered. As a rule, neither napkins nor plates are offered to a guest; so it is es-sential that the refreshment given with the tea should be only of the lightest sort, and of such a kind that the gloves shall not be soiled in handling it.

such a kind that the gloves shall not be soiled in handling it.

The tea can be made and poured in the kit-chen, the waitress passing it on a tray with the sugar and cream; but this is not nearly so social or pretty a way as making it yourself. If one have a large number of callers, it would be well to have a friend attend to the making and pouring of the ten—a young indy, if pos-sible. The best English breakfast tea should be used.

While the day at home is essentially the

be used.

While the day at home is essentially the proper day for serving the tea in this way, it is quite proper to offer to make a cup of tea for a tired friend who may come in at any time. Your little table can be the means of giving much pleasure to friends and yourself if you will make, instead of tea, a pot of chocolate or cocos on a cold evening when you have calls from friends.

REMOVING MILDEW FROM CLOTHES

WHAT shall we do with mildewed clother?" is a frequent question. Put about a tablespoonful of chloride of lines in a weoden pail, or earthen bowl, and add four quarts of cold water. Stir until all the lines is dissolved, using a wooden spoon or paddle. Now put the mildewed article into the water and work it about, using the spoon or paddle. Let the article stay in the water until all the mildew has disappeared, then throw it into a tob of cold water. Wash well in this, and then rinse in a second tob of cold water; finally, wring out and dry, if the rinsing he thorough the fabric will be uninjured. It is only white goods that can be treated in this way, as the chloride of lime removes colors, as well as mildew. Indeed, I have sometimes bleached a faded colored garment in this manner, with very satisfactory ment in this manner, with very satisfactory results. I have mapkins in use to-day that were freed from milder in this manner as many as eight years ago.

CLEANING WILLOW FURNITURE

SEVERAL readers ask how to clean willow furniture.

The simplest method is to wash it with warm water and castile soap, wiping it very dry with a soft cloth, and then drying thor-country in the sun, or near the fire. If one dry with a soft cloth, and then drying thor-oughly in the sun, or near the fire. If one care to bleach it, have a packing box large enough to hold the willow articles. After washing, put into the box without drying; then into the bottom of the box put a small dish of burning sulphur. Cover the box, and at the end of half an hour take out the article, which will be bleached. Willow and ration furniture is now stained, giving variety and doing away with the necessity for cleaning.

ANSWERS TO A VARIETY OF QUESTIONS

W RITES a lady, "Will you kindly tell me, through your columns, if you know of any book on the chemistry of cooking? Would it not prove a subject of interest to all for a talk in your department? It seems to me as if some knowledge of the reasons for doing these familiar things, for patting such and such ingredients together togive such and such effects, would give additional interest to the performance of them."

There are two excellent works on the sub-ject: "The Chemistry of Cooking and Clean-ing," by Mrs. Ellen H. Richards, of the Massa-chusetts Institute of Technology, and "The Chemistry of Cookery," by Mattien Williams. Perhaps it will be possible, in the near future, to carry out the suggestions in regard to the scientific reasons why certain things are to be done in household work.

A letter from a girl asks if it will be possible to have some dining-room doors painted, the old paint being so smooth that she fears new paint will not adhere. Painters say that the smoother the surface the better; so there need be no difficulty on that score.

A subscriber asks how she shall to black walnut suite of furniture previous to painting it white. If she will rub every part with sandpaper and then shelled it, the furniture can be painted when dry.

Cement for repairing broken china, that will stand washing, is wanted. I know of nothing that will resist water, although that quality is claimed for many cements. If the china or glass be thick enough, and the piece or pieces large enough to hold fine rivets, it can be riveted together, and will be as firm as ever.

A correspondent says that she made a lot of fruit cake, using wine and orange and lemon-juice, hoping to keep it through part of the winter; but it has begun to mould. Fruit cake, she should understand, should be wrapped in paper, placed in tin boxes, and kept in a cool, dry place. She can scrape off the mould, steam the cake for an hour or more, and then dry off in the oven. When perfectly cold put away as suggested. Her mistake was in putting it in stone and in the cellar, which is cert to be dawn. is apt to be damp.

A Western girl asks why raisins fall to the bottom of a rake. Raisins should not be put in a cake that has a very thin butter. When it is heated it becomes thinner, and there is nothing to sustain them. Roll the fruit in flour, and stir into the cake very lightly, and at the last moment. at the last moment.

Unsweetened and Sterilized (Refined)

AN INFANT'S FOOD.

A meet natural, notritions, easily digested and safe food for infants. Highland Evaporated Cream is simply conv milk in an improved form, and is the libert food for infants.

Sold by Grocers and Druggists Everywhere Write for our lefant Food circular and Highland Evaporated Creson booklet estitled "A FEW DAINTY

HELVETIA MILK CONDENSING CO. Sole Purveyore, Highland, Ill.

BURNETT'S FLAVORING EXTRACTS

PARK & TILFORD, N. Y. Dec. 1, 1890.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals are used in Sie preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowment or Sugar, and is therefore far more con-processed, and admirably adapted for invalidate well as for persons to handle, see that one persons on the second of the second

Sold by Grocers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

Fairy Breath Extract

The only new flavoring known for fifty years. Something new and delicious for the household to take the place of Vamilla. Buy a cunned cake, more delicious than a fresh one. Delicate, Salmon, Violet and packed in the boxes large enough to serve twelve people. When used with whitped cream it makes a most delicious dessert. Ask your greeer or dessert. Ask your grocer or send 50 cents to

THE JEROME EXTRACT MANUFACTURING CO. 166 Duane St., New York City.

Try it in this original recipe;

Try it in this original recipe:
Beat the whites of six eggs until they begin to bubble.
Add very slowly, beating constantly, three tablespeconfals of possiblered sugar and three tablespeconfals of possiblered sugar and three tablespeconfuls of grated almonds, and one tablespeconful of Falry Breath Extract. Beat the yolks very light, adding three tablespeconfols of possiblered sugar, three of sweet milk and three of floor. When these are smoothly blended add quickly the whites and bake in a quick oven for ten minutes and serve as a descert.

DOGMATIC people may say what they like about plain food, but we believe by eating good things and enjoying a meal you will have the comfort of good digestion. If not hungry, use KERA GRAPE CATSET, which adds a delicious flavor to meats and game. By sending us 15 cents to pay pestage and packing, you will receive a trial bottle and hecome a constant user.

KENIKA GRAPE AND FRUIT CO.

KEUKA GRAPE AND FRUIT CO.

and so early in the morning by A BIG WASHOUT rating the "Wel ng Machine." No sion, no steam, works easily, a clean; price reasonable. Ask your dealer se send for particulars. Agents wanted, DIETHER & BARROWS, Fort Wayne, Ind.

FREE to ladden. Edgant 405 gift for searting free. Whitney Home Gymnasium Co., Rochester, N.Y.

→ Google

A Department devoted entirely to an interchange of ideas among our band of JOURNAL rs. Address all letters to Aunt Patience, care of THE LADRES HOME JOURNAL, 433-435 Arch treet, Philadelphia, Pa.

IERE conse to my ears whispered confidences, to which I wish I might give all the sym-pathetic advice that is asked. I cannot excress to you, even in this our toxy corner, what my beart prompts. I hear the moons of mothers whose daughters are way ward; the bitter diswhose daughters are wayward; the bitter dissppointment of daughters whose mothers have falled to be true guides; the despoir of wives in distress because of the sins and the follies of husbands beloved; the longing of wives for the love which is no longer given them; friend bardened for friend. How sometimes the world seems full of nothing but griefs, anxieties and sins. If you cannot hear my word of love and sympathy in answer to all your cares and treatiles, will you not believe me that there is One who will hear your cry and will give you the help which my weak, human arms cannot give. This I say to you from a full heart; believe it is the truth. As you pour out your sorrows to me and have faith in my desire to comfort you, go to God and as confidently trust in His love. He may not take away the cause of your anx-He may not take away the cause of your anxiety, nor grant you the specific wish of your heart, but He will give you strength and joy.

...

Leart, but the will give you strongth and joy.

YOUR words about your isolated country life, dear "stolla," so faithfully portrar my own that I wondered if I landn't written them, but there is in them a note of danger. Dav't dud fault with your farmer husband." Your oid place it your cidelishood's homele filled; now you have only one place, by your histoard's side. I know I sympathits with you is no one can, nailwester, too, has felt the west-less and monotony of life on a lonely plantacion. I married e eity man, but a cyclone swap away oor dear home, and a lost situation drave us in the country.

I remember the receipt fluitiess search flet work. The little savings growing less each day, and now when I sit down to say well-spread board I dink hard work and boneliness are easier to bear then the thought that sense may soon stars us in the fire. "The trail of the sarpent is over all." Let us thank God it is no worse in our case that the work and innotony of country life.

And there are bright spots. I have educated my children for four years. They have had no other locative, and they do not soffer in comparison with their city costains. I step to listen to the time that and entreased only some of the will have an entreed to other in comparison with their city costains. I step to listen to the submitted and entreed to the plant, and I listen with delight to bits exhemes for buying a fine new one, "one that will hood the nowa, mamma, and not let them drop away from under your singers so girler." I see my boysgrowing up stort, maily little fellows, as pure and wholesome and sweet as my sentition roses. These worders way from one of ar a wise passione. He has sent me here, and remember how the lives they and the skey, and which we way Fabier loves me, not far a wise passione. He has sent me here, and remember how the lives the stallar-in-law's sheep in the wisderness. Think you the num "learnest in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," did not pine for the lunaries and learning of the courts of the Plantacior? Could you

You are only telling the same old story, Outward circumstances cannot quench a bright spirit if the brightness have its source in the divine. If we could only make the unhappy and the gloomy believe that there is nothing which cannot work out good for them who trust in God, we should be giving them the best panacea for all ills,

SOMEHOW I take great interest in letters in your owner. They are street, comforting and pleasant even to spe who has no bone. I would like to ake what you think of the following: A young lady, successful and competent is the profession at seathert, promoted year by year, histing a good salary, became engaged to be matried to a young man of great promise. Soon after the engagement to was stricken, with disease. After two years of patient walking he is far on the read to recovery. He has never been able to resume his profession, but works now on a small satary. Their of their long separation they think of ending it. She, with true womanly devolves, profess a life of possible privations and intriciple with him to an assuredity easy one with its share of bioners, sensitiments and pleasance without his love. But he beginders to take from her all, with as doubtful a return. She is one who leves hir work next to her have; for him early would she give him, Now the question is, would you advise her to do set would fin return be equal to the cost? Would the proof and food, he happy kinesing of her sacrifice, if he does not recover sufficiently to allow them to the mustally belock in the work they both love? Is leve worth the cover? Weald you misthers advise your dangthers in lake the risk?

The question whether your friend should

The question whether your friend should give up her present work for the uncertain support of an invalid husband is too delicate for a stranger's intermeddling. That question for a stranger's intermenting, a purpose is not the some, however, as your other, "I so leve worth the cost?" Love is always worth all it costs. It is the supreme thing in the world, and nothing is of more value. If your and it costs. It is the supreme thing in the world, and nothing is of more value. If your friend is questioning how she will get the most, the answer, I should think, would be simple. Her own strong hands would probsimple. Her own strong mains would probably yield her more food and raiment than sing would gain from the exertions of her feeble lover. If, however, life together will give them both a richer harvest of love and opportunity for service, neither his pride nor her worldly wisdom should stand in the way If their marriage does not offer such reward they would better live apart.

I BAVE hist been rending "Helen Virginia's" description of her hosband. I think sorely he must be "The Model Hustand," and fain would have her tell as mode concerning bins, for never in my life has a been my good fertiline to know, or even know of, any man who was as thoughtful and appeclative of his fact as this hesband. We'd first Holen phase bell us of at least one of his fault, eise we might be inclined to think bim too good for n "real live man." You may think I'm joking and that I don't mean what I say, hat I assure you I speak in all serbousness.

MARIAN.

No; let us not ask for his faults. We may be sure he has them, but if they are so hidden by his virtues let them remain hidden. We hear quite enough of faults. There are "real live men" whose patience with freshiness, whose tenderness with weakness, whose un-failing devotion to unworthiness makes them whose tenderness with weakness, whose un-failing devotion to unworthiness makes them beroes. I know of one man who for more than a score of years has shielded a wife whose moral and physical life has been eaten out by the morphine habit. I believe no one has even heard him speak a disrespectful word of her. He excuses her untruths, he guards her from goesiping tongues, and suffers untold miseries for her sake. We cannot claim all virtues for womanhood. Humanity is more than sex, and it is not good to strive to show that either men or women have all vice or all that either men or women have all vice or all virtue. They are shared by each.

O'NE sentence in the letter from "Homesteader's Wife" set use to thinking and prompts a word. It was this, "I am not a King's Daughter, but wish I weedgend enough to be one." In it is question of goodness? Are we not all daughters of our Howerily Futher, the King of kings? It only remains for us to levingly do our Father's will, looking to Illin for eninearngement and strength to perfect the good work or divine nature already given us, but sailly blurred by our faffares.

We would not wait to "be good enough" to acknowledge an earthly father's claim to our obsdience and service.

J. H. R.

You are quite right. It is not a question of goodness, but a question of purpose. That mistake is, however, a very common one, and church members and King's Puughters are judged as if they assumed goodness, whereas the very fact of their joining the church or acknowledging their allegiance to the King is a proof that they do not consider themselves to have attained goodness, but that they are striving for it. So we ought to think of one muther not as chaining perfection; and where we see fanits and failures, instead of unkind judgment we should have a yearning to help, to strengthen, and to redeem. to strengthen, and to redeem.

I LIVE in the Black Hills country. My husband is a practising physician. I have a family of five, and do most of my earn work, but always find time to read the foursexal. My children book for its arrival each month with great pheasure. Occasionally in the portraits of noted men and women I asse the faces of dear friends of my girlhood. I am taking a great interest in the sketches of the lives of versues ones the Journal as entertakengly produces. The letters in your corner, Annt Patience, are great comfact to me. I amesory for those sisters in trouble, and those that are happy and write cheerfully give me removed strength and a desire to two more devoted to my family. As the wife of a doctor in the far west, I have enough supplement associations about the I me a matter of New York Shin, and see a wide difference in this part of the west and the east.

But us the wrife of a doctor, were have ground.

But as the wife of a doctor you have grand opportunities for service. When there is sick-ness and anxiety in the home the hearts are open to kindness, and oftentimes through the physician more real spiritual good can be done than it is possible for a minister to do. This fact is now understood in a great degree by our missionary organizations, and medical by our intestonary organizations, and medical missionaries have a great field open to them. I have often thought that, if a physician really interested himself in the families of his patients and would give advice to parents and obtain the confidence of the children, a vast amount of misery might be saved. Tendencies to moral and physical ill health might be checked, and the character, as well as the body, strengthened. body, strengthened.

YOUR letter enclosing one from M. B., who lives in South Dekots, was safely received. I thought you would like to know of my success in sending a box of books and papers (flustrated) to box. We got a large box, which held heartly three-quarters of a barret, and solitered our manualines, books and papers together. I put in some cards, a game or two, a box of randy, mittens, a sochet, and a few little things. The box started the fourth of December. In about a week I som is letter with the unoney to pay the fivight. Vesterday a letter same saying that the box had been received affely, and that they were all pleased with its contents. This morning I had another letter saying that the soney had reached them, and saying seals how much they should enjoy the books and that they were surpressed to see so many. I am very glad to have the books do so moch good.

This must be encouraging to you, and I trust your success will stimulate many other simular gifts. There are numerous applications to me for names of needy, bookless households, but few of those who offer to send are willing to pay the expense of the transportation, which is not very small, especially of magazines. And if the expense of carriage seems large for those who have the material to send, how much more difficult it must be for the needy ones to pay it. Often it would be quite im-possible. Therefore let the freight, or express-age, or postage be taken into the necount and provided for when you offer reading ceatter. I WISH "Watter's Wife" had given ber own address, or that of her friend in Texas. I should like to serile directly to one of them so as to tell them how we did our homes away out West; that h, how we did when we were a new town. Take unblenched sheeting (no maliter how caures), and this lengthsas you would carpet for the floors, only alians for sharinking. I add this as special warming, and beingts by experience. Having it cut in lengths that reach across the room, see up on the machine and task up overhead, just as you would put a carpet down under flot. Then make a quart of flour pasts for one gallon of shork lime. Put it on account would an a plassered wall or ceiling. If one likes this, a package of diamond dyu, or a builds of blooking, an exercy mixel. No use who has rever seen such a ceiling has any idea how nice it is not properly done, it cannot be fool from plassering, just to look at, and is not a had substitute for consider. I speak from an experience of eventy years of frontier life. Miss. R.

And this is a slightly different arranges.

And this is a slightly different arrange-

BEING an early settler of Iowa I had to the for years. In a house without plactors or celling; and if you will allow see. I will tell how I made it real clean and nice. I took old clain and sewed it together, large roungh to cover the towar. Then, with pleaty of tacks in hand, and the table to stand upon, I tacked it up all around; and then I weaterer it again, and straightened is, adding more tacks, so they were about three inches anjart; then I put a tack once in about a fool on the overlays, then I pages will not that tightoned it so it was straight as placter. The side wails can be fixed the same way, only the cleth needs to be now for strength.

Miss. A. R.

If one has never tried this method of covering a ceiling, or a floor, it is quite worth while to try it. I remember making, more than thirty years ago, a very good substitute for oil cloth, after this manner. Closet floors can be made to look quite peat, and even for rooms or passage ways, where the wear would be greater, this substitute is comparatively dura-ble if kept constantly varnished. It can be preserved in good condition for a long time if carefully washed without soap.

HOUSEKEEPERS are apt to think they cannot have rugs without siee hardwood floors; unbe are all soft pine; upstairs they are air both boards, and the reachs were dised with wool lint and molls. I diled sil the centra with plaster of parts, asied with waver-cheaper than pully—then painted them two coals. I used a piece of rag carpet for one rug, and old ingrain, identic, so it was no beavy to wrinkle) fringed at the ords for another. Lower Boots are not the free linch boards with no cracks between, On the first bedroom food I not a coat of raw lineed oil, then two coats of helded lines of oil. Each limb I set the can of oil in a pall of builting water, and put the oil on let, with a period, well subsed it is with a reg, and allowed a day for each coal to dry, after which I put on a thin coat of re-coach variable. Ver this floor I got an lagrain art square, two and a held by three yards, for six dollars and fifty coats. My stilling-room and kitchen had been painted, so I could not have ofted floors, but I painted every other board with yellow octure, and the others gray, and willight a Sanyrun rug for the siliting-room.

Hea. L. C.

Here are a few suggestions for E. M. E.

MY heart was touched by the pathetic appeal of the dear young hencekeeper who noise for advice. I want to say to her the carty. The moreting hours are golden! When your lause is to order, keep it so by quietly replacing whatever has become disarranged. Never refers until your rooms, particularly the firing rooms, have been "straightened." This requires but a few moments, and is each a help when one pair of hands has all the meeting work to do,

Our Who Knows Frace Expensions.

ONE Who KNOWS PROME EXPERIENCE.

I AM also a young girl just eighteen, similarly signified. My great holby it system and early riskin. The first thing in the morning is perpending breakfast. My brecher cleans out the slove and bays the first hight, so that it is all ready for me in the morning. After breakfast I wash the dishes and set the kitchen in order. That lakes about an hour more I can straighten out the rest of the rooms, using a damp cloth to dust. Then I set about proparing the dinner. While this is cooking I do a little sweeping—not all in one day, and none on besting day, some rooms meet sweeping only used in two works. These I go over (the work I don't sweep them) with an oid flanged shirt, which I dampes and the over a broom. All the time I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the time I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner. After district the into I keep one eye to the dinner and still run out with the girts when she like its. I know from eyerience it cannot be done; I wish I could see her and lave to the I AM only twenty-three years old, but I have been

I AM only twenty-three years old, but I have been married scarly two years; and although I knew midning about hoosework before marriage, have since developed gales a talent for it. I would like to tell E. M. E. my way of planning my work. I have had no one to help me, as I moved over a hundred units away from my home, so I had to fearth by expresses. I rise at six in the winter and prepare the breakfast, and put it on the store to overm up or cook, as the case may be. While the tweekfast is cooking. I open the beds, and throw open a window in each groun in the house a less mirrates to change the air. After breakfast, I wash the dishes; then, if there is any surreping to be done it do it then. I go out a little while—everyone could be go out a fittle while—everyone could be go out a fittle while—everyone could be go out. After dimer. After dimers I make the beds and change my drows caffer wandled the dishes, of courses and are ready to sit down models any mending, seveing, fancy work, etc., that I have to do. After supper is over I wash the dishes said plan out my to morrow's breakfast and get it ready to each my cooking; have going in the whole the said plan out my to morrow's breakfast and get it ready to each of the evening to my rest form the something to warm over for your breakfast, you will have the rest of the evening to my be to have something to warm over for your breakfast, you will find moch limes axed.

[F. M. E.'sletter catheforth all my sympathy, as I am just

E. M. E.'s letter calls for the same difficulty, so I am just to enterging from the same difficulty. So if it in the present places, I would like to boll bow I minrage in the hope that there may be gomething to bein ber. Simple heath, well cooked and on time, are a very great heat, fluctuation from the matter and I have "handly keip, likelt after breakfast brother and i have "hamily grayers," then I harry about my work, washing dishes and pulling the kitchen in order as seen as possible. Then I go from room to room, making beds, pick-ing up, sweeping, dusting, etc., notti all are in order. When it is done early every meeting it does not take very long, and the result is most satisfactory. Then I am free to teos, bake, sweep theroughty, or mend, according to the need and day; and if disser is planned and becam early, the kitchen wheel rane ready. True, every day does not go smoothly; but by having a baked disser on troning day bedied meating fire, making pin, cookies, sates, etc., the other days will be conservant freer, and the homseksesper best tired, Modalit.

The readiness with which you answer an appeal is a proof of the universal love which binds us in one great family. If E. M. E. could receive visits from all who have ex-If E. M. E pressed a desire to visit her, and give her the benefit of experience and knowledge, her house would be too small to receive them, Whether the written words will give her much help I enunot tell, but hope they may. I have forwarded to her many letters too long to print. It is interesting to see how the order in the household varies even where an order is Phenoline, with which all our preparations and appliances are medicated, is the essential antiseptic constituent of phenol and the odorlma chlorides, in combination with boracic acid, discovered and produced exclusively in our own laboratories. It is an entirely new deodorizing agent, pronounced by emi-nent gynacologists to be the only odoriese, deodorizing, antiseptic compound yet discovered that is absolutely harmless. These features together with the curative properties of PHENOLINE are posessed by no other antiseptic agent. Our Crown Shields correspond in general appearance to the goods of other first-class makers. We warrant them to be PERFECTLY IMPERVIOUS, HIGHLY ABSORBENT, INSTANT-LY DEODORIZING and infinitely more comfortable than any other, and the only shield yet produced comhining these invaluable features. For sale at leading fancy and dry goods stores.

Aunt Patience

FREE, Illustrated descriptive entalogue of our antisepsic preparations and sanitary appliances ex-clusively for women sent on application. (Moniton bis publication.) Address

CROWN PHARMACAL CO., on & as Prince Street, Naw York, N. V.

WOODWARD & LOTHROP

Washington, D. C. OUR FASHION CATALOGUE

SPRING AND SUMMER OF '92

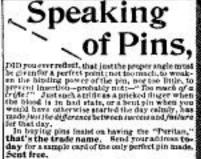

Will be ready about March 1st. It will be a handsomely illustrated book. containing complete descriptions, illustrations and prices of all the latest novelties to be found in a first-class Dry and Fancy Goods establishment.

Send us your name and address and we will mail you a copy free

MENTION THIS MAGAZINE.

WOODWARD & LOTHROP Washington, D. C.

American Pin Company Waterbury, Conn.

"COMFORT"

A simple, durable and con-vention device for operating any sewing machine by hand; can be attached in one unique. can be ministed in one uninute. Used exclusively, or as change from fost power. Invented by a lady whose physician for-bade use of machine by feet power. Price, 80 cents. Settl, prepaid, to any address on receipt of one-dullar. Solid by the trach. Circulars on appearance to 44 Barclay St. N.T. ution, Comfort Attacht

LARGE FUR RUGS $2.00

Lawrence, Butler & Benham, Columbus, O.

WHEEL for INVALIDS

To propel one: about in, comfort-of the reliable sort. minister giving self, or to be pushed ably, earlie, and Send stating for prices of all styles Quoe Tee Lacer Sens Journal.

SHITH WHELL CHAIR COOCHE IN THE SHIP BY GOOD

WHERE I SPENT MY MONEY AFTER ALL

By Isabel A. Mallon

HAD been making up my mind for two years that I would go abroad, and, when a woman says making up her mind, and takes that length of time to do it, you can usually conclude that she means that she is making up just it. I had ten cent banks, five cent banks and penny boxes, and all the little change went into these, and at the end of the month they were all emptied and the money taken around to the bank to add to that which was to be used for going away. When I saw a lovely new material and felt that I should enjoy a frock like it, I would give a shrug of my shoulders and say in a most contemptious way, "Wait until I get on the other side: I'll get these things for almost nothing."

GETTING things for almost nothing is a feminine vice. Whether the average woman is not sufficiently imbued with honesty in early life, or just what is the reason nobody knows, but a woman never stops to consider

THE very day after I reached London I start-"HE very day after I reached Lookon I started out for my shopping. First of all I wanted some pretty cotton dresses. You know the kind—zephyrs, sateens, and a printed lawn.
I found them pretty enough, but I clutched my pocket-book just a little bit tighter when I heard the prices. The one which I have sketched and marked No. 1, and which is an ordinary black and white zephyr gingham,

THEN, as I had read in English novels of that, when things are gotten below their value somebody is being chested, and, therefore, things for almost nothing come under the things for almost nothing come under the head of petty thefts. But getting things for nothing on the other side of the water is, after all, a method of spoiling the Egyptians, and consequently seems only right and proper. After all the saving and the talking and the waiting and the hoping, the eventful day came when I salied away, robed as simply as possible, and with the determination to come back possessing clothes that would make the Queen of Sheha turn in her grave with envy.

shouldn't be a woman if I didn't talk, and consequently before we were half over two elever men were thoroughly informed as to why I was going; that is, the principal reason: to furnish my wardrobe for a song. One night as we sat looking at the stars and womlering about them, one of the men said to me :

about them, one of the men said to me:

"Do you think you are very patriotle?"

"Of course I am," I answered indignantly,

"why, I think we have the best country, the best government, the best men, the prettiest women and the finest fruit in the world. Of course I am patriotic: I inherit it, I didn't exactly sign the Declaration of Independence, but an ancestor of mine saved me the trouble. but an ancestor of mine saved me the trouble, and it is just as well he did, because my sig-mature is one of the seren mysteries of the world."
"Well," persisted he, "do you think it is "Well," persisted he, "do you think it is very patriotic to save up all your mo go to England and France to spend it? "Oh!" said I, "but you get things so cheap over there."

He looked at me as if he were amused. "You look like a woman with some sense; do you know what ruined Ireland? Absentee-ism. Do you know what will discourage manufactures in this country? The fact that the demand for a certain line of goods is not sufficiently great, the fact that the people who have the money go away to spend it, and most of all the fact that American women do not of all the fact that American propen do not know the meaning of the word patriotism. They have an idea that it means nursing the sick in time of war and applanding the militia in times of peace. What it really means is doing the very best for your country that you can, and the very best, just at present, is the encouragement of home industries. Look at the Queen of England! When she was married she made Honiton lace fashionable because the lace workers were complaining of hard times. See what the Princess of Wales did three years ago after her visit to Ireland; had some of her nost beautiful gowns. Ireland; had some of her most beautiful gowns, as well as those of her daughters, made of Irish poplin so that it might be put on the market again. And to-day think of Lady Zelland, the wife of the Viceroy of Ireland; she is doing everything in her power to push Irish lace, and half the fashionable hats have a trimming of it, while innumerable court dresses are deco-nated with it.

Determined to argue it out I answered:
"But you see things are cheaper!"

"Will you promise me not to buy any materials that are not cheaper than the same fabrics would be in your own country?"

I promised without a minute's besitation, which could, of course, be gotten in any color, blue and white, pink and white, the cream effocts or the dark colors, was, I found, twenty-five cents a yard. I could duplicate this in Philadelphia for the same price, in Boston for the same, and in New York at one shop for twenty-four and at another for nineteen, so I concluded not to fill my trunk with that material

A heroines who looked like angels in print-ed muslin and felt that England was the place for them and the one place were these could begotten, I drew in my mind's eye a sketch of n pale rose-colored muslin with a pink flower in a tiny wreath upon it made to look like a symptomy with decorations of lace and pick ribbon. I had seen just the sort of stuff I wanted on the other side, but I declined to buy it, preferring to wait and get it for a "mere nothing" in London. The English sample is sketched at No. 2; its price is eighteen cents a yard; that which I had seen in Philadelphia and which had brought joy to my soul was fifteen cents a yard. Since, I have found out that it would be the same either in New York. Beston a yard. Since, I have found out that it would be the same either in New York, Boston, or Chicago. Another little roll of money, which was marked "For lawn dress," went back in an inner pocket of my purse. I shrugged my shoulders and concluded that it was because these were inexpensive goods; and now I have made up my mind to get something that would cost a little more, though first of all I would cost a little more, though first of all I would cost a little more. something that would cost a little more, though first of all I wanted a printed challle to be used for a house dress; not the very fine ones, but one I could wear, and which would look prefty and ladylike. They advertised them in all colors at a very well-known shop, and down I went to get my stuff, which, by the by, to make an Irish bull, I didn't get. At No. 3 is my sketch of the English sample which cost sixteen conts a yard, I can get equally as good in New York for ten cents a yard, in Philadelphia for twelve find a lialf, and in Boston for fifteen. Another little rard, in Philadelphia for twelve find a half, and in Boston for fifteen. Another little package of money went into that part of the purse that I began to call "the patriotic side." I commenced to think just then, and it seemed to me, with designs just as good, material just as durable in the fabrics at home, I was a bit if a doubley to come obsend and nor the same things, granted that it was only a

MY sister was a little more persistent, and said; "I am going to try and get a satesis," and we got a sample of one. It's No. 4 on the second group. You see it was a bit of an advantage that I could sketch a little, so I drew this for her. The result was that there drew this for her. The result was that there is written in her note book; "Price of sateen wenty-five cents in London; I can get it for from ten to twenty-five cents either in Pfella-delphin, floston or New York, and that at eighteen is just as wide and just as good. We had read and written and upbeld Eng-lish woods; we had insisted that nothing could be got to equal them, and so went out to get a blue and white check suiting to have a jaunty costume made in which to go yachting. First of all we went to a funous tailor shop to see what they would make us a suit for, because their advertisements were so lovely. We cause their advertisements were so lovely. We soon found that English advertisements are not always what they seem, for the simple, stylish frock of the picture was extremely dowly in reality, and after looking around it was decided that the shop run by these same people in America had smarter looking frocks, better made ones, and that the fitter over the water was forced to be more exact in adapting his material to the female form divine.

Why? Because American women are not willing to look on the streets the dowdies that the English women do. The check suiting marked No. 5 in my picture will cost in London seventy cents a yard, in New York, Boston and Philadelphia it can be gotten for fifty cents; that's twenty cents difference on the yard.

SERGE," said I. "We have always heard of that. We will get a dress of it if we don't of anything else, a dark blue serge; it is so ladylike and so useful to have, and so altogether desirable." We grew quite rapturous over this; we were sure that it would be discoveration anything in America and age. over this; we were sure that it would be chesper than anything in America, and more desirable. We found it, not heavy in weight, not closely woven; indeed, one of the party called it "steazy." Its price was forty-eight cents a yard, and a friend who had been picked up on the way had on a dress just like it, the material of which had been bought in Philadelphia for thirty-seven and a half cents a yard. Later on it was discovered that New ork furnished it for thirty and Chicago for thirty-five.

thirty-five.

I didn't want to go bome without a single new frock, so knowing that the English were great on tennis, and almost every dressmaker you approached asked you if you didn't want a tennis costume, I determined to get one. The design was the light flannel drawn at No. 7, with lines of red and blue and brown going over its white ground. It cost me twenty-five cents a yard, and at a first-class store at home I could get just the same thing for the same noney. Now, all these samples that I have drawn, and that I am talking about, do not come from extravagant places, but instead come from extravagant places, but instead from the shops frequented by the great middle class, to which you and I, my friend, belong, Many of them were samples quoted as bargains. Just what bargains they were you can see.

MY experience is the experience of hundreds of women who do not stop to think that in going over, and spending their money in a strange land, they are absolutely and honestly, or say rather dishonestly, taking the bread from the workers in their own country. As a people we are young, but we have ability and energy, and we can make just as good staffs as are made on the other side, but we won't make them until we are encouraged in it. It is snobbery of the worst sort to gloat over material being "imported;" it is patriotism of the best to show a good fabric, and to claim that it was designed and made at home. The women of this country can do so much toward making it the greatest in the world, first by guiding the men in the way they should go, and next by encouraging in the world, first by guiding the men in the way they should go, and next by encouraging home industries. There would be a hundred thousand workers where there are a hundred thousand idlers if the factories were at work supplying our shops with American materials, if the women of America would be as patriotic as were their great grandmothers, and decline to wear anything that was not wrought by American looms and sold in American stores.

HAD written home some of my experience I HAD written home some of my experience about getting things for nothing; and in return a letter had come to me, enclosing samples of American silk, the black silk that almost every woman likes to have in her wardrobe, for it is a gown suited for so many occasions. The letter said: "I enclose some samples of black silk; unless you can get them cheaper, or better, for the same money, I will buy my gown at home." For the quality that in New York was a dollar and forty-

VEILINGS, collars and cuffs, and the small V etceterus of the toilette, do not vary much in price; but as in London the Princess of Wales, or some great beauty, will set a fashion, make one style popular and force a run on it for the season to the advantage of the shop-keepers, they do not so often have great quantities of small belongings left on their hands which must be sold, no matter at what price.

at what price.

In black materials—cushmeres, Henrietta cloths, grenadines and lace brilliantines—the prices are about the same. One style of lace brilliantine which sells in London for thirty-five cents a yard, can be gutten in New York or Chicago for thirty cents. White cashmere, thirty-nine inches wide, pule blue, pink, and the various standard colors, sells for seventy-five cents, a yard, and J. con. get it seventy-five cents a yard, and I can get it quite as good, and for less money, in either Philadelphia, Boston or New York.

T was rather a sad experience this going I was rather a said experience, this going over and expecting to get so much for so little, this having my belief in the great desire of the English people to sell me much for nothing, shattered; but, after all, I had to confess it was a good lesson, and I did have the moral courage to keep my word and bring my money home with me.

ome with me. On the steamer I met the same man who

On the steamer I met the same man who had given me such good advice on my way over. He looked at me and said: "Well?"

And I answered, "I am bringing my money back to the land of the free."

Being an American gentleman he did not say, "I told you so," but he could not resist asking, as he took my hand:

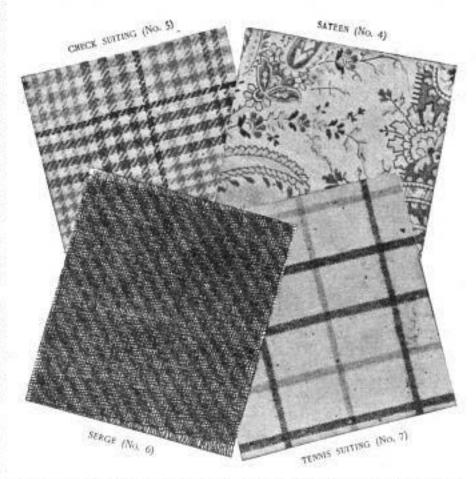

"Where did you get your gloves?"

I never had a hatchet except a chocolate one, but I looked in his face and told him the truth.

truth.

"In New York. The English gloves are not adapted to the American hands, and they are not half as well mode, and the same fault can be found with the French ones. In New York you can get them to fit all kinds of hands, long fingers and short ones, broad and narrow ones. You can buy gloves in London for fifty cents a pair, but they are not worth wearing; they are old-fashioned in color, badly cut and altogether undestrable. In Paris they make a great fuss about making gloves to order toe you, but they can do that in New York, do it just as well, and the colors are as novel as those shown in Paris. Since I have been away I have learned what you mean have been away I have learned what you mean by patriotism. I have learned how the women by patriotism. I have learned how the women of a country can make it prosperous and great, and I have come home with a respect for the American workingman that I never had before. I believe be can do anything he wants to; and if there is anything that they know how to do on the other side that we haven't grasped yet, we are rich enough to buy that knowledge and to have it taught in our manufactories. We can import knowledge and pay a proper duty on it. Look at my watch! Made in Philadelphia at a factory where George W. Childs employs seven hundred women to polish and etch cases. It keeps better time, and it is just as pretty as any good gold watch made in the famous watch-making districts, and it didn't cost a cent more than one would on the other side. Now, in buying a watch at home, you get one just as buying a watch at home, you get one just as good, you encourage industry, and you tend to make rich and good and prosperous your own country people, and that's what we all ought to try to do.

Naturally my friend and teacher felt a great nine cents. I should have to pay one dollar and seventy cents in London; for that which was one dollar and nine cents the price was one dollar and twenty five cents; there were chapter silks, but they were poor in quality, and would have lasted but a little while, and every woman knows how very, very mean looking is a shabby black silk.

We found handkerchiefs about the same price as in this country: that is, the nice ones.

pride in me, for who does not like a proselyte? And in me he load a most enthusiastic one. I am prepared to say that while it is delight. I to go abroad "strange countries for to see. Is shall always have sense enough, and patriot-ism enough, to hay my cholles at home, get-ting in that way the best for the least, and en-conraging the workers among my own people. This is the story, and the the rule of the W Google spent my memory after all light 260 by Google

There is nothing that may ot happen to a thin baby.

There is nothing that may ot happen to a man who is osing his healthy weight.

We say they are "poor." hey are poorer than we at rst suspect.

Do you want almost all hat is known of the value of lumpness told in a way to ommendto you CAREFUL LIV-NG-and Scott's Emulsion of od-liver oil if you need it.

A book on it free.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 130 South 5th Avenue our druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-lives -all druggists everywhere do. $2.

Its great success has, of course, led to many imitations, but it is generally admitted, and a comparison will easily prove that none equals Van liouten's in delibliousness, and natritive qualities.

The Standard Cocoa of the World. A Substitute for Tea & Coffee. Better for the Nerves and Stomach.

Sold in 1-8, 1-4, 1-2 and 1 1b. Cane.

Sign If not obtainable from your grocer, onclose Sola to either Van Houren & Zoon, 106 Reads St. New York or 45 Wabash Ave., Chica St. New York or & Wahsah Ave., Chicago, and a can, containing enough for $6 to $6 caps, will be mailed. Scatter this publication, Prepared only

ELY MFG. CO. Detroit, Mich.

IN A COMMON KIND O' WAY BY KIRKE LA SHELLE

RECKON 'taint no use fer me to try an' please ye, Sis, words 'th me go allus sorter kinder hit an' miss,

An' shake theirselves together, jest as awk'ard as they ken,

W'enever I take holt an' try to talk like other men; I know 'at it emburrasses an 'noys ye most to death,

But I reckon might as well jest try to stop a drawin' breath

As to try an' make love reg'lar, like them fellers

I kin only say "I love ye," in a common kind o' way!

Afore ye went to visit 'ith the city folks last year, Ye was happy thinkin' of our love, an' 'at the time was near

W'en we'd start our lives together, jest as chipper as the jay, between our love an' labor how we'd laugh the time away; But that glance at city manners, an' 'at glimpse o' city men, Sort o' set ye 'gainst our weddin' an' ye never changed zgin; Pve no word to blame fer it; we must love jest as we may,

"N I kin only say "I love ye," in a common kind o' way !

It was all so new an' strange to ye, no wonder

'at ye took To seein' things all different an' accordin' to the book

'At tells folks of good manners, an' of what it's wrong to do:

It won ye 'cause 't was stylish and 'cause 't was all so new;

Ye come back like another girl, an' yet I thought, somehow, That later on ye'd be yourself—I've thought so until now;

An' now I see it ain't no use-I've seen it all to-day; It ain't enough to love ye in my common kind o' way!

THE STORY OF A FAMOUS HYMN

HOW "THE SWEET BY-AND-BY" WAS WRITTEN. AS TOLD BY ITS AUTHOR DR. S. FILLMORE BENNETT

I N the year 1861 I became a resident of the village of Elkhorn, Wis-consin, the home of the composer, J. B.
Webster, who,
shortly after, became associated with me in the production of sheet music (songs) and other musical other musical works. In the summer or fall of the year 1867 we commenced work on "The Signet Ring," a new Subbath-

Da. BENNETT school hymn-book.
"The Sweet Byand-By" was one of the songs especially written for that work.
Mr. Webster, like many musicians, was of Mr. Webster, like many musicians, was of an exceedingly nervous and sensitive nature, and subject to periods of depression, in which he looked upon the dark side of all things in life. I had learned his peculiarities so well that, on meeting him, I could tell at a glance if he was in one of his melancholy moods, and had found that I could rouse him from them by giving him a new song or bymn to work on. On such an occasion he came into my place of business and, walking down to the stove, turned his back to me without speaking. I was at my desk writing. Presently I turned to him and said:

"Webster, what is the matter new?"
"It is no matter," he replied, "it will be all

The idea of the hymn came to me like a flash of sunlight, and I replied, "'The Sweet By-and-By'! Why would not that make a good bymn?"

good hymn?"

"May be it would," said he, indifferently.
Turning to the desk, I penned the words of the hymn as fast as I could write.

In the meantime, two friends, N. H. Carswell and S. E. Bright, had come in. I handed the hymn to Mr. Webster. As he read it his eye kindled, and his whole demeanor changed.
Stepping to the desk, he began writing the notes in a moment. Presently he requested
Mr. Bright to hand him his violin, and he played the melody. In a few moments more Mr. Bright to fished nim his violen, she he played the melody. In a few moments more be had the notes for the four parts of the chorus jotted down. I think it was not over thirty minutes from the time I took my pen thirty minutes from the time I took my pen-to write the words before the two gentlemen-named, myself and Mr. Webster, were singing the hymn in the same form in which it after-ward appeared in "Toe Signet Ring." While singing it, Mr. R. Crosby, then a neighbor of mine—now deceased—in the town of Rich-mond, Illinois, where I still reside, came in, and, after listening awhile, with tears in his eyes, uttered the prediction: "That hymn is immortal." I think it was sung in public shortly after, for within two weeks almost every child on the streets was singing it. It is now published in numerous collections of is now published in numerous collections of

A Sensible Woman

She's putting the washboard where it'll do some good. She has suffered with it long enough; broken her back over it, rubbed the clothes to pieces on it, wasted half her time with it. But now she knows better. Now she's using Pearline-and when a woman uses Pearline, the only way to use the washboard is in the kitchen fire. There's no more hard work, no more ruinous rubbing, but there's washing that's easy and economical and safe.

Millions of women are just as sensible as this one. Are you? Send Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if it Back your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 322 JAMES PYLE, New York,

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEB.

LADIES OF FASHION L. SHAW'S

Skeleton Bang and Ideal Wave, Natural curied, feather light, lifelike, beautiful, from $1.00 up.

WAVY HAIR SWITCHES, All long, convent Halr, from $5.00 up. $10.00 elsewhere COCOANUT BALM.

The only Complexion Beweiffer endorsed by eminent physicians. Makes the skin as fair and soft as a child's. Price, $1.00 per hox. All Tollet Preparations of the Celebrated PARFUMEREE MONTE CHRISTO-HAJE DYES ALL SHADES, A SPECIALTY. Send for free pamphdet." How to be Bensimh."

54 West Fourteenth St., New York. BABY WHILE FREE

tvery "shaver"
nows the TORREY STROPS. This Dres has made them famous. For sale by dealers, or a rect from factory. Price 25 cents, postpaid. tells How to Sharper a Rasor. Send for Catalogue-

J.R. TORREY & CO. Worcester, Mass.

A DAY SURE. 82.15. Samples Free. by Google E. E. BREWSTER, Holly, Mich.

45 sold in '88 2,288 sold in '89 6,268 sold in '90 20,049 sold in '91 60,000 will be sold in '92 A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes.

CF These figures tell the story of the ever-growing.
ever-going, everinating Steel Aermotor. Where
one goes others follow,
and we "take the Country."
Thoughed, we everable to make all of the 30.00 Aermotor is 31. Online efter valid 8 weaks to be filled, below we have varily increased our place and are prepared pocapity to plant our because it every labitable portion of the glob.
Are you carless to know her the Agremotor Co, is the 6h year of its calcusee, same to make many times are many windmills as all others makers combined 7 lise we came a soriginate the fixed Wheel, the NIZE Street Fland Tower, the Steet Tricking Toward
Lik. We commenced in a field in which there had been no depressed
which there had been no depressed to read prove a second to the second t O see of sir is relation, electronists before the wheel, r. in the style woods arms, electronists before the wheel, r. in the wastes notify, and startly when abstract, though and less important questions. Those investigantions proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has

$Full \, Dress \, Swits$

AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

If the all liveral policy of the Assumetre Co., that graveness. To dail liveral policy of the Assumetre Co., that graveness. To daily a substraction of the formation of the substrate of the condition of the Assumetric of the condition of the Assumetric Description of the Assumetric Description of the Assumetric or and Towers.

If you want a streag, silf, Steel Figged Tower-or if you want the tower you don't have to collaborate the first of the condition of the Assumetric or the condition of the con

From $25 to $40 Equal in tabric, style, workman-alop. fit and finish, to $75 and $200 suits of leading houses. Why this is possible: Why this is possible: We are the only Tailoring house in the U. S. making a specialty of Fall Dress Garments and have every facility for producing at lowest possible cost. It is well known that Thiless pegaid the Dress Suit a mere incident in their business and accordingly charge prices greatly not of proportion to prices charged under brisk competition for business saits.

The Dress Suit is to-day an Absolute Necessity to gunkerne attending Weddings, Receptoris, Parties etc. It is not only the Correct Dress on such occusions but often other forms are absolutely prohibited. Every gentleman should own a Dress Suit.

Comparatively few cloths are suitable for Dress Comments. Samples of these we mail free on application with samples of imminings and complete instructions for self assaurancent. No one need be discouraged at the self-measurement requirement for our system is very simple.

Our Customers Risk Nothing. The Dress Suit is to-day

TO ORDER

Our Customers Risk Nothing. Garments may be returned to us for any cause and when so returned, we obligate ourselves to pay all Express charges. We are general tailors and can furnish by mail samples of any style of goods desired. For particulars and samples address (enclosing 6 cts. for postage)

KAHN TAILORING CO., 14 E. Washington St. BOX T . INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

WALL Attractive and Non-Arasmical. Pactory prices. Enormous assortiment to any part of the United States. A very large line of samples sent for S. ets., postage. Papers without gold, to to 6c. Gold Papers, 5c. to be Elegant Embosed Gold Papers, 19 cts. to 30 cts. Borders, all widths to match, in proportion. The Providence Wall Paper House, very support of the properties. Westminster 84. PAPER

IT WILL PAY

MILLER'S Wall Paper

Get the best Wall Paper for the least money. Send 5 cents for our new line of samples. Agents wanted.

J. KERWIN MILLER & CO.

543 Smithfield Street, Pittsburg, Pa.

HOW TO RENOVATE OLD FURNITURE BY AN EXPERIENCED WORKMAN

LMOST all housekeepers have some piece of old fur-niture, dear from association and probably valuable in itself, that they may wish to make more present-able. From choice, or from necessity, they may wish to do this work themselves, and to show that such work may be done as well at home by an ordinarily careful person as by a practical finisher in a shop is the object of this article.

STAINS

BEWARE of stains; they all fade, particularly when exposed to the light, and there is nothing so beautiful as the wood; the older, the handsomer. The flaring red stains misnamed "mahogany" and "cherry," that have been so much used for furniture and interior decoration, are no longer used.

THE OLD OAK CHAIR

If you wish to beautify an old oak chair, take a sponge dipped in strong ammonia, and moisten the old varnish until it may be scraped off with a piece of glass down to the plain wood. When the varnish is all off and the wood dry, sandpaper the chair thoroughly with fine sandpaper, No. O or OO. Get it as smooth as possible; half the battle is in getting a smooth surface to work upon. You need no wood filler, as the old varnish has completely filled the pures.

THE FIRST COAT

THE first coat should be pure shellor var-nish; white if you want to retain the color of the wood, orange, if you wish a darker tone. Let the varnish dry until the next day, then, with your line sandpaper, go over it again very lightly.

SUCCESSIVE COATS

THERE are a great many varnishes suitable for finishing; any dealer will furnish you with a "rubbing varnish," or a "hard oil finish." Don't take "furniture varnish," as it will not rub. Apply not less than three coats of varnish, exclusive of the shellac, alcoring at least force girls hours for such coat. coats of varnish, exclusive of the shellar, allowing at least forty-eight hours for each coat to dry. When the second coat is dry go over it again with your sandpaper, the object being to keep the wood perfectly smooth. Let the last coat dry three days; then put a small quantity of powdered pamice stone in a saucer, and some raw linseed oil in another, and with a soft flannel cloth rub away at your chair, keeping your cloth well oiled. Don't get discouraged over the carving, if there should be any; with a sharp-pointed stick you can get into all its turns and cuts. Don't rub at an easy place too long, or you will cut the varnish off; all you want to do is to take off the gloss and get it smooth. Wipe the wood off as you go along with a soft cloth until it is perfectly smooth.

A DEAD FINISH

A DEAD FINISH

W HEN you have laid your last coat of varnish you will find it very brilliant; VY varnish you will find it very brilliant; but after rabbing, as ordered above, you will have what is called a "dead finish," which is far preferable to the brilliant, but not smooth, finish of the unrubbed varnish. A chair finished "dead" will get smoother with constant handling, while a brilliant finish will get greasy looking in a short time.

PANEL POLISHING

To produce a bright polish on panels, or other plain surfaces, where a brilliant polish is wanted to contrast with the dead linish, work to a dead finish first, then polish with powdered rotten stone and oil, in the same manner as you used the pumice stone. The brilliancy of the polish will only be limited by the amount of labor expended. Put the finishing touch to the polished surface by rubbing it with the palm of the hand, dipping it in dry flour to absorb the perspiration.

FINISHING

A Lt. old work should be finished in this may be. The varnish is transparent, and will not affect the color, except to enrich it. For the shellae varnish use a soft flat brush, and for the finishing varnish a flat brush brush; any paint dealer will sell you the proper brushes.

NEW FURNITURE

IF it be made of open-grained wood such as cak, chestnut, walnut or ash, the grain must be filled. This is absolutely necessary to get a smooth surface for a foundation, and if not done, every coat of varnish will show the crucks and holes of the grain. The varnish the not bridge over the holes had followed. nish does not bridge over the holes, but fol-lows them down and up. For oak, ash or clustnut you need a light filler. This may cliestant you need a light filler. This may easily be made, but as it requires several ingredients, it is better to buy it. It is a putty-like substance, which should be thinned with turpentine until of the consistency of paint. Apply-with a stiff brush, and when it has set (lost its gloss) and before it is dry, rub off with a soft cloth, rubbing, wherever possible, across the grain. After it is thoroughly wiped off leave it to dry until the next day, and then sandpaper it lightly to take off any specks which may have escaped your cloth. Now proceed with your shellac and rubbing varnish, as described for old work.

ANTIQUE OAK FINISH

ANTIQUE OAK FINISH

To produce an antique oak finish on either oak, ash, or chestnut, use a dark filler in precisely the same manner as the light. in precisely the same manner as the light.

It will fill the grain dark, and tone down the color, if combined with a cost of orange shellac instead of white. Walnut needs a dark filler and orange shellac; mahogany, mahogany tiller and white shellac. If you cannot obtain a multocamy filler use the light, indicate with it a lists haven trailing atoms in mixing with it a little burnt Italian stenna in oil, just enough to redden it. Close-grained woods require no filler. Cherry needs white shellac; pine, maple, poplar, etc., the same.

EASTER CARDS BY MAIL

We will send the first five packages for $2.40, postpaid, and all of the complete sets for $3.40.

and all of the complete sets for $3.40.

No. 1.—For 50 Cents and 4 Cents for Postage, 17
Prung & Co.'s and other fine Easter Cards, together with a fine satin Hirthstay Card.

No. 2.—For 50 Cents, and 4 Cents for Postage, 10 large and finer Cards from the above publishers, together will a handsome folding calendar for 182.

No. 3.—For 25 Cents, and 2 Cents for Postage, 10 Prung's, Tuck's, Ward's, and a card cut in the form of an anatom.

No. 4.—For 50 Cents, and 4 Cents for Postage, 5 Easter Sooklets, including one Shaped Booklet.

No. 3.—For $1.00, and S Cents for Postage, 7 handsome Souvenir Books, with appropriate selections from best authors; and a new Easter Card containing portrait, and verse, of liketop Pullips Books.

No. 6.—BIRTHDAY PACKET, For 50 Cents, 17 Fine Cards of Prung's or Tuck's.

No. 7.—SUNDAY-SCHOOL, PACKET. For 50 Cents, 25 Cards, 35 Cards of Marcus Ward's, Prang's Cards, assorted.

STAMPS OR POSTAL NOTES RECEIVED

PAPER BY THE POUND. We generated our prices lowest in America. Sample sheets of papers and the pound, with prices and number of sheets our prices and and with the market." On orders of $10.00 and ever we will prepay freight charges to nearest railroad station.

Club your orders with friends and take advantage of this. Agents one Dealers should correspond with as.

ENGRAVED VISITING CARDS. For S1.75 we send a copperpiate, finely engraved, with 50 cards. Estimote Stamping. Samples free on application. All the work is done on our premises. We employ only the best workmen and use the finest cards. We guarantee satisfiction.

Handsome boxes of fine Stantingery, plain or illuminated, for 35 cents, 50 cents, 75 cents, 81.00 to $2.00 cach, sure to give satisfaction.

H. H. CARTER & CO., 3 Beacon Street, Boston.

"PILLSBURY'S BEST" FLOUR

Makes More Bread Makes Whiter Bread Makes Better Bread

THAN ANY OTHER FLOUR MANUFACTURED.

For Sale by all First-class Grocers.

DELICIOUS DESSERTS INSTANTLY.

Dissolve this PARIAL TABLE JELLY in a pint of hot water, pour into a mould, and when cool you will have a quart of DELICIOUS JELLY.

IMPERIAL CREAM DESSERT. RICH and DELICATE. Made by adding a pint of boiling milk to

These are two TABLE DELICACIES made quickly and without trouble. If you fail to find either with your grocer, send 150. (to pay postage) for full-sized package of JELLY or CREAM DESSERT, Various Flavors.

E. C. RICH CO., LTD. 201 STATE ST., BOSTON.

E. J. KNOWLTON,

Almond Meal, MINER'S,

PLENON

Whilens and neurishes the Skin, re-moves Pimples, Ervens, Hackbeads, Wrinkles, Shin, Skin, Moth, Tan, Freckles, Liver Spats and all skin blem-ich. Ask for Miner's (the original), Perfectly harmless, 25 conts by scall. H. A. MINES, Malden, Mass.

T'S WONDERFUL!

"The New Treatment" for Catarrh, by pairedown. Send strong for 30 page pamphlet, free, Agents wanted. HEALTH SUPPLIES CO. DEPTH STANDARY IN GOOD O

TO ALL'CORRESPONDENTS:—Any question from our readers of help or interest to momen will be cheering answered in this Department.
But write your questions plaining used briefs. In not use any unnecessary words.
The right to assessor or reject any question is reserved by the Kottor.
They will be given as question for any special time. They will be given as quickly after receipt as possible.
All correspondence abund be decomparised by full assess and midrous, not for publication, but for reference.

MARLES - Easter falls on April 17th this year.

Mante-"Cupfule" not "cupeful" is currect.

PATTY-Wedding guests should always be on time.

L. K.-The first United States cereses was taken in

R. it.—Lemon Juice will usually remove stains from the hands.

LYNN-A wife may be made sole executrix of her busband's will.

FRENCHY-Leave one of your own and two of your bushand's cards.

Mattn-It is altogother wrong to answer the personals in any newspaper.

"CESTERY"-" Fix de siecle" is a French phrase for end of the century. Broom Ly n – For a woman of five fact five, the posteds is the proper weight.

Stronguage-Queen Victoria has had also children, of whom seven are fiving.

Show Flagge—The contiemen should always ask permission to call upon the lasty.

K. D. -Unless a note is a business one it is in very bad taste to enclose a stamp for an answer. A Supercuspes - Young girls put up their hair usually when they are about eighteen years old.

VINTON-There is a Cancer Hospital at New York. City; both men and women are admitted.

KITTIK-I have never known of brillhadise being used upon the eyebrows, and should not advise it.

I. I. B.-B. S. V. P. stands for "Repeater s'il toms plait," the French for "Answer if you please."

Connewall.—The kulfe and the spoon came into use at a very ancient date; the fork is of modern origin. LIZZZE-An afternoon tsa is the most informal of entertainments, and may be made the least expensive.

Consucation E. Rater nous to a Prench phouse and nouses "between ourselves" or "between you and me."

Mast.ton—A gentleman should take his had and care into the drawing-mont when he is making a formal call.

Gerritan - Table eliquotic prescribes that nothing that may be separated with the first shall be cut by the kulfe.

PERFLEXED-Wedding invitations should be based about two weeks before the day appointed for the exercisory.

M. S. T.-The New York "Critic" is authority for the statement that Philadelphia, not Brooklyn, is the city of churchen.

IRECTE—Postage stamps about always be placed on the upper right-hand corner of the address side of all mail matter.

N. C.—Upon the death of an acquaintance you should leaves card in person on the family, as an expression of your sympathy.

CECULIA-Longfellow's second wife, Miss Frances Appleton, was the mother of his six children, five of whom are living.

N. W.—Artisis furnish the fillustrations which accom-pany the stories and poems which appear in the illus-trated warming.

Congression of the Congress Congress of the Congress Congress of the Congress Congress of the Congress of the INTERMETER—When a gentlesson is walking with you be would of course raise his but to any man friend whom he might meet at the time.

BEATRICE.—You enmot make naturally coarse hair fine, but by keeping it in good order you can make people forget that it is coarse.

Karron—Use glycerine and rose water for your ands, and wear know gloves at night; the makeure in-aced will keep your hands soft.

M. B. R. - A young girl is not supposed in do any en-tertaining on her fewn account until after she has made her formal entenance into society.

Mas. S. N..-We would advise you to keep your little boy to dresses this summer. Next fall will be time enough for him to begin wearing kill skirts.

HELEN-Miss Frances E. Willard, who resides at Evansion, Blinois, is President of the Woman's Chris-lian Temperance Union of the United States.

EUNDER-The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York is open to the public on Sandaya, (2) Mrs. McKee is Presslent Harrison's only daughter.

FLANGUS-The Expection buildings at Chicago will be dedicated on Ociober 12, 1802, the 400th anniver-sary of the discovery of America by Columbus.

ALICE-Try as for as possible to hold your hands open so that the knockles will stay down; rish them every night with cold cream, and sleep in old kid gloves.

Rosg H.—A few drops of tennois put in the water in hich you testile your face, which will give it a milky ok, will make a picasant and innocest face wash.

P. A. R.—We do not fittink that Thanksgiving Bay was ever catcherated in December. Custom, since itsel-hae fixed the day as the last Thursday in November.

ANNA-A lady's visiting cant should be of moderate size, very large or very small cases are not in good taste; the size meet in use at present is P<sub>1</sub> by P<sub>2</sub> inches.

Consussionnext—For Information concerning the Women's 80k Ceiture Association write to the Presi-dent, Mrs. John Luxus, 1911 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Zewonta—We would not advise you to take any tonic that is not recommended by your physician, and before including in extreme exercise we should also ask his advice.

H. R. D.—If you are employed by the month and break your side of the contract by leaving before your month is up, your employer is not bound to pay you any thing.

More to a X — A " Dordus Society" is a society of chari-table women who meet to make clothing for the poor. Dorms was a charikable woman mentioned in the New Testamen;

Librarian.—The Lenox Library in New York is not pert to the vehile outset by licked, which may be ob-sized, from of charge, by making application by letter. tabled, free of to the library.

Partitions—Mr. George W. Childs is always glad to receive visits from young people and to assist them in their plantage is all to be the most accessible rath man in the second receivers to be "Pricy Council" and "Queen's tolling a second was a summary of the pricy Council" and "Queen's tolling and real cultures.

Contacts Min. cannot spars space for the stary of twen Natables expetition from Servin, nor the cames such led to it. Ther fate was not altogether undescriped, or was the altogether blameless.

Howeverex—A coment made of four parts of rosts, one of becaver and one of brick dust method together, will fuser the handles of knices and forks which may have become loosened.

ELLEN—We do not think it altogether proper for a youing girl to become upon the street men to whom she has not been introduced, but with whom she has came in contact during business hours.

M. E. G.—The brown spots on the skin known as liver spots will sometimes lade away when the digestion is gettin into perfect order. Almond meal can be beught at most of the large drug stures.

BERTHA—The gentleman should always be introduced to the hely, and the younger hely to the older hely in some such form as the following: Mrs.—., will you allow me to present my friend Mr.—.

DiNam-You should most excitality carry a satched with you containing your night duther, out, when going to visit friends for a few days, (2) A young lady should never ask a gentleman for his photograph.

Correspondence—Whether the 30th day of May shreald be termed "Microrial Day" or "Decoration Day" is a moosted question. Since 1862 the Grand Army of the Republic has designated it "Memorial Day."

Inquisitive-Herbert Spencer defines "Agnosti-desn" as the belief that the existence of a personal God can neighber be proved or disproved. The word is derived from the Greek, and signifies "not to know."

Foth, The lines

"Linve mother life I long to meet Without which life my life is incomplete," occur in Boucloudt's play "Led Astray."

JANET - An offereive breath is caused either by un-soned better a discribered stamach. If the former a good dentist should be consulted; if the latter, regulate your det, and avoid every thing that seems to affect your tigortion purplessantly.

BRIDGE ELECT - All the expenses incident to a welding should be defrayed by the family of the beine. The groom's first expense, after the bride's bouquet and the sortening to the bridesmarks and his where, should be less fee to the elegration.

Lynnox—We think that you were unreasonable to take offense because the men is the elevator did not re-move their hats. Their not doing so should not be curf-sidened an act of discourter; an elevator in a public building is a public conveyance.

Canoning—Modraing exempts people temporarily from the ordinary obligations of society, therefore it will not be at all recessary for you to answer the latters of conductance which you have received, but you may do so with perfect propriety if you wish.

Viscour R.—We can recommend nothing for the eye-isobes nor the eyes, as it would be rather dangerous to apply assorted prescriptions to them. Fut a few lumps of borns in the water in which you baths your face; this will tend to make your skin, look less only.

BLUE KYKE Bless—It will be wisset for you to consult your mother in regard to going to places of amageness with young men. (2) We can recommend to deplatory, (3) If your nose is included to be red try bathing it wery warm water in which you have thrown a few drops of complete.

KATRINA—No man can love a girt with the right sort of love if he wishes her to give up her parents entirely when she marries him, and she cannot expect any good fortune to uttend her if she shall elect to do so. "Hence thy father and thy mother" is the only commandment with a promise attached.

CURROUS—Mother Shipoon was a professional fortune-tailer who lived during the reign of Henry VIII. She saide a great many predictions, many of which came true. It is easy to predict possibilities, and not at all wenderful when the possibilities become realities, as they occasionally did in her case.

CLARGOS Co.—If the family are known by the com-munity to be Prostyuterians we can see no improprisely in the Prestyuterian elegyman calling upon them before they have handed in their papers. If he should happen to be the only elegyman of that demonination in the town, it would only be civil for him townt.

Outro—There is a certain class of women for whom there always seems to be from no matter where they may go. The characteristics of these young women are housety, industry, patience and thoroughness. If you belong to this class you can doubtiess fast employment in any one of the large cities. All you need is a feeting.

Mack—Jedousy is by no means an evidence of either true friendship or boys. Where it exists it is sometimes wheet to recognize it, but under must circumstances it should be ignored. As the young man is not engaged to be married to you, I should pay no attention what-over to lake jeakous folly, and in time he will probably see the mistake that he is making.

SHEERY-The preclous stones appropriate as gifts to persons born in the several months of the year are; Jacoury, the garnet; Frénauy, the amethyst; March, the Mostone: Apeil, the diamend; May, the emerald; June, the agaie; July, the carnellan; August, the sard-onyx; September, the obsystolic; detaber, the upal; No-vember, the topag; December, the torquelse.

Wherecrim Heart - Your writing is not very good, but your letter is und spelled and well expressed, and we do not see why you may not in time foarm to write a good hand. A young grid must be very careful not to betray her facting, but still she need not be so cold and indifferent to an old friend as to repel him. If you were children together il school it would seem as though you ought to be good friends now.

W. R. G. - Melt together, over the fire, an ownce and a swited allmonds, and a quarter of his object of pailverlised camplant. Apply this is your hands when you are ready to retire, midding it in as thoroughly as you can. Steep with loose gloves on your herds. In the moraling you will find this all the maginues and soreness has pone, and that your bands are smooth, while and mobil.

Mess-If you cannot have a good turf tennis court lay out an earth court. The may be done by plowing a level pleese of ground, retrieving the stones and harrowing the thoroughly, then rading well. The ground, whether of turf or cards, needs repeate—libra, and the exclusion of all placers except these waving in. Is shown. In laying out your court be careful to run it neeth and south, and to leave a margin of at least the first at the ends and ten at the sides.

BRLLa Strong.— A below to a bridge should a 12 decreased, "Host Justice." «I) The title "Dequire" description of the management of the country, a shight brind of the band will suffice for a couriery, a shight brind of the band will suffice for an arcnewiedgement of the thanks. (4) When a gentleman is making a call be must be ablowed to take care of his hat; if accessored to the ways of polities exists be will manage so that his bosices need have no thought of it.

so that his bossess need have no thought of it.

Doulle — The "bissener creature." which crosslys of a short belief grown reaching a little below the knowned to short belief grown reaching to the ankles, was not originated by Mrs. Bissener, of woman's rights hame. In a letter to Thin Langue Frong Forman, to January. 180, Mrs. Bisomer states that the custome use first worm to this country by Mrs. Rismisch Smith Willer, damphres of the Hun. Gereit Smith, while victing her country. Intracted carly Smith, while victing her country. Extrated carly Smith, and was seen fallowed by Mrs. Bisomer, who agnoniced the fact in her bayer, "The Life " is 184. "The New York Tribure" noticed to state some seen of the state of th

ETHEL: "Agnes, you are a regular little laundress, this chiffon looks

AGNES:-" Of course it does, I wash it with Ivory Soap."

ETHEL:-" Ah, that's the secret! How do you manage it?"

AGNES:-" Oh, I make a nice lather of Ivory Soap, float the chiffon or embroidery about in it a bit until it is clear, squeeze it out, pat it softly in a damask towel until half dry, then arrange the edges, press it out and it looks like new. IVORY SOAP, you know, does not injure the most delicate colors and is invaluable for art embroideries and all fine fabrics."

COPYRIGHT 1850, BY THE PROCTER & GAMME CO.

The Most Comfortable Support a Lady can Wear. Patented Feb. 23, 1886. Take No Other.

See Patent Stamp on each Waist. THE GENUINE

Jackson Corset Waists

Are made ONLY by the Jackson Corset Co., Jackson, Mich.

The manifecturer's same is printed upon the boxes, and stainged upon inside of chapt in each waist. They are the most popular articles of the kind now on the market. Tou should have one of them.

Be sure and get the right thing. IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, WRITE TO US

-----

Special attention is called to this celebrated brand of Bleached Muslin, which for fineness and durability is unsurpassed. This cloth is manufactured with great care, particularly for

LADIES' UNDERWEAR and GENTLEMEN'S SHIRTS, in 36, 41 and 45 inch widths,

- TANKE

and is guaranteed not to Crack or Turn Yellow.

Inquire for this brand, and take No Substitute. In purchasing garments, ask for Pride of the West.

For sale by all leading retail Dry-Goods dealers in the United States.

We will send you a fringed lines Tidy of "An Owl Maid." Flore to work it, Ingalis' book of stircher and 2-page Carlogue of Stamping Confits, etc., all for six 2: manage (12c.) Arbitras E. F. Inwalias, Lyrin, Mass. Box J.

OVER 60,000 SOLD.

SILK SATIN and PLUSH REMNANTS for Crazy Protein. A large page presty pieces, agented colors, blc.; 5 plage 25c. A large page, all colors, Embroidery Silk, 25c. Sheet of Crazy Silkchas and 22p. Cat. of Pastey Work with every order. LA ULES ART DO, Box 29d., 81. Louin, Mo

THE PARAGON PAT, FOLDING COIN PURSE,

Solo Manfir, JAMES S. TOPHAM, 1231 Pennia Ave., N. W., Washington, D. C.

EVERY LADY

Appreciates the Luxury of Genuine Pure Irish Linens

And will be glad to know that by writing for samples of Cambric Handkerchiefs, Linens and Damasks, they can obtain the Finest goods in the world and Save 50 per cent. Write for samples and price-lists, post free, to

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, Belfast, Ireland

Linen manufacturers to Her Majesty Queen Victoria and the Empresa Frederick of Germany,

** In addressing this firm, subscribers will please remember that postage to Irelated is freecests - Pub. C100CF

The Universal Knowledge 🕽 & Information 🥝 Bureau, N. Y.

supplies reliable information on the most simple as well as the most-eradite subjects. This is accommission through its office sing of specialism and experts; and by retaining the services of he ning men incorrepte particles. Literature, Literature, Education, Art. The Irama, Science, and Irama, Iram

UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE & INFORMATION BUREAU.

The Potter Building, New York, TOTAL SAME OFFI COMMENT OF THE PARTY OF THE

YOU WOULD LIKE A

Piano or Organ if you could see and hear one. Tone pure, action perfect, finish and workmanship the very best. And prices are trry reasonable. Would like to say more, but rather send you a catalogue. Write for one —it will interest you. Sent free.

GEO. P. BENT, Mnfr., CHICAGO, U. S. A.

Beeman's Pepsin Gum

THE PERFECTION OF CHEWING CUM. A DELICIOUS REMEDY

INDIGESTION. 1-3 of an ounce of Pure Pep-sin mailed on receipt of 25c.

Each tablet contains one grain pure popula, sufficient to et along grains of food. It is charact be obtained from BEEMAN CHEMICAL CO., 28 Lake St., Cleveland, O. CONSTRATOUS OF PEPSIN CHEWESE GUN.

CENTS "silver; pays for your address in the Thousands of Stras want addresses of persons to whom they can mail papers, magazines, pictures, cards, dc., PREE assumples, and our patrons receive bushels of mail. Try 14 you will be Walt FIRASHO with the small invest-dress T. B. CARPHELL, B.631, September, ledient.

L.H. 15 CF RHOULL & BED, 63 CHT las

WASHINGTON and Seattle. Send risays to Make, etc., o

YOUR NAME on the property of the party of th

ANTED A Loady in such tocusity, to open a Tobet Parior at home and exhibit our element of the control of the co

CARDS Francisco

CARDS THE PROPERTY OF THE

AGENTS sees $5 to $10 a day with our LABRY SPERALTES, Gree 100 different articles, Indirectable, Bluetrand Cate-legua Press, 4, L.E.BWIS & CO., Chine, 1, 11

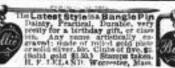

Thickens the growth and restores the youthful color to Gray Hair. Prevents Baldness, oures Dandruff, Humors, and all Scalp Diseases. A fine hair dressing.

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers

The most complete Brown or Black Dye ever discovered. The gentlemen's favorite.

R. P. HALL & Co., Proprietors, Nashua, N.H. Sold by all Druggists.

New Subscribers!

Receive a 33-page magazine, with hardsome cover, for one year, a complete stanging outfit, with pad, powder and hook of instructions; also a 46-maye book 5 x 10, 300 liberations, giving instructions in all kinds of fancy-work, for he cents, or the magnifica-dium for 25 cents. Sample copy free. Mention this paper and address HOUSEHOLD MONTHLY, 52 Purchase Street, Rooton, Mass.

PLAYS THAIQUES, Speakers, for School, Club and Parlor, Catalogue Tree, T. S. DINISON, Publisher, Chicago.

CARDS HERMANNELLER EAGLE PRINTING OUTFIT 15: Torre alphabete of type, type beider, herde indefine int, it pid and tweeters; put up in a neat box with full in Provious for use. EAGLE SUPPLY 03, New Hatter, Come.

GUITAR SELF-TAUGHT without motion with House's Charts. Se, per set (24), A.O. Houre, 70 State St., Chichen. Cir. free

30 days on trial. Roof's Magic Scale, the popular Ladics' Talloring System. Illustrated circular free. Roop Magic Scale Co., Chicago, Ill.

1892

LADY Agents to sell new and i meetiful goods
Address Mrs. N. B. Liverage, aleago, IP 500 SCRAP FINE AND THE FREE

CHAMPION WASHING MACHINE

Best in the World Further to principle; will week to the state of day. No stem for the state of slopping the floor will belt wholese we have

FOR LADIES WGENTLEMEN. "BOX TIP" SCHOOL SHOES

Are all the BEST SHOES OFFERED for the money. Ask your dealer for them and if he does not keep them send to us for a descriptive list and a pocket mirror. Made and C. H. FARGO & CO., CHICAGO.

Same all reg 10 CENTS odor to escape in the room OVER A SHORY FIRE. Weight, 2 fbs., made from stool SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. SPECIAL OFFISE To further introduce this wonderful SPOINT, we will send one, all complete, anywhere in U. S. still charges prepeat, upon receipt of only 16s. Too canatine Broller at express office, and if C. K., pay re-maining Wo. If, after using 6 or 8 times, Brodler is not satisfactory, we will remove same and reduct the dollar Total cost to you. S. Warranted never to warp, crack nor Sreak. Excellent terms to agreess and dealers. SIS STANPING CO., 806 P Street, KALANAGOO, WHIL.

HANSON'S

If your drugglet does led brow it, do test less lain courses you the same billioning to have been made of the both with the both wit

'AIRY TRICYCLES OR LADIES, CIRLS AND BOYE MAY MFG. CO., Elyria, O.

4C. A DAY PER ROOM HEAT YOUR HOUSE

Either with HOT WATER or STEAM as preferred. If you are building a New Home, or want to make the old one Comfortable, it will pay you FURMAN BOILER and System of Heating to investigate Of R Many and Ventilation sens free. Address,

HERENDEEN MFG. CO., 10 CLARK STREET, GENEVA, N. Y.

Spray Pump Free. Salary Paid Agents. It sprays Trees. Shrubs, Vines, Plants Spray Pump Free. washes wagons, windows. Balls beats. White washes beats better. Controls on ming bees. Cattle springs. Beet in cettors gins, mills, except above. Three washes beats better. Somple from if you become agent. You was ware trent [Og to be big pay this ad.] We send complete pump and I state insent. If you don't want agency send $2.00. Circulars froe. A. B. SPIERS. B. Phy. Windham, Maine. Plo. Windham, Maine.

WASHER bused the Wash-board Becomes a Relic of Berbartem. It is warranted to do the washing of an or-dinary family in one hour as clean as can be washed by land. At your dealer for it, or write for full description and prices. Agents Wanted.

ROCKER WASHER CO. Fort Wayne, Ind.

Sanitary Balbriggan, Sanitary Liste Thread, Sanitary MERINO, SILK and Sanitary Balbriggan, Silk and Cashmere mixed For SPRING and The ONLY Sanitary Underwear, and SUMMER WEAR. Endorsed by the leading medical profession.

For Send for new Catalogue, Samples, and fewiced Price List. If your dealer cannot supply them, they can be obtained of the manufacturers.

See that each garment is stamped with our Trade Mark—

"Yncilant! Health Haderweer." DON'T BE DECEIVED.

"Ypsilanti Health Underwear." HAY & TODD MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

Feathers and Feather Pillows ARE BOLD GUARANTEED Free from ODOR, DUST and OUILLS

AND IN PERFECT CONDITION. ALL FIRST-CLASS CEALERS MEET THEM. THE GOLD BLAST FEATHER CO.

PAULTLESS BEDDING CHICAGO.

Digitized by Google

IMPORTERS AND RETAILERS FINE MILLINERY, DRY COODS, DRESS TRIMMINGS. · · FANCY GOODS, Etc. · ·

CATALOGUE NOTICE.

We are now booking names for our Spring and Summer Catalogue which will be issued about April 1st, and mailed free of charge to out of town residents. Send us your name early as the supply will be limited.

"MENTION THIS PAPER."

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th AVE., N. Y.

TEN LOTS WILL MAKE YOU RICH

HOW is Chicago growing?-by location of new factories.

WHERE are factories locating?-in her manufacturing suburbs.

WHICH suburb affords them best facilities?-Griffith, having two fuel oil pipes and four railroads, including a Belt Line which connects with twenty-two more roads as shown by the map.

WHAT is the history of investments in Chicago's factory suburbs?-

uniformly profitable, returning five and ten fold in a few years.

WHY will an investment in Griffith lots pay?-because it can now be had on the ground floor and values are constantly advancing by location of new factories.

HOW MUCH are lots in Griffith?residence lots $120 upward; business lots $300 upward, on monthly payments of $4 to $12 if desired.

Write to-day for full particulars of lots offered. SENT FREE. We are only waiting for your address. Here's ours: JAY DWIGGINS & COMPANY, 142 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

SKINS ON FIRE

With Agonizing Eczemas and other Itching, Burning, Scaly, and BLOTCHY SKIN and SCALP DISEASES are relieved in the majority of cases by a single application of the Cuticura Remedies, and speedily, permanently, and economically cured, when physicians, hospitals, and all other remedies fail. Cuticura Remedies are the greatest skin cures, blood purifiers, and humor remedies of modern times, are absolutely pure, and may be used in the treatment of every humor, from the simplest facial blemishes to the severest diseases of the blood, skin, and scalp.

The great Skin Cure, instantly allays the most intense itching, burning, and inflammation, permits rest and sleep, clears the scalp of crusts and scales, speedily soothes and heals raw and irritated surfaces, and restores the hair. CUTICURA SOAP, an exquisite Skin Purifier and Beautifier, is indispensable in cleansing diseased surfaces. Cuti-CURA RESOLVENT, the new Blood and Skin Purifier, and greatest of Humor Remedies, cleanses the blood of all impurities and poisonous elements, and thus removes the cause. Hence the CUTICURA REME-DIES cure every disease and humor of the skin, from pimples to scrofula.

#2" How to Cure Diseases or the Sein, Scale, and Blood," mailed free to any address, 64 pages, 300 Diseases, 50 Illustrations, 300 Testimonials. A book of priceless value to every sufferen-CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold throughout the world. Price, CUTICURA, 50c.; CUTICURA SOAP, 950.; CUTICURA RESOLVENT, $1. Prepared by POTTER DRUG AND CHEMICAL CORPORATION, EDSGOR, U. S. A.

Pimply, Blotchy Skin, tod. rough and eily skin and hards, painful finger-ends with shapeless mails, are; rewith shapeless sails, are pre-vented and cured by Cutloura Soap, incomparably the greatest of skin purifiers and beautifiers, while rivalling in delicacy and surpassing in purity the most expensive of toilet and numery scaps. The only medicated tailet scap, and the only preventive and cure of inflammation and clogging of the pores, the cause of pimples, blackheads, rough, red, and oily skin.

an Q. S.

Safety Bicycle No. 1.

Use frequently as directed.

Steel, Rubber,

Fint:

An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of Medical statistics show that on the average only one woman in a thousand is blest with perfect health. Is your wife an invalid? Are you continually paying doctor's bills?

The judicious use of a bicycle by a lady will work wonders in the improvement of her health. In constructing our

Columbia Ladies' Safety

we have aimed to make it light, strong and easy riding. The many testimonials we have received are the best evidence that we have succeeded in making a wheel perfectly satisfactory.

IT IS FITTED WITH

Cushion or Pneumatic Tires.

The pneumatic tire absorbs vibration and makes riding on any surface pleasant and agreeable. The handle-bar allows the rider to assume a natural and graceful position.

This machine and the pneumatic tire are fully warranted.

Apply for a catalogue at the nearest Columbia Agency, or it will be sent by man for two

POPE MANUFACTURING CO.

221 Columbus Avenue, Boston.

12 Warren Street, NEW YORK, N.Y. 291 Wabash Avenue. CHICAGO.

Factory: HARTFORD, CONN.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

PHILADELPHIA, MAY, 1892

EN PROSEN A COPY

翳 (ontents 嵡

STUTION OF

Earth's Sweet Strain-Poem Flavel Scott Mines Cov
A Day in Patti's Castle . Fiorence Wilson	1
A Modern Martyr	3
Naming a Country House Frances E. Lanigan	4
The Proper Way to Sit	4
That Other Woman	4
Mr. Beecher as I Knew Him-VII Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher	5
Hints from a Mother's Life-II Mrs. William E. Gladstone	6
Patient Work of Motherhood Mrs. John Wanamaker .	6
Decoration-Poem	7
Unknown Wives of Well-known Men-	ē.
XVII-MRS. JOHN J. INGALLS V. Stuart Mosby	7
Decreed-Poem	7
Faces We Seldom See
H-ALICE PREEMAN PALMER Kate Upson Clark	7
An American Girl at Court Mrs. L. B. Walford	8
Ideas for Pretty Luncheons Mrs. Burton Kingsland .	8
The Care of Seal Skins	8
A Privileged Person	9
	10
The Brownies Through the Year-VIII Falmer Cox	11

DEPARTMENTS

DEPARIMENTS
At Home with the Editor	12
From a New Inkstand Robert J. Burdette	13
The King's Daughters	14
Under My Study Lamp
Side Talks with Girls Ruth Ashmore
Side Talks with Boys Foster Coates	17
In Literary Circles	18
Art for Art Workers
Mothers' Corner Elisabeth Robinson Scovil	20
Artistic Needlework
Hints on Home Dressmaking Emma M. Hooper	22
Dainty Dresses for Graduates
Small Belongings of Dress /sabel A. Mallon	23
Cotton Goods for Summer
Just Among Ourselves	26
Everything About the House Maria Parloa
All About Flowers
The Story of an Old Shoe
A Game for Sunday
Ouestions and Answers

EARTH'S SWEET STRAIN

BY FLAVEL SCOTT MINES

BY shaded path in May, I wander lost in dreams, Through leafy bowers play The sun's warm golden beams.

From velvet beds of moss, The gold-white daisies spring. The leaves above me toss, The robins sweetly sing.

A spider here has spun, Its web from fern to fern, And dewdrops in the sun, Like kingly jewels burn, The wood beyond is lost, In wondrous mystery, By countless sunbeams crossed, By shade of bush and tree.

From song of mating birds, From tree and flowered sod, Come the adoring words, "How wonderful is God!"

And soul and thought respond To nature's sweet refrain, And joining earth's glad bond, I echo earth's sweet strain.

(VRTIS · PUBLISHING · (OMPANY · PHILADELPHIA

Do you want a new piano? Do you want to exchange an old square piano or an organ on a new upright? If you do, we want your name and address. Fo get them we will send you free the "College Album of Vocal and Instrunental Music by Standard Composers," if you will mention where you saw this idvertisement and enclose a two-cent stamp for postage.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CINCINNATI, O.

Everett Pianos are carefully made, their tone is perfect, they contain all desirable improvements, and each piano is warranted for seven years.

We take pleasure in announcing that our line is now open for travel West

ia OMAHA and LINCOLN

and our Through Vestibuled Train is called

'THE BIG 5 LIMITED."

at 10.00 p. m.; arriving at DENVER 7.40 a. m., COLO-RADO SPRINGS 7.30 a.m. and

Returning, this fast train is called The World's Fair Special," And leaves DENVER daily at 8.10 p. m.; arriving at CHICAGO at 7.45 a. m.

The New Route shortens our mileage to Benver very starfally and the new trains are models for beauty at convenience, and leave and acrive at those great test at hours practical for the touriet, and the right our for the business man.

Solid Vestibolicd Trains are still ron over our former new via Karma City and St. Joseph, and the elegant svice herelofore given on these reuses by "The Great ack Island" will continue.

ST. JOHN. JNO. SEBASTIAN, General Manager. Gen't Ticket and Pass'r Agt.

Thickens the growth and restores the youthful color to Gray Hair. Prevents Baldness, cures Dandruff, Humors, and all Scalp Diseases. A fine hair dressing.

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers

The most complete Brown or Black Dye ever discovered. The gentlemen's favorite.

R. P. HALL & Co., Proprietors, Nashua, N.H. Sold by all Druggists.

OUR NEW TRAIN Ladies' Park Phaeton

The Most Elegant Vehicle Ever Produced

Absolutely free from borse motion or weight on animal. Unequaled for style, comfort and safety. Made in 10 styles. Send for

The Chadwick Two-Wheeler Co., Salem, Virginia

MAGIC -

Almond Meal, MINER'S, Whitens and neurishes the Skin, re-moves Pimples, Erzema, Harkbeada, Wrinkles, Shing Skin, Moth. Tan, Freckles, Liver Spotsland all skin bemish. Ask for Mine's (the original), Perfectly harmless, 25 cents by mail. H. A. MINER, Malden, Mass.

IT'S WONDERFUL!

HEALTH SUPPLIES CO., 710 BROADWAY, N.Y.

DO YOU KNOW FLOUR BIN & SIEVE Combines Sack or Barrel, Sifter Pan and Scoop, preserves flour from mould and mustiness. YOU OUGHT to HAVE ONE.

Ask our agent or your dealer for them, if they cannot supply you, write to us Sainfelles Geranted.

Prices 5 50 lbs. 85.00 AGENTS to hold 100 lbs. 84.00 WANTED. SHERMAN & BUTLER.

postures, cards, de., FEEE as samples, and our patrons receive bashels of mail. Try ht you will be WELL PLAISED with the small inver-dress T. D. CARTEELL, B.551, September, Indiana.

RABBIT & POULTRY FENCING

AGENTS clear #5 to $10 a day with our LABREY SPIRIALTIES, Hear HOUGHT-real sciebs, Indipercenter, Heartrased Cata-logue Free, G.L. SHWIN & CO., Chicaga, III

A DELICIOUS PERFUME. DELICATE BUT WONDER-FULLY IMPERISHABLE. Ask your druggist for it or send us as cents in stamps for 14 or. sample.

C. B. WOODWORTH & SONS Rochester, N. Y.

GEORGE FROST CO., Makers, Boston, Mass. 3

How to Make a Fortune

WANTED—Salesmen: who can easily make twonty-five to seventy-five dollars per week, selling the Celebrated "Pinless Clothes Line," or the Famous "Macomber Fountain link Eraser"—Patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that noids clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Macomber Fountain link Eraser is entirely new; will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of Sec. will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for St. with chreaters, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. Address THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 120 Hermon St., Worvester, Mass.

PRINTING Creater Press, 83
Creater Press, 84
Cre

WASHINGTON and Sential Send campe to Ratemann, Lievelina & Co., Sentia, Wash.

short time only. For further information ad-dress Wassen Feathersone Co., three Cake, Mich

REGISTERED SHETLAND PONIES
LABOURT MINIO ON MARTH.
Full like Perty Victibles, Harrows, Saddler, Hambets, etc.
Enclose stamp for Descriptive Price List. J. MURRAY HOAG, Maquoketa, Iowa.

DO YOU WANT TO MAKE MONEY?

Then take an agency for the Handy Clothes Dryer. Good agents are making from $1.00 to $10.00 a day. You should do the same. Bryer, with full particulars, sent you on receipt of 30 cests.

THE PRINCE & COLEMAN CO., Dayton, Ohio.

PRINTING OUTFIT! Adjuncted Builder Type.
PRINTING OUTFIT! CO. Builder Type.
PRINTING OUTFIT! Adjuncted Builder Type.
PRI

WALL PAPER SELECTED BY MAIL.

Bend 8 cents postage for a full line of assurias.

THOS. J. MYERS, 1210 Market St. Phila. Pa.

FLORIDA LANDS Improved and Unimproved to Exchange, Char. A. McBetce, Jacksonville, Pla.

FILL YOUR OWN THEFTH with Crystaline. Stop Circular free, T. F.T. RUMAN, M. D. Wells Bridge, N.Y.

YOU ARE A GOOD HOUSEKEEPER
And, when we inform you that on receipt of 10 cts., in coin or postage, we will send you free, something that will make your glassware and silver glisten; also clean your windows as they have never been cleaned before, we know you will appreciate is.

THE DIAMOND POLISHING POWDER CO.

Tasty Wall Papers

cods no more than ugly designs. Yes san buy the best, no matter where you live, from our immense stack. By our grains the Tuffed States mail better our new year, the sand to be best to be the common of the A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1906 Market St. Phila. Pa.

Credenda Bicycles, $00 A high grade machine at a popular price. A. G. SPALDING & BROS. NEW YORK, CHICAGO, PHILIA.

24 .. R OTEORD RES' CONLIAS. DILL. B' CHICY

PLAYS Dialogues, Speakers, for School, Catalogue free.

GUITAR SELF-TAUGHT without notes with Howev Charts. See, per set 12th. A.O. Howes, 70-8tate 8t., Chicago. Cir. free 30 days on trial. Bood's Magic Scale, the popular free. Boop Masic Scale Co., Chicago, Ili.

1892

LADY Agreets to sell new and beautiful goods
Address Mrs. N. B. Little, Chicago, III.

500 SCRAP

CHAMPION WASHING MACHINE,

Best in the World. Entirely new principle; will wash 1,000 pleees per day. No steaming the ceiling, or slopping the floor. Will sell at wholesale price, where we have no agents. Address

THE CHAMPION SHELF MPG. CO. Springfield, Ohlo.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Vol. IX, No. 6

PHILADELPHIA, MAY, 1892

Yearly Subscription, One Dollar Single Copies, Ten Cents

A DAY IN PATTI'S CASTLE

By Florence Wilson

Madame Patti's Ponies

F Adelina Patti ever has her Boswell the world will get a glimpse of a very different woman from the petted songstress they have been reading about in the newspapers all these years. It is undoubtedly true that no one is more to blame than Patti herself for much of the abourd gossip printed about her. She has allowed, without troubling to contradict it, masseurs and complexion specialists to describe her as reveling in a life of indolence and inactivity, surrounded with lavish luxury and splendor that is wildly Oriental. She has permitted inventors of physical training apparatus and patent medicine men to publish to the world that the perfection of her voice was solely due to the continuous use of their gymnastic machines or nostrums. Agents gymnastic machines or nostrums. Agents for concerts who could not make con-tracts with her, called her "mercenary." Because she took no notice of begging letters (and she gets on an average a dozen a day) disap-pointed people called her "stingy." On the other hand, some the other hand, some over-patronized friends delight in paragraphing Patti as perfection itself, with none of the in-herent frailities of womankind. But of Patti in her home

we know little; and she is a woman who thoroughly believes in the wholesome in-fluence of a good home, and in the duty of women to make their homes attractive and women to make their homes attractive and cheerful.

The house in which Patti lives is one of the most interesting of homes, "Craig-y-Nos Castle," as the songstress has christened it, is hidden away in the wild hills of the Swansen valley of Wales. It would be one of the most inaccessible spots imaginable were it not for a little railway which runs within four miles of it. In pleasant weather it would be difficult to find a prettier bit of landscape, but in wet and wintry weather, when storms sweep through the valley and transform the tumbling little Tawy River into a foaming torrent, it is a good place to keep away from. Patti's reason for choosing a home there was a good one. The peculiarly moist atmosphere of the place suited her voice better than any other locality she could find on the English side of Dover Straits. Having once determined where she would live, Patti began to build a home consistent with her ample ideas of comfort and luxury. The most remarkable thing about "Craig-y-Nos" is that sorten establishment is to be found in such a remote part of the country. It is very much as though Jay Gould had built his Irrington palace in the ment is to be found in such a remote part of the country. It is very much as though Jay Gould had built his Irrington palace in the heart of the Adirondacks, instead of on the slope of the Hudson River. In point of ar-chitectural beauty or extent of acreage it would be absurd to compare "Craig-y-Nos" with any of the great ancestral estates of the English aristocracy. Many rich neen and women in America possess subarban estates superior to it. But as typifying Patti's pecu-liar ideas of what a comfortable home should be and her indomitable energy, regardless of liar ideas of what a comfortable home should be, and her indomitable energy, regardless of cost, in putting her ideas into execution, "Craig-y-Nos" is really a marvel.

The castle takes its mane from a huge, ill-shaped hill called "Craig-of-the-Night." To get around this hill and make her house moderately accessible from the railway station, Patti spent $20,000 in building a rondway. Then, in adding to the house already built on the estate, clearing woodland, laying out gardens, digging an artificial pond for breeding trout, and putting the interior of her home in comfortable condition she spent nearly half a million dollars more. She put up a gloss comfortable condition she spent nearly half a million dollars more. She put up a gloss winter garden big enough for two hundred people to wander about in confortably, and stocked it with palms and ferns specially imported for her from the tropics. She wanted a private theater, so she spent $30,000 in building one. In all the mechanism contrivances for the stage required in giving a private performance of an opera this little theatre is as well equipped as is the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. The guests lounge in roomy arm-chairs which may guests lounge in roomy arm-chairs which may be moved about the auditorium at will. Parti had alrendy constructed her private gas-works, when she wished to illuminate her winter garden and thester with electric lights; so she put up an engine and dynamos in a shed ad-

Entron's Norm-Owing to the many unauthorized articles on Madame Path, it is desired the first be been stated that this article was prepared under her personal supervision. Madame Path entertained the John S.A. be appeal representative at her cash, personally furnished all the facts given, and selected all the literarches, the four "Kodak" views being laken by here?

joining the stables, where the noise of the machinery cannot be heard in the eastle. Viewed from a distance at night the theater and garden, brilliantly illuminated by electric lamps, look like a scene from fairyland. Patti is a thorough American in her fondness for locd drinks, so she put in machinery for mak-ing artificial ice and keeping her meat cellars cool. She has a telephone to the pagerest teleing artificial ice and keeping her meat cellars cool. She has a telephone to the nearest telegraph office, eight miles away. In brief, there is nothing contributive to the creature comforts with which rich people in cities usually surround themselves, that Patti has not provided at her home in "Craig-y-Nos."

It is difficult to enlarge an old house placed on the brow of a hill, and have the arrangement of the interior as convenient as may be desired. The principal rooms in "Craig-y-Nos." open into a long hallway, much after the plan adopt-after the plan adopt-ed in our big seaside hotels. The "com-pany" rooms are furnished with all the lavish display that a London up-holsterer given corte Manche could con-trive. Her own apartments in which Patti spends most of her time, are threeher bedroom, bou-doir and library. These are filled with mementoes of her personal association with distinguished people, and trophies of popular regard brought home from her triumphal tours little frame made of some rare wood which is to be found only in the Sandwich Islands, Putti especially values a miniature of the Princess of Wales, taken twenty years ago, before the diva's trouble with and divorce from the Marquis de Caux had brought her into disfavor with the royal family of Eng-land. This miniature is a splendid likeness of one of the leveliest women in the world. and. This miniature is a spiencial fixeness of one of the loveliest women in the world, in the prime of her life. It may be no more than a coincidence that Patti has placed next to this picture of the Princess a portrait of the wife of exPresident Cleve-land, Mrs. Cleve-land, Mrs. Cleve-land.

land and Patti took a great fancy to each other when they met in Washing met in Washington.

Patti always likes to show you the portraits of her mother and father, which she has placed in solid gold frames. It is obvious from looking at them that Putim ost resembles most resembles her father. Nico-lini's portraits are, of course, es cridence all over the bouse; but the most interesting to the visitor, perhaps, are those of Patti herself, taken at different stages of her public career. Her curios re-ceived from pollic admirers clude a golden model of the great bell in the Kremlin at Mosven to the tone. This was given to her in St. Petersburg, one night, when her horses were taken from were taken from her carriage and some young military officers dragged it home leaded with flowers and gifts. Then there is a silver and gold crown, which was banded to her over the footlights at the great opera house in Vienna. But there is no space to describe Patti's possessions of this nature.

There are, for example, a half-dozen grand pianos made specially for her by the best manufacturers in the world,

Putti has two splendid billiard-rooms in her custle, one with a French table and one with an English. Patti handles a skillful cue with either game, but she prefers the French. One of the billiard-rooms contains a wonderful orchestrion, which Patti had built purposely for her at Freiburg, costing twenty-five thousand dollars. It makes as much noise as an average brass band with twenty pieces. It is a really marvelous instrument in its way, enpable of rolling out harmoniously the orchestration of a complete open, or the more familiar tunes in pera, or the more familiar tunes in any opera, as may be desired. A cylinder capable of playing any new tune may be prepared for it at half an hour's notice. Patti's library is ample, but not over-stocked. She reads in French mostly, and keeps thoroughly abrenst of all the modern literature of that literature of that not care much for contempora-neous English novels, and of modern American writers she knows almost Patti's own apartments, which few visitors are permitted to enter, are on the first floor of the house, with the windows looking out on the broad terrace which slopes down to the banks of the river Tawy. Her bed-room, dressing-room and bathroom are luxur-

Her Dog "Richi" room are luxuriously furnished in satin - wood and sky-blue
plash. The furniture is massive and brantifully carved.
The bedstend is of solid oxydized silver, with blue satin canopies to match the counterpane, which is embroidered with old lace.
The toilet set, which consists of sixty pieors, embracing almost every object a woman could find use for, is of solid silver. But the most fuscinating thing about the rooms to the eye of the visitor are the beautiful Persian

Madame Patti and Her Dog "Richi" [Reproduced by special permission]

"Craig-y-Nos," the home of Madame Patti in the Swansea Valley, Wales

rugs, which Patti has brought home from her journeys in the East. She is also the owner of some magnificent skins of wild mimals, of some magnificent skins of wild animals, which devoted English and French army officers, who have worshiped at her shrine, have brought home as trophies from their perilous journeys in the jungles of India and Africa. Half buried in the walls of the bedroom is a moderate-sized safe with a combination lock containing the famous Patti jewels, which make her sparkle with the radiance of the sun when she puts them on in "Traviata." No one but Patti and Caroline, her trusted maid, know the combination to this safe. It is one but Patti and Caroline, her trusted masid, know the combination to this safe. It is probably not an exaggeration to estimate the value of Patti's jewels at half a million dollars. Nicolini, her husband, made her a present of one necklace which alone cost $00,000. In every well-regulated English country house you will find rooms which are called "Royal rooms," whether royalty ever visits them or not. In furnishing royal apartments people go on the principle of the old lady who kept a black silk dress in her bureau drawer so that she might be prepared in case of a so that she might be prepared in case of a funeral. In certain seasons of the year Britfuneral. In certain sensons of the year British royalty—carrying in its wake any number of aristocratic people, whose names figure well in the society columns of the newspapers —is pleased to accept invitations to various "country houses." There is the flercest kind of a struggle among the "who's who" for precedence. Patti is hardly an exception to the rule in her weakness for royal favor. But there are certain things which, following the mexorable law of the royal court, British aristocracy fights shy of—and prominent among them is divorced people. The divorced woman, and even the woman who has obtain-an who has obtained a divorce from ed a divorce from a man who treated her cruelly, is never allowed to forget the fact if she attempts to enter the social domain which is regulated by British royalty. Things may be different when the Prince of Wales comes to the throne: comes to the throne; but while the Queen reigns-never Nevertheless Patti when she rebuilt and furnished "Craig-y-Nos," followed the usual custom in setting apart "royal apart-ments." They are very close to her own and are luxuriantly furnished in office wood and blue satin damnsk.

Patti has named these rooms after the Prince and Princess of Wales, although His Royal Highness and his lovely consort have never occupied them. Still, now that Putti is really married to Nicolini, looks after his children as though they were her own and is light the. married to Neolim, tooks after his children as though they were her own, and is living the conventional English country house life, it is possible that she will soon be put on the same plane with Albani in receiving the Queen's personal patronage. It is a common thing to read in the English newspapers of Albani being summoned to Balmoral or to Osborne being summoned to Balmoral or to Osborne to sing before the Queen. But not so with Patti; at least not yet. It looks, however, like breaking the lee when the Queen allows Prince Henry of Battenburg (the husband of her favorite daughter, Beatrice) to go to "Craig-y-Nos" for the festivities attending the opening of Patti's new theatre. True, he did not take his wife with him, but he wrote Patti a lovely little letter afterward, enclosing a photograph, in which he said that he hoped one day to give his wife the opportunity of visiting her house. Considering the "dead set" made against Patti in high social circles a few years ago, and the untiring efforts of set" made against Patti in high social circles a few years ago, and the untiring efforts of professional rivals to keep it alive, the visit of Prince Henry of Battenburg to the castle was a distinct triumph.

But, royalty aside, you will always find a great number of distinguished people at Patti's house, many of them with titles which command respect and esteem all over Europe; but they are all foreigners. However, the people Patti best likes to gather about her are the clever, cultivated set of London's upper Bohemia—musicians, painters and writers—from whom she can get the brightest ideas and the most accurate knowledge of what is going on in the world. Patti always appears at her best when she is surrounded by people who are thoroughly in touch with her, and where she is not obliged to be too conventional. Patti is not a dissembler. If she does not like you she does not ask you to her house, and Patti is not a dissembler. If she does not like are you she does not ask you to her house, and only people whom she really does like are made to feel that it is worth the long journey to "Craig-y-Nos" for a visit there. Once inside the doors of the castle all restraint is thrown aside and you see Patti as she is—a bright, vivacious and lovable little woman, devoid of all affectation or false pride; a charming bostess, and withal a thorough business manager, quite awake to her responsibilities. ness manager, quite awake to her responsibili-ties of landlord, since she owns one thousand acres of land and arbitrates the disputes of a colony of tenants.

Patti literally begins the business of the day in her bed. So soon as she is fairly awake her maid Caroline comes into the room with coffee and correspondence. Patti seldom opens a letter or newspaper herself, unless it is from some intimate friend. All correspondence is sent to her secretary, who forwards what he sees fit to Patti, with side-note suggestions about the disposal of it. When any letters are sent up for her to personally dispose of she usually answers them in bed. She even signs her checks in bed. Coffee and correspondence disposed of, Patti rises for her bath, great deal of remantic nonsense has been written about Patti's natatorial habits. She has been described as splashing around as blithely as a water nymph in a little palace of resewood and costly percelain, in which the heated air is artificially perfumed. This is ridiculous. Parti is obliged to take a massage both almost every morning for rheumatism. Her bathroom, while in thorough keeping with the rest of her establishment, is certainly not unusually luxurious for an English country house.

Rheumatism is the plague of Patti's life Whatever abstemious regulations of diet and dress she may choose to exercise are conducted with a view to curing rheamatism, and not for preserving her voice. Just at present the rheamatism seems to have settled squarely in Patti's right knee. When Patti has been thoroughly rubbed by

When Patti has been thoroughly rubbed by her Mexican masseur, and the unfortunate knee worked into plinble shape for the day, Patti is transferred to Caroline's bands to be dressed. With certain unimportant exceptions Caroline determines what her mistress shall wear. It is impossible to write anything about Patti's daily life without devoting more than passing mention to Caroline Baumeister. than passing mention to Caroline Baumeister. Her position in the house is a peculiar one, Long years of service have induced Patti to give Caroline absolute direction of affairs which are not at all within the scope of the ordinary duties of a lady's maid. Caroline has thoroughly learned the art of making herself indispensable to her employer. She is an amiable, even-tempered and picus-ant-mannered Austrian woman, well along in years, whose sole aim and purpose in life is to make Patti feel as comfortable and look as pretty as she can. Caroline entered look as pretty as she can. Caroline entered of course, speaks it without even a trace of an accent, but at the same time the conversation runs more smoothly at the table when it is entirely in French. She cats what she likes, and never diets herself.

"It is only singers who haven't much voice who spend half their time in looking after it," said Patti one day when this subject was brought up at lunch. "All that I do in taking care of my voice—except, of course, on the day of the evening that I am going to sing—is to take the ordinary precautions apainst catching cold. The same as regards my complexion. It is regulated by my digestion, and the best complexion tonic I know of is to obey the ordinary rules of health."

After dijenser Patti usually strolls about of is to obey the ordinary rules of health."

After diseaser Patti usually strolls about among her pets. Her love for birds and minute is almost abnormal. She has them all over the house. The greatest pet of all is the little Mexican dog "Richi," which was given to her by the wife of President Diaz, of Mexico, "Richi" is a pet of all pets. He lives literally in the lap of luxury. No mother watches her first-born with more tender interest than Patti looks after the comfort of this tiny little dog. It nestles on her lap or on a rug at her feet when she is at table. It her daily gallop with her Weish pony pets with a ruddy color in her cheeks and a sparkle in her beautiful dark eyes which gives the laugh at once to the claims of complexion specialists. Patti's ponies were never photographed until the picture of them which accompanies this article was taken. After some persuasion Patti consented to have the little animals marched into the vard for a snap shot at them with a camera. She held the instrument herself, but the ponies were so restless that three negatives out of the four taken were failures; the fourth is here given, and can only be considered as partially successful.

Though Patti's passion for pet unimals of all kinds is one of her most womanly qualities, it hardly exceeds her love for flowers. She takes special pride in her greenhouses; and even keeps close supervision over her vegetable garden. Nothing pleases Patti better than to hear her guests praise the melons, peaches and grapes grown on her own farm. In fact, Patti nakes a perfect hostess. She is the very embodiment of life and vivacity, taking ample comfort out of all the luxuries with which she is surrounded. She eats heartily.

ing ample comfort out of all the luxuries with which she is surrounded. She eats heartily, as her appetite dictates. She knows and en-joys a glass of good wine, but she drinks very moderately. When she is with special friends after dinner she smokes and evidently enjoys a cigarette.

At 5 o'clock every guest at "Craig-y-Nos" may have ten served in their room. The din-ner hour is at 7.30, and Patti exacts just as much promptness about this mest as she does for the disease. Dinner is always a full-dress affair. At 7 o'clock the chimes in the clock tower give ample warning to the guests. These bells are a duplication of

are a duplication of the famous chimes in the tower of the Houses of Parlia-ment. As a rule, Patti does not be-lieve in leaving the gentlemen alone for an hour or so after an bour or so after dinner for their cigars while the ladies roam about the house waiting for them to appear. All leave the room together for the billiard and smok-

she favors her guests with a song or two after diamer, and then she freely gives them their choice of nousic. If they want "Annie Rooney "she sings it for them, and she can sing it charmingly, too. Like all women who desire to keep well and bright, Patti believes in going to bed tolerably early. It must be a very exceptional circumstance to keep her from her apartments after 11 o'clock.

After all, Patti at home is very much the same as Patti on the stage—a bright, impulsive, entertaining little woman, with a warm heart beating with continual goodwill for those who love her; a devoted wife, and a most generous mother to the children of the man she loves.

A Corner in the Boudoir

The Billiard Room and Orchestrion

A Favorite Walk along the Lake

[From "Kodak" pictures personally taken for THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL by Madame Patti]

Patti's service a little more than twenty-five years ago, when the diva was stopping at Wiesbaden. The engagement was only intended to be temporary, but it has lasted all these years without interruption, and probably will not be broken until death terminates it. Caroline goes everywhere with Patti. She accompanies her to the opera houses and concert halfs; sees that there are no drafts in the dressing-rooms; heads off would-be callers and interviewers; sees that offerings of flowers left at the stage door are not allowed to reach Madame Patti until after she has done singing for the night. Caroline says that the perfumes of certain flowers—violets particularly—affect Patti's voice almost as much as a cold. She does not, for instance, allow Patti to have any plants or even cut flowers in her bedroom.

The wardrobe which Caroline has to select plants or even cut flowers in her bedroom.

The wardrobe which Caroline has to select from in arranging her mistress's morning tollet is not remarkably extensive. Keeping her stock of rich stage dresses and finery as a thing apart, Madame Patti does not spend anything like so much on dress as an average American woman who has not one-quarter of Patt's income. She bays the best of everything, of course, but she is very careful of her clothes, and as she "goes out" very little except on professional duties, her evening dresses last her a long time. Women who visit Patti often and know her very intimately, say that she is, all things considered, very economical she is, all things considered, very economical in her dress. Her extravagances are more in the direction of expensive undergarments. When Patti's toilet is made she sends for

When Patti's toilet is made she sends for her "bailiff" in her own anartment, and dis-cusses the management of the farms on her estate. She owns several of them, nearly all small holdings. Patti is a very lenient fand-lord as landlords go, but she is not at all lax in the management of her property or in the collection of her rents. If, as sometimes hap-pens, a tenant has had a bad harrest, and can-not say his rear Patti either extends the time. new his rent Parti of the owtor hands the tenant a receipt for the amount, as her judgment dictates from the necessities of the case. She is thoroughly alive to what is doing, and if she catches a tenant trying to upon her good nature, she directs the bailiff to turn the screws a little. But as a rule all the farms on Patti's estate are prosperous, and bring her in a substantial revenue. The land is fertile and the tenants are thrifty. They appear to be very fond of Patti, but so, for that matter, do all the pensant people in the valley. The women curtsey to her and the men uncover their heads as she drives along the country roads. Patti is undoubtedly generous to the poor. She always gives them a Christmas treat at the castle each year, and once a year sings at the charity concert in Swansea, which nets about $4,000 for the poor of the neighborhood.

It is close toward midday before Patti puts in an appearance among the guests stopping with her at "Craig-y-Nos." Of course, every-body has had coffee and toost, with eggs if they wish it, some hours before. Patti allows her visitors to ring for their breakfast when they choose and have it served in their rooms. But she always likes them to be punctual at the first formal meal of the day at "Craig-y-trots along after her when she takes her walk trots along after her when she takes her walk about the grounds, and at night it sleeps in a wee little cot of ciderdown close by Patti's bedside. Two or three times Patti has insist-ed on having Caroline bring "Richi" to her dressing room at the theatre. But the little animal always howls dismally when Patti sings, so it was found wiser to leave him at home. The picture of Patti with "Richi" on her lan accommanying this article was given sings, so it was found wiser to leave him at home. The picture of Patti with "Richi" on her lap accompanying this article, was given to the writer by Patti especially for The Laders' Home Journal.

Next to "Richi," Patti probably loves her parrots best—and the famous "Jumbo" most among the parrots. She bought this precocious parrot at a store in Sixth Avenue, New York, for $6,000, being attracted by the richness of his voice and his almost unlimited vocabulary. Just why Patti calls him "Jumbo" it is hard to imagine. He is not at all a large bird, as parrots go, "Jumbo" has the reputation of being an exceedingly vicious creature, and he has drawn enough blood from people who have attempted to take liberties with him to justify the reputation, But with Patti he is gentleness itself. He perches on her shoulder, nestles his soft, brilliant feathers against her cheek, and tenderly holds her jewelled finger in his fierce beak, Until "Jumbo" came to England it was popularly supposed that W. S. Gilbert, of comic opera fame, had the most intelligently talkative parrot in England. But "Jumbo" now takes the lead in that respect. When Patti is away from "Craig-y-Nos." and "Jumbo" misses her usual daily call, he sits in a very dejected manner in the bottom of his cage and constantly pipes out in a doleful tone: "I am so sick! Harn so sick! Where is his cage and constantly pipes out in a doleful tone: "I am so sick! I am so sick! Where is Among Patti's other birds of plumage is another parrot named "Pinkie," who came from New Zealand, and can talk maryelously fight with "Jumbo" than talk. Then there is a whistling bullfluch which is sometimes brought down to the dinner table to amuse the guests at dessert. This beautiful bird seems to know that he is on exhibition at these times, and whistles wonderfully. He seems to feel amply rewarded with a piece of sugar bestowed upon him by Patti. Most of Patti's household pets have been purchased by her during her travels. She is a splendid judge

Of course Patti, like all tender-hearted women, likes horses. Her stables are full of them, but her especial pets are two little Welsh ponies, strong and agile, and as well built as the famous little Norwegian ponies. Patti saw them at a Welsh fair, fell in love with them and bought them. They cost her $300 cuch. She drives with them every day when the weather is fine. It is an especial Patti behind these ponies. She handles the reins very skilfully, guiding the lively little animals over the smooth, hard roadways with the swiftness of the wind. A few years ago Patti used to ride a great deal; but the rheumatism has stopped that. She thoroughly enjoys driving, though, and comes back from

THE JOURNAL THROUGH THE SUMMER

THE next (June) issue of The Labres' Home Journal is the first of the summer numbers, for which a number of special timely features have been prepared. Through these numbers there will be sprinkled articles dealing with "Flowers at June Weddings," giving the newest flowers and points of floral efiquette in connection with June nupilals; an entire pure given over to new ideas for an entire page given over to new ideas for "Lown Parties and Out-Door Fetes;" the benefits of "Rowing for Girls," will be presented; Mrs. Potter Palmer, in a specially contributed article, will outline the part which women are to take in the World's Fair.

Mrs. Beecher's famous reminiscent papers will continue to their conduction during the arms. ie to their conclusion during the su mer, the remaining articles being among the most interesting in the entire series. Mrs. Gladstone will contribute her closing article Gladstone will contribute he: "the famous on "Hints from a Mother's Life;" the famous on "Recountry will disport on "Hitts from a Mother's Lie;" the famous and fining little "Brownies" will disport themselves on the Brooklyn Bridge, in Inde-pendence Hall celebrating the Fourth of July, take a summer trip down the Mississippi River and visit the grounds of the World's Fair. Three new stories will also begin, one by Miss Sarah Orne Jewett, depicting the life of a New England girl; the second by Mrs. Caro-line Atwater Mason, and the third, a beautiful love story of the Southland, by Miss Julia Magruder. Some special articles on needle-work mitable for support matching will be not work suitable for summer work will be pre-sented, while at the end of the season, in preparation for the approaching busy time, a page full of "New Ideas for Church Fairs" will have a special interest. In addition to these, thirty or forty other articles and short stories will be given—all of a fresh, timely character prepared with a special view to sample of the contract of the contr mer reading, when we are upt to wish for en-tertainment perhaps, more than for instruction in our literature. Then will begin the special autumn and winter issues to which particular attention are naturally given each year.

"Swinging my hammock gently, he sat near me in his favorite big rocker."

A MODERN MARTYR

A Story. By Madeline S. Bridges

HAD been engaged to Lof-It to been years, and when I passed my thirty-sixth birthday the serene out-look promised that I would be engaged to him fifteen more. He was three years my senior, stout, rather fair, with an ugly, charm-ing face, the kindest heart in the world, and a strong, At least it seemed to be enerenergetic will. getic in every direction except the way that led to marriage. Not that I ever doubted the love of my Lofset to marriage.

Not that I ever doubted the love of my Loftus, nor his fealty, but I could not understand why he seemed so blissfully content in being my lover, just my lover. No one could fill the rôle more perfectly, and his devotion was so established, and so constantly apparent in even the slightest detail, that everyone in Piniley, where we had grown up together, blamed me for Loftus' probation, and I was openly reproached for dilly-dailying with so honest a man and so true a lover. I could not consistently inform the public at large, and my censors in particular, that however well-disposed a woman may be, she cannot marry the man of her choice until he asks her to name the day, and this preliminary my betrothed had studiously avoided. He never even remotely approached any avenue that might lead to the subject, though he occasionally referred very sweetly and tenderly to our life together in the future.

Time, of course, brought about many other marriages in our immediate circle. All my brothers and sisters went off in regular order until there were only left with father. Tom, my youngest brother, and myself. After a while Tom "went on the road" for a Boston commercial house, and finally was offered a chance in a new branch of the same concern just started in Denver. To my great surprise father not only urged his acceptance of the offer, but expressed a strong desire to go with him and remain a year or two.

"Dell won't want to leave Loftus," he remarked calmly, "and any way they'll be married before long, I suppose." This had been a favorite supposition of father's for a number of years. "We could go by way of Chicago and see Uncle Eb and the folks. It's a trip I've always longed to take."

I listened to these words and felt them as if they had been blows of a clenched hand, but the produce of the could be the supposition of a clenched hand, but they had been had been blows of a clenched hand, but a trip I've always longed to take."

I listened to these words and felt them as if they had been blows of a clenched hand, but the pride by which an angel fell was strong in me, as it is in many of the world's common-place and everyday women. I bit my lips to keep them from trembling as I said. "Wouldn't it be lovely! such an altogether new life and experience,"
"Yes," said father lightly, and I loved, oh

res, sand father lightly, and I loved, oh how I loved him for that speech! "but it won't be such good fun without my daughter. If she could only come—if there wasn't any question of that other fellow that can't spare her"—

In a moment I had made up my mind. But I am going with you if you go," I said, smiling. "What did you think? Of tourse I need not stay. I can come back and be married, or Loftus can come to Denver, if we like it enough to settle there. You see, there's no time set for the marriage, and a year or two won't make much difference."

or two won't make much difference."

I am afraid there may have been a touch of sarcasm in my tone, but it passed unnoticed.

"Why, that's it," said Tom, briskly. "Time goes on, and people might as well have a change from the old rut. We can shut up house here indefinitely. We can find some one to keep the grounds in order. What's to stop us from having a picnic of three?"

Lott in my commission a vacue idea rather.

I felt, in my own mind, a vague idea, rather a hope, that Loftus might, or perhaps desire to, make it a picnic of four.

That afternoon when he came I spoke. He usually stopped on the porch every afternoon on his way home except Tuesdays—his howl-ing club—and Fridays, which were given to poor little Eunice Craig, who had been for years an invalid. I thought it one of the lovellest traits in his character, this kindness to one so weak and suffering. Of course, we all went to see Ennice occasionally, all of the "old crowd," both married and single, but Lottus was her suchor and standiby, and the feeling with which he was regarded in the Craig household was little short of worship. I was never jealous of the time he gave to Eunice—it made me love him all the more. Well, so when he came sauntering up the walk about four, and took his seat near me in his favorite big rocker, I broached the Denver project with much promptness and gayety. He had begun to swing my hamnock gently, and continued so to swing it.

"But you're not in earnest, really, are you, Dell?" he asked at last. I was dying to get a sight of his face, but couldn't without sitting up.

"Of course I'm in earnest," I responded readily. "Tom and father are in earnest; why shouldn't I be?"

"But Tom and kindness to one so weak and suffering. Of why shouldn't I be?"

"But Tom and your father haven't —me—to think of."

-me—to think of."

"You great buby,"
I answered, laughing.
"I won't stay longer than a year."

"You might see some fellow you would like better," said Lodgus fortornly.

said Loftus, forlornly, "Oh, I think I am too old now to change my mind." I was be-ginning to be a little a m u sed at his resigned, yet wretched manner. "I don't know that women ever get too old to change their minds," said Loftus, in the same reproachful tone.

Do men ever get "Do men ever get old enough to make up theirs?" was on the point of my tongue to ask, but I had never been sharp with Loftus, and it seemed a poor time to begin,

"You could come and see me once or twice," I suggested. lt's a delightful

"It's a delightful trip."
"Awfally expen-sive, dear," said this exasperating man.
"Well, if I pay your way out you can surely pay it back." I said, laughing, but Loftus did not laugh. "I michto!" want

"I mightn't want to come back," he said gently. Then there was a long silence and the hammock went on swinging. Had and the hammock went on swinging. Had ever woman such an aggravating lover and one so dearly lovable?

This was the beginning of many such discussions. We kept perfect friendliness while opposing each other on every point, and our talk always ended where it began. He demanded no sacrifice, but, on the other hand, he offered none. I felt that I was only responsible to Loftus in so far as I desired his happiness. I desired it with my whole heart for ness. I desired it with my whole heart, for in it lay my own enfolded, but I felt too deeply to be anything but firm and proud, And so the day came, the still, beautiful, October day, and Loftus walked to the train with us, and waved us a good-bye from the platform as we rushed away with a shrick and rattle from dear old Pimley.

But first we had a moment to ourselves on the shady side of the station, with not a soul the shady sale of the station, with not a soul in sight, but I don't think Loftus would have cared if there had been a regiment. He kept his arm around me and never took his eyes from my face. I was very, very miserable, but I smiled and chatted through it all. Loftus scarcely answered me; he ground his teeth now and then, and once the tears came down his face.

now and then, and once the lears came down his face.

"You know that I belong to you, wherever you are—you believe it—don't you. Dell?" he said once or twice. And then, "It's hard to let you go." But the whistle shricked and father called, "Come, Della," and then poor Loftus kissed me with a smile and whispered." God love you, Della, my wife, my dear, dear wife." Those were the last words I heard him say, and then father leaned across to close the car window against the cinder-showers. the car window against the cinder-showers, and Tom was putting on his big, loose, linen

We went to Chicago and stopped at other cities along the line, and came safe at last to beautiful Denver, but my heart stayed in Pimley. It was a great, big, glorious world that the train had traversed, vast stretches of reairie, majestic heights of mountain land, busy, thriving towns, and active, splendid people. Pimley was a little quiet village among the New England hills, and in it was the one loved human being who made or un-among the New England hills, and in it was the one loved human being who made or unmade the world for me.

He wrote to me often, my dear, strange Loftus, but he never spoke of coming, nor of my return. His letters were full of kindness and sweet, everyday affection, but there was a tinge of bitterness in their tone, a feeling as of one at hopeless variance with fate. I used o cry over them and reproach myself so bitterly —for what? Surely I need not blame myself, when he had not reproached me. If only once he had written to me "Dell, come back," self, when he had not reproached me. If only once he had written to me "Dell, come back," or "Dell, I miss you," or made me in any way conscious of a nearer duty to him, I am sure I could never have borne so patiently, nor at all, my exile. But, as it was, I could only let the days go on—though the sweetness of my life seemed going with them—and wait.

We had a lovely little cottage for our house-keeping, father and Tom and I, on the outskirts of Denver, and a view of valleys and mountain-tops that were a censeless wonder and delight. I felt the charm of this grand, solitary nature in the intervals of pining for the picket fences and dwarf orchards of my

the picket fences and dwarf orchards of my "native heath," and used to rove about in stout shoes and a big hat, getting within restricted limits some faint idea of "magnificent distances" so lavishly spread before the eye.

sun was near its setting, and the low evening light seemed to spread in a hush over the wide beauty of the world. I crossed to the wheat field and through the gate in search of my wayside patient, and there, a little in from the road, standing quietly against the hedge and looking at me as I came, stood—Loftus, Liddy's brown what herecard to the will.

and looking at me as I came, stood—Loftes,
I didn't know what happened to the milk—but I knew afterward when he showed me how bally his clothes were deluged—for the dear fellow was kneeling on the grass before me, with his face hidden in my arms.
I can't remember what we said at first, it was so mixed with sobs and tenrs and kisses.
He looked pale and worn and thin, Loftus thin! And oh, it was so sweet to laugh together, as we laughed when I stammered out, "Tom sent me here to find a—sheep—that—that was lurt."

"And you've found him, haven't you?"
said my dear, dear Loftus. "And whom are you, you little brown milkmaid, with the amburnt face?"

Oh, those wonderful sweet first momenta.

Oh, those wonderful sweet first moments, when I knew he was with me once again! But I think he must have been aware that my face was dirty, though he called it sun-harms.

"And why have you come in this way?" I asked him when I began to collect my thoughts a little,

"Oh, the idea of surprise was Tom's. I found him at his place of business and we came out together, and then he told me to wait for you here, and he would make some excuse to send you, alone."

"Oh, Loftus! but I mean how happened.
"I come from Pimley, so suddenly, and—you to come from Pimley, so suddenly, and—without telling me?"

"Dear," said Loftus, with a very grave face,
"I came because—because—Eunice is dead."
I could only look at him with wide eyes of

I could only look at him with wide eyes of amazement.

"Eunice Craig is dead," he repeated, still more softly, "I can tell you now why I could not sooner claim my wife. But you have trusted me as never woman trusted busband, or lover—Dell, Dell, how could you know that I have loved you all these long, long, weary years that we have lived apart."

But I did not heed his question. "Oh, poor Eunice," I said, with a rush of sorrowful remembrance. We had both known her as beautiful, strong and young, and the ending of the story seemed so pitiful, "Her life was too sad, Loftus! we can only be glad of the too sad, Loftus! we can only be glad of the

"You never knew how sad her life was, Della," said Loftus, gently, "nor how much I suffered for her. While she lived I could not ask you to be my wife. She had made wife. She had made me promise this long, long ago, though she knew I loved you with every beat of my heart."

"Ennice made you promise?" I asket, slowly. It seemed I could not understand his words.

his words.
"She had no right to ask this sacrifice," he said, quickly, "but—she had loved me all her life. I did not dream of her feelme an ner life. I did not dream of her feeling until once, when I was very ill,—you remember the time I was hurt so badly in Craig's lumber mill? They nursed me at the house, you know, and Eunice was with me day and night. She thought I was dying and did not hide her beart, poor child—but I was engaged to you—and I told her—and after that she never seemed like herself again. And then her great illness came, and the doctors give her no hope of recovery. That was the time she made me promise That was the time she made me promise not to marry until she died, and above all never to tell you she had asked this promise. No one thought she could live longer than that summer-and yet for twelve years—twelve years, Della, she has kept me from your side. Doesn't it seem side. Doesn't it seem in explicable how such a thing could happen?"

"Oh. you dear, splendid—martyr you?" I said, gasping. "And all the "Care!" said Loftus, with an emphasis that made me feel myself a wretched ingrate. And then be added in a determined, business-like way, "I want you to marry me to-morrow, Dell,—not one day later. I've been a martyr long enough."

I felt that be had been indeed.

long enough."

I feit that he had been, indeed, but I answered, laughing, "Then you must begin to be a saint." And he really proved himself worthy of the name by waiting more than a week with most exemplary patience, until I had a pretty white dress made for the wedding. We are living in Pimley, in the old house, under the maples. Father is with us, and Tom comes on Hying visits now and then. Our children play among the lanes and meadows where I and Loftus played. I am a very happy woman, but I often wonder how it would have been if Eunice had not died!

"There, standing quietly against the hedge, and looking at me as I came, stood-Loftus!"

One day I came in before dinner, rather tired, very sunburnt and dusty, and was about to disappear for half an hour's seclusion and a bath, when I heard a man's footstep sound quickly on the wide piazza. I knew it was not time for Tom, but nevertheless Tom it proved to be. He had come in from town a little early, his hands full of packages, books, little early, his hands full of packages, books, etc., as usual.

"Della," he called, "can you come back down the road with me now, this minute? There's a poor sheep there that's badly hurt in some way. I don't exactly know what has happened, but bring some milk, will you? and we'll see what we can do. It isn't far, just off the first turn, by the wheat field. I'll run up stairs with these things first."

But I did not wait for Tom's escort. I was off down the road with a little tin pail of milk off down the road with a little tin pail of milk almost before his last word reached me. The

NAMING A COUNTRY HOUSE

By Frances E. Lanigan

conntry hotsees ar as a usual thing, de-scriptive;

in America trey are not to be imitative. One reason for this lies, perhaps, in the extreme difficulty of finding a name for a home which will suit the taste of its inmates, have a modicum of originality, and bear some slight signi-ficance to the location.

A PPRECIATING the difficulty of choosing a name, The Labres' Home Journal offers some suggestions which may be of assistance to some of its readers in their quest. Of recent seasons it has become the fashion to unite the Christian or nicknames of some of the members of the family in the naming of country residences. One of the best of these exam-ples is "Lillenmyn Villa," the name of Post-master General Wanamaker's cottage at Cape ples is "Lillenmyn Villa," the name of Postmaster General Wanamaker's cottage at Cape May Point, the name being a happy combination of "Lil" and "Min." the abbreviations of Lillie and Minnie, the names of the two daughters of the bouse. Another successful union of this kind is "Kajim Lodge," Kate and Jim being the nicknames of the two bends of the household. This can be pursued indefinitely—"Marjo"—Mary and John; "Berwal" —Bertha and Walter; "Edwyl"—Edith and William; "Fantom"—Francis and Thomas.
"Bertheilyn" is a particularly happy combination of Bertha and Ellen, and "Carlanam," of Carl and Anna. But these are more than sufficient to indicate the idea. This custom of using the name of some members of the family may be used in another and equally effective manner by spelling the name, Christian or surname, backward. In Quebec is a large family residence known as "Darnoc."
For generations the eldest son of the family, in whose possession the house always remains, has been Courad, which is the reverse of "Darnoc." Edward will give "Drawde," which used in combination with House, i. e., "Drawde House," has certainly a familiar sound. Robert is "Trebor." and Walter is of "Darmoc." Edward will give "Drawde," which used in combination with House, i.e., "Drawde House," has certainly a familiar sound. Robert is "Trebor," and Walter is "Betlaw." Women's names can be used even more successfully. Agnes gives "Securga; "Lydin, "Aidyl," Frances, "Securaf." Christian names can be used in vet many other ways, as "Mary Lawn," "Villa Matilda." "Gracelands," "Ellenslie," as Vice-President Morton calls his country home at Rhinescliff, and Klicak, are also examples of the different ways in which Christian names can be combined with success. Surnames are also valuable, used alone or in combination. "Griffin's Corners," "Hartley Hali," "Houghton," "Warrington," "Compton," "Gromoto," "Carlton," "Elton Lodge," "Pembroke," "Langhorne," "Morton," "Shirley," "Brandon"—almost any family name of beauty of sound can be utilized in this way. "Bigelows, who has devoted match of his attention to India, deserves certainly to be mentioned as an original and sensible title.

CoLORS may be used with effect; the name being, of course, taken from the prevailing tint of the paint or stone of the exterior, "Canary Cottage" is the title of Mrs. Thomas Scott's Bar Harbor villa, "Red Top" was the name of President Cleveland's home near Washington, and "Gray Gables" is the some-Washington, and "Gray Gables" is the some-what similar title of his recent summer pur-chase. "Green Grove" is an alliterative name and "Geeynook" a cozy one. It is well in combining a color to form a uame, to choose, if possible, an alliterative adjunct. "Blue Bay" is a charming summer home, and "Brown Benches" another. "Greystone," which was one of the first of American country places is some of the first of American country places, is one of the best examples of this utilization of color in the choice of a name

Names of trees are plenty, "Beechcroft," Evergreeus," "Glenwood," "Codar Park," Names of trees are plenty. "Beccheron, "Evergreens," "Glenwood," "Cadar Park," "Lebanon," "Lindenshade," "Oakleigh," "Maplehurst," "The Clestnuts," "The Cedars," "The Pines," "The Becches," "The Elms," "Four Oaks," "Waldheim," a wooded bonse, "Aldersca," Tennyson's "Aldworth;" "Lindenhurst, "Elmhurst," acombination of any tree which is found in considerable growth near a bonne, with almost any suffix or prefix, gives a presty and descriptive sufflx or prefix, gives a presty and descriptive

The terminal "burn," "burnie," or, as it is equally often spelled, "bourn" or "bourne," is the Sexteh word for a small brook or stream of water. It can be combined in dozena of ways, and always with characture results, "Rockburn," n. rocky brook; "Milbourne," a. mill stream; "Winterburn," "Highlourne," "Oakbourne," are a very few examples of this thion.

The English word "brook" may also be charmingly combined, "Maybrook," "Silver-brook," "Brookborst," "Brook-wold," "Hilbrook," are only a very few of tirese combinations.

MYRIAD are the combina-M. tions with wood or woods, as "Roughwood," "Glenwood," "Ravenswood," "Woodlands," "Rockwood," "Woodlands," "Rockwood," "Driftwood," "Woodveliffe" or "Woodlands," "Edgewood," "Driftwood," "Edgewood," "Woodveliffe," "Tyny Coel," house by the wood; "Woodvale," "Edgewood," "Woodvale," "Edgewood," "Norwood," "Beechwood," "Norwood," "Woodbura," "Kenwood," "Woodbura," "Kenwood," "Woodbura," "Kenwood," "Woodbura," "Kenwood," "Woodbura," "Arden," "Shadywood," "Nolson's Wood"—any surname can be used in this combination with effect—are a few examples of this class.

"Wold" or "Wald" is an extremely pretty word to use in combination. "Waldborg," "Fairwold," "Waldbeim," "Waldborg," "Beechwald" are a few examples.

The terminal "hurst," which is low Dutch for house-gate or lodge, makes a pretty ending for a name. "Parkhurst," "Maplehurst," house by the maples: "Oakhurst," "Lindenhurst," "Hurstfeld," are a few suggestions for an almost endless variety of combinations.

A pretty fashion is that of adding the suffix "over" to the direction in which the view from a residence may be. "Westover," in Vinginia, is the most famous of this group, but "Landover," "Farmover," and similar combinations may also be used. Quite as good an effect is gained from using the "over" as a profix. Witness "Overbrook," "Overwold," "Overwold," M tions with wood or woods, as "Roughwoods,"

Overwold

PLOWERS, if they grow in any sort of profu-sion about a place, are one of the happiest

L'ACOWERS, if they grow in any sort of profusion about a place, are one of the happisest ways of naming a country home. "Tulip Hill" is the delightful name of an estate in Maryland; "Rosencath" is prettily suggestive of a rose-covered arbor; "Heartsense" losige or cottage or house makes a pretty name; "Wild Rose," "Rosebud," "Lilac," "Violet," "Geranium "—indeed, almost any flower can be united with lodge, or cottage or villa, as "Lilac Lodge," "Violet Villa," "Fuchsia Foet" and "Clovernook."

For a residence stop of a small bill "The Knoll" is always appropriate, "Rockledge," "Hillton," "Hillton," "Hillton," "Highland Heights," "Edgemont," "Grundview," "Starview," "Gverlook." General Crook's Crest, "a personal and descriptive name of beauty. "Clavoson," "Happy Heights," "Mount Stony," "Summer Hill," "Camp Hill," "Clairehout" or its equivalent, "Genricew," "Fernbill," "Stone-cliffe," "Hillsdale," "Stonedge." "Fame" is the name of a house "high up in the world." "Lowland Lodge" and "Poverty Flat" are good names for houses in the opposite situation. "The Rockery"—who does not remember Miss Trottleld's disdaln at hor hoother's purchase of that place in "David Copperiedd," "Ravenbill," "Crofield," "Swallow's Nest" "Eaglesmere" "Buffinch Lodge," "The Dovecote," "Pigeon Place,"—any number of alliterations may be made and applied, if only the birds are found in more than usual numbers. The title "Larks" has been used to dignify a house where good times are hore than conmon; and "Castle Cooy" to one where comfort reigns supreme.

"The "Hernaitage," "The Grey Friurs," "The Monastery." "The Priory," suggest a Cosy" to one where consistent reigns supreme.

"The "Hermitage," "The Grey Friars,"
"The Monastery," "The Priory," suggest a style of architecture which is conspicuous by its absence throughout this country. When a house is possessed, which is of this style, these names are charmingly suggestive and quaint, and can be recommended. "The Rest" and
"The Anchorage," which have been applied by retired naval officers to their homes, are applicable aims to any home-like place.

"Fernhank" is applicable to a house on the river side. As to a woody sequestered spot where there are no banks save those of moss and vine, "Springbank," "Fernhall," Glenbank," "Glenskde," "Fernbank," "Fernside," "Vinebill," "Mossy Hollow;" almost may combination of these words is effective,

POR senside homes many are the names from "" "Nor Nor-West," its opposite, "Sou-East" or, for the more by the sea, surrounded by alder lushes; "Larchsen," one surrounded by larches. "Shady Beach," "Sunay Beach or Beaches," "Mizzentop," or "The Lookout" for places on a height; "Senview," "Ocean Beacze," "Salt Breeze," "Sea Breeze," "Sult Side," "Sea Side," "Ocean Side," "Nor-Nor-West," its opposite, "Sou-Sou-East" or, for the more facetionaly and homestly inclined "Moreouthe Farm," row be Sou-East" or, for the more facetiously and honestly inclined, "Mosquito Farm" may be found suggestive. Many of the names sug-gested elsewhere in this column may be utilized with equal effectiveness at the seashure.
"Landsend" and "Lookout Point" are good names for cape homes, and "Ivy Neck" for an ivy-covered home situated on a little jut of land, "Ivy Losige" and "Ivy Cottage" are equally profty and appropriate names for a vine-mad villa.

"Enderly." "West View." "Outlook," "theseleigh." "Netherleigh" and "Wester-leigh," are all certainly near kin in connection at least. "Lothair," "Waverly," "Windsor" are names whose only claim to utility lies in

"Mount Farm," "The Home Farm," "The Home Farm," "The Home Farm," "Wildest Farm," "Brookfield Farm," "The Farm," "Meadow Brook Farm," "Meadow Farm," "Rocky Farm," are a very few suggestions for the amateur or veteran agriculturist. Utilizing the word farm in the name makes it thoroughly distinctive and pastoral.

THE suffix "mere" is always beautiful,
"Windemere," "Willowmere," place of willows; "Aldermere, place of alders; "Elnere," place of elms; "Waldmere," place of woods or forest; are a few of these combinations, "Wakefield," (with its charming reminiscences of the "Vicar"), "Greenfield," "Davesfield" (a field of crows originally) "Endfield," "Dalefield," "Moorfield," "Feldmont" (a mountain field) or "Feld-spur" (a rocky spur where are fields), are suggestions.
The terminals "ford," "burg," "lyn," "moor" or "dell" are always in good taste used in almost any of the combinations mentioned,
"Edgemoor," "Westfield," "Happy Dell,"
"Woodbury," "Eastlyn," are a few samples of possible combinations. Moors are so few and far between in this country that care must be taken in selecting this name that and far between in this country that care must be taken in selecting this name that the suffix is not imaginative. "Mend," "neele" or "meadow" give pretty names, "Grussmede," "Longmend," Shady Mendow" among them. Louise Alcott's "Plumfield," home of her "Little Men," must have stood sponsor for "Plumstead," just as surely as did her own home, "Fruitlands," for the name of her story, "Paradise." An almost infinite variety of names can be made with these suffixes from the names of the principal fruits found on a piace. "Peach Grove," "Apple Arbor," "Quince Lodge," "Grapevines;" these are further possible combinations.

BEGINNING with Washington Irving's "Sunnyside," one can run a gamut of "sunnys," and "sides" used in different ways, and find, also, that the prefix "shady" brings "sumys" and "sides" used in different ways, and find, also, that the prefix "shady" brings to the imagination an equally charming place. "Shady Nook," "Sunnycliffe," "Sunniecroft," "Sunnyldil" "Sunninghill," "Shady Heights," "Hilleide," "Lakeside," "Riverside," "Mountain Side," "Brookside," "Idleside," "Henside," "Cakside," "Lindenside"—these are all pretty combinations. "Idlewild," "Idleside," "Hoffulay Cottage" and "Tackiteszie Cottage" are more appropriate for a vacation cottage than for a country home.

Country places of considerable area are well named "The Acres," or "The Grange," but it is worse than folly to load hundred-foot lata with such pretentious titles. "The Button," "The Dot of a House" "Homelet," "Homelet," "Tor Place," "Small Quarters" are names applied to these smaller residences.

"Ingleside" is one of the leveliest of names, and with it we might group "Rest Cottage." "Nirrana," "Heartsease," "Hopeton" and "Mount Home." But best of all names, to our way of thinking, is "Home"—the resort "Of love, of joy, of peace and ptenty."

THE PROPER WAY TO SIT.

BY CAROLINE B. LE ROW

FITING upon the spine" is one of the most common abuses of the body, and pro-ductive of more discomfort and disease than any other one cause. While rest is desirable, and the effort to secure it is a perfectly natural one, few appear to understand the proper al one, few appear to understand the proper method of attaining it.

It is very tiresones to sit upright, with no support for the back, upon a three-legged stool for instance; but a great mistake is made in supposing that this support is needed for the shoulders. In a sitting position the weight of the body should rest upon the lower end of the spine. If one sits upon the edge or center of a seat, with the aboulders pressed against the back of it, the only part of the body really supported is the bead. The entire back of the body has no point of support whatever; the weight is thrown upon the backbone. As the backbone, or spine, is flexible, it is possible to "sit upon it" by stretching the ligaments which connect the vertebre. This posture, a curve of the back from the shoulders to the end of the spine, causes an unnatural and inend of the spine, causes an unnatural and in-jurious strain. The chest sinks, the lungs are transped by this compression of the chest, every organ, and consequently every function of the body, is more or less disturbed. The struggle and friction with which, under these circumstances, their work is carried on, re-sult in irritation and consequent disease. The stronger the general constitution, and the sounder the general health, the longer can this physical disturbance be kept up without un-pleasant effects; but they are as sure to follow as the night is sure to follow the day.

A proper sitting position requires that the spine shall be kept straight, and that the support treaded for the upper part of the body shall be felt in the right place. Therefore, sit as far back as possible in the chair, so that the lower end of the spine shall be braced against the back of the seat. If this back is straight the shoulders will also rest against it; if not, they will have no point of support, and it will be found that they do not need it. This posihe found that they do not need it. This post-tion makes no strain upon the ligaments of the spine. It allows a proper position of the shoulders, consequently of the chest, conse-quently of the langs, stomach, and every other organ of the body. Their work is enr-ried on using ally and comfortably, as is also the circulation of the blood, which in a wrong sitting position is seriously interfered with, With the feet resting squarely upon the floor, the lands resting easily upon the lap, perfect equilibrium, and consequently perfect rest of the body, is secured. There is no strain upon any part of the body; no muscle or organ is required to do more than its britinate amount of work. The arms should never be folded; for this position not only causes a strain upon the sidne, and all the other earlies already reserved to, but, in addition, places the weight of the arms upon the stomach and the diaphragm, thereby increasing the labor of digestion and respiration. Placing the bands behind the back, or folding the arms behind the back, if possible, is a good attitude to take necessionally, giving, as it does, the fullest ex-pansion to the whole upper part of the body.

THAT OTHER WOMAN

BY LAURA ATWATER KIRKMAN

you know her? That other woman who comes into some of our lives, and for the time being upsets our domestic equilibrium, darkens the matri-monial horizon and almost makes our hap-plass to ter? She aimost makes our happiness totter? She may be a very innocent sengegoat indeed, and often is comparatively, if not entirely, ignorant of the tragical part she is playing in the little domestic drama; and yet there she is, in our eyes, at least, a living grievance, and not a phantom of the imagination—as in nine cases out of ten she really is.

You are young levies.

You are young, loving and foll of ardent devotion to the husband of your choice. Nothing can come between you or mar the perfect happiness that is yours—that goes without saying. You are both fond of society, and you are foud of showing your little circle without saying. You are both fond of society, and you are fond of showing your little circle how completely wrapped up in you is the man you have elected to worship and be worshiped by, and all goes merry as the marriage bell that has just rung, until that other woman steps into your life. She is not much to look at; she never is, in our eyes. And you know full well that your busband can see nothing in her to admire, nor would be stoop to flirt with any woman. But why allow her to practice her little coquetries upon him? Why look so amused and entertained with it all? Jealous? Certainly not. There is a difference between jealousy and hurt pride; hurt by the shadow, not the substance. The other woman has, perhaps, been one of your girl friends, and you know her to be a flirt, eager for conquest, and vain enough to construe a very little into enough to feed her inordinate vanity.

The fact of making an impression on a new-ly-married man, and shaking, however slightly, his allegiance, adds sest to the game. Of course, you know that it is not in her power to do anything of the sort; but the experience is not a pleasant one, all the same, and the result is often the first little rift when you try, under your eyes, to calmly give vent to your feelings, which is not always an easy thing to

is not a pleasant one, all the same, and the result is often the first little rift when you try, under your eyes, to calmly give vent to your feelings, which is not always an easy thing to do. For, call it what you will, there is no man on the face of the earth who will believe that anything but jealousy prompts a remonstrance on the other woman question. It is, perhaps, their inordinate vanity; or it may be that some of them, standing self-convicted, see a cause for jealousy. A woman may not be jealous, for jealousy implies doubt, when she sees one she cares for seemingly acting his part in a passing flirtation; but if ske is half a woman her self-respect and pride receive a blow, and confidence a jar; for has not the love she rests on delivered her over to the Pidlistines by allowing the other woman to even think that she has (as I heard a woman expressit) "taken a rise out of her"—his wife.

"I wish you wouldn't turn and stare at other women when we are on the street together," said a little lady to her liege lord who, on a crowded thoroughfare, was making very good use of his eyes.

"Not look at the women!" came the stongood use of his eyes.

"Not look at the women!" came the astonished reply. "Nonsense! you're not jealous?"

He couldn't see any reason for an objection.

and to convince such a man of the utter want of delicacy of his actions would be an ardnors task. I trust, for her own sake, that the little task. I first, for ber own sake, that the little wonats gave it up.

In my own case the other woman came during my engagement, and her name was legion! My finned was away from his home and in constant receipt of letters and remembrances, not only from his home circle, but from many old friends of the female persuasion, among whom were several who had figured in certain attacks of the culf love that every young man is subject to at that point of his career when first he done a dress-coat.

These were to me thores of the sharpest kind, and I shall never forget how the scales

These were to me thorns of the sharpest kind, and I shall never forget how the scales fell from my eyes when, after our marriage, we visited my bushand's home, and I saw these poor, unoffending damasels as they really were. One in particular, who had on one occasion sent to her old friend some prettily bordered kerchiefs (which were immediately confiscated), was, when seen in the flesh, so far from attractive or dangerous, that my first act on returning from my trip was to band an act on returning from my trip was to hans up the poor offending souvenirs and utilize the pretty borders to trim a night-robe for my lond and meeter!

Don't let the other woman darken your horizon. She is generally a myth. Look ber in the face, and if she does not vanish into thin air altogether she will appear to you, as she is in reality, shorn of her power, and, let us hope, innocent of all the sins you have laid as her door. Above all, do not be that other woman yourself. You may be tempted, in all innocence, to play the part, but do not let thoughtleseness or love of admiration make you the cause of a single heart-note to any The godden rule is an old one, but always safe to go by, and it comes in very aptly between woman and woman.

THE GIRL WHO LOVES MUSIC

W ILL perhaps never have a better oppor-tunity offered her of gratifying her desire for a musical education Hun through the offers made by The Ladies' Home Jornson-Nearly forty girls are now at the New England Conservatory of Music, in Boston, being noisically or resulty educated at the Journal's expense, and as the Boston "Journal" recently "These girls are receiving the very best the Conservatory affords, the most desirable rooms in the building are theirs, and ther have all their wants carefully looked after by a wealthy periodical." Any girl can learn all about these offers by simply writing to Tue Labous Home Journal, Philadelphia,

Digitized by Google

Mr. Beecher As I Knew Him

By Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher

IN NINE PAPERS.

SEVENTH PAPER

[All rights protected and reserved]

the commencement of Mr. Beecher's public life, his love of books, and desire to possess a fine library, was con-trolled by the absolute necessity for the strictest economy, although be found it wise to avoid book-stores even then. No man was so then. No man was so belpless in a book-store, or at a book-sale, as was Mr. Beecher. It would have also given him the greatest pleusure, in our early days, had he been able to make presents of pretty things among his friends, as he did later, when less pecuniarily cramped, he indulged himself with his natural large-beartedness.

HIS LOVE OF BOOKS

WHEN we had been a few years in Brooklyn he could in some degree gratify his tastes for works of art, gems, paintings, and especially books. He had always earnestly desired to possess a large, well-selected library, and now intended, by degrees, to secure it. But temptations in a large bookstore were almost irresistible, and sometimes, before he was aware, he had indulged beyond his intentions, and these mistakes were often the cause of great amusement to us both.

before he was aware, he had indulged beyond his intentions, and these mistakes were often the cause of great amusement to us both.

Returning from some unusual "raid," he would come to me with the semblance of great distress, but making a laughable failure of it, and lament over the great temptations that waylaid him in every store. "And where is human nature so weak and helpless as in a book-store," he would say. "The appetite for drink cannot be half so powerful as the temptations which beset a book-lover in a large, richly-furnished book-store."

"Well! How largely have you invested in books to-day?" I asked once.

"Did I say I had bought any? I was speaking of the temptations. But you know how little skill I have in figures. When tempted to buy expensive books, I endeavor 'to take account of stock' (isn's that the proper business expression!) and learn just how much I can afford to spend, but you know the bill comes in much ahead of nor reckoning. You needn't laugh! Am I to blame because I am not expert in figures?"

Of course, I knew there was a box of books on the way. But no one could resist the

Of course, I knew there was a box of books on the way. But no one could resist the quaint humor mingled with this precense of penitence.

How vividly 1 recall one scene of similar character, when, lying on the sofa, he began to lament his lack of arithmetical skill. In the midst of this effusion he started up, a regular smile glinting over his face, as he

"What are you looking out of the window for with such a sareastic smile on your lips?"

"Why, I thought I heard an express wagon coming to explain how you resisted tempta-tion," and at the moment the wagon halted at the door, and a large box was brought into the library.
"What is that, dear?" I asked.

"Oh, some books I couldn't do without, you

Yes, I know!" and to the astonishment of the driver we were both laughing heartily, while the man stood waiting for his expres

I think Mr. Beecher enjoyed this scene and similar ones of frequent occurrence as much as he did the books—for the time, at least, From this pretense of concentment, he found

From this pretense of concealment, he found material for many amusing articles for the "Ledger," for which at that time he wrote often. In one he wrote, "Buying books before you can pay for them promotes caution, if you are married, it requires no small skill to get your books all into the house before your wife sees how large the bundle is. She knows just when you have exceeded the bounds of prudence, and has little faith in the "somehows" which you try to believe would 'somehows' which you try to believe would help you pay for them. But the express brings them to the door, which your wife opens.

""What is it, my dear?"
""Oh, only a few books that I am needing.
""Oh, only a few books that I am needing."
""Dat smile! A true wife, who lover "Ah! That smile! A true wife, who loves ber husband, can smile a whole arithmetic at him in one look. As the bundle is being opened you seek to divert her attention by some incident, or anecdote, and when at last the contents are exposed, you point out the peculiarity of the binding, or gilding. But it will not do. She gives you her attention, but you cannot efface that roguish, arithmetical smile. People may talk about the equality of the sexes. They are not equal, The silent smile of a sensible book. silent smile of a sensible, loving woman will conquer ten men.

How often was this picture reflected in his own life; the words were indeed "leaves" from his own experience.

Enryon's Norse—Buring the publication of this series of reminiscent papers, a great many questions have come to Mrs. Beecher reasonling points in Mr. Beecher's life not lonebed upon by her. Many of these questions have been of such interest that Mrs. Beecher has consented, at the request of the cellion, to shower them in a special supplementary, article, in he published immediately at the close of this writes. This article will take up such interesting points as Mr. Beecher's habits of dress: the relations with Col. Bober 6, Ingersoil; how he wrote his great sovel, "Norsood," and his "one pagen"; how his voice was trained; the only time he ever swore, etc., etc.

GLIMPSES INTO HIS DAILY MAIL

PROM the time we went to Indianapolis until the last, the number of letters sent to Mr. Beecher increased yearly. Many were sincerely friendly; some, especially during anti-slavery times, vile and threatening. But begging letters were the most abundant, and the aid sought exceedingly curious.

One young man wanted Mr. Beecher to buy him a horse and a hearse, and thus enable him to have a monopoly of the undertaking business in his native town.

Another would much prefer to go out lecturing, instead of standing behind the counter, but had not ability to compose a lecture. If Mr. Beecher would, however, write one for him to commit to memory, he thought be had sufficient oratorical skill to insure success.

A third would inquire Mr. Bercher's charges to give him an hour's training per day in elocution, and in "attractive gesticulation."

course a large proportion of his letters were of an entirely different character.

were of an entirely different character. Many earnestly seeking advice, many thanking him for help and guidance received; some soliciting the solution of doubts that distressed them, some argumentative, some objecting to certain topics on which he had spoken, either in the pulpit, or on the lecture platform.

An English clergyman, or claiming to be one, wrote him several letters, objecting to some sermon, and the lesson it designed to give. He urged Mr. Beecher to appoint a day when they could discuss the subject publicly. Such requests were often made, but without receiving attention, and this one was not noticed. Then the man wrote out his objections, had them published in tract form, and noticed. Then the man wrote out his objections, had them published in tract form, and with it repeated his request for a public discussion. The whole was too foolishly weak for notice. But a few days after this publication, the author called. I met him, and he inquired if Mr. Beecher had received the pamphlet. I told him the pamphlet had come.

"Why did be not reply to it, or my letters?" I told the man that Mr. Beecher had no time for such discussions.

He then broke into a storm of abuse of Mr.

He then broke into a storm of abuse of Mr. He then broke into a storm of abuse of Mr.
Beecher, and called him vile names. I commanded him to be silent, and told him that if be wished to say such things, to say them to Mr. Beecher himself, but not to his wife. He become very ugly, and I ordered him to leave the house. He refused. I stepped to the door to call a police officer, and one being in sight, the man left the house very suddenly.

THE MOST SATISFACTORY PORTRAIT OF MR. BEECHER

[This likeness of Mr. Beecher, taken in San Francisco in 1885, is regarded by Mrs. Beecher and her family as the most acceptable portrait taken of him as he was known to them in the home.]

One woman had lost two husbands, and One woman had lost two husbands, and had not the means to put up a gravestone for the last. She begged Mr. Beecher to give ber the money for one, as she expected to marry again in a few weeks, and wanted this done before her third marriage.

The daughter of a well-to-do farmer far west is unhappy for lack of better dresses than her father can afford to give. She visits her grandmother in a city where she sees a good deal of fashionable society, is invited to a party, buys an expensive dress then writes to party, buys an expensive dress, then writes to her father to cancel her debt. He refuses, and insists she shall go to work and earn it. She appeals to Mr. Beecher for sympathy, tells him work will make her hands unladylike, and begs him to send money to pay her debt,

A young girl of 18 from Illinois took money from her father's desk to come to Peekskill to ask Mr. Beecher to adopt her. She had heard ask Mr. isocher to adopt her. She had heard all his children were grown up and settled, and he was able to give her fine clothes and make a lady of her. In this case Mr. Beecher bought the girl a ticket, put it and money for food and a sleeping berth into the conductor's hands, and she was sent back home.

The mail was brought to our door several times a day, and was usually a heavy one. I generally took it and examined the contents. answering many letters which he never saw, but any that required his attention, or directions to me for answering, I laid on his desk. Often for days not one out of ten was found which it was necessary to disturb Mr. Bescher about. It was important, as far as possible, to relieve him from such demands on his time, and therefore hundreds of letters every year were opened and answered by me which he

When Mr. Beecher came in I told him of the visitor, and how I had ordered him out, "O, you should not allow yourself to get excited over anything of that sort," he said. "Perhaps you might have spoken more gently. It was hardly worth while for you to get angry."

In the afternoon the man called again and met Mr. Beecher. He at once began to reproach him for taking no notice of his communication, to all of which Mr. Beecher quietly listened, but without reply. Indeed, he talked so rapidly there was no pause for an answer. Then he told of his interview with me in the morning, and called me rude names. That roused the man who had listened so patiently to the attack on simself, and be peremptorily ordered the offender to leave the bouse. He refused, and continued the abuse. Taking him by the arm Mr. Beecher drew him. notwithstanding violent resistance, rapidly to the front door, and pushing him out, shut the door, and laughing heartily, threw himself on the sofa. Stepping to his Stepping to his side, I gravely repeated his rebuke to me:

"O, you should not allow yourself to get excited over anything of that kind. Perhaps you might have spoken more gently. It was not worth while for you to get angry." Instead of being subdued as I had been by this reproof, strange to say he laughed all the more merrily. I was subdued, not because I felt that I had been too hasty in my treatment of that man, but because Mr. Beecher scenned to think I had been. But after speaking even more sharply than I had done, and helping the man out of the house so uncere-moniously, he saw only the exceeding ludicrousness of the whole affair, and laughed.

WHERE HIS NAME WAS WORTHLESS

WHILE at the west we had no call for a

WHERE HIS NAME WAS WORTHLESS

WHILE at the west we had no call for a bank account, as the little we had was paid in small sums. After coming to Brooklyn, Mr. Beecher's increased cares and labors gave him no time to attend to much outside his own immediate duties, and therefore all money, or family business, was left in mry hands. His salary was paid to me ench quarter, and while we were so much in Peckskill, by me deposited in the Westchester Bank, and this arrangement occasioned at various times many amusing incidents.

One Monday morning I drove down to Peckskill Depot for Mr. Beecher. It was raining very hard, and when we came to the bank in the village Mr. Beecher handed me thereins, saying: "Hold the horses a moment," "No. Let me go in and get it," I said. "No, indeed! Let you get out in this rain! Not much, my dear!"

I persisted to urge it, knowing as the bank account was in my name he could not draw from it. But he seemed to have forgotten that, and feeling reluctant of reminding him. I made no reply, and he went in. I waited, knowing very well what would follow. I saw him standing by the window, hastily asking for a check. A moment's pause, and then from the president of the bank, from Mr. Beecher himself, and the clerks, came a hearty explosion of laughter. In a few moments he came out to me in the carriage, with a blank check to sign, saying. "This is a plensant predicament. Why didn't you remind me of your reasons for wishing to go in yourself?"

"You didn't give me a chance," I replied. After this incident he opened an account for himself in a Brooklyn bank, depositing therein all his lecture fees, which he always kept for himself as pin-money.

The Westchester bank incident was, however, long a source of anuscinent and badinage between as whenever we passed the bank bailding on our drives to and from the station at Peckskill.

between us whenever we passed the bank building on our drives to and from the station at Peekskill.

HOW HE PREPARED HIS SERMONS

MR. BEECHER'S sermons and addresses sprang from subjects over which be had long brooded. He was not a book student in the usual acceptation of that term. He would read every spare moment. He read slowly, and was frequently annoyed because he felt he did not remember what he read. Verbally he did not remember, but the meaning, the lessons taught by the books he read, sank into good ground, and bore fruit abundantly, perhaps unconsciously to himself.

His sermons were more the result of long rambles up and down the neighboring cities than by studious application to his books. He liked to go into some small shop where workmen prepared various things, to be wrought out more artistically in the larger and more fashionable stores, particularly those little shops where he saw precious stotes, embedded in the rough, cut out and polished, to shine on the counters of the largest jewelry stores. Rough, hard-working men did this kind of work. It was with them he liked to talk, and they liked to have him. From such pilgrinnings he gathered information and suggestions which were often the foundation of some of the best sermons he ever preached. He was emphatically a student of men, not of books.

Mr. Beecher read and wrote often through books.

Mr. Beecher read and wrote often through the week in the family sitting-room, of library, where a large proportion of his books used to be. His literary work was usually done here. Material for sermons were in his mind constantly, but he resorted to no actual preparation for them until Sanday morning. He always came down to breakfast on that day as cheerful and social as if no thought of a sermon, or any responsibility, was near him. But as soon as breakfast was over be went at once to his study, and when there all the family knew he must not be interrupted. There, until the last bell rang for church, be thought out and prepared his sermon. A few lines, as the bruds of each division of it, was all he wrote out.

But not even after the service began, the first all he wrote out.

But not even after the service began, the first prayer, reading the Scriptures, and the choir was half through the hymn, was I ever sure that the notes he had prepared after breakfast would be used at all. Many times I have seen him, while singing, stop abruptly in the middle of a line, lean forward in his chair, and look intently toward some distant part of the church for a moment, then hastily search for a letter, or bit of paper from his vest, write rapidly a few lines, put the notes he had prepared at home beneath the Bible, and when the introductory services were ended, lay the little slip of paper before him, and from what it suggested deliver the sermon. Some of the best he ever preached originated from the inspiration of such moments.

from the inspiration of such moments.

When I saked at various times why he laid aside his notes and preached from those he had jotted down so hastily on the pulpit, his reply was that he had seen some one who he had learned was in trouble, or some one he had learned was bearing great trials in a re-markably patient, Christian spirit, or one who had silently done a most kind or heroic deed, and "blushed to find it fame." At other times he saw one who was resisting all good influences, and seemed going downward to a miserable end. Absorbed in the subject he had planned for the morning, his eye might many times have rested on such cases without drawing his thoughts aside, but now and then they came before him like an inspiration, and the seemed to hear, "there is your work for this morning. Do it."

Ah. as now I sit, alone, looking back, I think how closely in his heart he carried cases that came under his observation—of joy, or sorrow, of sincere repentance, or obstinate wrong doing. wrong doing.

[Mrs. Beecher's eighth paper will appear in the June JOURNAL.]

IN THREE PAPERS-SECOND PAPER

[Continued from the April JOURNAL]

NE of the first points to be considered with the view of promot-ing a baby's healthy de-velopment, is relopment, is respiration. Every time we breathe we taske in an influence either for good or for evil, according to the quality of the air which surrounds us. Upon this point we cannot place too much emphasis, since it as we breathe that we live. In then one are we creatures of our s than one are we creatures of our

RESH AIR FOR INFANTS

a part of infant existence is a part of infant existence is ily spent within doors, we ought sight of the fact that every lives is influenced by the air pain, we must remember that is life;" its action affects every unization. How important, apply and the quality of the necessary it is to know that the to its health and notri-rows this we have only to rove this, we have only to rful revival of a poor little ed from some foul, vitinted ermitted to breathe sweet, > me quote the words of one I the authority of a great e Nightingale. It will be ord of warning for foolish estly advocating pure air.

> what some old nurses
> we a baby fresh air withand, on the other hand, a chill which will kill it blow upon it when it is stance, and chilling its r at all. And depend wh air you give to its or you give to its skin, ble it will be to colds

> > v protest against the smothering a sleeping and mouth, at the This is the more on consent, babies' presumably because the head cool has > > > rsery should be une might almost as on the shelf of a packing box, as in d. An authentic sted child passing a a condition of g on convulsions, imply to the ad-se, ill-ventilated

> > > > qt in the rooms, F., overheating minent charac-r will be found em of a child, em of a child, purity of the toved; proper etc. The air y fresh; es-"tired air" ', just before a should beshould be and exposed

INTS

s example, above, we draughts. d against common cition of zire, the my first

Michent y chil-he air s, even ortion ltered. f it is meht other tini e of

"The efficient ventilation of a child's first nursery, under the special conditions of warmth required, demands a full allowance of cubic space to begin with. In calculating the neces-sary space for bedrooms, where equable warmth is required, any height exceeding ten feet is disadvantageous, and to be left out of ac-

A ROOM fifteen feet square and nine feet high affords ample initial cubic square for a nurse and two children. With good and careful management, a nurse, infant, and two other young children have occopied a bel-room of this size without detriment to health. No useless articles of furniture or of drapery were allowed entrance; both a dressing-room and a bathroom were close at hand; care was taken to keep the air of the room pure; no open vessels were allowed to remain; the door, never quite closed, admitted light and air from the passage; the two windows were partly open on the summer nights; and the fire always lighted before bedtime in the winter. always lighted before bedtime in the winter. Children from seven to nine, or ten years of age may have separate bedrooms, and after that age a separate dormitory for each is requisite. A space fourteen or fifteen feet by eight or nine feet wide, permits of a bed four feet wide to be placed between the door and the wall, and a fireplace in the opposite wall to be beyond the foot of the bed. No double-bedded room should be less than fifteen feet square, and no bedroom should be without a fire and no bedroom should be without a fire

The room door may be left partly open, and there will mostly be an open door either from there will mostly be an open door either from the dressing room or the nurse's room. The doors must be so hung that when partly opened they will shield the bed, rather than direct the current of air onto it. The windows in the summer can be left a little open at the top; they should be provided with shutters, both to keep off draught and to shut out some of the light when this may be necessary; they aid materially in lessening the chill that in cold weather always strikes in from the win-dows. A stout linen or jute fabric makes a good protective window-curtain for the win-ter. All woolen hungings are objectionable in a bedroom, as they readily absorb moisture. ter. All woolen bangings are objectionable in a bedroom, as they readily absorb moisture, and all organic particles suspended in it or floating in the air. The ceiling of the room should be such as to bear rubbing over; it is better of a gray or cream color than white, so as not to reflect too much light on the upward gaze of children. The walls of the bedroom are better distempered, or painted in some even tone of quiet color. If the wall is papered, it should be varnished over, and the paper must have no bright-colored, intricate patternspots, and no vivid greens likely to contain arsenic. The floor must not be carpeted all over, certainly not under the bed, and it is better to have the boards stained and left have round the sides of the room. The top edge of better to have the boards stained and left bare round the sides of the room. The top edge of the skirting-board should be rounded off in all rooms for children. Iron bed-frames should have round edges. Slips of soft carpet by the sides of the bed, and from the door to the fireplace, if not all over the center of the room, are sufficient. Kidderminster carpets are better than those of more open texture for bedrooms, and Dutch carnets, with a smooth bedrooms, and Dutch curpets, with a smooth woolen surface over a hempen framework, are specially suitable for children's rooms and the passages leading to them.

The windows, except for bedrooms, should always be continued up nearly to the ceiling, and are better lofty than large. In the evening, when lights are burning, they may be opened a little near the top, with such arrangements of curtains as to protect those in the room from draughts.

WASHING AND DRESSING A BABY

IN small houses, while the family is small, I the best rooms are very properly used as nurseries. The nursing is good, for it is directly under the mother's eye. Here some of the common cares and duties that make a precautions thus learned are not always attended to when the nurse acts independently of the mother. Old custom lingers long in nursery matters, longest, perhaps, in the first traditional handling of infants, where the experience of the nurse has to be trusted to. The most "experienced nurse" has to be distributed. Experience is often pleuded as an trusted. Experience is often plended as an excuse for carelessness, or as a cause for the nurse's convenience coming before the welfare of the child. To some nurses it is too much trouble to use a thermometer for the infant's bath, they can tell if it is the right heat; if not, it has been said, the infant will cry and look red if the water be too hot, blue if too cold. They are slow, also, to consult the thermometer on the wall; they like the room to be warm, and prefer a bright light from gas or lamps, when the night-light is all that should be allowed.

The temperature of the water used for washing an infant should be nearly that of the surface of the body—95° or 18° F. As the child grows older, the heat of the water should be gradually lessened, while the limbs should be allowed free exercise in a large tub. Some children do not bear cold water well; good sense, discrimination, and observation should be our guides in this as in all other matters.

VIGOROUS rubbing after the bath contri-butes much to the health of children as they leave intancy behind them. Of course a baby's tender skin should be most tenderly dried. It is soothed and protected by the use of violet powder after being washed. The best toilet powders are, in some degree, antiseptic, and are constantly improving in this direction.

Care should be taken with regard to nursery freplaces. Iron or wire guards are really in-dispensable to prevent the terrible accidents which are only too common. It is, of course, well to wash and dress a boby near the fire, but mothers and nurses should never allow the child's ever to be extraord to the class of the child's eyes to be exposed to the glare of the fire, or its head to be hented. We should always hear in mind the delicate organization of an infant's eyes and brain, and the excit-ability of its nervous system.

An infant no sooner breathes than the heat of the body attains the normal. The first dif-ferences of warm or cold felt by the skin, the first sense of touch, excite the requisite morements to bring air into contact with the newly-diverted blood current, and life goes on at a full rate. Respiration is aided by a child's first exertion in crying; washing and rubbing also afford an exercise beyond the muscular kicks and struggles excited; all these quicken change and tend to develop heat.

When a child is put to sleep, whether by night or by day, light and noise should be carefully excluded. Even when they do not provent sleep, they tend to render it unrefreshing.

Children sometimes suffer fatigue or chill from the way in which they are first dressed in the norming. They require a biscuit, or some milk as soon as they get up, and before the abiutions begin. It is much better to give them a general wash in warmed water, in which they could stand while being sponged over with coul or trail water than to dill over with cool or tend water, than to chill them when their powers of reaction are at their lowest. The soap used should not be irritating from excess of alkali, or from im-pure and imperfectly combined ingredients. Bables must easily suffer from this, and also Fables must easily suffer from this, and also from want of care in the warmth of the water used, or from harsh rubbing.

In my next article, I will discuss the buby's clothing, and the importance of training chil-dren by rules of order and neatness.

PATIENT WORK OF MOTHERHOOD

BY MRS. JOHN WANAMAKER

OR no other memory or life can we be so thanklife can we be so thank-ful as for the one that, goes back so far that it seems to be the first of all impressions, the face and form and influence of a Christian mother. That picture, of all pict-ures the most beautiful, is a talisman at every step of the life road. To be in your own child's be in your own child's heart and life what your mether was to you, is not the least of loving and loyal things in honoring her memory, or in serving the small man or little woman who has come into your home to call you mother. Better than the old silver, or rare China heirlooms, to hand down to those who are growing up in our homes, is the memory por-rant of mether's riseless watch and my in-trait of a mother's tireless watch and work in forming the character of the children. The forming the character of the children. The pointing of such a picture is not the flash or dash of one irrepired hour, but the patient mother-work of every day, commencing early with each young life, by no other artist than herself. However much we owe to others for help in child training, if the genius and soil of the mother does not make the portrait, the image in the child-heart can never be the same in its influence and power.

The colors of the norther-artist must be wisely chosen, mixed with prayer and purpose and plan, and ground fresh every day for that day's particular work. "Neither chance nor convenience can produce a masterpiece," said one of the greatest living artists. "I mean to paint a great picture of the most im-sain one of the great picture of the most im-mean to paint a great picture of the most im-portant moment in the history of the war. It shall be the chiff d'avere of my life. I shall read all the books of your generals and histori-ans. I shall spend a year in consulting living witnesses of the war and visiting battle-fields, and then two wars more shall be given to relat and then two years more shall be given to paint-ing the picture." If the works of art that record our history are worthy of such forethought and planning, surely the painter himself, who creates them, is much more worthy of years of training and preparation for his work. That work of education must have first of the mother. Every gleam of intelligence and indication of character must be caught and saved, day by day, in love's camera, until a sared, tay by day, in loves camers, thirly a well-mainred plan is wrought out on which the new life is to be builded. Happy that mother who, in after days, comparing the up-grown child to the first plan for its life, can say, like the architect of the great bridge on the day of its completion: "It is like the plan; I are satisfied." Lam satisfied."

I am satisfied."

That beautiful May day in 1890, when the gentle-hearted old philanthropist of Cleveland, Mr. Wade, accompanied his friend through the structure erected as a memorial to President Gartilled, he said, modestly: "I have seen years on this work: I could not afford spent years on this work; I could not afford to make a mistake and build it into permanence in stone and iron." Great as is the undertaking to build a bridge to be entrusted with human life, or the excelon in enduring granite of the nation's tribute to a martyr president, the responsibility is incomparably versiter in feasing and enduring decision. greater in framing and girding a character that must stand through the eternal ages. The lofty tower of the cathedral, dangerous because slightly out of plumb, splitting with the weight and vibration of the bell, can be taken down and rebuilt aright, but the towering life-structure-never.

The training of children, either girls or oys, should be commenced at that moment when the mother can see in them the first gleam of the knowledge of right and wrong; when they know for the first time that one action merits—whether it receive it or not— reward, and another punishment, because of the action itself, not because of their parents' the action itself, not because of their parents, will. Prior to this, training can be nothing more than disciplining, but when this time arrives the mother's real duties commence, and from that moment date her responsibilities. Girls and boys require very much the same treatment in this matter of training, and I do not know that I believe in making very much, if any, distinction in it. The same amount of firmness, of common sense, of respect to individual character and regard for individual talents should be shown in the one case as in the other.

in the one case as in the other.

The greatest care must be exercised by the The greatest care must be exercised by the mother, as her children grow older, to retain their affection, to be one of, and one with them; to have her daughters talk over the people, and especially the men they meet, with her as they would with any gir friend, and to keep an ever-watchful eye over their girl and men friends alike. I believe most sincerely in girls' friendships, in the friendships a girl makes after she is fourteen or fifteen. They are apt to be her friends for all time, and the years of simple onjoyment and of care-exempted pleasto be her friends for all time, and the years of simple cujoyment and of care-exempted pleas-ures that come before the responsibilities of later life are assumed, are among if not the brightest of her life. After a girl is twenty she is very apt to make friends of married women, women other than those she has known in early girlhood, and who have since married. On these married friends she often lavishes affection and admiration in larger quantities than she has before given her girl friends. Such friendships are—if their objects are the right kind of women, and a careful are the right kind of women, and a careful mother will prevent an intimacy with any other kind—of great benefit to a girl, showing her a wider sphere of woman's influence than she has yet investigated. And anything which widens the appreciation and opens the intellect is valuable.

In these favored days no boy or girl has a finished education if it does not include acfinished education if it does not include acquaintance and skill in some calling that will yield a support in case of necessity. Not a bunsan being of fair ability lives to-day in this country who cannot get an education sufficient to be independent of relatives and friends for a living. The "working plan" is wisest that includes the physical, intellectual and spiritual sides of each life. Girls and boys alike need plenty of fresh air in which to study, play and sleep. The fashion of English girls to walk in the country and climb the hills might well be copied in this land. The badly-ventilated recitation rooms of many of the public schools, not always from want of defective construction of the buildings, but often for want of thought or care of the janioften for want of thought or care of the jani-tor or governing director, is enough to invite the germs of ill health. One look at the white faces, narrow chests and bent shoulders of growing girls tells the story of lost power that no physic can restore—the overheating in many a mansion of nursery and living rooms, of which at the time we are unconscious until the slightest exposure of the winter's blast beats down the frail hot-house plant. Not in-frequently the certain cause of the colds and fevers and pucumonias that turn the winter house into a hospital can be traced to badly-managed furnaces and poorly-ventilated

Outdoor exercise for both girls and boys skating, horseback riding, rowing, lawn tennis and the old-fashioned, almost out of sight croquet, promote healthy development of mid and muscle; ruddy checks and firm and graceful steps are best found in open air, slong country roads, in the perfume of the clover fields and the scent of the autumn leaves. If the mind is to do for your best its distortion the mind is to do its very best its first setting is a healthy body. With perfect health the path of intellectual training is smoother to the teacher and the taught. These are the golden days of American youth. The abandance and reduced cost of books, the new systems of teaching in kindermarks required. ance and reduced cost of books, the new sys-tems of teaching in kindergarten, seminary and college for girls and boys, the liberal en-dowments and appliances of educational in-stitutions, bring the young people of to-day a priceless inberitance. Right well may they be glad that they were not born earlier, when there were fewer keys in reach to unlock the storchouses of knowledge, and less opportun-ity to put in motion the hidden forces and eleeping powers with which almost every life is endowed. With all the assistance offered, and encouragements in obtaining education, it and encouragements in obtaining education, it must, nevertheless, be kept in mind that the proffered aids are but stepping stones, and the endeavor and actual effort must be the act of While no one in these days need be without an education, yet the extent and character of it rests wholly with each individual. Close to the old-time class rooms, doors open into shops and studies where the eye and band are taught the use of tool and brush and chisel; so that beside Greek and Latin the scholar can enter upon the lifework with practical knowledge.

upon the lifework with practical knowledge.

For the really perfect life add to physical and intellectual attainments the culture of the heart; that life is one-sided that treads the round of counting-room or "change," of mill or workshop solely for the purpose of acquiring wealth or position. The development of the higher spiritual nature is needful to a well-rounded life and to reach the clearer air of peace and content. If the better manhood and womanhood within us is to have proper growth, the heart must be kept warm by pure friendships, right living and kindly deeds. The blessing of God on each day is not the impossible thing that so many think, and one such day counts more than a year unblest. Rich indeed is that son or daughter who is Rich indeed is that son or daughter who is hunched from the home shippard with the equipment of a healthy body, cultivated mind and uplooking heart; no sea is too wide, no mountain too high and no task too great for such an one to overcome.

DECORATION

BY CLIFFORD TREMBLY

STOOD beside each mounded grave Where slept the bravest of the brave, And sought a spot where I could place My flowers above a hero's face.

Within a calm, secluded spot, Where passing steps disturbed her not, I placed the simple buds I had O'er her who bore a soldier lad.

XVII—MRS. JOHN JAMES INGALLS

By V. STUART MOSEY

RS, INGALLS is as much unlike her distinguished husband in appearance and manner as one can possibly imagine. Of me-dium height, a figure inclined to plumpoess, an extremely young face, with eyes of changeable blue gray, it is difficult to believe that she has been the mother of eleven children, seven of whom are living. The names of these are Ellsworth, Ethel, Ralph, Constance, Sheffield, Marion and Muriel. In the training of her sons and daughters she exercises the greatest care, and it would be strange, indeed, if they did not make ber an affectionate return for her great devotion.

MRS. INGALLS

Mrs. Ingalls is thoroughly domestic, and her life is centered in her home, husband and children. There are but few women with such strongly-developed domestic traits who are at the same time so thoroughly interested and informed upon all current events. The mental and moral condition of poverty-and informed upon all current events. The mental and moral condition of poverty-stricken districts is a source of much anxiety to her. This finds practical expression in her kind-hearted, tender and considerate treatment of the poor. Many of these come to her at her home with their troubles and sorrowa, and for them Mrs. Ingalls always has ready sympathy and practical assistance.

Mrs. Ingalls is a great reader, although having but little taste for romance. All works bearing on the great social and political problems of the day are engerly scanned, questions of moment being never neglected. She is extremely fond of music, and in her girlbood, and until a few years ago, had a wonderful voice. At the St. Louis (Missouri) Convent of the Visitation, where she was educated, the memory of her voice still lingers with the old nuns, and the lullabys she sang to the many babies of her household echo in their ears to this day. While fond of attending dramatic banes of her nousehold echo in their ears to this day. While fond of attending dramatic representations, Mrs. Ingalls is by no means an authority upon the theater. During the Ingalls sojourn in Washington, most of her time was spent, necessarily, in entertaining and being entertained, and but little oppor-tunity was hers for the domestic pleasures which are so much a rest of her hanciness which are so much a part of her happiness. She is now fully occupied with the furnishing and care of their new home, "Oak Ridge," on the outskirts of Atchison, Kansas, which portrait, have been printed:	accompanies our

* In this series of pen-portraits of * Unknown Wives of Well-Known Men," commenced in the January, 1801, Journal, the following, each accommanded with

MRS. THOMAS A. EDGSON .	January 1991
MRS. P. T. HARNEM	. February "
MRS. W. E. GLADSTONE	March "
MRS. T. DE WITT TALMAGE	April "
MRS. CHAUMCKY M. DEPKW .	May "
LADY MACDONALD	June "
MIDS, JOHL CHANDLER HARRIS	July "
LADY TENNYSON	. Atteust "
Mas, Will Carleton	. September "
MRS. WILLIAM MCKINGEY	. October "
Mas. Max O'RELL	. November "
THE PRINCIPS BUSIANCE	December *
MER. JOHN WANAMAKER .	January 1905
MRS. LELAND STANFORD	. February "
MRS. CHARLES H. SPURGEOST	March =
MRs. Ermene Field	April "
Any of these back numbers can	he had at 10 cents each by writing to the JOURNAL.

has been built to replace the old homestead, burned about four years ago.

The house is surrounded by spacious grounds, which, in the summer days, are aglow with beds of rare and beautiful plants. These beds receive the personal attention of the mistress of "Oak Ridge," and every plant and flower that droops beneath the prairie sun revives when cared for by her hands. In her Kansas home the neighbors love to tell of her wonderful housekeeping, and she is an authority recognized even by that most doubting of skeptics, the young housekeeper.

Mrs. Ingalls, who was born in 1844, was the daughter of Ellsworth Chesebrough, a wealthy silk importer of New York City, who met with reverses during the financial crisis of 1857, after which, with his family, he removed to the west. Kansas possessed little at that time but a name, a few Indians, and a great deal of sympathy from her more fortunate sister States, and life was replete with novel experiences to the young girl whose earlier days had been spent in the metropolis of the new world, from whence she removed to her home in Kansas, where in 1865 she was married to Mr. Ingalls. It is the pride of Mr. and Mrs. Ingalls that they both spring from the purest of Puritan stock; and in their Western home the principles and traditions of that sturdy race, through whose fierce energies this great country has developed, have been recogsturdy race, through whose fierce energies this great country has developed, have been recog-nized and followed. William Chesebrough, who settled in Boston in 1630, and afterward in the quaint old town of Stonington, Con-necticut, is an ancestor from whom Mrs. In-galls claims direct descent. Mr. Ingalls' an-cestors came to this country with Governor Endicott, in 1628.

The relations existing between her husband and herself make it hard to determine which is the greater, Mrs. Ingalls' affection or admiration for her husband, for she is an ardent admirer of his genius: to her, as to many others, he is the head of the nation's thought and progress. In their far-off Kansas borne Mrs. Ingalls is still her busband's helpmate

Mrs. Ingalls is still her husband's helpmate and companion, though her domestic cares occupy much of her time.

In Washington social circles Mrs. Ingalls was extremely popular, her frank, pleusant ways and unaffected manner winning all hearts. Not being wealthy, she never attempted to lead in fashionable circles, her quiet taste finding her pleasures in her home. Her home, while not luxurious, was always cosy and comfortable, and the happy household of merry children gave ample evidence of her tender care. The children all inherit their father's eleverness and their mother's personal attractions and charm of manner. The eldest son is a lawyer, the second is a law their father's eleverness and their mother's personal attractions and charm of manner. The eldest son is a lawyer, the second is a law student, and Ethel, the eldest daughter, has made her mark in literature.

One of the Washington correspondents in describing the hegira of the lngalls from Washington, said: I made a neighbor's call and spent a pleasant hour the other evening at their castellated home opposite the Capitol. The Senator was away making the last arrangements, and the pretty little girls swarmed over the house, exhibarated over the homeward journey next day.

"Now, Mrs. Ingalls," said a lady of the party, "we must not stay a minute, but say a hasty good-by, for you are doing your last lasty good-by, for you are doing your last packing."

"No, I am not hurried," she said, "and have next to nothing to pack. Everything is packed. Mr. Ingalls did it. I tell you, it is a great thing to have a husband who is so helpful and effective as mine is."

How does he get time for everything?"

ful and effective as mine is."

"How does he get time for everything?"
I asked,

"It puzzles me," said Mrs. Ingalls, "but he does. I am glad, every day of my life, that I married a good packer and a good buyer."

She went on: "Mr. Ingalls has fairly spoiled me by his universal usefulness. He can do just anything. He can buy a horse shrewdly, and he can build a house as it should be built, and he superintends the cutting and sale of our wood at home and the running of a farm. To be an editor and a lawyer is commonplace, but Mr. Ingalls can be trusted to select buttons and match a ribbon! What do you think of that? He buys our carpets and curtains and portier's, and they harmonize. He can do the marketing. Now and then he picks out a bornet down-town and tetches it home to me.

"One day when I was home at Atchison, a big box came to me by express from Washington. I opened it and found two dresses—handsome dresses, brand new. I saw at once that a mistake had been made, for I had not ordered any costumes, and I began to pack them away again and wait till the address was corrected. When Mr. Ingalls came up from town I told him about it and wondered whose they were. I got them and exhibited them to him—one a rich gray silk and the other a lovely they were. I got them and exhibited them to him—one a rich gray silk and the other a lovely lace robe. He seted puzzled about it, but said I had better try them on and if they fitted me keep them till called for. I did. They fitted like aglove. The outcome of the inquiry was like aglove. The outcome of the inquiry was that he had voluntarily got them for me when he was in Washington a month before. He selected the silk and the lace and all the nu-terials and carried them to the modiste who had my measure and there they were! This lace dress I have on this minute is one of the trophies of that occasion.

Mrs. Ingails has no favorite colors. Her usual dress is black, relieved by touches of white, pale greens, and soft reds. The darkness of her dress serves only to heighten the whiteness of her hair and the delicacy of her complexion.

Though Kansas women are said to have espoused the cause of "Equal Rights," there are many who still believe that love at the fireside eclipses fame in the world, and there is no woman in that far-away State who is a stronger advocate for the womanly woman than Mrs. John James Ingulls, and she herself is a model for every wife and mother. Of her Milton might have written:

For nothing loveller can be found in woman, than to study household good, And good works in her husband to promote."

DECREED

BY MARY ANGIE DE VERE

STORM swept over the land A and a mighty tower went down, But a nest, the size of a baby's hand, That a wise little mother-bird had planned, Held safely its eggs of brown.

*II.-ALICE FREEMAN PALMER

BY KATE UPSON CLARK

T has been said of Alice Free-man Palmer that "she proba-bly represents to more mothers the kind of person that they wish their daughters to resemble, than any other living woman." Fine look-ing, dignified, full of fire and energy, yet essentially gentle and womanly, she is perhaps as good an exemplar as our modern life has furnished of Solomon's model of feminine furnished of Solomon's model of feminine excellence.

It was, therefore, eminently fitting that she should have been placed at the head of one of the chief colleges for women. It was almost equally to be deplored that she should have resigned that position three or four years ago, even though it was to marry so distinguished a scholar and so estimable a gentleman as Professor George Herbert Palmer, of Harvard University. As a trustee of Wellesley College, and as a part of the social life of Cambridge and Boston, she may be doing more for women and for the world than in her former station; but the girls in the college cannot have that close personal contact with her that pupils enjoy with a teacher, and which is worth so much in the formation of character.

MRS. PALMER

Mrs. Palmer's life, like that of so many of our foremost men and women, was spent in the country. Her father, the son of a farmer, tilled a small farm in Windsor, Broome County, New York. Her mother was a farmer's daughter, and was married at the age of sixteen. At seventeen she was the mother of the little Alice, the eldest of her four children.

Her father was a delicate man. He toiled faithfully at his vocation, but he did not love it. He had always had a decided bent for the study of medicine. The village doctor, who lived only a few miles away, discovered this, and encouraged the young farmer to develop his natural taste. Books were lent him, and at last he went to study in the medical school at Albany. Dr. Freeman celebrated during the past year the twenty-fifth anniversary of his graduation from this institution.

Mrs. Freeman in the meantime took charge of the farm, and when Alice was ten years old the family moved into the village in order that the children might be educated in the scademy there. The village doctor was growing old, and little by little he was handing over his practice to the care of Dr. Freeman.

After a few years of hard study Alice was realy for college. With such parents—for ready for college. With such parents—for her mother had kept pace with her father in his advances—it was not stronge that she was determined to excel She had intended to enter Vassar; but it was one day remarked to her that the standard required for admission her that the standard required for admission to any woman's college was lower than for men's colleges. Exasperated with the young man who told her this, she was debating what she should do when a friend informed her that Michigan University was open to women, and that the preparation needed to enter it was more complete than that of the eastern college represented by the student who had ridicalled the institutions for women. Invesridiculed the institutions for women. Inves-tigation confirming the truth of this assertion, she became an applicant the following autumn for admission at Ann Arbor, where she graduated four years later.

During the long period of mental training. her donestic tastes had not been neglected.
When she was only five years old her mother had left home for a few days' visit, and Alice had considered herself the housekeeper during

*This series was commerced in Title Larges' House JOURNAL for February with an article on Kate Green away, by Ethel Mackenzie McKenna, and will be con-tinued in forthcoming issues, presenting a succession of interesting sketches and portraits, her absence. She early learned to do all kinds of housework thoroughly; and now her pride in the smooth ordering and artistic fitting of her home is as great as in her intellectual triumples.

She has always been fond of horseback riding, and of all out-door sports. To the active life in the open air, insisted on by her father when she was a country girl, she attributes in large part the strong constitution and excellent health which have enabled her to accomplish so much in the world. These are es-pecially remarkable, as she has inherited a tendency to weakness of the lungs. Thus an-other is added to the many weighty arguments in tayor of the "survival of the fittest" in brains rather than in mere physical develop-

When Miss Freeman first went to Ann Arwhen Mass Freeman first went to Ann Ar-bor (in 1872) she found there a flourishing society called the Young Men's Christian As-sociation. The girl-students, who had been admitted to the college only in 1870, were per-mitted to attend the meetings of the "Y. M. C. A.," but were not invited to join it nor to take part in its exercises.

C. A.," but were not invited to join it nor to take part in its exercises.

"I was obliged to remain away from Ann Arbor during 1873," writes a classmate of Miss Freeman. "When I left, the 'Y. M. C. A.' was stiff and forbidding in its attitude toward women. When I returned, one brief year later, a revolution had taken place. The name of this influential organization had been changed to the 'Students' Christian Association,' and the girls were as much at home there as the boys. Alice Freeman had worked this miracle. Her classmates and the faculty had been captivated by her fine scholarship, her charming lack of self-consciousness and her brilliant personal qualities. The young men felt that they could not do without her at their meetings. They wanted her to speak. They wanted her to hold office. Accordingly they convened a special session, altered their name, and made all their arrangements so that the girl-students were from thenceforth as free to enjoy all the privileges of the society as the boys.

"No wormen who ever studied at the Uni-free to enjoy all the privileges of the society as the boys.

"No woman who ever studied at the University," continued this classmate, "has ever done so much to make women respected and honored there as Alice Freeman Palmer."

She pitched the keynote, and pitched it high. Fortunately there are noble women rising now on every side to keep it up, and there is no danger that a lower note will be struck.

In 1879 Miss Freeman went as Professor of danger that a lower note will be struck.

In 1879 Miss Freeman went as Professor of History to Wellesley College. In 1881 she became acting president, and in 1882 she accepted the presidency of the College. As in the days when she was a student at Ann Arbor, so her popularity was unbounded in her new field of labor. Possessing infinite tact, a masterly executive ability, a clear and keen intelligence, and above all a nobelity of nature which is supplemented by the deepest religious inspiration, it was not strange that her corps of teachers and professors cherished in common with her pupils as profound a love and respect for the young college president as has ever perhaps been vouchsafed to one in such a position. For eight years she enjoyed the honors and For eight years she enjoyed the honors and discharged the arduous duties of her office, seeing in the meantime the college of her love waxing constantly in popularity and use-

"She was always thinking of her girls," testifies one of her friends. "Wouldn't this be a good thing for my girls?" "How much the girls would enjoy that!"—such was the burden of her thoughts wherever she wandered.

On one occasion she met an elderly gentleman of large fortune, who seemed deeply interested in her description of the needs of the college. He was evidently ready to bestow a handsome endowment upon the institution, and she was enthusiastically grateful for his generous intentions. Her chagrin may be imagined when she discovered that it was berself in whom the elderly gentleman, like scores of others before him, was chiefly interested, and that the money could not be donated to Wellesley College unless its young president became his in return. It was a hard position for her—but the rich man's funds were finally invested elsewhere.

One of Mrs. Palmer's pet ideas when at Wellesley was to have a "child-party" once a year, when all the little ones under four or five years of age in the vicinity of the college were invited to spend the day there.

"Our girls soe too little of the children while they are studying," she explained. "I want to do what I can to awaken in them that love of infancy and of childhood which is too upt to be dulled during the years of college training."

A member of the Massachusetts Board of Education, Trustee of Wellesley College. On one occasion she met an elderly gentle-

A member of the Massachusetts Board of Education, Trustee of Wellesley College, President of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Association, President of the Association of Intercollegiate Alumnae, President of the Woman's Education Association, and member of many important educational and benevolent committees, it may be readily imagined that the time of this gifted woman is fully orcupied. As a lecturer upon historical and classical subjects she has also achieved a marked success, and it is impossible for her to begin to comply with the requests for her ser-vices in this direction.

A devoted wife, a model housekeeper, a consistent Christian, unspoiled by the praise which is lavished upon her, and apparently unconscious of it, modestly but efficiently discharging the heavy duties which are laid upon her, an ornament to the most cultivated society, capable of filling with honor the most exacting place, Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer is perhaps as near what we would like for-eigners to consider a typical American woman as will be found throughout our broad and progressive land.

The degree of Ph. D., was conferred on her by the University of Michigan in 1882 and that of doctor of letters by Columbus College in 1887. In the latter year she resigned from all active duties to marry, in December, Professor Palmer.

AN AMERICAN GIRL AT COURT

As Told by Herself

[UNDER THE LITERARY CHAPERONAGE OF MRS. L. B. WALFORD]

T inst the great day had come! I, the daughter of a republic, was to be presented to Her be presented to Her Majesty, the Queen of England and Empress of India! It would be ridiculous to say my heart didn't beat; it did; it just thumped, and banged, and seemed to keep saying to me: "Remember, young woman, that and glorious country, young woman, that you represent a great and glorious country, and that in bowing before this woman it is your pleasure, not because she represents a great monarchy, but to you she symbolizes the finest type of womanhood, as wife, mother, and queen.

HOR weeks before I had thought of my POR weeks before I had thought of my dress, my train, my courtesy, my bouquet, and all the important belongings that go to make a woman look as she should on as great a day as this. I laughed to myself when I remembered that one of my sisters had written and suggested that a long-trained dinner dress that I possessed might be "made to do." "Made to do," indeed! A court costume must be just so; its length is three yards and a half—that is, that much of it must lie on the floor—and if it's one inch shorter or longer, the Lord Chamberlain can do something to you. I don't know exactly what it is: thing to you. I don't know exactly what it is; probably put you in the Tower. The presenta-tion dress is always white; the material, satin, silk, brocade, or velvet, as one prefers, the petticoat, which is, after all, nothing more or less than an ordinary ball dress, being quite separate from it, for the train usually falls from the shoulders or the waist. I had re-licursed in it before the looking-glass until it had dawned on me that there was nothing in the world in the way of dress like a court load dawned on me that there was nothing in the world in the way of dress like a court train as far as being a terrible burden is con-cerned; happily it is only down for a few seconds, during the actual ceremony, and the rest of the time is carried about over one's arm. Gloves, fan, those most important belongings, the feathers, and the long tulle veil were lying beside my gown, and the whole thing looked like a fluffy, filmy something that seemed to have fallen down from the clouds and to have belonged to the fairies. The most important thing in the house, next to me, is a full-length mirror, and although I have practiced and practiced, I still go before it and make that awkward "bob" which is demanded by the English Court, and which demanded by the English Court, and which is about as ugly as it very well can be. It must be very deep, and accompanying it must be a quick motion of the hand, whereby the royal hand that is before me is raised very, very gently, and my lips are bent to meet it.

A GREAT many girls have gone to danc-ing masters to learn just what they should do, but my chaperone insists that the girls who have shown the most case and dignity are those who have been taught what to do by either relatives or friends. She has also tald me that neither the Green per any also told me that neither the Queen, nor any of the rest of the court, have much patience with very slowly-performed reverences, be-cause they suggest either the purvenu or the rustic. I draw myself up with an immense amount of pride as I think of my being mis-taken for a parvenu; I, who had an ancestor who signed the Declaration of Independence. For a minute I am almost tempted to let the royal family know that I did not care for an introduction to them, but then I thought it was one of those things in a lifetime that were events, and so I must go through the experience.

Before I start out I have to remember a few Before I start out I have to remember a few. things. I am to take hold of the Queen's hand, I am only to touch it gently, and I am not to really press my lips upon it. Then after that I must remember to make the ten or twelve reverences to the line of princesses and princes at the Queen's left hand. I am not at all troubled about that; it's the bowing before the great, grand woman that makes my heart
these wald have remove me to always to the the great, grand woman that makes my heart throb, and that causes me to almost pray to do what is right. I say to myself, "Patty, keep thinking of the goodness of the woman, and next to that of the credit you must be to your country," I do keep thinking of this until it's time for the hairdresser to come. He was engaged weeks ago, and he can't be keept walt-ing a moment. He is here, and I am inst mg here, and I am just ready. With quick fingers he arranges my hair the pretty, soft way they are wearing it, and places the three feathers in the received way, so they stand up almost straight and are distinctly visible from the front; certainly they are not becoming. I remember the story about Mrs. Langtry, who at her presentation arranged her feathers in a becoming way rather than the approved manner, and had to go back and re-arrange them. I have a tiny face, and it does seem like such a lot overtopping it, however, but they must be seen. It is the "regulation," and I must submit like all the rest. Then my veil is arranged and my bouquet comes. It is of white Illar, lilies, azaleas and roses. My chaperone, being married, is gowned much more magnificently than I am, for "regulation" permits her to wear any form of rich material, and of any color, so her bounds in divides and only color, so her bouquet is of violets and amber orchils, to match her dress. But I—well, I must confess her bouquet is of violets and amber orchids, to match her dress. But I—well, I must confess that I do look like the proverbial hig—I am all white, and though my chaperone has the advantage of many colors, I feel perfectly suisfied with my own immaculate looking gown. And that does give one such a supreme sufficient! One could meet the king of the Cannibal Isles.

NOW I stand up ready to depart. The children in the house and all the maidchildren in the house and all the mainservants are collected to see me, and everybody says "Oh," and "Ah," and walks around me as if I were a doll on exhibition, and, indeed, I feel like one. One romantic maid gives a sigh and says, "I think as how I will go over to Ameriky, marry a rich young man there, and come over here and be interjuced to the Queen." Bless ber heart! You see even the servants in England realize the advantage of being an American. Off we go to the photographer's, and before I am pictured in all my therry I have a cup of tea and a bit of something to ent, because I shall have no opportunity to get anything to eat during the day. I try to look natural, but only succeed in appearing magnificent.

Into the carriage again, and we approach

Into the carriage again, and we approach the palace by the way of Mariborough House and the Long Walk, because that's a pleasanter way to go. The great bouquets on the breasts of the men on the box tell the public that we of the men on the box tell the public that we are going to a Drawing Room. A glimpse in the carriage and a sight of those hideous plumes might have announced this. When we get to the Long Walk there is a long, long time to wait, anything from an bour and a half to two hours, when we stand as still as mummies. There is nothing to do but look at the crowds who are staring at us. Suddenly the horses move one step; I have been to too many balls at home not to know that the gates are open and that one carriage is unlouding itself. My chaperone guesses what I think, and says, "You believe that the people are getting out of one carriage, don't you?"

"Certainly," answered I.

"Well," she said, "Buckingham Palace permits of six being drawn up before it."

A little longer and we are in front of a long stone platform—at least it looks like that; a minute more we drop our wraps in the car-long stone platform—at least it looks like that; a minute more we drop our wraps in the carriage, and alight on the doorsteps of Bucking-ham Palace. My chaperone, having much experience, goes ahead of noe very quickly, and I delightedly trot behind. Up the broad staircase we go, and she whispers to noe, "Get rendy your presentation cards. One must be left with these men at the pallery." I have been systematic enough to hold my card in the same hand with my bouquet, and I drop it exactly as she does hers. Walking very quickly we come to the first room and select good seats among the rows of crimson and gold chairs arranged in a semicircle.

THE first thing that I notice is that there are very few men there. It appears that it is not the regulation thing, unless it is a bridegroom accompanying a bride, or a young soldier eager to exhibit himself in his gay uniform. A "Drawing Room" is essentially a woman's function. In the room beyond us I can see a smaller crowd beginning to collect, but a silken cord is drawn across the doorway between us. In a stage whisper I ask, "Who are they?" And my chaperone answers, "The people who have the entree, that is, the wives of officials, ambassadors and some very great people." Again I ask what the "entree" is, and I am told that the people whom I see in there very much at their ease, chatting, have the privilege of entering by a private door and of being presented to Her Majesty, or the princess holding the Drawing Room, before we are.

After awhile we are close to the silken cord; After awhile we are close to the little room have the people who were in the little room have made their reverences and gone. And soon we are part of a long procession that seems to end in a doorway far off to the right. Just now I am in front of a narrow passage leading to another doorway.

I NOTICE that as each woman goes through here she turns her head; surely the Queen can't be there. I will know when my turn comes, I think, and I do. On the other side of that doorway the wall is lined with mirrors, and one wouldn't be a woman if she didn't take a last glance at herself before entering the room where the Queen of England stands. Before I reach her I see her. I see that good, kind, sweet face that all America knows and honors, and it makes everybody else around bonors, and it makes everybody else around her seem of little moment. I am a republican born and bred, but standing in the presence of Queen Victoria, brought face to face with her, I forget that, and I think that kingdoms may fall and rise, that republics may tumble to pieces, but that the great glory of a womanly woman will rule the world forever and forworld forever will rule the ever. The pages let down my train, the Lord Chamberlain has taken my card, I dimly hear a voice say, "Miss Columbia for Presentation," then a small hand, once the most beautiful in the world, is mised and saluted; but I can't help it, my eyes will mise and I meet those of Victoria, Queen of England and Empress of India, and I am sure they tell her the rever-ence and honor I feel for her. Then I make the proper courtesies toward the line of prins and princes at Her Majesty's left hand.

My train is quickly picked up and thrown over my arm, and the ordeal is over. Somebody tells me that I have done marvelously, and somebody who wishes to give me inforand somesony who wishes to give me infor-mation, whispers that the Queen's pages attend to the truins, and that they are the sons of noblemen, who are given a holiday from school specially to attend the Drawing Room. Then I remember that I saw the beautiful Princess and how superb the Lord Chamberlain looked and how supero the Lord Chamberlan looked in his cloth of gold. Soon we are in the room where we wait for our carriage; friends are net and greeted; I gaze at the magnificent jewels and dresses, but never for a minute do I forget the kindly face of the great Queen, who has known sorrow and joy, and who, through it all, has been a royal woman.

MAYFAIR and Betgravia, Kensington and South Kensington, are all giving "Drawing Room" teas, and we go from one to the other to see the other women, and to give them a chance to look at us. Somebody tells me that my name will appear and my dress be described in to-morrow's "Presentation" list, and I intend to get as many copies as I can, mark them with blue pencil, and send them home. Because, republican though I am, a direct descendant from the Declaration of Independence, I shall always be more than proud to remember that sunny May day when the world looked bright and beautiful, and when I, with all love and respect, was presented to the Queen of England and kissed her hand within the walls of Buckinghum Palace—she an English queen with her life all Palace—she an English queen with her life all but done, I, on American girl, with all my life before me.

IDEAS FOR PRETTY LUNCHEONS

BY MRS. BURTON KINGSLAND

F there is one form of entertainment dearer to the feminine soul than another it is the "lunch party" in its modern development.

The French invite their friends to share their friends to share their "dijenser à la four-chette." upon which meal our modern "luncheon" is slightly modeled, and the English ladies have their five-o'clock tens, which have the same charm of informality; but it remains with the women of America to have evolved the daintiest, most tasteful form of reveat that modern society knows anything of repast that modern society knows anything

At the present day nothing prettier seems

At the present day nothing preffier seems to have occurred to any one's mind to supersede the "color" luncheous, perhaps because nothing more effective can be imagined. For the sake of novelty, some one special flower has been made to predominate.

For instance, a young girl of my acquaintance gave a "daisy" luncheon the other day. The centerpiece was composed entirely of "margaerites" and maiden-hair fern. The square of bolting-cloth, under the flowers, was bordered by a single row of artificial daisles of square of bolting-cloth, under the flowers, was bordered by a single row of artificial daisles of fine quality, a drop of mucilage holding each flower in place. It would be still prettier were the flowers embroidered in silks. The shades for the candles were of the same dainty blossoms, and each guest's name was written in the heart of a daisy, about three inches in diameter, painted on bristol-board, and cut out in shape by the young lady herself.

The doilles, of white satine, embroidered in outline with white filoselle, were also in the shape of the same flower. All the favors, bombons, etc., were white, only relieved with a bit of yellow-green, and the effect was chaste and dainty in the extreme.

At the house of one lady friend, famous for always having some novelty at her entertainments, each lady guest at luncheon found a little poem written on the back of the card bearing her name, partly descriptive of, and, of bearing her name, partly descriptive of and, of course, complimentary to herself. Her next neighbor read it aloud for the benefit of the rest, thus sparing the subject of the verse any or unpleasant self-consciousness. The difficulty of writing such verses is of the slightest, and, provided that they be complimentary, they will not be too narrowly criticized. The more ridiculous and ill-made, the more productive of narrowness, perhans.

About Easter time the same lady procured "houbenseizes" in the shape of hens, about eight inches high, feathered, and natural as life. Around their necks were tied cards, upon which were written barnyard names, suppose to be descriptive of the ladies present on which were written barnyard names, supposed to be descriptive of the laddes present, thee was "merry cackle," another "pride of the West," a third, intended for a ludy with gray bair, "Silver Crest," while the hostess reserved for herself the enphonious name of "old senatch-grave!!"

Another friend aspired to give a "Shakespeare luncheon," at which not only was an appropriate quotation chosen from that writer for each guest, but the menu was entirely expressed in Shakesperean language. Thus, the terrapin was written on the menu "fillet of a fenny snake," from Macbeth, more appropriate than appetizing. The "mushrooms on toast," fenny snake," from Macbeth, more appropriate than appetizing. The "mushrooms on toast,"
"What comes so fast in silence of the night," from the "Merchant of Venice." The squabs were described as "a dish of doves," the words used by Jessica in the same play; the ice cream, "Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes," from "Richard III," and the bonbons were appropriately indicated by the words," "The daintiest last to make the end most sweet," from "King Richard II."

These things cost nothing but a little

These things cost nothing but a little thought, and add a certain zest and give individuality to a luncheon that the visuals themselves fail to do unless more than usually

For the decoration of the table, too, a great deal of effect may be produced with but little outlay of money. A young housekeeper, lacking an epergne, improvised a centerpiece by filling a deep pan belonging to an old jarby filling a deep pan belonging to an one par-dinière with pink roses, and lying around it a wide pink satin ribbon, thus concealing the pan, and making really a charming effect. In the spring she repeated the same idea, filling her pan with yellow daffodils, and tying around it a satin ribbon of exactly the shade of the flowers, painting the outside of the pan the same color, lest a bit should inadvertently while on this subject let me suggest the use of an ex-muzzle to ladies who arrange their own flowers. It is easily procumble at any hardware store, and placed over the dish its wire meshes hold the flowers in place, and besides greatly simplifying the matter of ar-ranging the flowers, it also economizes them, for each blossom does its full daty.

The round tables, now so much in favor, are easily imitated by having a round top made, and merely placed upon an ordinary table, of whatever shape. Any carpenter should know how to make it to prevent it warping, and should not charge more than ten dullers.

The French custom of beginning a "de-jesser" with fruit is popular at luncheons as a change from the oysters.

a change from the oysters.

One hady had the skins of Mandarin oranges refilled with the clear Juice, into which a little kirche and curaçon were added to enhance the flavor. She had procured some artificial orange blossoms, and some natural orange leaves, which any florist will sell for a few cents. Through the little round top piece of the orange skin, acting as a lid, she inserted the wire stems of a flower, two buds and a leaf, twisting them in a knot to hold more firmly.

firmly.

An orange, with its crown of blossoms at

An orange, with its crown of blossoms at each place, was further supplemented by three straws tied together by a narrow ribbon. The elegance of taking anything through a straw may be questioned, but Louis Sherry endorses it, and has furnished them at luncheons given by ladies whose names are synonymous for good taste and good breeding.

If one has a dining-room with a sunny exposure, and can therefore dispense with gas and candle light, nothing is in better tasts than violets for the beautifying of a lunch table. Each lady is pleased to wear the bunch, assigned to her, the air is sweet with their delicate perfume, and there is no color whose many shades are so harmonious as like. A large natural violet leaf, whose veinings arranced with a line of gilt, and its stem tied with a tiny like ribbon to recall the prevailtraced with a line of gilt, and its stem that with a tiny like ribbon to recall the prevailing shade, makes a very pretty "card" for the ladies' names, which may be written across it in gilt. An ivy leaf may be used instead, as it retains its freshness for a long time. It is impossible to make an effective centerpiece with violets, the stems are so short, but the ordinary "fernery" does very well, with four large bunches of the violets placed near it. Underneath the "ferns" a square of bolting cloth or linen with violets scattered over it, embroidered or painted, supplements the embroidered or painted, supplements the flowers, and suggests the idea of greater profusion.

If it be true that "the man who invents a

If it be true that "the man who invents a new dish confers a greater benefit on humanity than he who discovers a new star," then that woman who in the spirit of kindly good fel-lowship succeeds in giving pleasure to her friends, and especially she who puts a little sunshine into shadowed lives, if only by giv-ing a pleasant luncheon, may also be ranked among the benefactors of the race.

THE CARE OF SEAL SKINS

T seems a little odd that the frisky seal who when alive spends most of his time dancing around in the water, when dead finds water is specially injurious to his skin. Nothing will do so much toward making a new seal coat look like an old one as its be-ing mined upon. However, if yours should happen to suffer this misfortune do not attempt to smooth it with your hand, dry it with soft towels or anything of that sort, but take it in a cold room, spread it out and let it stay there until it is dry. Scal skin dried in a heated room will flatten. If it should be trimmed with a fluffy fur, that portion of it may, after it is thoroughly dry, be combed out with a very course comb.

with a very coarse comb.

It is said with truth that the moth which with a very coarse comb.

It is said with truth that the moth which externinates does not enter seal skin; this is quite true, but in his place comes an insidious little worm which eats his way through and is a hundred times more objectionable. He is the result of dirt. You look indignant, and yet many of you put your seal coats away while they are absolutely dirty. Now, the proper way to do is to get out your coat, shake it thoroughly, hang it on the clothes-line and beat it until not a particle of fluff will come from it, then let it sun for half the day, after this fold it enrefully, not doubling it over, but allowing it to lay out its full length; then sew over it very closely, coarse muslin; over this pin heavy sheets of newspaper; then having lined your box with newspapers lay in the queer-shaped package, cover it with newspapers, put the hid on, and to be sure that it is air tight, the it with a good strong cord, mark what is in the box and put it in a dark closet. Use newspapers in preference to any other kind. By putting your coat away so that it is air tight, in utter darkness and thoroughly clean, it will come out when you need it as good as new.

For the trimmed coats a somewhat more elaborate arrangement is necessary. Of course, rate arrangement is necessar the trimming must have a special cleaning and you must be sure to literally bong out all the moth eggs in it, if any are there. For if you put a coat away in which these tiny eggs are, you might just as well count it as eaten up, for they will hatch, and your fur trimming will be greedily absorbed by them. Every woman has her own idea as to what she prefers to put fore away in. I have not found campbor as efficacious as the preparations that have tar in them; then, too, it is more troublesome to prepare, as it should always be put in coarse muslin bags which are then pinned to the fars. Where the other preparation is used it should be literally snowed over the fur, and then the process of covering with cotton cloth and with newspapers, as described for the plain seal jacket, should be followed. But no mat-ter whether the coat is trimmed or plain it is: ter whether the coat is trimmed or plain it is absolutely necessary that it be clean. All sorts of things may be put on it to keep out invaders, but they will be absolutely of no use unless the garment has had every particle of dust literally chastised out of it. Experience is the only teacher of worth, and in telling you how to take care of your seal skin, I am only telling you how the perfect care of them was at last achieved by me. was at last achieved by me.

"At this moment a white hand pushed the portiere aside."

A PRIVILEGED PERSON

By Caroline Atwater Mason

Author of "A Daughter of the Dune," "Mrs. Rossiter Lamar," "A Christmas Girl," etc.

CHAPTER I "A DIG, BUT NOT A PRIG"

DON'T like to sit down without Katharine, my dear; why should she be late to dinner?" asked Mr. Mather, at the same time taking his place at the foot of the table, and inviting his guest, with a motion of the hand, to be sented. "I am sure she will be in very soon," re-plied his wife, as she began to serve the soup. She went out an hour or two ago on Florer Mission business, and I suppose she has been detained. Do you know, Anne, whether Miss Mather has come in ? "

Mather has come in?"
"Yes, ma'am; I heard her go up to her room a few minutes since," replied the servant,
"My daughter Katharine, Mr. Jameson," commented the host, "is a person of prime importance to her father and mother at least, Dinner at our house without her is a very doll affair." dull affair."

dull affair."

"At this moment a white hand pushed the portière aside, and "my daughter Katharine" entered the dining-room. She was not a very wonderful person to look upon, and yet a girl to gladden her father's eyes, with her vigorous roung figure, slender but strong, her bright eyes and piquante face.

Both gentlemen rose to receive her, and Mr. Jerneson was presented to Miss Mather. He

Jameson was presented to Miss Mather. He returned, however, somewhat abruptly after the introduction, to the discourse in which he had been engaged with his host when dinner was announced, with the manner of a man in-tensely occupied with things and thoughts,

Katharine Mather, having listened for a monsents in silence to the conversation, which was on a question of science connected with bridge building, gally entered the lists with a bright but rather inconsequent remark of the sort which passes muster in society as wit.

Her father smiled, Mr. Jameson glanced at her for an instant with his strong eyes, unamused, made no reply, and continued talking with Mr. Mather, almost as if impatient the interruption. Upon this Mistress Kate bridled a little and began to open her eyes. It was not thus she was wont to have her remarks received. Quick of wit, and confident of her power to attract and impress every one she met whom she considered worth impressing, she had thus far passed through the world to an accompaniment of applause and admiration which she hardly realized herself, but which had yet become almost necessary to her. Hence a man who could meet her and greet her, and man who could meet her and greet her, and at her father's table, with absolutely no glean of interest in his eyes, and who could receive her speeches with something like impatience, plqued her pride and aroused her interest.

"Who are you, sir, so mighty made," she said to herself, mentally pouting, "that you consider poor me a bore? Your name is Jameson. Did I ever hear of you? Not that I remember. You are not a professor nor a ductor nor anything else in particular, and you are certainly as far as possible from being handsome, and you have next to no manners. You have rather fine eyes, but I can't endure you. I mean to make you endure me, though, before dinner is over! We'll see," And forthwith Katharine again entered the

And forthwith Katharine again entered the conversation, but in quite another strain from that which she had at first adopted. She was in reality an earnest and thoughtful girl, and thoroughly conversant with many ideas of her father's profession. She easily captured the main points under discussion, and surprised Mr. Jameson by a very clear-headed comment or two, and several intelligent questions. Seeing that she had ideas, he seemed to consider it worth his while to include her in their talk, and at the close of dimeer he walked by her side into the library, explaining a difficult question in a way which Katharine was obliged to noticit to herself was most interesting and masterly.

and masterly, She was satisfied now. Her need of deference had not been denied, al-though not for an instant had Mr. Jameson seen or noticed her, Katharine Mather. Of that fact she was fully conscious. It was simply his intelli-gence communicating with hers in purely impersonal wise. But this she liked. She was not a flirt, and men who admired her were too common to he interesting.

"Have you read Huxton's last article in the 'Review?"" Mr. Jameson asked the question of Katharine as he was taking his leave. She had not.

You must read it, then, us soon as sible. It is a very important article No doubt your father has read it. I think you will find exactly what you want in it, and without an over-burden of technicality. Read it by all means, Good afternoon." And with a succession of abrupt bows, unsmiling and with no pretty speeches, their guest departed.

Well, papa!" exclaimed Katharine. "Well paper" exclaimed Katharine, throwing herself into a big leather-covered cluir and crossing a pair of daintily slippered feet on a foot-stool, "do pray tell us who and what and why is this extraordinary Herr Jameson? He is like nothing so much as a florence following following.

German Gelehrler."

"He is not quite—well—you k now what I menn; that is—it seems as if he were not—don't you know?"—Mes. Mather who was very pretty and very delicate, may utterance to these fragmentary state-ments in a semi-apologetic tone, and with looks which seemed to seek sympathy and assent from her husband and daughter.

"Precisely, my love," rejoined Mr. Mather, "Your intuitions are always correct. Mr. Jameson is not"——and here Mr. Mather himself became vague, or at least failed to give expression to his thoughts.

is thoughts.

Katharine's eyes flashed.

Do, somebody, have the goodness to say

Lameson is not. To say that he what Mr. Jameson is not. To say that he simply 'is not' I claim to be a gross misstate-ment. It strikes me that he is in a very positive degree."

"Yes, indeed, my dear girl. All your mother and I mean to say is that Mr. Jameson is

"Don't stop there, father! don't," cried Katharine; "the spell will come upon you!" "Is not exactly a 'curpet knight," con-cluded her father with sudden energy. "No one will dispute that, I fancy. But now tell us who he is, and why you brought him to dinner."

him to dinner."

"Well, he is a young Scotchman"—

"Not so very young, Nicholas," murmured his wife, "he must be thirty at least."

his wife, "he must be thirty at least."

"No, not very young perhaps, but at least Scotch. I am sure of so mucch. His home is here in the city somewhere. I know nothing of his antecedents, but he is evidently not a society man. What I do know about him is that he is the ablest engineer of his age I have ever had the fortune to meet. As a student I never saw his equal. There is a power of concentration and persistent thought in him which you rarely meet in this country."

"I said he was just like a German," re-remarked Katharine.

remarked Katharine.
"I met him at Professor Kimball's. He has

"I met him at Professor Kimball's. He has been carrying on some experiments for Kim-ball. He interested me so much that I asked him to dine. I have an idea of having him work out some of the bridge plans with me, although I have not broached it to him." "All right," remarked Katharine, nodding her saucy head complacently. "I have him pigeon-boled now! I couldn't quite classify him at dinner. He's a dig but not a prig. A knight (but not a carpet knight) soms peur st saus seproche and also—sous manners."

sans reprocks and also—sous manners."
"But he will bring something to pass Katharine, Notice that."

CHAPTER II

OPPOSITE AFFINITIES

A FEW days later, on a chilly November afternoon, Katharine Mather, returning from a long walk, let herself quietly in at the louse door, and stood for a few moments in front of the great hall fireplace, warming her stiffened fingers before the blaze.

In the adjoining reception room Mrs. Mather was receiving a visitor, an old friend from a distance whom she had not seen for a year or more. Bits of their talk reached Katharine's ears.

rine's ears.

"No, my denr; I am sorry to say there is no prospect of anything of the kind." It was her mother who spoke.

"You can't mean it! Katharine was very pretty when I saw her, and she had that irresistible je se sais quoi about her. I fancied she would receive a great deal of attention."

"Oh, gentleman always like her," Mrs. Mather returned rather wearily, "but she is so peculiar. She is perfectly indifferent to them. Imagine, Laura, at twenty-four a girl who can say she never yet met a man whom who can say she never yet met a man whom she cared to see a second time."

At this point the young lady under discus-sion left the fireplace and tripped noiselessly up the broad polished stairs to her own room. Her checks were glowing with brilliant color, there cheeks were glowing with orithant color, which was not surprising, all things considered. Having closed the door, she tossed her winged hat and long gloves upon the bed, and began walking up and down the room with light swift steps, biting her lower lip, her chin held well up, her fine eyebrows contracted a little over eyes which shone with excitement. A proud, untained creature she looked; and when she ceased her restless walking she dashed a tear or two from her dark lashes with an impatient hand.

"Who were those doughty individuals," she said to berself with a smile of self-scorn-

she said to herself with a smile of self-scorning, "who would die but never surrender? I used to think I was made of that stern stuff."

With the thought she took an engineering magnine from her table, where it lay in the company of Browning and Dobson and Jereny Taylor and the usual literary and devotional lights of a young lady's leisure to-day, and put her mind hard at work upon a certain knotty article.

Mr. Mather's study was at the top of the

Mr. Mather's study was at the top of the house, a great white-lighted room, supplied abundantly with shelves and broad substantial tables, but destitute of decoration or superfluous furniture. It was emphatically a work-room, and the signs of work were everywhere present in the cooling of the superfluors. where present in the endless confusion of maps, plans and drawings, the piles of books and numberless journals scattered everywhere. Katharine spent some hours of nearly every day in this room, copying and writing.

In the hour preceding dinner one day in that same mouth of November, Mrs. Mather and Katharine were sitting with their fancy work in the library when they heard through the stillness of the house the study door open and shut, and steps and voices descending one flight of stairs after another.

Hight of stairs after another.

Who has been up in the study with papa?" asked Kathurine.

"Isn't it that Mr. Jameson who was here at dinner awhile ago? I thought it was as he went up stairs."

went up stairs."

Instead of replying, Katharine gathered her work up in her hands and stepped out into the hall. She wore a soft white dress; down its folds trailed the vivid scarlet of the wools with which she had been working. She pressed her long ivery crochet hook against her lips, and looked up, smilling to her father as he followed Mr. Jameson to the foot of the stairs. There was an unusual continuous moon stairs. There was an unusual gentleness upon her, in the girlish grace of her figure and in the expression of her face. Her father thought he had never seen so fair a sight, and he put his arm about her as she stood, with an air of proud ownership. proud ownership.

Having exchanged greetings, Katharine remarked a little slayly to Mr. Jameson, whose seriousness had not relaxed perceptibly:

"Oh, Mr. Jameson, I have read that article, and I really thoroughly enjoyed it."

Mr. Jameson looked at her, then with the quick question of a man who has no words to spare: "What article do you mean?"

"What article do you mean?"
Katharine's color deepened. Plainly their conversation had made no impression upon him. She wished it had not upon her. How diligently she had studied the intricate mazes of the essay in question? She had faithfully prepared herself to express intelligent opinions upon it, looking forward to a day when this man would come to them again, and ask her about it, with those express eyes upon her. this man would come to them again, and ask her about it, with those carnest eyes upon her, which would search out all shams on the in-stant. To what purpose? He had forgotten her, had forgotten all that he had said. Gally hiding her chagrin, she named the paper. A sudden smile of recollection and pleasure lighted up Mr. Jameson's face. "Oh," thought Katharine, who had not seen him smile before, "why don't you smile oftener? I did not know your face could be so fine."

They talked upon the paper for a few

They talked upon the paper for a few moments, standing at the foot of the stairs, exchanging quick, spirited questions and an-swers with the enjoyment which trained minds have in coming in contact with each other.

Then Katharine made bold to ask their visitor to dinner.

"A small, slight girl, a year or two older than herself, came quietly into the room."

Upon this his old reserve came suddenly back, and with a basty glance at his watch and a mention of another engagement us of utmost importance, Mr. Jameson left them.

""O, for a falconer's voice To lure this tasset-gentle back again!"

ch Kate?" quoted Mr. Mather laughing as they returned to the library together. "You never met a man before who could decline an invitation of yours after this fashion, did you?"

Katharine made a pretty pretense of hoxing her father's cars, while he continued his fond badinage, telling her there would be plenty of clances yet for her to "train her guts ou Jameson," as he was coming to the house regularly now to do the work with him of which ularly now to do the work with him of which he had spoken before.

December was a busy month for Katharine.
The social life, in which she played an important part, became active. There was the namal round of dinners, tens and receptions.

Mrs. Mather liked to go to them all, and Katharine must go with her, weary as she often grew. Her hearty interest was always given to a number of special charities; and a large class in a mission Sunday School oc-cupied much of her thought. Still beyond, there was her own especial little inner circle of friends with whom she read, and wrote, and studied, and consorted on equal terms of and states, and consorted on equal terms of literary fellowship. It was an enger, many-sided life that she led; the life of the typical college-bred girl of the day, but never, per-leaps, was the inner coloring of a life more to-tally diverse from its outward appearing than was that of Katharine Mather that winter. For wherever she went, and whatever she did, whether it was sitting beside her mother in evening dress in their enshioned enringe, or searching out forborn little waifs in the lower searching out forlors little waifs in the lower city streets, or reading Browning with "the Coterie," all her innermost thought was but the expansion by memory and imagination of an hour of the morning, or of yesterday—an hour in the bare, white-walled study, with its cold fight, its severe unsoftened atmosphere of work.

There she had worked with her father, and What had side by side with Martin Jameson. What had he said to her? How had he looked upon her? Kindly or coldly? This had become the sub-stance of her thoughts. Seldom was there a look or word to betray even ordinary personal interest. They were simply fellow-workers, silent for the roost part. But day by day the girl was yielding more to the influence of this man's personality; her lighter intellect was commanded by the concentration of his; the strong steady power of his combood was mastering her.

CHAPTER BI

ONLY ON THE THRESHOLD

THERE, Miss Mather, just step in front of the long glass, please, and see how you like that side.

It was Mrs. Fisher, Katharine's decomaker, who spoke, standing at a little distance and critically surveying the folds of a delicate gause which she had adjusted.

It was a stormy Saturday morning in Febroary, the air whitened with whiting snow-flakes which rattled, keen and slarp, against the window panes. The light evening dress had a strangely incongruous effect in just these surroundings; nevertheless Katharine was extremely protty in it as she moved slowly was extremely protty in it as she moved slowly before the inirror, surveying her flowing drap-ery over one shoulder.

"I am sorry, Mrs. Fisher," was her verdict, "but I don't quite like it yet. It seems a little stiff to me," Katharine spoke in a tone so gentle and with a smile so bright that her criticism was pleasanter than the praise of some women.

some women.

some women.

"Yes, I see it myself," said Mrs. Pisher, slowly, and added, "if you do not mind I am going to ask Miss Ensign to come in and try her hand at it. She does a great deal of draping for me lately, and I sometimes think she is more successful than I."

"Cortainly, have her come," responded.

Certainly, have her come," responded

Katharine, cordially.

A moment later a small, slight girl, a year or two older than herself, came quietly into the room. She stood hefore Katharine a moment, taking a comprehensive glance at the problem in gauze, then keelt on the carpet beside Katharine and busied herself with re-arranging the folds with dextrous fingers.

Katharine observed her particularly. It was her way, always. Everything and every-body interested her. She went through life with open eyes. She noted Miss Ensign's beautiful, fair hair and wished she could "do" ber own in as faultless a fashion. Her face was not pretty, but it had the stamp of un-mistakable refinement of thought and habit, and it was a striking face for a single reason. —it were an expression of pure happiness. Something in the girl's face gave Katharine a strange little pang, the meaning of which she did not herself understand. For the rest, Miss Ensign was merely a self-possessed, mod-est little body, who did her work to Katha-rine's satisfaction, and then withdrew as quietly as she had entered.

That girl must be invaluable to you, Mrs. Katharine remarked casually, as she shed her fine feathers and proceeded to return to her soler "business suit," as she called it. "Yes, indeed, she is," replied the dress-maker, "but I am sorry to say I can't keep her. She will be leaving me one of these days, I accord

I expect."
"Is it so? Why? Will she set up a dress. making establishment on her own account?"
"Oh, no, not that at all. But she has been engaged for a number of years, and I hardly think she will stay with me many months more. Things look a little that way now.

"Oh, I see," rejoined Kathorine, adding differently, "that is always the way. Wh. rejoined Katharine, adding ingirl is good for anything some man always wants ber." Yes, and I suppose it is all right that it should be so. Anyway, I am glad for Amy that she is going to do so well. This gentleman, they say, is one of the most promising civil engineers in the city. He has fived next door to her father's for years. I guess they've kind of grown up together."

"Oh, she is to marry an engineer," romarked Kntharine, with quickened attention. "Who is he? I am always interested in engineers."

"Of course, you would be. Maybe you've heard of this man; your father might know him. His name is Jameson.—Martin Jameson. I guess he is real good to Amy. Saturday nights, when she has to work late, he most always calls to take her home."

always calls to take her home."

"That is proper, I am sure," said Katharine. Her words had a strangely cold inflection. She was drawing on her gloves, and as she bade her good-morning, Mrs. Fisher noticed that she was very pule, although she had a fine, high color when she first came in.

"It's standing so long to have her dress draped, I suppose," concluded the dressmaker, and going back to her busy workshop, thought no more about it.

Out into the stinging storm went Katharine, with thoughts that whirled as fast as the bailstones and cut as keenly. She walked on a mile out of her way, glad of the resist-ance of the wind and weather, glad of some-thing physical to fight.

The first effect of Mrs. Fisher's incidental ambouncement had been a profound slock.

The second effect upon Katharine's mind was a sudden and rapid re-adjustment of its attitude toward Martin Jameson. Theoretically, this young lady was strenuously democratic.

Practically, she could get along very easily with a man, so be was intellectual and high-minded if his antecedents were humble. But when it came to a woman of her own age, in the same environment, an inevitable and ob-stinate resistance marred all her consistency. This, then, was her logic just new: If Martin Jameson were a man of finest fiber he could not wish to marry her dressmaker's assistant; he was, beyond a doubt, engaged to Amy Ensign, hence he was not the man who had ruled her imagination—not her heart-against her will for these months past, and hence he could no longer have power or influence over her.

"That is sufficiently clear, I think," she said to herself, as she reached her father's house, "and I am really glad to be relieved of the Quixotic nonsense which has hardly made me know myself of late."

All this was highly satisfactory. Katharine went to her room and changed

Katharine went to her room and changed her damp and heavy gown for a light house dress, and then betook her to the study to linish certain copying for her father.

Mr. Mather was not in the room, but Mr. Jameson was working at one of the tables, to Katharine's surprise. He bud rarely come to the house in the morning. As she greeted him a vision of the denutre little dressmaker whom when the house her to the little dressmaker whom whe had just now left came before her.

whom she had just now left came before her. She sented herself at her own desk without further remark, but as she turned over the papers which lay upon it, she was all the while, in point of fact, observing Martin Jameson from beneath her half-dropped eyelids.

"How plainly one can see both heredity and him "How plainly one can see both heredity and "His "How plainly one can see both heredity and environment in him," she thought. "His figure is muscular and strong, but without the aiert elegance of the men I meet in society. The same is true of his mind. His face is singularly plain, rough-hewn, some way. I wonder why he ever interested me. At least I am disillusioned now. I ought to be glad of that," and upon this she dipped her pen in the ink and began writing. the ink and began writing.
"Miss Mather!"

Katharine looked up from her paper. Mar tin Jameson had crossed to her desk and steod beside it looking down at her. As she met the clear, direct look in his eyes her own fell, and a painful flush came to her cheeks. "Can you stop writing a moment? I want you to help me a little."

Katharine maranged assent inwardly

Katharine marmured assent, inwardly amazed. He had never done a thing "so human so personal," she said to herself, in all their acquaintance before. Why should be do it now of all times? And why, if be did, should her heart quicken its beating so unreasonably?

"I have pretty good nerve usually," he pro-ceeded with a humorous, whimsical expres-sion. "I would cheerfully tackle a hear or a lion, after David's fashion—that is supposing it to be absolutely necessary—but an invitation to a party like this of Mrs. Kimball's makes me tremble. I become a craven coward," and he smiled under the fire of Katharine's measuring look.

You look like it," she remarked, noting snew his rugged frame and the strength and energy of his face. "Why is it?" "Because I am out of my element, I suppose. I am conscious of a mysen, and a narraid everyone else is who meets me. I feel afraid everyless like an owl."

"Yes, I remember your looking rather like one at Mrs. Stone's. You shouldn't glower if "That is precisely what I want. Go on."

"Well, don't do this then," and Katharine rose, excessed her arms over her breast, dropped her chin very low, attempted to frown, looking up at him under her brows with what tried to be a very abstracted expression, but which want was way to longither in which Martin. soon gave way to laughter in which Murtin meson heartily joined.
"Try again," he said. "You don't look

"Try amin," be sau.
like me n bit."
This was all that his words said, but his eyes said, "You are charming. You fuscinate me. I could watch you forever,"
"You can laugh," said Katharine, confused by his look, "I just heard you, and I think"I have known you to smile twice, or possibly three times. But among people you are three times. But among people you are preternaturally selemn, if you wish me to tell Please proceed."

"Well, in society one must be lighter, you know. One must say gay and pleasing things even if they have no bearing on science or philosophy.

"I see. Can't you help me to get up a few clever things for Tuesday night? I could try them on different ones, you know, and by judicious economy two or three could be made to go a good way."

"How famuy for you to be droll! You should study the 'Happy Thought' man."

"Are you to be at Mrs. Kimball's?"

"Oh, yes. I am inevitable. There is no escaping me. My gown is not so inevitable, as usual. I am even to have a new one for the occasion." Katharine thought of Amy Ensign as she sroke. Ensign as she spoke.

" Now, then, promise me something,"
"Maybe. What is it?"

"If you see me doing anything aggressively bad, throw something at me, as it were. A look would do, I think—one of yours—they are different from any other."

Yes. Or in passing I might murmur,

"This world is all a fleeting show, For man's delusion given."

That is the way you look, you know, when you are being sacrificed 'to make a Roman holiday.

Whereupon they both laughed heartily, and Katharine ran off.

When she reached her own room one thing was perfectly distinct to her mind: the battle was on, not off, as she had thought.

(Continued in next JOURNAL.)

НІ.—Ву Тик Docume

HEN I was young-when I was, say, sixteen—how large the world seemed to me, how full of hope, of all things possible. There was not one thought within me that savored of doubt, of any be-lief in the impossible. I came back from school where tit is always a little difficult to talk of one's self) where, at all events, when I did leave it, it was as head of the highest class, and with the commendathe highest class, and with the commenda-tions of all my masters and governesses. I was then quite a child in every way. I think now, when I notice other girls, that I was the youngest creature for my years that I ever knew—if one can know one's self, which has been so often disputed. Still, I know that I felt only a shill durching more.

been so often disputed. Still, I know that I felt only a child, nothing more.

My people were fond of me, of course, but showed no special interest in me. With my brothers I was a great favorite, but no one seemed to think or even dream that I might do something, sooner or later. In fact, when my first story was published, not only surprise but absolute construction fell upon my family. The boys should and ought to be elever, but that a girl should be able to make family. The boys should and ought to be clever, but that a girl should be able to make a public, of even the smallest order, accept her seemed to our primitive bousehold almost a public, of even the smallest order, accept her, seemed to our primitive household almost miraculous. I remember that my father, a gold medalist, and a very clever man in other ways, was delighted with my small success, but that my mother thought it improper for a young gentlewoman to make money in any way whatsoever.

How far away it all sounds now. Fully twenty years. That first story! The acceptance of it realed my fate. I would write, or do nothing at all. To do nothing at all was the usual thing among the girls with whom I associated, but I felt I could not sink down to that level. If one editor, had regarded me with favor, why should not another do likewise? At eighteen the first story was written and accepted, as I have said, and from the moment when I received the kind and encouraging letter that told me I could write, I made up my mind to devote myself to made up my mind to devote myself to literature. All my hopes ran that way. Should I suc-reed? Should I make a name of any sort? Such were the questions I addressed to myself in the silent watches of the night, when I lay in the stient watches of the night, when I lay often and often with wide-open eyes staring into the darkness, longing for fame and recog-nition. If, when I fell asteep, I dreamed at all, it was of fortune, literary triumphs, and of laurel wreaths—too great, alsa, for my brains ever to sustain, "Dreams, idle dreams." Kind, far too kind, has been the world's verdict on my efforts to amuse and please them, but no laurels are for me. I lay them myself at the feet of those who in this latter half of this century have charmed, instructed and thrilled their readers. I need not name them.

But to return to my bisignificant self. My sailed away joyfully indeed, yet harassed by doubts and fears. Never was there so nervous a beginner, I think, or one so devoid of faith in herself. Oh, the tears I have shed as I walted for an answer to my last manuscript. the desperate despairs that held me off and on. At times I hated and despised myself, and wandered how Lever had the audacity to ask an intelligent public to "buy my wares,

"For thus I'm trangest tossed,
A defiling skilf at most,
I dare the waves, risk cloud and train,
I ever tempt my fate again,
Nor care of 1 be lost."

I had many miserable hours, but oh, the happiness of those others made up for all; those others when the letter came saying may last story was accepted. Then, what was left

* The third of a series of articles commenced by Mrs. ANELIA E. BARS. . . in Becember, 1991 And continued by GRACK GERENWOOD, in which a sexteine of the most famous women of America and Europe have been induced to tell how life looked to them in girlhood, what were their bejon, their decisies such their ambitions, and how they have been realized in later years. The other articles in this series will appear in succeeding issues of the Jougnal. me in the world to desire! The check was of little value; I was unknown, a mere struggling fragment in the big ocean of those who desire fragment in the big ocean of those who desire to rise to the surface of fame. But still it was a check, and more, much more than that, an acknowledgment that some one, at all events, thought that what I sent was worth reading.

That "ambition rules must young nainds" has been said. I do not agree with the sayer of it. Too many girls, and boys, also, are, in any opinion, atterty devoid of it. They take things as they come, are content with what his before them, and nover seek to uttain to a higher atmosphere. With me it was otherhis before them, and never seek to uttain to a higher atmosphere. With me it was other-wise. Ambition from a very early age ruled me. At school I was not at peace with myself until I gained the highest position, and later on it drove me wild risking all on the opinion of the world. I was a strange girl, I often think, though nobody thought so. Certainly I lived two lives for many years-one for those around me, another for my own heart and (what was the same thing) my love stories. Those I wove out of my heart, though of love itself, personally I knew nothing till many years later.

I used to dance a great deal, I remember. I sometimes dance now, for that matter. I was fond of "going about," as they call it, and seeing my friends. I was one of the merriest girls in existence. I talked, sarg, was, as a rule, in the highest spirits, and yet underneath all was the deep craving to write, write, write. To do something. To be different from the idlers, male and female, around me. I stood out from them, as it were. Often I hurried home from dance or picuic (I lived in a partly country place in the south of Ireland near the country was outly seen the his structure was could see the his structure was sould see the his structure. sen, where we could see the big steamers going to and from New York and Boston from our dining-room windows), to throw myself into a chair in my own room, snatch up my pen and jot down little incidents of the just-finished entertainment that struck me as being comis, or tragic, or scenic, and that, above all events.

would be sure to make "copy."

Well, the years went by. Girlhood, that sweetest time of all, would not stay with me, any more than it would stay with others. It came, it went. With a light regret I look back to it, but I honestly confess I would not stay it. There was it with a need but return to it. There was joy in it, surely, but there is a deeper, a fuller joy in the present, when my little ones are round my knees, and my stories, that once I despatched in fear and trembling to the terrible editors, have now grown-like my girls-from tiny things to well-fillet, thick volumes, and are as easily got off my hands as I can only hope and trust my girls will be also. (I hope they will favor

I think all girls should have something to do; the richest as well as the poorest. To be idle is to be (and so it ought to be) miser-What girl with any sort of a reasonable note. What girl with any acet of a reasonable nature can consent to sit down for all her life and do nothing! All cannot write, all cannot paint, or sing, but surely all can do something if only they will try. There was no earthly reason in my young days why I should have sought to make a penny for the penny's worth, yet I desired independence. I let ambition have its way with me, and now-I have already and how hard it is to talk about one's self, but I must say how good everyone has been to me; how successful beyond all my girlish hopes I have been; how full my days are; how replete with the certainty that what I write is looked for.

"The deft spinners of the brain Who love each added day, and find it gain."

as sang a sweet poet, your own poet—now, alas, gone to the "stranger-land" of which we know so little—knew only too well the delight of the pen. Each day, indeed, is a fresh joy, an added gain. To have something to do is the whole duty of man and woman, and then to do it conscientiously and thoroughly so far as in them lies. This is my motto.

My girlhood rests now far behind me, though still well remembered and with satisfaction. The very fears, and tears, and auguish makes its very memory sweet, for all those tears and fears have passed away, and if I confess that I am happier now than I was then, I know you will all be glad of the confession.

THE ILLUSTRATED WORLD'S FAIR

THE finest illustrated publication in the world, illustrating progress and every feature of the great Exposition. 82.46 a year; sample copies 25 ets. Great Inducements to lady agents. Ad. Jewell N. Halligan, Gen'l Mgr., Drawer T, Chicago, *.*

A GOOD, SAFE INVESTMENT Can be had in lots at Griffith. Chicago's coming great factory subart. Did you see the map on the back cover of the February and April Journant. Lock it up and you will find this a valuable hint. ***

D<sup>0</sup> you want to make money? See pocket speller advertised on range 17. It's a most valuable book; well worth the price asked.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria. When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria. When she became Miss, she clung to Casteria. When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

HOME STUDY, Young and middle-aged theorough and processing and processing theory of the state of Decorate your home With a beautiful Exposition made of actin with handsume dwign worked in color and picture of World's Pair buildings. By mail, 50 cents. Hanging Basuer 12 Sixth Street, Pittsburg, Pa.

FRUIT and GARDEN TRACTS

NICE HOMEN, Good Schools. $3000 to $6000 a year income. Easy payments. Write for information. THE BAIR ERCTHERS, Tacoms, West

Digitized by Google

THE BROWNIES THROUGH THE YEAR

A NEW SERIES OF 12 ADVENTURES OF THE FUNNIEST LITTLE MEN IN THE WORLD

By Palmer Cox

NUMBER EIGHT

THE BROWNIES

IN MAY

May brought gladness to the land, And signs of life on every hand, And tuneful birds poured out their song In richest tones the whole day long-The Brownies met to carry through Some work that night they had in view. Said one: "This house we stand about Is all in shape for fitting out; The furniture is ready all, The carpets lying in the hall, The paper for the walls is there In rolls, piled underneath the stair But trouble of a serious kind But trouble of a serious kind.

Has much disturbed the people's mind.

Who here intended to reside,

And so all things are laid aside."

Another said: "I think our skill.

Will answer all demands that will.

Be made to night, in every case,

While putting things in proper place.

If Brownias cannot drive a tack. If Brownies cannot drive a tack, Put up a bedstead, or a rack, 'Tis time we should be bragging less About the powers that we possess."

A third replied: "I think so, too, And I, for one, my share will do; I care not whether on the floor, I stretch the carpet more and more; Or with the paste the walls I smear,

I'll do my portion, never fear." Another cried: "Whatever part You take in hand to show your art, Or mode of working, fast and free, You'll find, I think your match in me. I'm not the one to advertise What I can do when wants arise; But if inventions are required

Just call on one who is inspired." So chatting freely, plans were laid And soon a move the Brownies made; Some in the rooms spread carpets wide And held them down at either side, Still stretching them to suit the case, While others tacked them in their place. Some on the ladders stood to spread

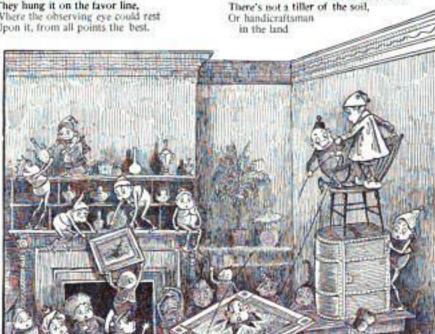

The paste on walls high over head, While others hung the paper there Without a wrinkle, twist or tear: And then the border pasted fast, To make a fine effect at fast. They put the hat-rack in the hall, The calendar upon the wall. And hoisted up the ancient clock Into its niche without a shock; Then wound it up, and set it right. According to the time of night: For though the Brownies never bear

A watch, or any such affair, The rooster knows not better when

To crow and rouse the sleeping hen Than do the cunning Brownies know The flitting moments as they go. Then busy hands the pictures found That were to grace the walls around; And with the rest, to their delight, A Brownie picture came in sight.

And with discrimination fine They hung it on the favor line, Where the observing eye could rest Upon it, from all points the best.

Then hammers for a time were still As Brownies did the parlor fill, All crowding there in great surprise, The work of art to criticise. One spoke, when he had looked with care At every Brownie running there:
"But one," said he, "as far as known, has to the world the Brownies shown

Drawn to the life, and all the band Complete, as here to-night we stand And though the name is wanting here, His style of bandling us is clear." No sooner was the carpet laid

And paper on the walls displayed, Than they began, with much ado, All sorts of things to bring in view. And while they pushed, with eager haste. A ladder was at times displaced Whereon some stood to fung aright. The mirrors and the mottoes bright. Then down would rattle, in a fall, The Brownies, ornaments and all. But many a man and wife can tell How moving tries the patience well, And how they are both lame and sore When such a task as this is o'er, Then wonder not that Brownies found

> Said one: My friends, but that I grieve For people in distress, Fd leave The work Just where it is, and go To some retreat, and never show The least concern in such a case. Or knock my joints

Some hardships as they worked around.

all out of place." But though one here and there would get Discouraged at the ills they met, The mass of workers were content To finish all before they went, And kept engaged without a rest Arranging things as pleased them best, Of course, slight accidents befell

Some articles, however well They worked to keep the pieces whole. At times they got beyond control. And overturned, or downward flew, To cause alarms, and damage, too. Said one: "There is a time for play, And time for work, as writers say, But work o'er which some make a fuss, Or strive to shirk is fun for us.

We Brownies don't spend all our hours In secret caves, or shady bowers, But now and then, as folks will find, Come forth to render service kind; And when we turn our hands to toil

Can hold a candle to the band." But all the same, the truth to tell They found some things that tried them well. Not used to all the ins and outs Of modern furniture, some shouts

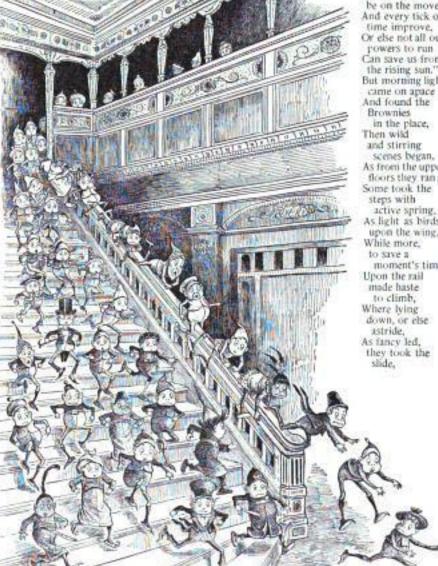

As morning close and closer drew, The Brownie workers faster flew From room to room, above, below, And doing nothing slack or slow. As when some creature's passing hoof, Disturbs the ants' sand castle roof, And those aroused, in fear and doubt With bag and baggage run about. So rushed each Brownie with his load, Now blocking up a comrade's road, Now tumbling over what he bore, Or dropping that, to run for more. When everything, from first to last, Had through their hand in order

And all the house looked clean and new, And they had nothing else to do But quit the place, and get from sight While there was yet a shade of night, Said one: "I wish we could provide A place near by this house to hide, we might watch the great surprise That will enlarge the people's eyes When they arrive and gaze around And see that everything has found Its place, as well as if their care

And skill had been exerted inere. But we must now be on the move And every tick of time improve, Or else not all our powers to run Can save us from the rising sun," But morning light came on apace And found the Brownies in the place, Then wild and stirring scenes began, As from the upper floors they ran; Some took the steps with active spring. As light as birds upon the wing, While more, to save a moment's time, Upon the rail made haste to climb, Where lying down, or else astride, As fancy led, they took the

Would now and then from Brownies rise That told of trouble and surprise Where through a sadden heave or snap They were reminded of a trap, And, heads and heels, in great dismay, Were folded up and stored away, While what to say or what to do To liberate them no one knew.

And downward shooting, to the hall, Slid over newel post and all.

gitized by Google

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Instrated Family Journal with the Largest tion of any Magazine in the World.

Published Monthly by

CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY 133-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa. ress-Rooms at 401-415 Appletree Street

Edited by

EDWARD W. BOK

ciation with MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT MISS RUTH ASEMORE MARGARET BOTTOME ROBERT J. BURDETTE FOSTER COATES MAUDE HAYWOOD EMMA M. HOOPER MARY F. KNAPP ISABEL A. MALLON MARIA PARLOA EBEN E. REXFORD ELISABETH ROBINSON SCOVIL REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D. KATE TANNATT WOODS

Advisory and Contributing Editors. representatives at London and Paris.

Rates

Scription One dollar per year, pay-scription able in advance. Single copies ten cents.

rertising Rates

Five dollars per Agate line each insertion before (this) editorial page; three dollars per Agate line on succeeding pages and all covers. Reading Notices, six dollars per Nonpareil line. These rates are net.

BRANCH OFFICES:

York: Potter Building, 38 Park Row ston: 7 Temple Place, Cor. Tremont St. Chicago: Chickering Hall Building San Francisco: Chronicle Building

LONDON OFFICE:

nperial Buildings, Ludgate Circus, E. C. English Subscription Prices: issue, 6 pence; per year, 6 shillings, post-free

Philadelphia, May, 1892

HOME WITH THE EDITOR

BOUT a month ago I was wishing that some new ex-perience might come perience might come to me—so mething novel. About a week ago it came. I went shopping. Now, I am very well aware that there is nothing exhil-aratingly new about that to a woman; with her it is a sort of reg-ular dict, taken by dif-ferent women in dif-ferent ways. Some ferent ways. Some seem to take a shop-ng tour as they would a piece of confection; hers, as they would a piece of confection; hers, as they would easter oil, or, if nature is endowed them with a Juno-like throat, a il. But a man takes shopping only in one ay—just as he does house-hunting or hiring servant. And if a man is at all reasonable, e shopping tour is about all he wants in a ctime. Some uses couldn't stand two: I is a positive certainty on that point in the se of one man at least.

0

T was one of those rare occasions that now , and then come into an active life, a day comparative leisure at home. I had just tiled myself comfortably away down into e depths of an easy chair, as men are apt to sometimes, when the door of the library ened and a voice as fresh as the bright morng sun outside, said :

Wouldn't you like to drive a few blocks ith me this morning around to the stores bile I buy a few little things?"

Now, there is something unusually inviting a morning drive with a bright and pretty rl in a luxurious carriage, to a man. Such nuces don't come every day, and when one ses. I think a man owes it to himself to take vantage of it. And I did. I confess now at the last part of the invitation did not also so much of an impression as did the st portion—in fact, it was rather lost in the ig'st aspect of the drive. I have since won-red why it is that in this world we must inrichly take the bitter with the sweet. For y part, I would have been just as content to see had that drive lead in the direction of e Park instead of around to the stores, and ne I have been "around to the stores" ear the Park even more strongly. Somehow which I was taken that day, I have an unwhich I was taken that day, I have an an-introllable desire to cross the street. There is a time when such names as "Stern's," "costable's," "Altman's," "Gorbam's," had ther a pleasant sound, but recently,—well, ity last evening a lady asked me if I had en a certain window in one of those stores, at I confess a sort of cold chill crept over c at the mere mention of that firm's name.

I think she took me into one store that day,
I think she took me into twenty. It must have been fully twenty—perhaps more. I stopped all calculations with number eight. I stopped all calculations with number eight. All interest in mathematical matters, however simple, entirely left me with store number eight, and the strange longing I conceived for that carriage was perfectly painful at times. The specialties for which certain stores are famed was a perfect revelation to me. Manlike, I had an idea that one of those immense buzzars was about all that a woman would want for anything she could wear. One furnishing store or one clothier is susple for a man. With a woman this seems to be different—in fact, there is very little "seem" about man. With a woman this seems to be obser-ent—in fact, there is very little "seem" about it; I know it now as an actual fact. During that entire shopping excursion I was conjur-ing up with what little mind I had left what an immense speculation it would be to start one gigantic store in New York which would be known as having every specialty under one roof. I ventured to suggest this, what I thought was rather a brilliant idea, to my escort. But she didn't meet it with quite the enthusiasm

I had hoped she might.
"Why, no indeed," she said, "then all the far of going around the different shops would he lost."

All the fun! It was very plain to me that there were two interpretations of the word "fun," and we had one apsece. Fun!

I dropped the subject, anyhow.

The list hour I think I rather enjoyed the experience. As my escort tripped into a store, I gayly followed. The fact is, I think I rather overlid it at the start. Next time—no, not next time, but if I had that tour to go over again, I think I would take it a little easier at lirst. I would probably last longer. It is unquestionably a mistake to go into these new things with a rush. But a bright girl, with all the elasticity of fresh youth in her steps, doesn't give you much time to weigh philosophical truths. And I think for the first four laps in that walking match I reflected credit upon my youthful think for the first four laps in that walking match I reflected credit upon my youthful vivacity! It must have been on the fifth lap that I stopped tripping and began to walk; after a little I shuffled; finally, I remained in the carriage. In fact, the most intimate relations sprang up between that carriage, the cushion and myself, and we became fast friends. I think that at the last my escort must have noticed that at times I was rather tardy in stepping out and assisting her to alight. At first, I simply bounded out at each stopping place: at the last, I nearly fell out. 0

I'll must have been in store number five that I had an experience which lingers with me, and illustrates the folly of a man trying to find out the dark meaning which trying to ind out the dark meaning which sometimes lurks behind a woman's phrase. It wasn't exactly dark in this instance—in fact, it was rather the reverse.

We had been visiting several different counters in this particular store, when my considerors in this particular store, when my communicate companion said:

"Now, perhaps you are a little tired and prefer to return to the carriage while I go upstairs to the white goods department."

That sounded reasonable enough, especially as the comfort of that carriage was then just the comfort of the carriage was then just the carriage was the carriage.

beginning to impress itself upon me. So I acquiesced, and retired to the carriage, while my escort went to seek the "White Goods Department."

But after sitting in the carriage for ten min-But after sitting in the carriage for ten min-utes it occurred to me that I had never been in the "white goods" department of a store before, and I feit that since I was "shopping." I might just as well be thorough in it and see everything there was to be seen. How foolish it is, this desire in us to see "everything," in-stead of being content with the greater por-tion of things. But I am human, and when a man gets it into his head that he wants to see a certain thing he generally sees it, and I did!

So, returning to the store I encountered one of those magnificent and impressive beings which, when I started on this tour, I thought were members of the firm, but which my friend informed me were "foor-malkers." I had heard my escort, in previous places where we had been, use the word "counter." where we had been, use the word "counter," so wishing to stamp myself as being well-in-formed in shopping parlance, I asked the floor-walker if he could direct me to the "white goods counter!" Fatal mistake, this imitating a woman.

"What particular 'white goods counter' do you wish, sir?" I was asked. "We have several, you know."

I didn't "know." Of comes served that this well-clothed and gorgeouslycravated being looked a little curiously at me

-why, I couldn't for the life of me understand. But I didn't knew to But I didn't know as much then as I did a few minutes therenfter! Experience makes us so much wiser! It just made a perfect giant of wisdom of nee in this case.

I saw that it was best to make a confession, and I did, telling him that I wanted to find my friend there.

was a carious smile, I now recall, about that man's face as he told me to go through "the third aisle to the left, then straight ahead to the second pair of stairs, and I would find the place "on the third floor just at the head, four aisles to the right." Nothing very confusing about that! A blind man might almost follow a series of directions so explicit as these. These "floor-walkers" always seem to have such a considerate way of spenking to you in a slow and measured way. They appear to realize so well that what is so familiar to them is so thoroughly unfamiliar to you. This man was a type of that particular class. He knew that I didn't know where I was going, and I suppose he thought he would help me along a little, so that there might be more of a positive certainty of my losing the way. losing the way.

IT seemed to me as if I walked two city blocks around that store, and up eight flights of stairs, and yet not a trace of that sign, "White Goods Department," which I so anxiously sought.

Finally, 1 reached that third floor, then counting the aisles until I had left four behind me, I looked around. Not a trace of that "white goods" sign could I see, nor my es-cort, either. But one thing I very quickly saw—that I had wandered into that portion saw—that I had wandered into that portion of a woman's bazzar where men are regarded as a sort of superfluous quality. I presume I must have presented a sort of helpless and woe-begone appearance, for a very pleasant woman came up to me and asked if I was looking for any special department.

I told her.

Then she said, "Why, this is the White Goods Department, sir," and added, with what seemed to me a particularly unnecessary emphasis considering the circumstances, "for ladies."

Just then a gloved hand slipped through my arm, and a familiar voice said: "Why, Mr. Bok, you musn't come up

As if that fact hadn't already become impressed upon my mind!

And then I felt myself being gently turned around, just as, when a boy, my face used to be turned toward the wall when I had done something I shouldn't have done.

something I shouldn't have done.

"Don't you think you had better return to the carriage?" my escort asked.

Yes, there was no doubt that I did think so, and somebow I found the door far easier than I had the "White Goods Department."

But how was a man to know that "white goods" meant—well, I know now!

But I can still see the faces of those girls behind the counters when I stalked ernedly behind the counters when I stalked grandly into their realm!

0

A FTER a while I began to wonder whether women ever partook of luncheon on a shopping tour. There seemed to be no suggestion of such a thing in the plannings of my escort, so I ventured to ask her if she would permit me to look at that little list which she consulted as we went into one store and out of another. She gave me the list, which had about twenty different things on it, but lunch-eon was not one of them. So I casually hinted at the subject.

"Why, of course, you poor man. I suppose you are hongry," she remarked sympathizingly. "We will have a light luncheon, by all means." ingly. " \ all means.

A light luncheon! That didn't sound very encouraging.

I was taken to what was apparently a woman's luncheon resort—a sort of an Adamless Eden. I was the only man, but then a previous experience of rather a similar sort had quite steeled me to bravery under such circumstances.

Settling down for a hearty dinner, I asked my escort—at such intervals as I could divert her attention from the bonnets and gowns of the other lunchers—if I might order for her.

I felt better when she took the menu and began to search it in a determined manner. I had already selected an appetizing dinner, when there smote upon my ear: "Well, I think I can relish a cup of chocolate and a charlotte russe,"

I fairly gasped! Shopping for nearly four hours, and then ordering chocolate and char-

"Now, you order just what you like," said my comforting companion. "Don't mind me. I am so full of shopping that I don't care for much to eat,"

Full of shopping! So was I—yea, verily so! I felt as if I were just bubbling over with a superfluity of it.

0 I LOOKED around that luncheon room and marveled. On every side of us there were women doing a day's work to which a man would be unequal. And yet what were they eating to counteract the strain—for every woman will agree with me that let her be ever to forch of showing it is a strain and a secret. so fond of shopping, it is a strain, and a severe one. I did not see in that room a single woman who was partaking of a sensible luncheon. My escort's diet of chocolate and charlotte russe seemed to be in high favor. Here and there was an oyster patty and a cup Here and there was an oyster patty and a cap of tea. In several cases a meringue glacé or a dish of plain ice cream and a glass of natik seemed to suffice. Not at one table—except at mine—within view did I see a turcen of sonp, or a platter of steak served. I could scarcely believe that woman, so wise in the majority of things that concern her health and happiness, could be so foolish and so thoughtless in the matter of her elibies. What nourishment was there in the dishes served which I have mentioned? You may tell me that have mentioned? You may tell me that these women are hearty dinners in the evening at home, but how were they preparing for it? By exhausting themselves into seek hendaches and insulting their digestion with concections which are well enough as desserts, but were never intended to answer for an entire meal. And yet here were women, many of whom I personally knew, possessed of good sense, some of the best and nicest women in all New York, mothers among them who forbid their children to eat sweets during the day, yet who sat in this room, in their full senses, munching candies and indigestible pastries. What sustenance, in heaven's name, is there in a char-lotte russe for a full-grown woman? Just bout as much as there is in baked wind. children and girls do these things we can excuse them from lack of knowledge; but these women were old enough to know better. Talk about organizing societies to save the heathen: I think we had better organize a society or two to save our civilized women from eating idiotic lunches when they go shopping. Small wonder is it that so many women invariably have headaches after a shopping expedition, and are unfit to be at the home dinner table in the evening, or companions to their families after the lamp is lighted.

THIS whole idea of shopping among women I is overdone, just as we do so many things in America. We seem never content things in America. We seem never content until we overdo a thing. You may smile, my dear woman, and say to yourself: "Hear a poor man talk of something he doesn't know anything about." But it takes a man some-times to point out a hard truth to a woman, just as only a woman can obtimes convince a interest to point out a hard trium to a woman, just as only a woman can ofttimes convince a man of an error when all masculine argument has failed. This spending an entire day in shops, as so many women do, is barbarous, and burtful to a woman's body and mind. Of all the stores I visited that day, there was only one in which the atmosphere was pure. As a rule, the air was perfectly vile. Every shop was overheated, and ventilation was at a premium. How the girls and women behind the counters stand it, day in day out, God only knows. Never did my heart go out to a class so much as it did to that army of breadwinners in those great New York shops. It was a constant wender to me how well those girls looked—in fact, my escort didn't seem to relish my comments on the pretty faces and figures, which I saw on every side, a bit. For the most part standing on their feet all the time, having their patience tried beyond endurance, confusion on every hand, I wished I was rich enough to enable me to turn every one of those girls loose, and give them their foreders and a lement of Garlin carnesis which. one of those girls loose, and give them their freedom and a breath of God's pure air which pervaded everything outside.

0

BUT," says some woman, "we must 'shop;'
we must get the things we want." Certainly. Biess your heart, shop all you want, but why not apply some kind of a system to the idea? Don't make a day of it. Give an occasional morning to the pleasure (?), and break it up in pieces. "Easy talking," says some one, "but we cannot always leave our houses when we want to as you men can." break it up in pieces. "Easy talking," says some one, "but we cannot always leave our homes when we want to, as you men can." My dear woman, God gives you just exactly the same amount of time as he does to men, and he hasn't given you a particle more to do within that period of time. The trouble is that women are not systematic enough. I played the part of eavesdropper in some of the stores, and was surprised to find how for women really knew just what they wanted. They knew in a general way, but not in a definite sense. Now, when a man goes shopping he knows precisely what he wants, asks for it, gets it, pays for it and goes away. Women's purchases are undoubtedly different, and such a simple system cannot, perhape, be followed a simple system cannot, perhaps, be followed by them. But that women could simplify their shopping expeditions, numbers of their own sex have confessed to me within the last

THE great trouble is with the woman who goes shopping that she is always looking out for "burgains"—one of the most misleading words in the English language. The hope of getting something just as good as some one else bought the day before, and at a lower price, is uppermost in her mind. In fact, getting things for nothing—or next to nothing—is a feminine vice. Shrug your shoulders, my good woman, if you will; but you know as well as I do that it is true. And what do the majority of bargains amount to? I ran across a bargain counter in my shopping tour. There nagority of cargains amount to? I has across a bargain counter in my shopping tour. There were a lot of what were called—for courtesy, I suppose—"lace handkerchiefs" being sold under the sign;

> THIS DAY ONLY! 49 Cents

I never saw so many women around a single I never saw so many women around a single counter before. The nicest class of women, too, all out for a bargain! I bought one of the bandkerchiefs. Two days afterward I went back to the store, to the retail handkerchief counter, and asked the girl if she would exchange it for me. She said she would, and I asked her the retail price of the article. ! Fifty cents! Finally, I got her to confess to me, confidentially, of course, that their buyer had "overbought," and in order to get rid of the lot they had "marked down the price to forty-nine cents," advertised the fact, and in two hours had sold the entire left-over stock. There was just one cent's worth of bargain to the was just one cent's worth of hargain to the women who thought they had purchased a two or three dollar lace handkerchief for forty cents! That shopkeeper evidently understood woman's weakness, and about two hundred women were just geese enough to walk right into the true. into the trap.

THERE are one or two things about shop-A ping which I should think women would have learned by this time. First, that only a very few burgains are really bargains. In this world, my dear woman, we get precisely what we pay for. The shopkeepers are not in business for love. They may advertise to their hearts' content about "removals" and getting rid of their stock so as not to carry it over, and all that sort of rubbish, but they are not paying very beavy capital for room in their stores. The average business man is giving away very little to the public nowa-days. The store which has one price and sticks to that price may seem a little more expensive, but its goods are cheaper in the end. In such a store a woman buys what she actually needs; at a bargain counter she often buys what she does not need, but takes it because it is cheap. And the second lesson is: For women to regulate their shopping. A single morning is plenty at a single time for any woman to include in stooping. No time? Better make time than to unmake health. Common sense rules in this question of shop-ping, just as it does in all other things. And when our women get to the point where they will see and believe this truth, there will be fewer sick headaches and less nervous prostm-tion. And women will be happier women.

And happier, too, will be the men!

"Perhaps if may turn out a song, Perhaps turn out a sermon.

RYANT sang of March, but he did not mention that the name of spring which it wore was an ulias designed to deceive the unwary, nay, the very elect. It has long been suspected that some of the other months that masquerade in the gentle train of spring are no more spring months, despite their names, than that victous old pagan, Clovis, was a Christian after

THE PERENNIAL BLUE-BIRDS

Noman knoweth just when the spring time awakens until he can look back at it from the certainty of leafy June. "Every tear of April" may "be auswered by a blossom," but then every blossom is just as liable to be kissed by an icicle. On the 18th of this blessom but then every blossom is just as liable to be kissed by an icicle. On the 18th of this blessed February that has passed, about ten miles out of the city of Philadelphia, I saw in the fields a flock of blue-birds prospecting for building sites. I blessed the dainty harbinger of spring, and felt inspired by the brave confidence of the cheery little prophets, and straightway went home and ordered two tons of coal for the bester. Blue-birds in the spring time I had seen before. I used to believe in them, I did when I wrote my first composition, same one you wrote, beginning "Spring is the pleusantest season of the year." Then I developed the text, just as you did, with blue-birds that were frozen stiff before the ink on the composition was dry, and flowers that were not yet, and nasple bads that had been blighted black by the third May frost, and swelling fruit bads that were dead, dead, dead in the threttling grip of a spring blizzard; and lo, now, here am I in my second childhood naunbling over the boariest novelty in the world-old literature of the eddas of that munmy spring. The beart of nam grows dusty and the ashes gather on his pen as he looks into the smilling face, bearded "like Draids of old," whiskered "like barpers hoar, with beards that rest on their bosoms," of ever youthful spring.

THIS FREAKY CLIME OF OURS

THIS FREAKY CLIME OF OURS

PEOPLE in England, or the residents on a Dakota farm, which is about the same size, may know when the seasons come and go, and sing local odes to the changing months, but what far seeing, many gifted poet shall sing a hymn to spring adapted to the intitude and longitude of these United States? A song that shall thrill the heart of North-eastern Maine by its very positioners and at the same Maine by its very pertinence, and at the same time awaken responsive echoes in Southern California by its opportune felicity? Who shall sing of May in numbers so sweetly ap-propriate, and in such timely harmony, that Florida and Idaho shall at one moment crown the singer with applicase and garlands? Go to, thou small-voiced singer of sing-song souncts; his thee to the budding shrubbery of the greenest corner of thy local newspaper, and twitter thy songs of many-dowered spring for thine own county. We, of the snow-crowned mountains a hundred miles north of thee, and we, of the summer-decked everglades two days south of thee, and we, of the winterless days south of thee, and we, of the winterless mendows of the blue Pacific, will have none of thy premature and belated piping. Out upon thy antedated collect! Would that we had Jennie Geldes' folding stool to hurl at thy misleading head; "wiit thou say thy ill-fitting mass at our lugs?" Will the bard change the name of the dedicatory ode which he sang at the opening of the Ice Palace in Minneapolis and sing it at Mardi-Gras in New Orleans? Indeed, it would be just like him to try it.

HE NEVER SAYS DIE

A ND yet, undaunted by the sneer of the cold-blooded cynic, whose bloodless veins throb not, but only flow with the snowwater of February, undismayed by the re-peated fullure of the almanac to dance unto his piping or mourn unto his lamenting the spring poet tunes his lyre and strikes on May day as regularly as the trades unions. Him no failure discourages, no clumorous derision no tature discourages, no chanorous derision terrifies. Fenriess, confident as his brother the weather prophet, whose father and mother the sun defying ground hog is, oft as the dial on the horologue of the rainbow-tinted al-manse points to the first of May, he fits a new reed in his well worn clarionet, and in shrill accents pipes like old Herrick:

"Of brooks, of blossoms, birds and bowers Of April, May, of June and July flowers, Of May-poles, book earts, wassails, wakes,"

And all manner of things he doesn't know anything about. He sings of spring, and all the fiefs, feoffments, bereditments, corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal and mixed, rights of freewarren, successe and sockage, cuisage and jambage, fusse and fork, infang theofe and outfang theofe, theremate belonging and appertaining. "Spring is the pleas-antest season of the year."

And yet with Lowell, we are honest enough

" Own up, I like our back and springs.
That kind o' baggle with their greens and things,
An' when you 'most gire up, 'thout more words.
Test the fields full o' blossoms, leaves, an' birds:

Jee' so our spring gits every thin in tune. An gives one leap from April into June,"

AN INFALLIBLE PROPHETESS

THERE are prophets of spring time more conservative, less sentimental, less beautiful than the blue-birds, but far more trustworthy. The homely hen, whose dwarfed and hysterical intellect leads, nay, compels her to do all other things the wrong way, whose firmness of resolution is inversely proportioned to her paucity of reasoning powers, whom all the might of Alexander and wisdom whom all the might of Alexander and wisdom of Solon can not compel to sit when she doesn't want to, and who will sit when she feels like it though the heavens fall and "the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds" shake the universe about her nest; who will sit her time out and two weeks over on a burean knoh, a glass marble and a piece of brick, patient as a Job in feathers, but will leave a sitting of fancy eggs for which you have paid eight dollars as soon as she is positive she has been on them long enough to ruin them for any earthly use outside the prohibition lecture room in a low license town; the lien, whose whims are legion and whose abhen, whose whims are legion and whose ab-rupt and unfathomable motives and spring-like changes of disposition are typical of her kind—er—that is, of her kind of hen, to be sure—that is, of her kind of hen, to be sure—the hen is a spring prophet upon whose word of warning or hope we many rely. No Cassandra she, shrieking of storm and over-throw. She sallies forth on predatory expeditions into sunny nooks and forbidden places, as she uncovers the strawberry beds weeks ahead of time; she lifts her voice to a plaintive pitch and sings the monotonous refrain of a song without words, which nevertheless foresong without words, which nevertheless fore-tells the snowy spheroid that shall by her grace make dainty your breakfast table; and by and by, the shricking cackle tells you that the prophecy has passed fulfillment, that "the time of the winter is past, the rain is over-and gone; the flowers appear on the earth," and the hen on strike all winter has resumed work, and will run the old-established egg factory on full time for the next two weeks.

WHEN THE YEAR AWAKENS

I N the fence corners, in sunny, sheltered L places, the prowling housewife findeth the early greens, and at the mountide hanquet hangry menfolk, touthing the garnishing worts and sorrels whose mystery no one knoweth save she who culled them, cease to pity Nebuclusdnezzar, thinking that if he only knew the right places he neight have browsed with right good appetite. The coal in the bin is dust on the grave of its own slaty memory, and the prudent man, scraping it up into a corner, deubts if it be worth while to put in another ton, and goeth about his business, leaving the light of the homestead to keep the house warm with her sunny smiles, with, in rare and isolated instances, difficult to locate and impressible to prove ardent words for a house warm with her sunny smiles, with, in rare and isolated instances, difficult to locate and impossible to prove, ardent words for a back-log. She who "looketh well to the ways of her household," and who "is not afraid of the snow," but hath ever a wholesome horror of mad, keepeth a keener eye on the pedal extremities of mankind and juvenility, and commandeth that scraper and door-mat be used with lavish recklessness. From wintry hiding place in tree trunk and under sheltering stone come forth old familiar bugs and creeping things that greet us with the air of summer guests who come uninvited with trunks of permanency and cordial assumption of joint partnership, that makes surplus of amends for scant courtesy of enforced and icy welcome. Come forth from buried egg and shiny chrysalis and mud-walled cell, the pioneers of the summer clouds of cheery insect life, of flying and crawling things that can bite, and sting, and tickle, and will make life a burden of brushing and slapping for him and her who, in the love of muture, hold communion with a trout rod and go to picnics. Come forth also new bugs and things of terrible countenances and startling movements, the bite whereof we know to be death, until science investigates, christens the new pests and pronounces them harmless to human life. science investigates, christens the new pests and pronounces them harmless to human life

SO DOES THE TRAMP

OTHER certain harbingers of spring there O be. Out of their wintry sectusion in hospitable almshouses and sheltering asylums within the city walls, come out into the ways of the budding country they who toll not, neither spin, nor yet do they shave, nor in their moments of idle leisure, which are many, do they pen soft lithographic testimonials for the scap that cleanseth all which it touches, the scap that cleanseth all which it touches, that renders the complexion transparent, whiteus the teeth to pearly brilliancy, causeth the bair to curl, the eyes to shine, removes ink stains, far spots, paint, grease, freckles, and promotes longevity. Naught of such vanities touch their tranquil souls; the remnant on the sie counter, the sandwich left over in the children's lunch basket—if such a miracle eyer were—the ancient arguments of the road. ever were—the ancient garments of the good-man of the house, which he, in an unguarded moment has forgotten to nail fast to the wall. these plain, homely simples will supply the wanderer's wants, and carry him on his simless journey to the next house not half a mile When the trump ringeth the door bell, we lift our eyes to the southern hill slopes, and lo, hand in hand with "Wandering Willie" dances gentle Spring.

SWEET MAY'S FAVORITE VICTIM

WHAT is it that she carries in her hand, W pink tieted like the heart of the first anemone? It is her wand; her fairy wand, by which we know that it is She. It is stalked like the bulrush of summer, and carrieth a which we know that it is She. It is stalked like the bulrush of summer, and carrieth a head like a prize chrysanthenum. It is, we see it plainly now, it is the twin brother of the chrysanthenum—it is a mop. See, on her snowy arm, white as the last fingering drift that slowly dies under the ardent glances of the sun, there hangs, held in the V of her dimpled eibow, a wooden pail, bristling with scrubbing brushes; crowned is her graceful head with puckered sweeping cap, or turbaned like Sister Simplicite! Nymphs of the greenwood, it is she! Fly. Like the evicted evil spirit, dispossessed of his abiding place (there may be some other points of resemblance not necessary to follow out here) man wandereth about the place which was his home, seeking dry places and finding none, wherein he differeth from the evil spirit which found nothing but "dry piaces." With aching heart he sees his own treusured den invaded by May, sweet goddess of the swelling bads. He goeth out of the door and steppeth into a pail of soap suds, left there, he will make affidavit, with malice aforethought and prepense. At the dark end of the hall is laid a pile of brooms and brushes for his careless feet. There is something against the door of his bedroom that prevents him from getting in. He does not know and he never will know how a woman can pile a stack of furniture and then come out and close the door after her, or how she can first come out and then build the barriende from the inside. One of the two she must do. In despair, he turns to go down stairs. On the second step he sets his hasty foot upon a bar of soap, wet and slippery. Mingled sounds of anguish and mocking laughter are heard near at hand and afar, the recording angel dipe his pen deep in the indelible ink and works with unwonted rapidity on a large and unexpected contract. Sweet Charity draws a curhis pen deep in the indentite ink and works with unwonted rapidity on a large and unexpected contract. Sweet Charity draws a curtain over the terrible scene, while above it all is heard the silvery laugh and the merry song of "the fleet year's pride and prime." Then do we know that this is May and spring is here.

APOCRYPHAL EXPERIENCES

In sober truth, however, the horrors of house-clenning are, on the part of the man, largely mythical, if not wholly imaginary. Some little disturbance of his habitual indolence there is, but this is good modleine for him. After he passes the middle mile post on his journey, man falls into the habit of sitting in the same chair and in the same place in the same room when he is at home. Take him into another room in his own house and him into another room in his own house and he does not seem at home there. Consequent-ly a very slight mole hill of disturbance is to he does not seem at home there. Consequently a very slight mole-hill of disturbance is to him a mountain crowned with beaven-reaching peaks of insurmountable difficulties and unendumble troubles.

Moreover, it is his hereditary right to growl at house-cleaning; he has it from his father who had it from his father, whose father left it to him as a sacred trust. When he was younger he used to dance around the May-pole with Joeund Youth. But now, J. Youth, who never grows a day older herself, dances with other beardless cheeks and silken mustaches, and he, good man, has a touch of rheumatism in the knees; unwieldy is his labit; should be essay to dance, Joeund Youth would die of laughter, and the kangaros would come from afar to learn his step. Therefore he stays in his lair and growls between his clenched gums.

Truth to tell, he scarcely knows that house-cleaning has been going on until it is all over, and even then he has to be told. He knows nothing about it save when the tide reaches his own room. For the rest of the house, he does not know what transformation has been going on. He learns that the carpets have been treated like an unbucky candidate; they have been up, beaten, and put down again. He does not know, until he be told, that every speck of point in the house has been cleaned. He learns that the bureau in his room has been moved into a new corner, just after he had learned to find it in the old in his room has been moved into a new corner in his room has been moved into a new corner, just after he had learned to find it in the old one in the dark. Nobody tells him this; he is sneart enough to find it out all by his lone, unassisted self. And when, after many contusions he will learn the new route as accurately as he knew the old one. Lo, smiling May will come once more, and it will be moved back again. This also is vanity.

SICK TRANSIT

This is the state of man; to-day be puts forth The tender roots of habit; to-morrow blo Of the same, and keeps on blossoming And taking deeper root, until at last It takes more work to more him from his corner Than it does to stir a house dog from the rug

Before the fire, Then-when he thinks, good easy man,

His ways are settled for all time Some busy woman comes along and says: "Please move about six inches till I ran The sweeper o'er the place your chair has been.

An lo, he splits the air with lamentations, Loud, and deep, and shrill; He cries, there is no rest this side of Paradise For a poor man, weary and worn with moving round

Out of the way of sweepers,
And wishes he were dead.
O, how wretched is that poor man who cannot

In last year's dust and grime until this year Shall be two years ago last year!

And when he dies, his hope and comfort is, He will be laid in dirt, never to move again.

Robert J. Burdette

A MANUAL OF THE TOILET

MY LADY'S DRESSING ROOM

Adapted from the French of the Baronne Gapted from the French of the Baronne Staffe, with an introduction and notes by Harrier Hebraro Aver. With portrait. Chaste and beautiful binding, gilt top. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.50,

With the Baronne Staffe's book as an admirable and authoritative basis for her own work, Mrs. Ayer has prepared a valuable movem of the toilet that will be found especially adapted to the needs of American women's

"An exceedingly dainty volume."-New York World "Should have its place upon every totel table."

Boston Bincon.

"Commends likelf to the attention of every woman who is ambitious to appear at her best,"—floaten Salur-day Evening Guzetir.

SHALL GIRLS PROPOSE?

And Other Papers on

LOVE AND MARRIAGE

By a "SPECULATIVE BACHELOR"

vol., new and unique style, extra cloth, gilt

"Strange topics for a bachelor to choose on which to exercise his literary powers." But he has acquitted himself admirably."—Chicago Times.

FOR SALE BY ALL BOOKSELLERS

CASSELL PUBLISHING COMPANY

104 and 106 Fourth Avenue, New York

The IDEAL FOOD in all cases where nutrition is an important factor and digestion is feeble. As marritious as milk and ten times more nutritious than God Liver OS and far more fathering.

You can take sufficient Kumysgen with you to your summer resert to last a month or two, as it issuer spoils. You can make it and take it while traveling on steamer or railroad.

When all other foods fall try KUMYSGEN, but it is better to try it in the beginning and save time and strength. will perfectly satisfy your thirst and hunger.

When you have no appetite it will keep up your strength. It is largely used by Physicians in all parts of the ports.

KUMYSGEN is the only preparation of Kumyss that will keep. All liquid preparations of KUMYss will keep but a short time and are constantly dunging in the bottle.

KUM Y865 made from KUM Y863EN is far more pala-lable, easier digested and less expressive than the old style KUM Y88.

Unequalled by any other Food for Dyspeptics, Invalids and Convalescents

Send for Circulars. Correspondence Invited. Sold by all Druggists.

MANUFACTURED REED & CARNRICK, New York

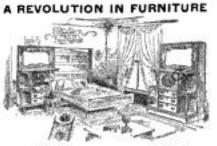

"ON THE ROAD TO HEALTH."

GORMULLY & JEFFERY MFG. CO.

222 to 228 N. Franklin St., Chicago

WASHINGTON

IN USE CLOSED. Always Convenient and Handsome

THE GUNN FOLDING BED CO. GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

13 STVLES, combining every class of Purniture. #2"Blastrated and Descriptive Catalogue Prec.

HUMBER CYCLES

ABSOLUTELY THE HIGHEST GRADE

SCHOVERLING, DALY & GALES 302 Broadway, New York.

The purpose of this Department is to bring the members of the Order of The King's Daughters and its President into closer relations by personal and familiar "Talks" and "Chats." All letters from the "Daughters" bearing upon this one and special purpose only, should be addressed to Mrs. Bottome, care of The Lades' Home Journal, and she will be glad to receive them. Please do not, however, send letters to Mrs. Bottome concerning membership in the Order, or business communications of any nature. All such should be addressed direct to the headquarters of the order, 158 West Twenty-third Street, New York city, and prompt attention will be given.

HEART TO HEART TALKS

May. The thought was suggestive to methere may be a closer connection with the autumn of our life in the bright May time than we think. I had not thought of the union of May and October. Maybe that is what Whittier meant when be said, in his autumn was a tumn song:

"On woods that dream of bloom, And over perpling vines. The low sun fainter shires,"

October dreaming of May. And so beautiful in her dreams!

I want to congratulate the members of my I want to congratulate the members of my circle who live in the country in the beautiful month of May. I lived in the country one May time, and again and again I exclaimed to ray visitors, when my apple tree near the back parker wisdow was in bloom, "Come and seet!" May I tell you the lesson that apple tree taught me? I imagine it had become accustomed to such exclamations as "O, how lovely!" "How beautiful!" etc. But one morning as I came to take the usual look at the large bouquet, not a blossom was on the the large bouquet, not a blossom was on the tree. There had been a storm during the night, and all the beauty was gone. The tree did not know, what was clear enough to me, that the blossoms could stay but a short time, but that the fruit would come when the blossoms were gone. It had heard us day by day praise only the beauty of the blossom, and perhaps from us who knew better it had come perhaps from us who knew better it had come to a wrong estimate of things. It only knew that all the admiration had been given to its blossoms, and doubtless the word fruit it had never heard. Well, the apple tree will not be really injured by all this. In a short time it will see for itself, and will rejoice when the fruit comes. And so will we, perhaps, who have wept over our blossoms that have died. The best is to come. The stripping time is always painful, and we reach a very high plane, when we say: Thy will be done.

GOOD IN THE SIGHT OF THE LORD

I may be that my circle will want to come IT may be that my circle will want to come around noe this month and have me tell them something that will especially help them, and perhaps you are saying "Have you particularly thought of us in connection with anything you have read?" Yes, I have. I thought of you when I made a deep study of a very old back—the second book of Chronicles, a history of so many people, in which these words are so often repeated: "And he reigned so many years, and he did evil in the sight of the Lord," are "He reigned so many years and he did right in the sight of the Lord," and then it is added that his acts are recorded. Then I thought, well, that is just the way with us; we have our reign (though we may not be us; we have our reign (though we may not be called kings and queens), we all have a little kingdom of our own that we reign over, we influence others, and we do evil in the sight of the Lord, or good, and our reign ends!

WHAT WILL THE WORLD THINK Now, may I tell you where I think our trouble is? It is just here; that we are not apt to think that our good or our evil is in the sight of the Lord: we seem only to live in the sight of people. What will they say? And what will they think? We live before public opinion, and so we miss the strength and restfulness that would be ours if we should really live with reference to what the Lord would have us do. There is such an everlasting thinking about what others do. and what they expect us to do, and so our life becomes a strain. And then maybe we hart becomes a strain. And then rangle we hard our own consciences in this way, and in the educating of our children (for they are our subjects) we do not impress upon them that there is but one way, and that is the right, way. "Do you think so and so is right, my son? or my daughter?" "the believe me, dear daughters, it is so vital to do right, and to influence our subjects, so to speak to do right. I noticed in every sentence in regard to these old kings, it said "they did right, or "they did evil." It was positive. Maybe at times they thought right. I have no doubt but they they thought right. I have no doubt but they did, and they thought they would do right, but when it came down to it they did not do perhaps what they thought they would do, and it was the action that told every time.

the state of the s

SERVICE IN HIS SIGHT

THEY did right or they did wrong. Now, our lives are passing, and it is of infinite importance that we find out each one for herself how we are living. All lives end in disappointment that have not served the highest motives. If Cardinal Woolsey had served the King of Kings as he served the eartily monarch, we should not have heard the bitter words at the close of his life that are on record: "If I had served my God as faithfully as I have served served to the control of the close of his life that are on record: close of his life that are on record: "If I had served my God as faithfully as I have served my King, he would not have deserted me in my old age." Never forget that the cross you wear means service in his sight. "And she did right in the sight of the Lord." Oh, what untold joy is within our reach if we could only grasp it, for we need the sense of appreciation in all that we do. A dear girl said to me yesterday: "May I put on the cross for a need that is special to me?" I said. "Why not?" "Well," she said "I have to do some disagreeable things and they seem so unnecessary to me, and yet I am required to do them, sary to me, and yet I am required to do them, and I thought that perhaps the sight of the cross that means self-socrifice might help me."

A MOUNTAIN OF WASTE

Since I last met you here I have been in the coal regions for the first time in my life. "What is that?" I inquired of my host, as I looked at a mountain, as it seemed to me, near his office. He replied, "That is all waste." "A mountain of waste!" I exclaimed.
O, how much rusbed through my mind in a mountain the waste in human lives. I had o, now much respect through my mind in a moment; the waste in human lives. And alas! some lives are wasted lives; mountains of waste! Wasted energies and wasted affec-tions. Although I think we shall come to see somehow that love is never wasted, for there is a deep truth in Tennyson's lines;

'Tis better to have loved and lost.' Than never to have loved at all.'

And yet I believe in the majority of lives, as one comes to the place where they look back, there is a sense of waste that is not spoken of. And now comes the encouragement my friend gave me as I said: "All that is waste?" "No," he said, "we expect to get a good deal out of that waste." I think he said that sometimes they saved eighty percent. And then be told me of the washing the waste went through, and the small coal that came from it; and then a great hope came to me for those who have wasted their lives, that somehow the owner of these souls might yet save something, and that all might not be waste; and so the leason from the mountain of waste was a hopeful one. I have seen those who had wasted ful one. I have seen these who had wasted so much that they appeared like mountains of waste. I have seen them wasted, and seen them pass their remnant of life in usefulness. as a large part of my mountain of waste will do. I laid down my book a momentage, The do. I laid down my book a moment ago. The story I had been reading ended with these words: "Who shall excuse or pardon those who waste life? Life! which is all we have to front Eternity with!" These words lingered with me, and I said: "Is it really so, that we have nothing to front Eternity with but our lives. I think life must look very imperfect to most people, and I looked at my life and said, "Is that all I have to front Eternity with?" Oh, no, I would rather think, no master what the waste in a life may have been, there is always hope in a God of Love left, and I would rather face Eternity with faith and hope in God/for forgiveness and the love that He can give than to front Eternity with a life. I would rather hope in a better life abend; and yet the mountain of waste that I looked at in the coal region was by no necess a glad sight.

÷ THE MINER'S LAMP.

WANTED to see the miners on their way to their homes with their lamps in their hats and I saw them, and I brought a lamp home with me as a souvenir. I wondered if we always carried the lamp of God's truth around with us to give light on any work we might be engaged in? I think it would be very would select a truth and carry it always with us, as the miners do their lamps. How would "Love one another" do for the family? How would "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again " do in our talk about people? How would " Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you" do in our life work? Ab, the light makes manifest? The miners need their lamps down in the darkness of the mines, and we are in a world of darkness, and we need lamps. There is a very striking passage in the Pselms that says: "Thy word is a lamp into my feet, and a light into my path." I am glad it says feet, that looks like light for duty, not curiosity. It is with the heart man believeth unto righteousness. There is always light enough to show us what to do, and the heart has to do with doing. There is always light for hone-t

LESSONS I LEARNED

I SHALL often see that curious little lamp giving light to see how to work. The miner's lamp will often be a lesson to me. Another lesson I learned at Pittston was what I other lesson I tenmed at Pittston was what I saw in the huge building called "The Breaker." I knew the great lumps of coal were broken in pieces at the top of that strangely dark looking building; but I heard that little boys were at work there, and I wanted to see them. The picture will never be effaced from my memory. The coal came down the inclined plane, and stiting access the touch were have of all clare. sitting across the trough were boys of all sizes. As the coal came down they threw away the As the coal came down they threw away the pieces of slate, allowing only the good coal to pass on. I did so want to tell them I hoped they would do that all through their lives—cast uside the bad, and retain only the good, but they were too busy to listen to me. Every moment their eyes were on the coal; it was passing all the time, and if they were not alert the pieces that would be no good would mingle with what were good. Sharp little fellows they were! God help them! It is a sinful world, but God is in His Heaven, and the earth is His, and I am glad He says: "All souls are wine."

IT IS MORE BLESSED TO GIVE

ONE of your flowers is broken, ma'nm."

The speaker was a mulatto who was seated behind me in the car. I had glanced at her because she had leaned forward to look at my bouquet of flowers on the seat beside me. I felt she was admiring the flowers, hut I had about made up my mind that all the flowers that I had should go home with me. But when the voice uttered the words, "One of your flowers is broken, ma'am." I looked, and found that the mignonette (the neignonette that Henry Ward Beecher said if it were not for its unselfishness no one would love it, but because it poured its life out in fragrance not for its unselfishness no one would love it, but because it poured its life out in fragrance it was a favorite with everybody, and like homely people with noble hearts it was beautiful by association) was broken, so I handed it to my sister. She thanked me so much for it that I gave her a pink, and then I could not resist one rose. O, but I was repaid! She looked at them and then she looked at me, and then she said: "I keep some plants through the winter, and I have so hoped to have one flower; but we haven't much light, and no sunshine, so I suppose they couldn't flower." I was soon at my destination, and my colored friend wanted to carry my bug, or do some service for me. As I bude her good-bye I said to myself. "Can it be possible we can make any one happy at such a little cost?" Only a broken flower! I remember one dreadfully raw, disagreeable day in February. I had had such lovely flowers given me that morning—a raw, disagreeable day in February. I had had such lovely flowers given me that morning—a box of them. Such rare roses! When I reached my station the men at the door looked so cheerless that I opened my box and said to each of them, "Take your choice." They lifted out the long-stemmed roses, and their faces looked so different. Before I reached my car I had done the same to three more of the men employed there, I shall never forget that day, or that box of flowers. I never, it seems to use, had a box of flowers that give me so much lov, but two lov came in giving me so much joy, but my joy came in giving

"If a smile we can't enew, As our journey we pursue,"

we not only do good, but we get good. Keep in mind the doing of little things in His name, if you want to be happy.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE

A LADY writes me, "Am I too late to join your circle; is it completed?" No, and I do not expect it to be in the sense that no more can come in. They are coming, and are being entered in a private book—the book of "My Circle," and they are from the north, south, east and west, old and young, rich and poor, and the Lord is the Maker of them all. One indy, a member of my circle, wrote me this mouth saying: "I have a little boy who demands my constant attention, and that is may work in His Name." But she has sent the Journal to three people who could not afford to take it. So she has made three people happy, and is therefore happy herself. And to think of someone cise, is, after all, the quickest way to gain happiness. I always go back to my mother. Oh, how well it is to have a good mother to go back to. My mother lived in a narrow circle from morning till night, and I fear after my father died, almost from night to morning, sometimes. The one-thought was her family, and essecially. almost from night to morning, sometimes, The one thought was her family, and especially her boys, left as they were without a same care. Those boys, to-day, are public men, and are looking largely after the public good, but who made the boys? Under God, my mother, and not lectures, or anything very great. Yes, there is a good Book which says, "Desher boys, left as they were without a father? Yes, there is a good Book which says pise not the day of small things." I But the pise not the day of small things." But the point I wish to make is this (I have made it again and again, I know) O, do the lowly service unto Him. The Muster told many parables, but he acted only one of them, and left it as an object lesson. How lowly it was. A basin of water, a towel, and He Muster! Stooping and washing the disciples' feet—refreshing them, that was all! The feet were tired and but and he hatted them. I want you. freshing them, that was all! The feet were tired and hot, and he bathed them. I want you. as my circle, to do all that is in your power for suffering humanity, individually, and form-ing in circles when you can do more work. But I do not want you to feel that you are ever shut out from doing anything In His Name, for you never are.

A word of welcome to the new members in my circle this month. You are enrolled among the members and you are enrolled in my heart.

Margard Bottome

B. & B.

"THE WISE-ACRE"

who declared, "There's nothing new under the sun," should have lived long enough to see our

1892 Spring and Summer Dress Fabrics

The impossibility of reaching the old philosopher with samples is apparent. The task not so difficult in your case. Your name and address will insure a copy of our 1892 Catalogue and Fashion Journal and samples of dress materials which we declare to be new and most artistic in style, weave and designs!

CREPONS

Suggestive of highest textile art. Their name is legion! Plain, striped, crossed and crisscrossed in all their crinkled varieties of design and artistic colorings.

FRENCH CREPONS

40 inches wide, 75 cents, $1.00 to $2.25,

INDIA SILKS

The counters all aglow with medium and bright colored beauties! Floral and conventional designs over black, dark and light grounds, 50c., 60c., 65c., 75c. to $2.00, while

Illuminated Indias and Glace Taffetas

gleam and flash in iridescent beauty at every move of the shimmering stuffs, 75c., $1.00 to

BOGGS & BUHL 115, 117, 119, 121 Federal Street ALLEGHENY, PA.

A woman's suggestion put into practical shape to aid ber sex. A simple invention for winding and un-winding a clothes-line. Saves temper, time and line by keeping the time free from knots and tangles, Every housekeeper wants it the minute site secs it. Ask for it at your Green's or Hardware-dealer.

M. E. DUGGAN & CO. 251-253 N. Green Street, PRICE, CENTS

DRESS

Patented ALL OVER THE WORLD

A Special Adjustment, also, for Trained Skirts

G. H. LANGE & CO., ENGLAND

NEW YORK OFFICE, 108 WORTH STREET, CITY

DES ADD CROCK

ON SHEER INDIA LINDRY LAWNS & BATISTE PRINTED EFFECTS

WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY FAST

U Shot HTEDLY the changest phase to buy reliable Hair Goods. Samps of margest early buir, sample day, $1.50; medium size, $1.00 to $1.00. Switchen, Waven and Bangs in natural drab and gray shades a specialty. Historical Catalogue was free. Goods sent by mail every where.

S. C. BECK,
Importer and Manufacturer of HAIS GOODS,
10 Keeth Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Fa.

"PARTED BANG."

Natural Carle Raises, $3. Partial Range or Watter, for State-or Ladies, $2.56 to $6.05. Switcher, $1.06 to $9. according to bragels and question of hair. Ladies and General Wigs. $5.00 to $25.00. Stepl sensions but. Try the yea Halm and Powder for Complex, tot. $0 overs each. $4. $5. $78.00. A $70. $10 Mahash Access, Uhirano, $70.

FASHIONABLE HAIR.

We will must greate to reliable parties throughout the United States for approved. The how-est styles and best of goods at lowest prices. No motive re-onited until they are received. No obligation to keep goods if unsuitalisatory. Send for circular.

JOHN MEDINA. 651 Mashington St., Borton, S.

Digitized by Google

HERE is a beautiful tradition among the American Indians that Manitou was travel-ing in the invisible world, and one day be came to a barrier of brambles and sharp thorns, which forbade his going on, and there was a wild beast glaring at him from the thicket. But he determined to go on his way; and the bram-bles were found to be only phantoms, and the beast was found to be a powerless ghost, while the impassable river that forbade him rushing the impassable river that forbade him rushing to embrace the Yaratilda proved to be only a phantom river. Now, my readers, the fact is there are a great many things that look terrible across our pathway in life which, when we advance upon them, are only the phantoms, only the apparitious, only the delusions of life. Difficulties touched are conquered. Put your feet into the brim of the water, and Jordon retreats. You sometimes see a great duty to perform. It is a very disagreeable duty; you say, "I can't go through it. I haven't the courage. I haven't the intelligence to go through it." Advance upon it, my dear woman. Ten to one you have only to touch the obstacle and it will vanish.

OBSTACLES WHICH VANISH WITH A TOUCH THINK I always sigh before I begin to A write my Journal article each month at the greatness of the responsibility in writing to so many hundreds of thousands of readers; the greatness of the responsibility in writing to so many hundreds of thousands of readers; but as soon as I make the start it becomes to me an exhibitation. And any duty undertaken with a confident spirit becomes a pleasure; and the higher the duty the higher the pleasure. Difficulties touched are conquered. There are a great many people who are afraid of death in the future. Good John Livingston once, on a sloop coming from Elizabeth-port to New York, was fearfully frightened because he thought he was going to be drowned as a sudden gust came up. People were surprised at him. If any man in all the world was ready to die it was John Livingston. So there are now a great many good people who shudder in passing a graveyard, and they hardly dare think of Canaan because of the Jordan that intervenes; but once they are down on a sick bed then all their fears are gone; the waters of death dashing on the beach are like the mellow voice of ocean shells; they smell of the blossoms of the tree of life; the music of the bearenly choirs comes stealing over the waters, and to cross now is only a pleasant sail. How long the boat is croning? Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly! Christ, the Priest, advances ahead, and the dying Christian goes over dry shod on coral beds, and paths of pearl.

"Oh, could we make our doubt remove. coral beds, and poths of pearl.

"Oh, could we make our doubts remove. These gloomy doubts that rise, And view the Canaon that we love With unbectouded eyes!

"Could we but climb where Moses stood, And view the landscape o'ee, Not Jordse's stream, nor denth's cold flood, Could fright us from the shore!"

BETWEEN US AND SUCCESS

BETWEEN us and every success and pros-D perity in this life there is a river that must be passed. "Oh, how I would like some of those grapes on the other side!" said some of the Israelites to Joshua. "Well," says Joshua, "if you want the grapes, why don't you cross over and get them?" There is a river of difficulty between us and everything that is worth having; that which costs nothing is worth nothing. God never intended this world for an easy parlor, through which we are to be drawn in a rocking chair, but we are to work our passage, climb masts, fight battles, scale mountains, and ford rivers. The success achieved by business men comes only by hard work, by overcoming obstacles that look almost insurmountable in the perspec-tive. So with everything in our lives, whether in business or in the home; what is worth anything is obtained only by toil, by overcoming difficulties. Our lives were not in-tended to be spent lying on couches of roses, but to do battle for ourselves, for humanity and for the Creator. God makes everything and for the Creator. God makes everything valuable difficult to get at for the same reason that he put the gold down in the mine, the diamond under a hard crust where its perfected fection is hidden until removed by labor and skill, and the pearl clear down in the sea to make us dig and dive for them. We acknowledge this principle in worldly things. Oh, that we were only wise enough to acknowledge it in religious things! religious things!

EXAMPLES IN EVERY-DAY LIFE

EXAMPLES IN EVERY-DAY LIFE

YOU have scores of illustrations under your own observation where men have had the hardest lot, and been trodden under foot, and yet, after a while, had ease. Now they have their homes blossoming and blooming with pictures, and carpets that made foreign looms laugh now embrace their feet; the summer winds lift the tapestry about their window, gorgeous enough for a Turkish sultan; impatient steeds paw and neigh at the door, or move their forms with gilded harnesses, spangled with silver; their carriage moves through the sea of New York life a very wave of beauty and splender. Who is it? Why, it is a boy that came to New York with a dollar in his pocket, and all his estate slung over his shoulder in a cotton handkerchief. All that silver on the dining-stand is petrified sweat-drops; that benutiful dress is the faded calleo over which God puts his hand of perfection, turning it to Turkish satin or Italian silk; those diamonds are the tears which suffering froze as they fell. Oh there is a river silk; those diamonds are the tears which suf-fering froze as they fell. Oh, there is a river of difficulty between us and every earthly achievement. You know that; you admit

THROUGH THE HARD KNOCKS OF LIFE

THROUGH THE HARD KNOCKS OF LIFE

YOU know this is so with regard to the nequisition of knowledge. The ancients used to say that Vulcan struck Jupiter on the head and the goddess of Wisdom jumped out, illustrating the truth that wisdom comes by hard knocks. There was a river of difficulty between Shakespeare, the boy holding the horses at the door of the London theatre, and the Shakespeare, the great dramatist, winning the applause of all andiences by his tragedies. There was a river between Benjamin Pranklin, with a loaf of bread under his arm, walking the streets of Philadelphia, and that same Benjamin Franklin, the philosopher, Just outside of Boston, flying a kite in the thunderstorm. An idler was cured of his bad habit by looking through his window, night after night, at a man who seemed sitting at his desk, turning off one sheet of writing after another, until almost the dawn of the morning. The man sitting there writing until morning was industrious Walter Scott; the man who looked at him through the window was Lockhart, his illustrious biographer afterward. Lord Mansfield, pursued by the press and by the populace, because of a certain line of duty, went on to discharge the duty; and while the mob were around him, denantaling the taking of his life, he shook his fast in the face of the mob and said, "Sirs, when one's last end comes, it cannot come too soon if he falls in defence of law and the liberty of his face of the mob and said, "Sirs, when one's last end comes, it cannot come too soon if he falls in defence of law and the liberty of his country." And so there is, my friends, a tug, a tussle, a trial, a push, an anxiety, through which every man must go before he comes to worldly success and worldly achievement. You admit it. Now be wise enough to apply it in religion. Eminent Christian character is only gained by the Jordanic pussage; no man just happened to get good. happened to get good.

WHEN SORROW BRUISES THE HEART

When Sorrow Brusses the Heart

By tup, tussle, pushing, and running in the Christian life a man gets strong for God;
in a hundred Solferinos he learns how to fight; in a hundred shipwrecks he learns how to swim. Tears over sin, tears over Zion's desolation, tears over the impenitent, tears over the graves made, are the Jordan which many a man and a woman must pass, stains the check, and fades the eye, stains the check, and fades the eye, and pale the brow, and singes the hand. There are mourning mourning garments, and there are wardrobes. and there are deaths in every family record. All around are the relics of the dead. Some All around are the relics of the dead. Some of your children have already gone up the other bank of the great river. You let them down on this side of the hank; they will be on the other bank to help you up with supernatural strength. The other morning, at my table, all my family present, I thought to myself how pleasant it would be if I could put all into a boat, and then go in with them, and we could pull across the river to the next world and be there all together. No family parting, no gloomy obsequies, it wouldn't take five minutes to go from bank to bank, and then in that better world to be together forever. Wouldn't it be pleasant for you to take all your family into that blessed country if you could all go together? I remember my if you could all go together? I remember my mother, in her dying hour, said to my father "Father, wouldn't it be pleasant if we could all go together?" But we cannot all go toall go together?" But we cannot all go together. We must ground by one, and we must be grateful if we get there at all. What a heaven it will be, if we have all our families there, to look around and see all the children are present! You would rather have them all there, and you go with hare brow forever, than that one should be missing, to complete the rather has of heaven for your coronal. garlands of heaven for your coronal.

AFTER THE TOILS OF LIFE

THOSE of us who were brought up in the THOSE of us who were brought up in the country remember, when the summer was coming on in our boyhood days, how we always longed for the day when we were to go barefooted, and after teasing our mothers in regard to it for a good while, and they consented, we remember the delicious sensation of the cool grass on that dusty road when we put our uncovered feet on it. And the time will come when these shoes we wear now, lest we be cut of the sharp places of this world, shall be taken off, and with unsandaled feet we will step into the bed of the river; with feet untrammeded, free from pain and fatigue, we will gain that last journey; when, with one foot in the bed of the river, and the other foot on the other bank, we struggle upward; foot on the other bank, we struggle upward; that will be heaven. Oh, ye army of de-parted kindred, we hail you from bank to bank. Wait for us when the Jordan of death shall part for us. Come down and meet us halfway between the willowed banks of earth and the palm groves of heaven.

"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand And cost a wisiful eye, To Caman's his and bappy land, Where my possessions lie. Ob, the transporting, repturous scene. That rises on my eight! Sweet fields armayed in thying green, And rivers of delight!"

LUXURIANCE OF A SUMMER LAND

LUXURIANCE OF A SUMMER LAND

IF this world, blasted with sin and swept with storms, is still so beautiful, what must be the attraction of this sinless world toward which we travel? Last spring-time I had an opportunity of seeing almost all the phases of the spring as I went southward, from the opening bads of the northern orchards down to the blush of the gardens reaching across many states. But, my readers, the magnificence of mature, after all, is only the corpse of a dead paradise. It is only the charred hulk of a ginnt vessel which six thousand years ago foundered, and has ever since been beating on the rocks. It is only the ruins of a temple in which lambs of innocence were to be offered, but on whose altars swine and vultures of sin have been sacrificed. If this world, notwithstanding all the curse of If this world, notwithstanding all the curse of thousands of years, is so beautiful, what must be that land toward which we go—that land from which all sorrow, and sighing, and sin, and curse is banished, and even the sun and moon as too common, because the Lamb is the light thereof.

I would not want to take the responsibility I would not want to take the responsibility of saying that in addition to the spiritual excellence of heaven there shall not be also a physical and material beauty. The Rose of Sharon, once trampled down by the horse-hoofs of crucifying soldiers, there blooms in heaven. The humble lily transplanted from the valleys of earth to the heights of Lebanon. The humble lily transplanted from the valleys of earth to the heights of Lebanon. The hawthorn, white and scarlet, reminding the beholder of his innocence, and the blood which made him so. The passion flower, blooming in this cold world a day, there in the more temperate zone blooming through the long years of God's life-time. A river flowing over beds of precious stones and riches, not such as go down with wrecked Argosies, but such as He nione could strew who hath sown the mountains with diamonds, and the sea with pearls. Birds with wing and the sea with pearls. Birds with wing never torn of sportsman or tempest, dipping the surface as you wander to its source and catch the crystal stream where it drips fresh from the everlasting rock. Such luxuriance shall kiss the pleased vision and fill the air with winged aroma, and the saints of God wandering among them may look up through the branches of the tree of life and listen, and find that "The time of the singing of birds is

How it ndds to our joy when we have friends with us while we are listening to some sweet sound, or gazing upon some beautiful object, and how our rapture will be enkindled as, with our hand in Christ's, we shall walk up and down amid the things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard. The tameness of earth exchanged for the yellow of jasper, and the blue of supphire, and the green of emerald, and the fire of jucinth.

7. be with Talmage

IS THERE A BOOK YOU DESIRE

and cannot obtain? The Premium Department of The Ladies' Home Journal will quote you a price on any book published—or offer it to you in return for a few subscribers.*,*

GIVES a GENUINE OXFORD TEACHERS BIBLE, Containing, 1450 Pages, and measuring open, says included, 7xill inches,

It is Leather Bound, Gilt Edge, Over-inpping Edges, and Contains ALLTHE HELPS, including CONCORDANCE, 49,000 References, Subject Index 16,000 References, TWELVE COLORED MAPS, and Other Valuable Helps.

be Hitt Talmage $1, $5, 50, 54, $6 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK COTT.

Thicago has father stock of Dry Foods of Retail Them can be formed in as quite the equal of on much, Lowers, to sure to

> For Heating Dwellings, Public Buildings, etc., by Hot Water Circulation, the

Gurney Hot Water Heaters

AND RADIATORS

are the original and best. They have never failed to take the highest awards wherever shown. Send for our illustrated book

" How Best to Heat our Homes," a work of art on the subject of house-warming.

GURNEY HOT WATER HEATER CO., 163 Franklin St., Hoston, Mass. Selling Agents for Middle States, 47 So. Canal St., Chiqago, III.

THE SYMPHONY

(Self-Playing)

Its every breath is a

Symphonic Poem.

Capable as it is of being readily played by those musically unskilled - while yet a source of supreme delight to the most Cultured musician. The

SYMPHONY

must be hailed as the Musical Educator of the age and a paramount necessity in every refined, cultivated home. A Chopin Waltz, a Liszt Rhapsodie, Operasin fact any music is rendered with perfect accuracy. Send for Catalogue.

WILCOX & WHITE ORGAN CO. Meriden, Conn.

ONE CENT A BOLT FOR WALL PAPERS; REED, WALL PAPER JOHNER, Bothester, Pa.

THE NEW MODEL "HALL." THE NEW MODEL "HAP PERFECT TYPEWRITER, BRET MANIFOLDER,
Terms to Agents Liberal,
PORTABLE, INEXPENSIVE, WRITES ALL LANGUAGES, Spend for Cuthilogue and Speciment of Horizon
Address N. TYPEW RITERIALO,
411 Washington St., Boston

partment is conducted and edited by RUTH ASHMORE, who cheerfully invites questions by topic upon which her young women readers may desire help or information. letters to RUIH ASHMORE, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

HERE is no reason in the world why all the girls should not be as charming as the flowers of Mny; why they should not be as sweet and bright-looking as the maybells, the Quaker ladies, the snowdrops, the daisies, and all the pretty flowers that, dainty and coquettish, come up in the May time, and convince one that ey will be really girls, as they are nly girl-flowers. The girl-flower the herself about her complexion, I does, so I want to tell her in months what she must do. If heep her skin clear and white, bright, she goes to the flowers for seeks this kind of flower at the She buys five cents' worth of plur and then she mixes them any sweet—that is, the blackest can find—mixes them until they onsistency of custard, and every g during the month of May she conful of this decoction. In adwill squeeze the juice of two tumbler and drink it with her adds to her good health, which thy. About her bath. She should sath once a day, and once in a none, but if she can't get either, till give herself a sponge bath she wants to be beautiful she can. Perfect purity of the body purity of the soul, and in every usisted upon that certain abin-sary before any religious exerced in. Now, you see how you and book like the May Shares. sested upon that certain abili-sary before any religious exer-cel in. Now, you see how you self look like the May flowers, d bright, looking so well that lies will declare you stole from or your eyes, the lify will claim our skin, the rose insist that age to her, but all the while be made with a love that ex-you by a friendly nod as you you by a friendly nod as you

DURSELF IN HER PLACE

son a bright, pretty, healthy
"She is always sick, and it so." I looked at her and nder if you knew what you you would erer repeat those be taken for granted that to always sick in a household that it does cast a gloom it does make the younger amily feel that there is a conu them. But put yourself the woman who is always
If in the place of the woman
's from one day to another If in the place of the woman's from one day to another dig to be happy in God Ale, or whether she is going dark room, with her heart re a cold sounding hell that le of life she had, and how Think of waking up in the ht with your head burning I your body perfectly cold, site still with the knowledge no help for you until mornowing that everybody else is I merry time, but that you it all, not because you are cause the doctor thinks you longh to risk it. Now this is rough to risk it. Now this is when it comes to a woman of the piensures of life, but a girl of nineteen. Don't secause of her very illness much more delicate that t she does not get seems ly is, while every sorrow intensified,

UK OF PATTENCE id strong, and you don't virtue of patience that consideration for the one In the first place do not ell her every time you see she is looking, but if she are in telling you of her ten to them with patience, ime you do your best to to one which is proper, really better for her. If e house with an invalid, you slam a door it makes you slam a door it makes oly quiver. Every time mises her mental teeth to every time you laugh in my, you make her sufferis if she limit really under-he way of blows. Take a of your life and give it ays sick. Do not allow ays sick. Do not allow it maybody finds plenourg is in ted, or chaining to heard cruel or thought-mere luxiness. Now, if ay there comes a chronic like the mad girl you like the good girl you r the virtue of petience, will come to you.

OUR LITTLE QUEERNESSES

You have them and I have them. It may be it is only a way of speaking, a way of looking, or some little mannerisms that offend. Of course, we don't realize the effect produced by what we call, "our way," but that doesn't excuse it. Think out how you look when you tell something disagreeable and which is unnecessary and uncalled for. Think out if you don't try the patience of even your most intimate friends with a continued history of your ways and weaknesses, and whether after awhile it does not really take the form of nagging. Ah, my dear girl, even from people we love, nagging is something very difficult to hear. A great sin is sooner forgotten than these continual little annoyances; and it is one of "your ways" that does not excuse it. It may not be "your way" to speak the kind word, or the tender word, or to do the considerate act. But do you think you are ex-OU have them and I have them. It may kind word, or the tender word, or to do the considerate act. But do you think you are excused because of the reason you give? Don't you think your ways and little queernesses are just as wrong as the greater sins of the people who have greater temptations? Yours seem as nothing to you, but when everything is put down in black and white, and is to be decided by the great Judge, the advantages that have been yours and those that have been your reighbor's will be thought of, and you will be judged, not according to what you might have done; not according to the sins you did not commit, but according to the ones that you have committed and the virtues which you have omitted.

A FEW LITTLE POINTS

A FEW LITTLE POINTS

A S a people, we Americans have been laughed at for eating too fast, and we are credited as being a nation of dyspeptics. Now, of course, this is generalizing, but you, the eldest daughter, have it in your power to make the bour at the dinner or tea-table one of real delight. It is an easy matter, you will find, to start some pleasant topic; to get your father and brother interested in the talk of the day, so that you all will eat your food more slowly, and you will achieve what the Frenchmen consider the great artyou will dine, not merely feed yourself. But there are a few little questions about the etiquette of the table that some girl wants to know, and these I am going to tell ber. She must hold ber knife by its handle, and hever let her fingers reach up to its blade. Whenever it is possible, a fork must be used in place of a spoon, and that same spoon, by the by, must never be left in a coffee or tea cup, but laid to rest politely and securely in the saucer. Glasses with handles are held by them. A goblet should be caught by the stem, the fingers not entwining the bowl part. Don't butter a large piece of bread and take bites from it; instead, break your bread in small pieces, one at a time, and butter it, that is, if you are eating butter, and convey it to your mouth by your fingers. Olives, celery, radishes, strawberries with stems, and asparagus are all eaten from the fingers. The old method of eating cheese with a knife has been given up, a fork being used in its place. The use of many small dishes for vegetables should not be served at one time.

ALLIBY, YOURSELF

ALL THY, YOURSELF

THERE come times when it is most blissful to be all by younelf; that is, if you learn to appreciate just what that means. It means having a quiet time to think over your life, and whether what you are doing is right or wrong. It means deciding with yourself, as judge and jury, whether the words you have spoken have been the right ones at the right time. It means the thinking out of the influence that your friends have upon you, which one is good and which one is had. It means the planning out in your own mind of that which is good to be done, and the planthat which is good to be done, and the plan-ning it out so entirely and decidedly that you are tried on by an inward spirit of gines to do the deed which seems just. It does not mean the mere wasting away of time in idle thoughts or building castles in the air; castles that, having no foundation, tumble away when a word is spoken, though it may mean when a word is spoken, though it may mean closing your eyes and resting and having some day dream of future happiness; a dream that you may help in its realization; a dream that has some foundation; and one that, when it comes true, will seem to make another dream come to fill its place. This reaking good dreams realities is a possibility with you and me, and we can't have the dreams unless we have that little time alone, when we can st down read considerable. when we can sit down, read ourselves closely and clearly, think out how the heart can beat and clearly, think out how the heart can best for the right, how the brain can work well for it, how the hands can in their turn assist in its realization, and how every part of us may work in harmony to gain the perfection that we long for. It may be that it does not seem much to anybody else. It is just your dream and my dream, but it means a great deal to us, and each one has her right to it. My deer girl, I ask of you to make it a post dream, an unwelfah dream, one, if necessary that you would not be ashamed to have any-body either on earth or in heavent know about body either on earth or in heaven know about,

WHAT YOU WANT * * TO KNOW * * *

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any question I can, sent me by my girl readers—RUTH ASHMORE.

Makionix—As your friend's daughter answered your letter, write an answer to her and a separate letter to her mother.

H. W. AND OTHERS—We do not publish patierns, not have we for sale patterns of the fashions interreted in the Journal.

FANNIK II.—Acknowledge the cards and visits of conductore by your own visiting card scut by post, and having written upon it "With thanks for kind in-quiries."

A. R. AND OTHERS—Ordinary summer freekles may be removed by the use of lemon jairs, but I know of nothing that will take away what are known as cold freekles.

Scinscrings—It is very improper for a young woman to write to a married man outers on a matter of busi-ness; and certainty it is very wrong for her to ask him to meet her any place.

An Oab Syssessissis—Do not, my dear girl, be troubled at blushing or at timidity, when you are out in the world. A blush is the most charming decoration a young girl can have.

Commondation—When one's health is proposed, certainly one should drink to one's self. The exists I make of introduction is to say, "Miss Smith, may I have the densers of presenting Mr. Brown."

Enertt G.—Perfect cleanliness, regular exercise, care as to your diet, are to be recommended to keep your complexion in order, and nothing cise will make it so that and white, or keep your eyes so bright.

SUE—Very offen when one's digestion is in a bad condition the family will tend to get extremely red, so I would advise your oftending to your general health, and continuing the simple treatment that you are now giving it.

MINNESOTA GIRL-A girl of fluriese should have ber dresses reach to ber ankles. (2) To get git of pimples, I would suggest your taking a tempocerful of sulphur and molasses every other morning until your skin is quite clear.

FATTH L.—If some inhunderstanding has come between you and the girl whom you are so ford of, go to her and ask what it is you have done. There is no less of dignity in doing this, and friends, my dear girl, are much easier to less than to gain.

Sallie-When a man friend asks if he may escent you being the mere "Think you" is the hest answer, and when he notes permission to call tell him that you will be very glad to see him, and glad of the opportunity to introduce him to your mother.

IRENE-I cannot recommend anything that will affect the color of the bair, or anything that will remove superfucts bairs. Don't allougt to bleach the scar that is caused by a burn; let it alone and time will finds it out, unless it should be a very deep one.

A. AND A.—It is not customary nowndays to announce engagements by cards; instead, either a dinner or supper is given and the engagement is assounced there, or the fourse beide writes to her infilmate friends and helis them the news, and in this way it is disseminated.

Manua.—Even for a Lonp Year party I would not ad-vise going after the gentleman. The fittle familiarities that seem as nothing seen lead to greater ones, and for that reason I do not approve of the free and easy custom brought about by such parties as you describe. Tax Orritans—In presenting a young man to an old lady, he simply makes a how, and does not offer his hard unless she sets him the example. In the early evening it is not necessary to take a young man's arm, though if he should offer it, it would be nather rade to refuse.

J. C. L.—I think the fact of your asking me if you ought to allow the young man to kits you, proves that you have a doubt about it. No young man about kits you except the one you expect to marry, and even then it is utser to save the kitset so there will be enough for that happy time, the boneymoon.

SENCERE ADMIRES—A girl of fourteen should have ber hair braided, looped, and tied with a rithen. (2) The young man who take you not to bell your parents of your acquaintance with blin is a young man whom you should not wish to know. (3) There would be no lin-propriety in your corresponding with your second cousin, a young man, if your mother know about it.

A DATABLE.—The only way to emiertain your friends in to try and bring together the people who are congonial; got whereve is musical to give you a little music, and above all, don't affermpt to "entertain" too much. People like to enjoy themselves in their own way, and as a horses your only duty is to try and bring together those who will find the greatest pleasure in each other.

BEATRICE—One of the greatest doctors who ever fived said that the best handement for washing the face was the hand, as it is a washing with a soul in it, meaning by this that it bathed the face with judgment and did not hort it. However, from the description you give of the condition of your skin, I should think you needed treatment from your family physician for your general health.

ULARE-I cannot advise applying anything to the sycholes, as the eyes are agt to suffer, 27 W ridings leave the routher distribute, then on the third, then on the account is a very usual way and one that be say to read. (3) Both the methods of arranging your hoir that you show nie are pretty and I can suggest no better. (4) Thank you very much for your kind words of encouragement to me in my work.

JET-A genticenan offers his left arm to a hely when going down to dinner or at any in-door entertain-ment, but upon the etreet he must take the outside, even left necessitates the offer of his right arm. When lwo gentlemen are waking with one holy, it is quite correct for her so be in the center. (2) A very formal evening call usually lasts about half an hour, but where the aquindature is intimate the entire evening may be spent at one house.

Lil.—A daythue call should be made within a we for one has been at a dinner. It is gone proper e wile to call leaving one of her form earch and two of r hisband's. Formal calls are severancy after hunch-nos, but not after less or receptions. Two of your shand's can't should be left—one for the larty of the one and one for his hestand. One's recreix should written out. It is in very bull faste to said them on siding earth.

Bittan Rose.—It is perfectly proper to answer an ad-vertisement in regard to obtaining a position; you know what you can do und, therefore, should have including in selecting the ones to which you should nespent. (2) The question is very often asked use about how to treat gestionness when girls believe that they may very much for them, although nothing has been add. I shared ad-vise your being pleasant and pattic and never limiting by your basiner that you expect anything more than pleasant and points treatment from them.

personn and points invariant from them.

OLIVE.—A fills borax to the senter that you use for bathing your fore will be found desirable for removing the stars look. I do not think there is not wan to force the fact which look, if on not think there is not wan to force the fact was passible yellow present sent any strople enoughtent, applied as soon as possible will remove suinturn. For general was tepid water is best for the skin, but if you are giving it with retarness, then I would nerve your bathing it with extressive not water and then with that which is retarnesse; the water and then with that which is retreasely cold. All assumption will lend be made the skin very sensitive.

K. M.—It is consistent where a man friend is saying conditive to not him in come again, for in this way you show the appreciation of its visit. 2 do not advise the giving of pressess to your mon friends unless it is to me to whim you are summed to be married. Unless a nick wears a traveling dress, the should choose white, and as it may be gotten in interpretably the expense estimate as reason for objecting to it. In repeating to a trick and grown, you congrabilistic the ringer crosses and wish much impresses to be light. When a new acquaintiness expresses places or a tracking you, simply acknowledge by a planeaux word or into.

Our Mail Order Department

Has been doubled in capacity, and with our greatly increased facilities and perfect organization we are better equipped than ever to supply your wants.

Promptness and carefulness in filling orders our specialty.

Send us a trial order, and see how easy and satisfactory it is to do business with us.

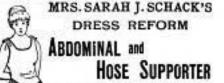

We please you in every instance or refund your money.

A superb assortment of Neck-Fixings, Handkerchiefs, Gloves, Hosiery and Novelties for Easter.

A handsomely illustrated Fash. ion Catalogue for Spring and Summer of '92 free upon application.

WOODWARD & LOTHROP,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Corpulent figures reduced and made shapely in from three to six months. By wearing this Sup-porter women need no longer suffer from weakness of their sex. For circulars and information inclose two-cent stamp. Agents wanted.

EARL MANUFACTURING CO. 231 Fifth Ave., Chicago, III.

DEXTER SHOE CO., 299 Devenshire St., Boston, Mass.

BEST CHAIR ON EARTH! over 50 changes of oction Easily ad asted. Light, nest, releasters: The and Besidedly Confertable. Prices lowest, qual-ty best, Send for

MARKS ADJUSTABLE CHAIR OD

WHEEL CHAIRS and CRIPPLES for INVALIDS self, or to be peaked abry, easily, and Send stamp for prices of all styles quote Tax Lamaw Home Jornson.

SAITH WHEEL CHAIR CONCERN, 120 William Street, New York Perfect Adjustable Piano Chair "It rests the back," See description in October number. Send for photo-cala-logue and "Plano practice." SLACKER BEOS CO., 412 Walnut Ave., Chicago

SHORT-HAND Send for Catalogue of Books and helps for self-instruction PHONOGRAPHIC INSTITUTE, CINCINNATI, OH

CINCINNATI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC. Miss Clarks Harm, Directors, Established 1867, when from a distance may board in the Conservatory, here they are under the personal supervision of the directing are under the personal supercision of the directives. Students may enter at any these, For cata some address Miss CLARA BAUR, Chrimman, Obio

SHORTHAND The OSGOODBY SCHOOL OF STENOGRAPHY, Rochesler, N. Y. Indicated the Control of the Cont

THE HUMAN HAIR,

POCKETBOOK Worth 50 conts, and made of insituation soul; also Flegant Store Catalogue, brill of Pocket of 20 crists posture to LAPILAN'S, FALMER HOUSE SHOE STORE, Chicago, III.

CROCHET WORK Latest and Complete Instruction Block, 11d pages, Illustrated, All kinds of Crocheting, Cotton, Lines, 80k and Work II. WHITE & CO., 210 STAYS STREET, Chlengo, DL

Wisic Send 10c for sample of Vocal or Inst'll 100 to Song F to book - $15 worth late music Windsor Music Co. 215 Wabash-av, Chicago,

MR. COATES cheerfully invites questions touching any topic upon which his young readers may desire help or information. Address all letters to FOSTER COATES, care of The Ladies' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

NE of my correspondents asks if the time given to pleasare is not wasted? Certainly not. A boy or man who thinks so is in a bad way. The boy or man who works without ceasing. who never plays, is leading a wretched existence. Work makes pleasure exhilarating, and after a few hours of pleasure we return to work better fit-ted for labor, freshened, and with a new en-thusiasm stirring within us. I am as much an thosasm surring within us. I am as much an advocate of recreation as I am of work. I believe in plenty of out-door exercise. Because a boy goes to work is no reason why he should never kick a football, pull an oat, or run or skate. If all these out-door sports were given up. America would soon become a nation of puny pigmies. Our men would be botlow-eyed, yellow-skinned, and flat-chested, instead of rosy-cheeked and robust as they are now. Take nieuty of wulking exercise. Walk stend of rosy-cheeked and robust as they are now. Take plenty of walking exercise. Walk to and from school, to the office or shop, and in the evenings, twice or three times a week, go out to lectures, or social gatherings, or to see some good dramatic performance. Go to bed early. Do not get into the habit of staying up too late. Arise early and you will find then that the hours you give to work or study will be of incalculable benefit to you. When you work, devote every thought to what you have in hand. When you study, fasten your mind upon the subject before you. When you play, let no thought of business or study disturb you.

THE HANDY BOY ABOUT THE HOUSE

I LIKE the heady boy about the house, who knows how to hang a picture, drive a nail, and do the little necessary repairing that any mother wants done. It is easy enough to learn how to use a saw or chisel, and every boy should have a hox of tools, so that he can repair articles that may become damagesi. The boy who is handy about his mother's house will be of inestimable value to his wife when he shall marry. Boys who do not enre to go out at night may learn to make many pretty pieces of furniture, if they will only devote some time to studying how to use bods and paints. With a few lessons, the handy boy may make picture frames, or cabinets, odd cornices, or desks or other ar-ticles of usefulness and value. The boy who is handy about the house and a help to his mother is one who leaves how to make your mother is one who learns how to make purchases for the household, who can tell a good piece of meat at the batcher's, or pick out fresh vegetables at the market. Oh, no, do not say that marketing is woman's work. It is quite as much man's work, and besides, none of us can know so much in this world that we can offend to income green the decide. that we can afford to ignore even the details of marketing.

THE MOTHER'S BOY

HE is only a mother's boy," is a statement I have heard more than once. And then there was a curl of the lip which said plainer than words that a mother's boy is not blainer than words that a mother's boy is not held in very high respect, Let me see: what is a mother's boy? I have one in mind as I write. He is about twelve years of age. He is strong of limb, and fair of face. He is a hard student, and an enthusiastic playfellow after school hours. He does not use vile language. He is con-siderate of others. He plays with a vim and siderate of others. He plays with a vim and dash born of enthusiasm and good health, but he is considerate of boys younger, weaker and smaller than himself. He is tender in his treatment of his sisters. He does not cause his father anxiety by doing things that would displease him. He does not go into his class-room without preparation for the studies of the day. He treats his teachers with the consideration that boys should treat their elders and superiors. He goes to bed early, and is up with the lark. He has a due record for his own personal appearance, and regard for his own personal appearance, and keeps his face and hands and clothing clean. reads good books to elevate the mind. is loving and gentle with his mother. He finds pleasure in her society. He is ever ready to save her weary footsteps by anticipating her wishes. He is saving of his pennies. He is generous to those who do not treat him fairly, In a sentence, he is a manly boy. There are many such mother's boys in the world. They many such mother's boys in the world. They are the hope of our future. Some of them will be our presidents and lawmakers. They will be the presidents of our colleges, banks, and railways. They are the men who will move the world. I wish all my boy readers were mother's boys. The lad who is called a "mother's boy" need never be ashamed of the appellation; many of the great men of this and other countries have been such and have been proud of it.

been proud of it.

Upon the day of Garfield's inauguration as President of the United States he turned after taking the oath of office and kissed his mother who was standing near him. In his hour of triumph, and amid the glittering growd, he did not forget the mother whose heroic strangle in bringing up her children in the powerly of frontier life forms one of the most fascinuting pages in our history. Surely he must have been a "mother's key."

TWO TYPES OF MODERN LADS

THE humble boy. He seems to be afraid to let the world know he is alive. He is shy and retiring in company, and his face flushes when he enters a room filled with people. He speaks in a low voice, and seems to have no control over himself. He is afraid to have no control over himself. He is afraid to express an opinion on any topic. He does not believe in himself. He says yes or no to everything. He does not know how to help himself. He does not know how to help himself. He does not dance, for he thinks he is ungraceful. He does not try to sing, because he is afraid of his own voice. He does not push himself forward in school

He does not push himself forward in school or business, because he is afraid people may laugh at him. He is not a happy boy, and the world is not very promising to him.

But if the boy who is too humble is a draw-back to himself, the boy "who knows it all" stands equally as much in his own light. He is generally loud of speech, pushes himself into places where he is not wanted, is thoughtless, dominaring in manner, rude to every less, domineering in manner, rude to every-body, and seems to care for no one but him-self. He will discuss any subject. He will talk in a vapid way on art, literature, science and religion. He sneers at his mother and sisters. He does not know how to control himself. He likes to crosh and bully the weak. He does not care to study. He derides the church. He cares only for himself. To the world at large he is a maisunce.

PETS OF OUR ROUSEMOLDS

MANY of my readers have written me about household pets. The article printed on this page in the April Journal has attracted much attention. It is for this reason that I return to the subject, and hope thereby to aid some of my readers by telling them of some wonderful monkeys, and how patience, kindness and perseverance will make them docile, and to an extent, if I may use the many households are they have high year. word, Jumanize them; also bow birds may be taught to sing.

CAN MONKEYS TALK?

THE man who will make a very great rep-utation or a considerable failure is a southern gentleman of the name of R. L. Garsouthern gentleman of the name of R. L. Gar-ner, of Roznoke, Virginia, who has given up many years of his life to study the ways of an animal that comes as near to being human as any beast can, and whose ability to require the worst vices of man is marvelous. Profes-sor Garner believes that monkeys can talk in a language of their own, and be will spend several months in equatorial Africa with the nutroses of fully testing his theory. He will purpose of fully testing his theory. He will live in a steel cage, will be provided with fire-arms, with automia bags to stiffe the mon-keys if they become too familiar, and in ad-dition will have a circuit of live electric wires about the cage and a phonograph that will re-cord anything that the monkeys about him may say. It is the opinion of Professor Garner that the sounds attered by the members of the monkey tribe that gather about the cage in which he may be can be analyzed in such a way that it is quite possible to make out the full meaning of them. But he does not intend to deal with ordinary mon-keys. His business is with the great gorillas of interior Africa, that come closer to being Darwin's missing link than any other animal, They walk upright upon two great feet, and stand some six feet in height in many cases. They rule their families by physical force, and regulate their domestic affairs with a degree of order that other beasts know nothing of. Their great size and strength, their courage and intelligence, are such that all other animals known to the jungles hold them in awe. They have a language that seems sufficient for their needs, and Stanley and other explorers say that they are extremely fluent and forcible when childing either their wives or children, if Professor Carner shall succeed in finding a key to this talk of the animal he will have opened up a field of speculation and research almost unparableled in importance.

THE LANGUAGE OF BIRDS

DISCUSSED this subject with another I learned Professor who has spent a life time in studying animals and their ways, and time in studying animals and their ways, and I must say that he rather startled me by what he said. "You may not use my name," he said, "for I fear that even my brother scientists would be inclined to hough at me. Yet I will say that in my opinion very many birds and animals not only have a language of their own, but that they have the power to learn our own tongue and to articulate ordinary marks with considerable decrease.

arry words with considerable clearness.
"It is said that a dog was once trained to speak thirty words in plain English, and when you consider that notwithstanding its great intelligence the dog is one of the most forgetful of telligency ine dog is one of the most lorgetial of animals. Those causary birds that come from the Harz Mountains in Germany, the best of their specie, learn to pipe full times without any difficulty. A bullanch will learn from three to five times if he ba of the right intelligence, and will be perfect in them. The night-ingule is of another sort entirely. He is a natural songster, but will sing no melodies save his own. But you may develop his powers until his music becomes almost within the realm of humanity."

A WONDERFUL BABOON

IT is not so long ago that my attention was called to a baboon in Cape Colony. His owner is a cripple who is a signal man on the Port Elizabeth railroad," said the gen-tieman who told me the story. "He had tieman who told me the story. "He had both his legs cut off in an accident. He now headles the telegraph instrument at his post, but this baboon that he trains does the rest of his work. He handles the levers that work the switches, and does all the things that his master cannot do. The passengers on the road at first objected to this urrangement. But one day when the signal man himself was absent, and the baboon was entirely without supervision, an unannounced special train came along the road. There was one switch open and that the wrong one, for there was a junction at the station. The baboon through habit, or through some almost superlumnan instinct, noted that the train should be switched on another track. So be locked the switch that was open and opened the switch tleman who told me the story. "He both his legs cut off in an accident. switch that was open and opened the switch that was locked, and thereby prevented a pos-sible disaster. Passengers on that railroad no longer objected to the baboon who, among other things, pushes his legless master in a sort of a handcart to and from the signal station that he has charge of every morning and night. Now we have no means of getting at the thought and opinious of that babeon, but in my opinion he is capable of thinking to a certain extent, and of holding opinious. If Professor Garner succeeds in so recording the sounds of these and kindred animals as to sounds of these and kindred animals as to render them intelligible, he will have per-formed a great service to humanity. As for myself, I think the time will come, although I may not see it, when we shall be able to un-derstand the language of birds and of animals in some degree. It is probable that the photo-graph, as it is developed, will assist us, and it is possible that we shall have to go deeper in-to the rules of music and the significance of is possible that we shall have to go desper into the rules of music and the significance of phonetic sounds than we have yet gone. In instance of this I may say that in my opinion the songs of hirds can be so set to music of our own kind that we can read the thoughts of those fenthered pets of ours. Of course, you could not set the course guitural of the ape or the womanly cries of a monkey to music. But I think that eventually we shall be able to mulerstand them better than we do beable to understand them better than we do

The man who spoke in this way to me has a great reputation, honestly carned. I gather that he believes that animals and hirds can be taught to talk, not in the queer and anusing way of half-trained bipeds of the parrot race, but intelligently.

There is much in this. If any of my young readers would give their attention to this matter, and should be able to prove that the language of birds and naimals is such that it may be translated, he will make a reputation scarcely second to that of Professor Durwin himself.

WHAT PATIENCE WILL DO

NoW, I will again return to the financial side of this subject and repeat that any boy who has patience, and industry, and persistence can do well with animals. Good trainers of dogs or horses command their own price in the market now. The handlers of more savage animals are well paid, but their work is not so pleasant, and proficiency can only be attnined after many years of hard service. But I assume that among my young readers not many of them seek to take up the training of the more savage species. I farrey they are not so different from the boys of a score of years ago, and that they will in the main cling to those ever-popular pets, such as dogs, rubbits, pageons, colts or treasures of that sort for the pleasure that there is in it rather than the profit. Yet it would seem that there is both pleasure and gain in the handling of our animal friends. I know of a good many boys who carn not a little pocket money in raising and training carrier pigeons. This is rather an important work now. The pigeon is re-garded as a valuable adjunct to the military service. In European countries notably, thousands of these valuable birds are trained thousands of these valuable birds are trained and kept to act as army messengers in case of war. It is comparatively an easy matter to train song birds. Any boy who can whistle can do it, and these birds always command a fair price. Or if you have no wish to make money out of them, they are certainly pleasant companions. The same is true of dogs. Take a dog when he is young, and you can teach him how to perform any number of tricks and by the simplest methods.

ABOUT THE HANDLING OF ANDMALS

I HAD intended to furnish you with some of the rules by which your pets can be trained but upon investigation I find that a Journal, out agon investigation I from that a book as large as a copy of THE LABORS HOME Journal might be devoted to this alone, and no more be said than was told me by Superin-tendent Conklin and other experts in a few words. All animals they said, were much alike, and the rules for handling them were few and very simple.

"You must be kind," they said, "and you must be firm with either a kitten or an ele-phant. You must not allow them to master you, and you must not carry your authority too far. We have seen many sorts of animals, and there is one rule that we all follow. First teach the animals to love you, which is not hard. After that you can teach them any-thing. This is true of every animal, domestic or savage. There is no other certain rule, for animals differ just as men do. They have their moods and weaknesses which must always be taken into consideration. Take them when young. Study their dispositions and the rest

SOUND, PRACTICAL ADVICE TO YOUNG PEOPLE

A BUSINESS education is necessary to business success. Every person should study book keeping, business forms, permanship, letter writing, business law, or shorthand; at home, by mail. Successfully taught by Kryasy & Spratness College, to W. Main St., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for Prospecius.

HAVE YOU

AN ORANGE SET?

The Enife divides the Orange. The Spoon is so shaped that each section is re-moved with case, and so daintly that Orange eating is a luxury.

PACKED IN SATIN-LINED CASES.

Price per Set, $2.50 STERLING SILVER INLAID SPOOMS and FORKS

have pieces of Sterling Sliver inlaid in the backs of the bowl and handle, then plated entire. All wear as these points provented. Guaranteed to wear 25 years in family use.

Ask your Jeweler for them, or send for Crinlogue, Take no substitute.

THE HOLMES & EDWARDS SILVER CO., Bridgeport, Corn.

Found at Last!

Thompson's Pocket Speller, Dictionary and Memorandum Book Combined, of Convenient Size to carry in Vest Pocket.

Centaining 22.90 words and their definditions, also the given names of men and women, rules for the use of capitals and paracounton marks, business forms, taws of cisquette, serasable tailed for memorandium, etc., et 25 cmb.

On receipt of P. O. Order, the Speller will be sent proposid, to any address. Agents wanted; lifectal commission. Any one can early make several dollars by selling this Speller. Boy one and show it to your neighbor and see.

F. M. THOMPSON,

MENTION THE MAGAZINE.

Danbury, Conn.

Catalogue free on application to the nearest Columbia Agent, or sent by mail for two beent stateps. POPE MFG. CO., 221 Columbus Ave., Torton.

FOR THE BOYS WHO FISH

HOW many of the boys who, throughout the summer, spend their Saturdays scated with pole and line on the banks of nearby brooks and ponds, realize that by a very little exertion after school hours, or on some Saturday afternoon, they can secure an outfit for trout and hase fishing of which any how might be justly proud.

The Rod is of genuine Calcutta Hamboo, 12 The Rod is of genuine Carenta nameso, agreet long, in three joints, with double Bross Fermies. The balance of the autiliterassists of 1 Brass Balanco Reel, with screw handles and raised pillars; Braided lisle-thread Line, 25 yards long; ½ dozen long shank Carlisle Hooks, for Trout, and ½ dozen Bass Hooks on double-twisted gur; I varnished Quill-top Francisco and agreement of Artificial Treat. Float, and an assertment of Artificial Trout

Any boy who will send to Tur. Lapres' Houn Joranat. 4 Yearly Subscribers; or 2 Sub-scribers and fifty cents additional; or, who will remit $1.10, will receive one of there out-Postage, 30 cents extra, whether puretimed or secured by Google

THE NATIVE HEATH OF AUTHORS

BY MRS. M. C. WILLIAMS

HE whole world claims E whole world claims some writers. Others are known and loved only in their own country. But for everyone there is somewhere a community which remembers the child, and is glad to be remembered by the author. The by the author. The birthplaces of American writers are dotted all over our broad territory. The geographical limit of celebrity is a widely wavering line, and no one section can claim a monopoly of literary genius.

S is natural, however, the older parts of the A Sis natural, nowever, the control writers of national fame than have the newer, and among A. country have produced more writers of national fame than have the newer, and among the older states Massachusetts takes a prominent position. A specially favored community is Cambridge, which has given to fame not only Richard Henry Dana, but Oliver Wendell Holmes, James Russell Lowell and Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Its neighbor, Concord, claims Thoreau, and Salem has been levingly remembered by her son, Nathaniel Hawthorne. Anderse has produced Arthur Sherburne Hardy and Elizabeth Staart Phelps, Bryant was born at Cammington, Whittier at Haverhill, J. G. Holland at Belchertown, and George Bancroft at Worcester. Charles Dudley Warner and Mrs. Martha J. Lamb both come from Plainfield; Motley, the historian, and Charles Follen Adams, better known as "Yawoob Strauss," from Docchester. "Josh Billings" first saw the light at Lanesborough, and of two writers dear to the American boy, Horatio Alger and "Oliver Optic," one comes from Revere and the other from Medway. "Lucy Larcom" belongs to Beverly, Lydia Maria Child to Medford, Helen Hunt Jackson to Amherst, and Abigail Adams to Weymouth. When Mary Abigail Dodge wanted a penname she took the last syllable of her second name and added the name of her native place, and bas been known ever since as "Gail Hamilton."

Boston has produced a number of well-knows writers, Charles Francis Adams and Ralph Waldo Emerson, are both from "the modern Athens." So are Alice Wellington Bollias, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, and Dr. Edward Everett Hale. Benjamin Franklin and Edgar Allen Poe were also natives of Boston, though we are apt to associate them with cities farther south.

though we are apt to associate them with cities

ON the other hand, Longfellow, whom we usually associate with Massachusetis. was really born in Maine, at Portland. The "Pine Tree State" isn't so very far behind Massachusetts, either. She claims besides Longfellow, Elizabeth Akers Allen, author of "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother," who was born in Strong; "Artenus Ward" (Charles F. Roswan), who a water of Waterford: "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother," who was born in Strong; "Artemus Ward" (Charles F. Browne), who was a native of Waterford; Sylvanus Cobb. Jr., who came from Waterville, and Nathandel P. Willis, from Portland. Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford was born in Calais, and Noah Brooks in Castine. Foxburgh claims Kate Putnam Osgood, and South Berwick Sarah Orne Jerrett, while humorous "Rill Nea" is a passing of Slutters.

"Bill Nye" is a native of Slattery.

The other New England states are proud of some very worthy sons and daughters. Con-necticut honors Jonathan Edwards, theologian necticut honors Jonathan Edwards, theologian and educator, whose birthplace was East Windsor. Edmund Charence Stedman was born in Hartford, and Rose Terry Cooks just across the river in West Hartford. Sally Pratt McLean is a native of Scabury; J. W. De Forest of Seymour, and Harriet Beecher Stowe of Litchfield. Donald G. Mitchell's native place is Norwich.

HENRY M. ALDEN, editor of "Harpers' Magazine," was born at Mt. Tabor, in the "Green Mountain State." New Hampshire has the mother claim on two other great editors, Horace Greeley, born at Amherst, and Charles A. Dana, of the New York "Sun," who comes from Hinsdale. Portsmouth may well be proud of Thomas Balley Aldrich, who has given us some delightful glimpses of the old town in his "Story of a Bad Boy," and clse-where. B. P. Shillaber, known to fame as "Mrs, Partington," was from Portsmouth. New Hampshire's greatest son. Duniel Webster, was born in Salisbury, now Franklin, and one of the most charming among modern writers, Constance Fenimore Woolson, comes from Consumer Penning Vision State.

For a little state, Rhode Island has produced a very good-sized man in Hezekiah Butterworth, whose early life was spent in Warren, and Providence has no reason to be

Warren, and Providence has no reason to be ashamed of George William Curtis, Maine claims James G. Blaine, but the author of "Twenty Years in Congress" was born in the little fown of West Brownsville, in Washington County, Pennsylvania. Another county, Chester, gave the world two poets in Bayard Taylor and Thomas Buchanan Read. Philadelphia, which saw the first of American novelists, Charles Brockden Brown, produced some worthy sorcessors to him in Frank R. Stockton and his sister Louise, Anna Dickinson, Louisa May sister Louise, Anna Dickinson, Louisa May Alcott, the economist Henry C. Carey, the eminent Shakespearean scholar, Hurare Howand Furness, and the post and dramatist,

George H. Boker. Rebecca Harding Davis, and the humorist, Robert J. Burdette, are both natives of Pennsylvania, the former having been born in Washington and the latter in Greensborough.

New Jersey has given birth to a famous novelist, James Fenimore Cooper, who comes from Burington, and an equally famous preacher and author, Dr. T. De Witt Talmage, who was born in Bound Brook.

MANHATTAN Island's earliest literary bocker, Washington Irving, but the city whose early history he chronicled has had many anbocker, "Washington Irving, but the city whose early history he chronicled has had many another celebrity since his time. Robert Henry Newell, "Orpheus C. Kerr," was born there, as were also Amanda M. Douglas; the norelist "Sidney Luska," whose real name is Henry Harland; Julis Ward Howe, and the well-known writer and editor, Mary Mapes Dodge. Another of New York City's editors, Mrs. Mangaret E. Sungster, was born in New Rochelle, New York. Mary Booth, her predecessor, was born in Millville, and Ethel Lynn Beers, author of "All Quiet Along the Potomae To-night," at Goshen. William Allen Butler, who celebrated in verse the woes of Miss Florn M'Flimsey, the young lady who had "nothing to wear," course from Albany. So do Bret Hafte and James W. Bally, the "Danbury News" funny man. New York may also claim two other noted "funny men" in "O. K. Philander Doesticks, P. B." (M. Thomsen), and "Petroleum V. Nasby" (David E. Locke), the former having been born at Riga, Monroe County, and the latter at Vestal, Broome County, E. P. Roe came from Orange County; Grace Greenwood, otherwise Mrs. Lippincott, was born in Pomfret; John Barroughs at Roxbury; Trowbridge at Ogden; Joel Benton at Amenia, in Dutchess County, and "the good, gray poet," Walt Whitman, at West Hills, on Long Island.

TAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, bornat Green-

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, born at Green-field, Indiana, is by no means the "Hoosier State's" only contribution to fame. Edward Eggleston was born at Nevny, and has again and again pictured life among his native corn-fields. Rose Hartwick Thorpe, author of "Cur-few Shall Not Ring To-night," comes from Mishawaka; Josquin Miller from the Wabash district: Maurice Thompson was born at Mishawaka; Josephin Miller from the Wabash district; Maurice Thompson was born at Pairfield, and John J. Piatt at Milton, Mrs. Sellie M. B. Piatt, though perfectly inturalized north of Mason and Dixon's line, is a native of Lexington, Kentucky, and Don Piatt, was born in Cincinnati. He does not head the bead-roll of Ohio's famous authors, howthe bead-roll of Ohio's famous authors, how-ever. That place, by common consent, is ac-corded to William Dean Howells, born at Martin's Ferry. The Cary Sisters, Alice and Phobe, were born near Cheinnati, "Susan Coolidge" at Clereland, and Edith M. Thotons, one of the purest poets we have seen during the last two decades, comes from near Geneva. Another of our recent poets and essayists, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, was born at Johnstown Centre, Wisconsin; Will Carleton claims Had-son, Michigan, as his birthplace; "Mark Twain" comes from Florida, Missouri, and Frances Courterary Baylor was born in Fay-etteville, Arkansos.

etteville, Arkonsus.

THE south has been well represented in American literature, especially in later years. Francis Scott Key, nutbor of the "Star-spangled Banner," was born in Frederick County, Maryland, and George W. Childs comes from Baltimore, in the same state, Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth is a native of George-town, in the District of Columbia, where she town, in the District of Columbia, where she still resides. Virginia has given us Thomas Nelson Page, born at Oakland, and "Marion Harland," who comes from Amelia County; and lass also given to Kentucky her poet lau-rente, Henry T. Stanton, who was born at Alexandria, Virginia. "Charles Eghert Crad-dock" (Miss Marfree) and Miss Fanny Mar-free who hids fold to rivel her sites of collifree, who bids fair to rival her sister's earlier fame, were both born at the family seat, "Giantiands," near Murfressboro, Tennessee, James Wood Davidson hails from Newbury, South Carolina, and Paul H. Hayne and "Aunt Fanny" Barrow from Charleston in the same state. Mrs. Augusta Evans Wilson was born at Columbus. Georgia, a state which has produced two other noteworthy writers in Joel Chandler Harris, born at Entonton, and Richard Malcolm Johnston, who comes from Hancock County,

THE man who claimed to be an Irishman, L but admitted that he "wasn't born in his native land" has his counterpart in many of the writers whom we are accustomed to reckon among our very own. George Parsons Lath-rop, for instance, was by some freak of cir-cumstance born in Honolulu. Highwar Hiorth Bovesen comes to us from Norway Robert Bonner from Londonderry, and John Boyle O'Reilly from County Meath, Ireland; Robert Collyer from Keighley, Yorkshire: Andrew Carnegie from Dunfermline, Scotland.

Andrew Carnegie from Dunfermline, Scotland.
England has given us also three noted women in Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, who comes from Manchester; Mrs. Amelia E. Barr, from Ulverstone, and "Jenny June" (Mrs. Croly), who was born in Market Harborough, while Henry M. Stanley, though the world generally owns him an American, was really born in Denbigh, Wales. And those Audit of the highest of our favour. thus a study of the birthplaces of our famous authors is most interesting, especially as it tells so many strange truths.

LITERARY QUERIES

Under this heading the EDITOR will en-deavor to answer any possible question con-cerning authorship and literary matters.

J. C. R.-John Esten Cooke, is the author of " Mohum." SUSSCRIBER-"The Rubskynt," of Omar Khayyam, is pronounced "The Rubia; of Omar Kayam.

An Old Subschiffer - Write to the Journal's Premium Department, and they will send you a list of very desirable books.

K. W.—"Owen Meredith" was the non-de plume of Robers, the son of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytins. He died in Paris three mouths ago.

P. S.—" A Golden Goodp," by Mrs. Whitney, can now be secored in book form from the Book. Department of the JOURNAL for $1.30, possinge free.

C. S.—"The White Cow!" was written by James and Allen, and is one of the stories comprised in the clume emilied "Flutz and Vinita."

B. E. B., and Ottrons-Refer to "Literary Queries" in pravious basis of the Journals. You will find a list of the various syndicates already given.

Parsec-Both magazines as "St. Nicholas," "Har-pers' Young People," "Wide Awake," etc., would be apt to accept fairy stories if new and original.

E. I., Le-"St. Nicholas" is one of the best magnitude for children. (2) I would not advise your reprinting the book you mention. There would be no sale for it.

6. J. H.—You can get "The Girls' Own Pages," or any foreign magazines, from Brantano's, New York City, or through the International News Company, also of New York City.

A Boston cirat.—Write to Roberts Brothers, of Boston, who are the publishers of "The No Name Series," and they will doubtless send you the full list, together with the authors' names.

G. B. K.—Send your manuscript to The American Press Association, the same as you would to any pub-lishing concern. They accept bright, original matter, hungerous work pecturred.

A. W., AND OTHERS—For obvious reasons I cannot give the addresses of authors in this column. Any communication you desire to couch them will be forwarded it seas in cure of the Journal.

E. C.—The tooks you mention, or any other books, can be familyhed you by the Premium Department of This Lacrico Moore Journal, as a Premium for sub-scribers, or at the lowest cost price.

Prograwyres—It has often been said in this column, and in articles published on this page, that the only way in which to bring a manuscript to the attention of an effice is to send it to him, and enclose stamps for reply

CARLE HERRICK—Liberary syndicates accept manu-scripts for new-papers enty, failing in all the large and protoinent papers of the condry. They prefer popular material, which should not exceed faireen hundred

B. F.—The magazine you refer to b published in New York tily. Benders inter not ask use to give addresses of magazines in this column bereafter. You can pro-cluse a ropy of any magazine and ascertain the address for yourself.

A. R. McP.—Ekshard Henry Stoddard was here in Hingham, Massachusetta, in 1821. He has resided in New York sheel 1821, and has written and compled themy books. He is now the literary editor of the New York "Mail and Express."

V. R.—I cannot give you the masses of editors of magneties. It is uni-riy harmsterial for your purpose, send your articles impersonally addressed to the editors. The Journal's rates for advertising will be found printed each mouth on the editorial page.

E. L. A., AND J. M. G.—It is immederful whether you use ruled or simuled paper, provided you can write straight, and leave sofficiant space between the lines, Warke only on one side, of course. It is optional with you whether you lake an assumed name or not.

ELLANTINE EARNING—No young writers can place my mometary value upon their literary productions. Leave such matters to the ones who accept them for publication, and be content. When you reach the from rank of uniforship you can demand your price.

S. M. R.—You cannot use a copyrighted poem, or portions of h, without permission in writing of the owner. (2) If you have sold the design of the bookle he one parity, you cartainly chance re-self it to another. Your interest in it crossed when the sale was made.

Myna.—Dr. Officer Wendell Holmes was married in 180, to Miss Amelia Lee Jackson, daughter of Judge Charles Jackson, of the Septeme Lours of Massacha-setts. Mrs. Holmes died notice years ago, 45 The sister of Mr. Beccher you refer to its Mrs. Isshella Beccher Hooker.

C. M. Vax S.—Letters of travel altenys speak best for themselves; hence, when your first one is written on bour, send it to the cellate of the paper for which you think it is best intended. Unless wrater special circum-stances, it is different to obtain a commission from any periodical before starting.

ALICE—Mrs. Humphry Ward's latest novel, "The History of buyld (viewe," has not proved what is green, ally termed "a popular success." It is, however, an udstakably superior to "Botart Edittions" as a piece of Bertary revis, and will demonstrate at once to you the Expany power passessed by 8n million.

Young Evolusionan—Of the strictly literary papers. I would recommend to you. "The Critic," published weekly in New York City. I believe it to be imparituding to its criticions, fresh and necumie in its literary information, and in based with what is best and latest in the world of letters. It points the way to the whest reading for a man or woman of literary insies.

SEVERAL CORRESPONDENTS—Literary buseaus are not in existence for the more pleasure of it. Their object is to make mouse, the most enterprises. They charge certain fees for certain work. Unless you century with their conditions you need not expect the attention you desire. Before entire managerips to them write for particulars, and be guided accordingly.

I. M. B.—Von cannot prevent any one from using your poems if they are not copyrighted. It does not matter whether you received pay or not. 12: If you have copyrighted your poems, and sold them, and they are published, they do not belong to you. You could not use them for published nagain without permission. (8: 1do not know if the poem you mention has been published.

A Doctow's Wire—It is better to keep a play manuscript, having several type-written copies, which can send to different parties for consideration. I copyright has been obtained no one can make users without your consent. If they do, they are liable one hundred doking dies for like first performance, a lifty dollars fine for every subsequent performance as the most shall appear to be just.

the court shall appear to be just.

Mynymetria—No editor has a right to sell, or in any way defice a manuscript submitted to him. It will happen sometimes, that a manuscript seet that be returned feated. To prevent this, indicate by a memorandum on the manuscript shall, if it is margitable, you wish it returned flat. (3) Manuscripts are undoubselly sometimes paid for, but never primbed. In such cases manuscripts are generally returned to the author for such disposition as he may choose to make of it. But such a decision is rairely reached by an editor until a considerable time after acceptance, and it while cases not of ten the manuscript would have as little value to the author as to the editor. Editorial rules differ as to the disposition of such manuscripts; in some offices they are returned, in others they are destroyed or permanently "filed."

THAT BOOK YOU DESIRE

which your Bookseller could not supply, can be furnished by the Premium Department of THE LABORS HOME JOURNAL for a few subscribers names, or at a low cash price. ..

NOW READY-THE MAY PART OF THE YOUNG LADIES' JOURNAL

The best Journal for Ladies and Pamilies, containing the LATEST AND MEST FARMIONS; FROSTERLY ILLISTRATED; A MARMOTH COLORERS SUPPLEMENT OF PASSIONS; STREETS CORPLETE STREETS of Absorbing Instead; and the speciag chapters of a NEW AND ORIGINAL SERVILL STREY estimated "SARA" SHETTER, "besides New Books, EXCALDENCY TRESONS, Eq., The most complete magnitude for lating splittables, Price, 30 Centre, Yardy, $4, including the Christman transfer, AR presidenters, and THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK,

5 NEW NOVELS 15 Cents FAMILY LIBRARY MONTHLY. Of all Newsdealers and THE INTERNATIONAL NEW HOPPANY, NEW YORK.

Stand St Duane Street, one door East of Broadway. Schoolpilana Societi for any Periodical, Ferrigo or Domestic

THE ILLUSTRATED WORLD'S FAIR

INC. ILLUSTRATED WORLD STAIR Is without doubt the finest, most attractive and perfoscip dissistanced politication in the world. It is the only publication absenting the progress thy word and picture) and every place and feature of the greatest exposition ever known to the world. It is a Pleture Gaillery; all exhibits, machinery and mechanical appliances, will be dathetally illustrated as they appear. It is ably edited the increase in circulation to phenometral, over 48,000 in less than 5 months, special to (July railsers). We offer any person 75 cents commission for each yearly subscriber sent as as $2.30 a year (the regular rails) when three or infer are sen at some time. When remixing, deduct commission, Volume 1, bound in beautiful over $2.30; is cloth, $100,
Send 30 cents for agents' outfit. Address Jewell N.
Halligan, Gen. Matr., P. O. Drawer T. Chicago.

CONSERVATORY OF UTICA, N. Y.

CONSERVATION OF OTION, N. 1.

Music in all its departments, languages, electrican, etc.
C-lederated European predecears only. Christian home, Begianors or advanced statemes thoroughly trained as music buschest and actions. Positions cought for graduates. Advantages, without templations of big cities.
Five free weekly classes in eight-reading, harmony, theory, history, ensemble. Thirty free concerts, recitals, lectures. Total expresses, one year: room, board, piano, laundry, music, milton. 486 to 4906. In 1889, 186 students; now, 40. Prospecting gratis.

LOUIS LOMBARD, Director

SUMMER SCHOOL

Metropolitan College of Music OPENS JULY 1st, 1892.

Boarding accommodations. All advantages of the winter school retained. Dudley Buck, Pres.; A. R. Parsons, Vice-Pres.; C. B. Hawkey, Mus. Dir. For particulars, address H. W. OMERNE, Sec. & Trens., 19 & 21 E. 10th St., N. Y.

CHILD CULTURE STUDY CIRCLE is a new department in the Kindergarten Magazine, devoted exclusively to the home-training of children according to Froebel. $1.50 per year; 30 cents on trial, three months. Kindergarten Publishing Co., 277 Madison St., Chicago.

MUSIC SALE of Masic we will send by mail, postpost of part of the part of th

BEGINNERS IN MUSIC

For Theories in stange of a partial unto you will receive to small a man Walls (conyrelated) which will enable you to quickly sequire algibrary class.

A MOST VALUABLE INVENTION

Applicable allies to Phane, Organ, Baajo, Mandella, Thelia Gulliar, or any other resulted Information Johnson totes. A shaped until the Control of the health file of their motion and parts which for revious parts with a say part of the United States and Canada. AINS E. CARLOSTRIS, 143 PTIM Street, Long Island Cary, N.V. AINS E. CARLOSTRIS, 143 PTIM Street, Long Island Cary, N.V.

FREE of everything worn by man, woman or obtid sent free by addressing MAHLER BROS., 503-504 Sixth Ave., New York

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR DARKNESS & DAYLIGHT

or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE
A WOMAN'S theiling story of George. Temperature, and Homes or to be the Name in the great sodes worth of New York. B or, HELBY CAMPIREL. Introduction.

No. BRIES CAPRELL Introduction.

By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D.

A westerful took of Circlestan leve and both. 25th thousand the control of the TOKOLOGY, a complete Ladies' Guide in bealth and disease. Women write that "Toxology is worth its weight in gold." "Should my bouse take fire it would be the first book saved." "No book sells like Toxology." Prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages from Mest toyens to avents. free. Best terms to agents.

Atter R. Stockham & Co., 27 Madison St., Chicago

NOW READY-THE MAY

FAMILY HERALD!

Containing Four New and Complete Stories, and the continuation of a waw satisfat. Stories of great interprets, emitted, "VARNA'S FORTUSES;" to specify the first open useful and entertaining miscellagations matter of constant value in every households family one of the MOST ATTHAUTITY AND LOW-EST. PRICED Skully magnifies over gabilities. Price, LO Cenira Monthly; $1.75 Yearly. For size by all Book and Newsleaters, and by

THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY

83 and 85 Duare St. (one door East of Bd'way,) New York
Digitized by Geogle

MISS MAUDE HAYWOOD will be glad through this Department to answer any questions of an Art nature which her readers may send to her. She cannot, however, undertake to reply by mail; please, therefore, do not ask her to do so. Address all letters to Miss Maude Haywood, care of The Ladies' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

BACKGROUNDS IN TAPESTRY PAINTING

N order to produce really good imitations of woven tapestries, by means of painting on woolen con-vas with the French dyes, it is necessary to study carefully the manner of treating the landscapes so constantly employed as backgrounds to the favorite pastoral subjects in the Watteau and Boucher styles. When once the method is thoroughly mistered, they can be executed with great facility, the char-acteristic effect being attained with remarka-bly little work. Those experienced in rapid sketching from nature in water colors will find no difficulty in the matter after they have grown sufficiently familiar with the use of the colors employed to know just what combinations will produce the various effects.

A FEW simple general rules may be given as to the mixing and applying the dyes; but beyond that, individual experience and practice will give the best possible instruction. The great advantage, and the charm of working in the Grénié dyes, lies in their fewness and simplicity, while at the same time they are so strong and pure that their proper mixture and dilution will give an infinite gradation of tones. The list comprises sanguine, cochineal, poncean rose, Indian yellow, emerald green, indigo and ultramarine, which latter is rarely used in landscapes; also brown, gray and gray-green, oll of which may be mixed from the first-named dyes; but it will be found extremely useful, if not indispensable for the beginner, to have them ready put up in right proportions.

up in right proportions.

Commence a landscape by painting in the Commence a landscape by painting in the sky. For this purpose use indigo, and never ultramarine. Mix the dye in a jar, with sufficient medium and water, according to the size of the piece to be covered, and have a second quantity of pure medium and water ready prepared. Use a large breast, and scrub the color well into the canvas, beginning at the top left-hand corner, leaving the spaces for cloud forms of the white ground untouched. Continue this wash for about two-thirds of the sky, and then take the clear medium and water for the rest of the way down to the horizon, blending off the blue and merely wetting the canvas without coloring it down to the horizon, blending off the blue and merely wetting the canvas without coloring it all over where the distant trees or mountains are to be. When a sunset effect is desired, work pure yellow and rose, very much diluted, and put on separately, into the lower portion of the sky, but not high enough to mingle with the blue above. While the sky is still slightly moist, the distance should be painted in in order that the close may blend softly in in order that the edges may blend softly. For this purpose mix indige and cochinest for the purplish tones furthest away, adding yellow to make a gray-green for the middle distance.

THE first wash of the foreground may include almost all the colors used, either separately or mixed as required, but kept clear and delicate. Experienced artists can almost finish their work in one painting, with the exception of a few finishing touches to be added when the picture is perfectly dry. The green for foreground foliage and trees is made of in-digo, yellow and sanguine in various propor-tions. Cochineal, mixed in with the colors, throws the objects back in the scene, while sanguine brings them forward, steaming up even stronger than it is painted, and there-fore must never be used where distant effects

Rocks or stones are painted much as in Rocks or stones are painted much as in water color drawing. First, the forces are made out with gray, and allowed to dry. Next, very light tints of pure Indian pellow, sanguine, emerald green, indigo and ponceau are laid on separately and brokenly, being blended one into the other. The whole is finally worked up with a pale shade of gray, which is dragged over the bright tones to subdue them sufficiently. Pure colors, kept however always very delicate, should be similarly introduced into the trunks of trees, or rustic seats. While avoiding gardshaess, tapestries should be full of color, however low in tone they are kept, where an old or faded effect is required. Trees are preferably silhouetied against the sky. It is seldom niviasable to attempt to show follage light against a dark ground, as it involves a very great deal more labor, and gives rarely a satisfactory result. A broad, simple treatment almost invariably proves the most effective, and subjects involving minute detail are to be avoided. High lights can be obtained by means of a penknife, which is particularly useful for this purpose in the rendering of grass and thick follage in the foreground. It should only be purpose in the rendering of grass and thick foliage in the foreground. It should only be used after the painting is perfectly dry, when superfluous color can be removed with a light, firm touch, forms being carefully drawn, as with penell or brush. The knife ought never to be used upon the sky, and is seldom neces-pary for the extreme or middle distance.

PAINTING IN WATER COLORS

PIPTH PAPER STUDIES FROM LIFE

HEN treating of painting from life we come to the highest branch of art; the most ambitious, the most absorbing and engrossing, and that which at the same time makes the greatest demands upon one's faculties and energies, in proportion, however, only as one's aim is high and good. The mere fact of painting from a model is no guarantee for the quality of work accomplished, neither should the object in view be a more mechanical photo-graphic representation of the forms, but rather graphic representation of the sorms, our taster the expression of the effect which they have upon the mind of the artist; and this, of course, is an impossibility, unless the hand responds in some degree to the eye and head. The writer must first learn to make his letters and to speil his words, and the musician to read his notes, however great their genius or talent; so only by patient and untiring study can in art even the preliminary difficulties be overcome; and only by growing familiar with the handling of the materials, and thoroughly submitting to the limits and restrictions they impose, can the imagination find free expres-

I N the first place, no one can hope to succeed in pointing from his In the first place, no one can bope to succeed in painting from life without considerable previous practice in drawing, both in outline and light and shade, nor expect to cope with the numerous and complicated difficulties of form, tone and color, presented in one figure, unless each has been already studied separately. Therefore, let the student who is in carnest, and serious, take this advice to heart. Leave the paint-box unopened until many drawings of the human head and form have been made both of the whole and of the separate parts. Make elaborate studies, as well as slight sketches of hands and feet, in repose and in action; of attitudes and movement, and of the fishs and rexture of draperles. The sense of power over the subject gained by such conscientious work will be more than ample compensation for the time and labor expended. Having thus arrived at the point where color may be used with some chance of success, it is best to begin with single figure studies, without attempting anything like the making of a picture at first. Take some pains in the choice and posing of the sitter. Try to get characteristic subjects, and to give some meaning to their attitude, which should, however, above all, be easy, unstrained and natural. It will be found that men are exier to meaning to their attitude, which should, however, above all, be easy, unstrained and natural. It will be found that men are easier to represent than women, an old face than a young one, and well-marked strong features than those very soft and delicate. It is better not to begin by choosing the most difficult to portray. It is more interesting and more instructive, where possible, to work from a model in character costume, and a little incensity and energy will accomplish a great deal in this direction. Study old pictures, and copy and contrive the dresses as well as possible, especially avoiding incongruity, such as high-heeted slippers on a peasant's feet.

DO not alter the dowing every time the sitter moves slightly; but, nevertheless, always take prompt advantage of any change or passing effect which will really improve the picture; a good result, however, once as-cured, do not waste valuable time by frequent and nunecessary modifications. Pay particu-lar attention to the drawing of the head, and to the position and proportion of the features; for no amount of good work in the rest of the for no amount of good work in the rest of the study will compensate for the lack of it in the face itself: it should always be the center or interest, that which gives meaning and ex-pression to the whole. The general sketch of the figure, and a careful drawing of the head well obtained, proceed to block in the mark-ings of the features, the eyes and brows, the mastrils, month and ears. Spend all the time required over this in order to get them most accurate, gradging them no amount of con-scientions painstaking labor, however slight the method of treatment in the rest of the study. The deeper shadows may next be put into the face, but before washing in the local string. The deeper shadows may next be put into the face, but before washing in the local color of the flesh paint in as keynotes the brightest or richest tints near the head; other-wise, as the picture advances, it will be found that the appearance of the flesh is altogether too pale and weak, it being so very difficult to include the tone correctly on expense of white judge the tones correctly on expanse of white paper. It is usually best, also, at this point, to float in the broad wash of the background. It it is to be a plain one, take the board off the easel, and placing it flat on the table, with a easel, and placing if flat on the table, with a large brush lay the color on very wet and as smoothly as possible, going carefully around the details of the figure, where necessary, with a smaller brush; allow it to dry, and do not attempt to rectify any unevenness while it is in the least wet, but later it may be necessary to flatten it by stippling slightly.

SOMETIMES valuable properties may be picked up in a second-hand theatrical store, at quite a small expense. Many an ex-tensive and complete artist's wardrobe for tensive and complete artist's wardrobe for models has been acquired by a comparatively slight outlay of actual money with the exercise of judgment in selection, and taste and dexterity in adapting the things to various uses. Regard any of the actual clothes worn by great grandparents, and still preserved, which is the case in many families, as valuable, being not only often quaint and artistic, but also authentic; and, moreover, probably suiting the faces and figures of the present generation of their own race. For beware particularly of such mistakes as putting a model of essentially Saxon or Irish type into a Greek or Roman costume, a mistake one unhappily meets with among professional artists more frequently than would be supposed.

Dose the sitter with especial regard to the best effect of light and shade, and study to obtain the happiest turn of the head and body. Often an uninteresting full face may have a pretty profile, or the charm of the expression lie in large eyes turned full upon the speciator. It is the artist's part to see the best features quickly and intuitively, and to take the utmost advantage of them. Avoid, above all, stiffness; never have shoulders and head both turned straight in the same direction. Very much of the ultimate success depends on choice and placing of the model, and opportunity is given for the display of individual judgment and fancy, but the infinite variety of surrounding circumstances, requirements and possibilities in every separate study, make any special directions comparatively uscless. any special directions comparatively useless. Sketch the figure in lightly, with a finely-pointed piece of charcoal, with especial refer-ence to the general action, leaving out at first the details; as, for instance, any complicated arrangement of drapery, which of course is disturbed each time the model rests; and noticing particularly the direction and slope of the shoulders, the turn of the body and the position of knees and elbows, in order that a living, breathing greature may be suggested position of knees and chows, in order that a living, breathing creature may be suggested within the garments, and not a lay figure. Treat the modeling of the hands and arms, or feet, when they are bare, in the same man-ner as that of the face; and when putting in the general flesh tint be sure the colors are ab-solutely pure, and the brushes and water clean. Diete a models coloring is expecially to Dirty or muddy coloring is especially to be guarded against.

IT is a good plan only to work on the face when the sitter is fresh; and as soon as a tired or wearied expression comes to turn to some less important part of the picture. Use only such colors as raw unaber, cobalt, light red, yellow other, black, vermillion and rose madder in the flesh, and never indigo or crimenon lake. Aim for free, vigorous, crisp work, and for clear, harmonious coloring. Avoid anything like flatness, dollness or timidity. Paint in holdly the highlest and the decrees. Paint in boldly the brightest and the deepest tints, blending them, however, by infinite gradations and delicate half-tones. Do not try to cultivate any particular "style," but use the simplest and most direct method to obtain the effects desired. Avoid niggling and fusions over the painting work freely and fussing over the painting, work freely and broadly, and use always a full brush and clear colors. To obtain trunsparency, it is abso-lutely necessary to use plenty of water, and to make the tiuts wet.

SOME PLAIN WORDS OF ADVICE

HE foundation of all good art work Is a thorough knowledge of drawing. It is impossible to be an srist without it. The best preparation for a career in any branch is a course in a good training-school, under a competent teacher.

The quality of perservence is extremely school, under a competent teacher.

The quality of perseverance is extremely necessary to success. There is a certain amount of drudgery to be gone through in the beginning of alreast any undertaking. The most gifted students are by no means invariably those who come out best in the end. Geniuses are few. The majority of those who achieve an ordinary success in practical work are workers who, with a taste for art, have simply conventrated average for art, have simply concentrated average qualities and expabilities in that special direction, without possessing any great talents or tastes. The principle of gaining power by concentration of effort needs to be more ap-preciated by students. From the foundation of a knowledge of the general principles of drawing, pass to the earnest study of some one branch which will prove much more profitbranch, which will prove much more profit-able in every sense than a less thorough knowledge of several kinds of work.

knowledge of several kinds of work.

Broadly speaking, there ought to be two periods of study, the first in order to gain knowledge, and the second to learn how to turn knowledge already acquired to practical use for some definite work. Whatever the ultimate aim, the preparatory leasons should be identical, namely, in the general principles of drawing, light, shade, tone and color.

It is the greatest mistake possible to look at act work solely from a peruniary point of view, although, of course, a sensible woman has to take ways and means into account. One of the questions that come most fre-has to take ways and means into account. One of the questions that come most frequently to the art department is this; "In how short a time can I learn enough to become a teacher," designer, or illustrator, as the case may be. "I know nothing whatever about drawing or painting, but feel that I have a taste for it." The prospect of such correspondents ever attaining their ambition would be so much more hopeful if they wrote in a different spirit: "What is the best method of study in order to fit myself most thoroughly for an art career in this or that capacity? I know that time and hard work are necessary before I can achieve anything, but I think I before I can achieve anything, but I think I have patience and perseverance enough to carry me through, if only I prove to possess the necessary capabilities as well as the desire for the art work in question."

Every Subscriber

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

IS ENTITLED

to a copy of our new, enlarged and illustrated book, "Successful Home Dyeing," the best and most practical book ever published.

Explicit directions are given for coloring over all kinds and colors of goods, with the 45 different Diamond Dyes, giving over 100 named colors and 300 shades, warranted fast to light and washing.

A Handsome Birthday Card for the baby ent to any mother giving baby's name.

Every person who wants to know how to make over old garments, to color yarn, car-pets, rugs, feathers or anything that can be colored, needs this book. Send at once.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

Are plated THREE TIMES HEAVIER on the three points most exposed to west. SOLD BY FIRST-CLASS DEALERS.

YOU GAN BANJO LEARN GUITAR TO PLAY (MANDOLIN)

ONE HOUR

By the use of CLEMENS' MUSIC NOTATION by the use of CLEMENS mosts not the instrument needed. Perfect command acquired in a week's practice. New times played at sight. This is wonderful, but grues. Becammended by all who tree it, in cluding many first-class numbers. All the popular airs of the day written in this satulton, at regular pieces, families above, containing full asphanaires, and one time, suit on receipt of 55 cents. Circular for 2 cent stamp. CLEMENS & BALDWIN, WESTERS BASIC-NOTE BRILLIAND, CLEGARD, LLC.

The WE have been appoint as the form of the solid registration of the world of the WORLD'S LITHOGRAPH CO. MANDLLY BUILDING. CHICAGO.

THE SYMPHONION MUSIC BOX

Has changeable steel plates which makes it more destrable. Seed for catalogue now. FEED H. SANDER, 146 Congress Street. Boston, Mass.

GUITARS SOLID MAHOGANY, $7.50
BOLID ROSEWOOD, $9.50
MANDOLINS For $6.50, $6.50, $9.50 and $10.50
Perfect in scale, tone and work manship
BANJOS For $3.00, $3.50, $6.00 to $9.50
Charefully selected from our large stock We propay express, and send them on approval, THE THORPSON MOSE CO., 400 Walnut Avenue, Chimps, III.

Wall Paper at Dry Soods Prices! New Spring 2 cents per rell up. Samples sent for 10 cents. PAPER A ROOM FOR $1.00 Sent on Seccipt 12 Reils Ten-cent Paper, of $1.00 | 16 Yards Five-cent Border. Extra paper, 5 cts. per roll: extra border, 1 cts. per yard Agests' sample books, 5. FANDER, Mill. 5 & CO. Wall Paper Department, Peoria, III,

How to do Cut Work FREE

Illustrated Directions With 4 Months' Trial Subscription to THE Months Principles, at 10 cmts. Address, PRISCILLA PUB. CO., Lynn, Mass.

INTERIOR As artistic Magnetine. Community waterd, Writes for corner and premiums. Set, Ben. DECORATOR Pek. Co., 215 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

STAMMERING

Send for "Speech Befects, Their Cuses and Cor-rection." Refer to Mrs. Maria Upham Brake, Boston, Mass. E. J. E. Thours, Newton Contro, Mass.

you want to build a house, send 25 cents to J. S. Ogfivia, 51 Rose St., New York, and get HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE, containing 25 plans.

CURE OF SPEECH IMPEDIMENTS

BY EDWARD ECK

DAINTY BASKET

N preparing for the baby. pretty basket to hold the juisites for its toilet is inspensable. In no other ngle item can taste and cill effect a greater saving f money than in this dainty djunct. They can be pur-aid decorated at prices varylars and a half to twenty dol-ingers can cover one at home e cost. Suitable baskets can om fifty cents to one dollar. A ng, shape should be chosen, ty-two luches long, and with a nam or four inches high. As is entirely hidden from sight, one for a foundation is all that chalf or four inches high.

rid be covered with muslin, or r some colored material. Silesia, c, or sateen may be used, and any that is preferred. The French is most appropriate for boys, and a. If any special color predominarsery, or in the basket to match, is effective, crimson books warm. is effective, crimson looks warm. and a delicate green cool in sumby the strips to fit, allowing for ning them neatly round the top, aing any extra fulness in tiny plaits rer part. Cut a piece of cardboard to it the bostom of the basket, cover it a cambric, and afterward with the and lay it in place when the trimming It will concest the finishing where and bottom join.

for the covering plain white Swiss muslin, dotted or figured muslin, point d'es-t, which is net covered with tine data, or the different kinds of piece lace. When s inexpensive basket is desired, try fine e.cl.-th, scrim, silkolene, or art muslin, a. India, or surah silk, in soft shades, es a very pretty covering, and does not se as quickly as muslin. Whatever the erial chosen, line the sides of the basket la strips gathered or plaited on. Make a p ffill for the outside, and fasten it around top, concealing the joining with a full che of the same.

CHESE frills may be ornamented in many different ways, according to the taste and agenuity of the maker and the material set. Muslin is pretty trimmed on the edge with valencieunes lace, or with rows of feather stitching in washing silk, or hemstitched. Net or lace may have rows of very narrow ribbon woven in and out through it. Silk can be daintily beaumed, or embruidered with a tine of dots along the bon. The ruche at the top may be of silk, fringed or pinked, or of ribbon, or a thick silk cord may be substituted for it. Two little pockets must be made of strips of cardboard about six inches long and three wide, overed with the silesia and full frills of the muslin or lace. Bend to a and three wide, covered with the silesia and full frills of the musiin or lace. Bend to a semicircular sloape, and sew them securely in opposite corners of the basket, or on opposite sides, if preferred. Tack them under the frills, or cover the stitches with bows of ribban. In the remaining corners put two pin-cushious, triumed in the same way, one for large and one for small safety pins.

A COVER of mustin, or whatever material is used for the basket, lined with sitesia, and ornamented to match the frills, is sometions provided to protect the contents when not in use. Although these daintily-trimmed haskets are very fascinating when they are new, they soon lose their freshores. It is really more sensible to have a pretty wicker basket, and decorate it with ribbons, which can be easily replaced when they are soiled at a small expenditure of time and trouble. The ribbon can be twisted through the openings in the wicker work, or tied in hows at the corners or on the sides. Porkets can be made of pretty figured silk to match, if desired. High standard baskets can be had for two delices, or two and a half, and these are very effective with a bow field where the three legs cross, and bews on the handle.

Common wicker backets can be painted white, either with or without lines of gold, and carnished. In her first enthusiasm the young mother disregards trouble; but when the buly is three or fear months old, and she has to resew the muslin furbelows, she may wish that she had chosen something more autostantial. ELISABETH ROBINSON SCITTLE

Entropies Nore—Six "months" was mis-printed for six "weeks" in the article on feed-ing in the April number.

soon as the child afflicted with speech impediments is old enough to enter school, and becomes con-scious of its defect, its life becomes unquestionably one of great suf-fering and constant mortification, fering and constant mortification,

The unfortunate habit of a stam-

The unfortunate habit of a stammering child will often cause faterruption during the instruction hours, and make the other pupils restless and cause incalculable harm. In many cases the teacher has not the ability, patience or disposition to lessen the timidity of the unfortunate child. Encouraged by the careless parent they excuse themselves by saying: "Let the child alone, the habit will some day decrease."

How wrong this is! From such neglect the future career of the child will undoubtedly suffer. Finding himself excluded from the most desirable careers, he will beforced to strike most desirable careers, he will be forced to strike out for himself in some new path for which, perhaps, neither his talents nor inclinations fit him. What shall we do to prevent statterfit him. What shall we do to prevent stattering in early youth? Being a teacher for eleven years of the cure of speech impediments, let me say this: By careful observation, a mother can in many cases perceive slight iminations of it in the first attempt at speech made by the child. Sometimes we meet three or fouryear-old children who already stutter. Purents do not consider the matter of sufficient importance, and the bad habit becomes a lasting defect.

When prevents

When parents perceive that their child has the habit of repeating syllables or letters, or pronouncing them incorrectly, they should with the greatest calmness, slowly and dis-tinctly utter in a correct manner the wrongly pronounced letter, syllable or word, and let the child repent it in like manner until it is able to pronounce it correctly. If they fail to understand the little one, then let it repeat to understand the little one, then let it repeat the words again, forcing it to pronounce the vowels in a long-drawn manner; for instance: "Good night," "sleep well." "Pear moma, please give the some cake." Avoid, by all neams, spenking too suddenly or abruptly to the child. Persons whose task it is to instruct such children must never become impatient or speak in an angry manner, for the future of the afflicted child is decided by the treat-ment it receives the first nine years of its life. If the child by the negligence of its parents is not cured when ten years old, then it will not cured when ten years old, then it will have to undergo the troublesome cure with a specialist, which requires often a long time. For the benefit of the renders of Tun Lanus' Home Journal I will give some main points in the methods to be used in remedying this

 Let the child stand passively erect, hands and arms banging loosely; let it inhale and ex-bale slowly and quietly, without raising its shoulders. The child should not catch the breath suddenly through the mouth while ex-ception. The interior ways to be also. through the nostrile, the expiration through the nostrile, the expiration through the mouth. Repeat this exercise fifteen to twenty times. If dizziness ensue, discontinue for a few minutes.

2. Let the child stand passively erect, the back perfectly straight, with hands upon its back perfectly straight, with hands upon its hips, inhale slowly, filling the lungs; exhale through the mouth, and gradually with the ound of ha, holding this as long as possible.

Then: ha, he,
ha, he, hi,
ha, he, hi, ho, ha, he, hi, ho, hoo.

Then: ab,

an, eh, ah, eh, ih, oh, eh, ih, oh, ooh,

The consonants must be repeated clearly and distinctly by their sound, not their name. Make combinations of the vowels with consonants, for instance: all, egg, ice, or, use, etc., after which you may proceed to more difficult words and sentences. Never forget that the yound is the carrier of the word.

HOME AND MOTHER INFLUENCE

BY MINNIE B. BELL

ONCE heard a learned mon-NCE heard a learned man remark: Many mothers have rained their boys by their fretful, oft-repeated dont's."
"Don't make so much noise, Johnnie"-

"Don't put your feet on the furniture, Charlie" -- "Don't leave the door open, Willie," etc. Suppose we endure a little more noise, if harmless noise is natural to Johanie. We pentile and clatter as the sweetest music of gone years. Let us put into our family living room, furniture for our comfort and use, upon which Charlies feet may rest. Has Charlie a "foot-rest"—one of those essentials to man's comfort? If not, give him one—with a mild suggestion as to its use. If careless Willie leaves the door open, suppose we close it; boys will forget sometimes. I would not make our wint torget sometimes. I would not make our boys selfish and extravgent — far from it! But if by patience, reasonable indulgence, and constant thought and watchful care we may threw round our boys a home influence, and give them a heart-felt love of home as the cosiest nook, the brightest, dearest spot in all the earth, is it not worth while? God bless are torset and God bless the mothers and size our boys, and God bless the mothers, and give them strength and wisdom to discharge their mission, "for there is no sanctuary of virtue like home."

In response to many inquiries, the editor of the "Mothers' Corner" has prepared a little book called "A Baby's Requirements," giving practical advice as to the first wardrobe, the necessary toilet articles, the preparations needed for the mother's comfort, the food and general care of a young haby. It can be ob-mined from the Curtis Publishing Company for twenty five cents.

FORMING THE CHARACTER

WHEN I am tired with the noise of the children, and the many little cares that fill the life of a basy wife and mother. I like to take up a book and forgot my small words in the great thoughts of some one else. One or two bits I have mer with lately have pleased are so much I have thought they edgin help some other tired mother, so ask you up of them in the "Mothers' Council." To form a character is the week of one personal life, and when once were the the inequalities of our outward dreumstances excee to be. If wealth, or fame, or knowledge, or length of days, were the fluid goal of homain coden yee, their indeed the difference between man and family would be an unequalities of our nature of an angle of homain coden yee. The indeed the difference between man and family would be an unequality and done in the humbest surroundings. S. N. H.

STARCHING SHIRT BOSOMS

STARCHING SHIRT BOSOMS

I THINK if C. W. W. will try my receipt for starching shirt bosoms she will have a satisfactory result. Of course, you starch these in hot warch first, so I will fell how to starch them the second time. To one shirt take a good half steapconful starch, and discover in as Entire cold water as possible. Then fill your dish if use a common bowl, in which you desolved the starch not quite half fill of cold water, and not one to aspondist of kerosere. Stir the kerosene well into the starch; then dip your shirt bosons several times, mixing the horizontally between your flagers. After this fold and roll the starch very tight, and let it remain so at isset three-quarters of an hour before brooking.

THOUGHTFUL MOMENTS

THOUGHTFUL MOMENTS

OUT-OF-DOORS a glocary day and pouring rain; independent willie case, there is also time for thoughful maments. The then we realize the bleeding of work, and all the bleedings we mothers enjoy in our home life, whose cares sometimes seem bekenne to the warry nerves. "Mother!" How much that previous word concept we realize when we took back to our own childhood. She whose province it is to keep the home in trian that the leving father provides, a cheerful satile and a content mind, a close table, with cition and affect shining, salt and pepper belies never empty, a web-filled laster, with plicity of good, sweet breach no bottoniess shirts or technical social. Oh; there are so many little things for methers to do; and ready, how much of our happlices does depend on the little things. It often takes but one cross word to make a whole family undappy. How this triaces does depend on the little things, in often takes but one cross word to make a whole family undappy. How this it have to please a child. A shury told at the twilight bour, or a pay mase invited in to cas are little things, but often make a child hoppy for days. A game or fault before bedtime, will page and mamma to jote it is bree into things that make a child layer to day. A game or fault before the distings that make a child hope to day. A game or fault perfectly before the form of the layer of the sent boundard brighten thoughts in after pera when the childhead hopes to but a nonnerory. Sometimes I think we do not rightly appreciate our home bloodings, the comfort of husband and children for whom to care. What bolier ambigion is there for woman than to make been an attractive place for her level ones? Sometimes we become almost discouraged, and think it amounts to little, this great expenditure of strength and nerve that no one realizes but ourselves. How three wegrew, and we think the same expenditure of sometime has not one the december of a could leave a brighter watery than no one realizes but ourselves. How three deeps what s

SUFFER THE LITTLE CHILDREN

SUFFER THE LITTLE CHILDREN

I RT usbe very watchfild over our little enes. They I are precious giffs. In all their intacence and purity they come to us; let our lightest aim be to keep them so, our greatest ambitton to see them while still young giving their bearas to God. As we say some little task uping their bearas to God. As we say some little task upout them which it is our show as see indoor as well as little hands can to it, let us show pleasure at their obsdience, and at the same time required them that their heavenly father is pleased with them too, for He has mid:

"Children, obey yiele parenas." Let us leach them also tast He has said: "Little children come made me." A leas un-sent message to the little mes, as invitation direct from the King. Oh! imay we, as wears true most supjustruct our dear little once that this is the most imporlast invitation they can ever receive, nod may we do all we can to instre its acceptance.

An Elouse Readen.

BABY'S FLANHELS AND FILLOWS

MAY I come with my questions, for this is my first baby and I know as little? First-My haby's flances skirts are shranken from being improperly washed by serrant girls. Can any one tell me how! can get the "fulness" out, so they will resume their former dimensions? Second-I am told that feathers are too beating for the little head. Is this true, and if so, of what can I make a suitable pillow?

First-Nothing will restore them, Second-A feather pillow is not objectionable unless it is so soft that the head is buried in it. Curled hair is the best material for a firm pillow.

CARE OF CHILDREN'S HAIR

CARE OF CHILDREN'S HAIR

WILL be editor of the "Mothes' Corner" give space to an inquire concerning children's bair? I have a little girl whose bale is soft and files but left to beef baras in unbecoming strings. I have curied it a good deal, and combed it out in furfly locks that look very presty. But it gets so tangled then that it is a task to brush in, and I fear breaks the bair, so I notice a good many spill ends. Does hair give from the rost or from the study I would like some advice on the subject from some experienced person, as I do not want to indure her lair for the sake of her present appearance. I brush is frequently, every day, and am exceld to keep the scale clean and free from danderiff. It looks gively and well kept, but still the spilt ends appear. Please don't reli ms to clip the ends, for In my own experience I have best all fulty in that.

Hair grows from the roots, so that clipping the ends does very little good. I should suggest cutting the child's hair-close, and keeping it so for a year or two, as there is an evident lack of vitality in the hair. Rub the head twice a week with compound campher liniment, and use occasionally a little clive oil.

A BABY'S FIRST WARDROBE

EXECUTE MADDIOUS.

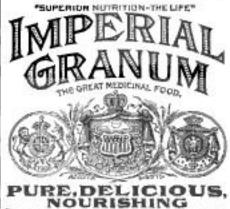

EVERY month I read carefully your "Mothers' Combrided spot. Now, I was to set you a Servaged into the ballowed spot. Now, I was to set you a Servaged in question, which I hope will not prove too troubscome to answer. Not long since the "Council" contained several suggestions as to "Baby's First Wardrobe" which, while doubt loss subsidicatory to one of Bore experience, were not specific council for me. Will you kindly answer the following questions. First—How many of week, and what articles do i need for a "But wardrobe?" Second—Of what materials are the drooses, gowing etc., made?

etc., made." Third—is it cheaper to buy the things ready made, or have them made?

THE YOUNG MOTHER

I HAVE taken much pleasure for years in reading your Journal, and expectally of late." Mothers' Crumsch." and I weather touck you a few questions which I hope you will answer as seem as you can possibly do so. Pieces give me an idea of what I shall couly need for halp's cardrobe, and also a first-class quality of tellet articles for the total.

These questions would have been answered by mail had addresses been sent. Full replies are given in the little book "A Baby's Re-quirements," referred to just at the left of this paragraph, and which the Journal will send for twenty five cents.;

THIS World Renowned is a solid extract Dietetic Preparation derived from most superior growths of wheat-nothing more.

It combines the GREATEST QUANTITY of NOURISHMENT with the LEAST AMOUNT Of LABOR NECESSARY FOR ITS DIGESTION, and stands to-day UNRIVALLED IN THE ROOM OF THE SICK OR CONVALESCENT.

Pure, Soothing and Its value in fevers, in Strengthening, inantition, and in all gastric and enteric diseases,—especially in Cholera-Infantum, Cholera-Morbus, Diarrhua and Dysentery has been incontestably procen;—often being the only food the stomach will tolerate when hife seems depending on its retention.

Always Uniform it is the safest food for and Reliable Nursing Mothers, Infants and Children; an incomparable aliment for dyspeptic, delicate, infirm and aged persons; a most delicious and wholesome article of diet for the strong as well as the weak.

Universally by physicians, pharmacists, the public and the press, its sales and popularity are constantly increasing; and it will have satisfactory results in nutrition far into the future because it is based on MERIT and proven SUCCESS in the past.

Source Depart. JOHN CABLE & SONS, New York.

The attention of OCEAN TRAVELLERS and YACHTSMEN is called to IMPERIAL GRANUM as the FOOD REST SUITED to ALL WEAK and DELICATE conditions of the steenach.

It is absolutely sufr and can be easily prepared; with mater only, or with condensed milk, when fresh milk cannot be obtained.

TRAVELINS need not be told what a PRECIOUS BOON such a FOOD must OFTEN PROVE; and YACHTSMEN, particularly those expecting indies and children as their guests, should include IMPERIAL GRANUM in their storess.

The "Export Time" are expectally recommended for shapboard, and can be ordered chigle packages or in cases of one doorse carely, through all draspites and fine grocers. The simulard package (single boxes, or in eartices of meshall drown "Small" and one-third down "Large" size), is sold Everywhere.

Make unroing easy, and prevent much colic, because they admit air into the bottle as the balls is story ead, and prevents a vacuum being formed. Sam-ple free by mail upon request, with ruinable information for cleaning and keeping nipples sweet and beathy. colic, because they admit air issue the bestle as the milk is drawn out, and percental avacum being formed. Sample free by mail upon request, with valuable information for cleaning and keeping nipples savet and bendthy.

Walter F. Wars, 10 S. Tales St., False, P.

BABY WARDROBE PATTERNS
Infinity clothes, Also 25 of shart clothes. Either set with full directions for making, amount and kind of multiclal, by mult, scaled, 56 cents. Patterns theolitely peliable. HINTS TO EXPECTANT MOTHERS, a relable. HINTS to EARTH with such set of patterns, book by a traduct nurse, free with such set of patterns, Mrs. J. BRIDE, P. O. Box 2033, New York.

B Of every gar- A ment for B quired. New Impermed by pot. 1861, 1 short deliver, 25 pat. No. 1 kind, and, mat'el required, valuable hydrone indicated by perfection indicated, valuable hydrone indicated by perfection indicated. by perdendent pures, and pertindent listen, from use, from with such. See England Pattern Co., for 6, Postinep, Vi-

BABY'S HEALTH WARDBOBE, Complete outfit in-Spat. Socts. Full discribed, Mrs. Short cisches, Spat. Socts. Full discribed, kind, material required. Patterns improved 1882. Res. F. E. PHILARS, Kerns, S. R.

PURCHASING Done in New York without extra com-present experience. Seed for circular to M. J. CURRY, 34 W, 39th Street, New York.

Digitized by Google

DESIGNS IN LINEN APPLIQUE

BY ASSA M. PORTER

SOME further designs for delites in the linen appliqué work, upon which an article was published in the January number of the Journal are berewith given, ac-cording to promise. Illustration No. 1 is both pretty and ex-tremely simple in arrangement. No new stitches are employed, but the wheel pattern, or the "Rosette point d'Angleterre," already described, is introduced in the four corners only of the mat; the remainder of the design is of the braid, finished with the edging of buttonhole stitch in white silk. This mut is very effective placed over a soft shade of china silk, and used as a cover for a pin-cushion.

Illustration No. 1

A small and very dainty doily is shown in Illustration No. 2, and the pattern used, al-though not at all difficult to manage, needs

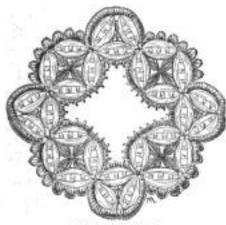

Illustration No. 2

careful execution. The manner of working is given in the small illustration at the begin-ning of the article. The central bars forming the foundation of the flower-like stitch are made first, and knotted in the middle, five threads going to each petal. These latter are worked solidly by an interlacing of the silk woven backward and forward from the center

The size of this doily, when finished, is nearly five inches, and, when finished, a dozen of them make a handeach come some and useful present to place beneath a set of tumbiers on the polished table. IllustrationNo.

3 is sufficiently large for a caraffe or plate doily; it is considerably more elaborate in detail, the braid itself even being enriched by a buttonhole stitch through the center of it. This addition may be omitted, if desired. The irregular edge formed by the design is a pretty feature of both this and the small doily in Hustration No. 2.

Besides the stitch already shown in the il-

Besides the stitch already shown in the il-lustration at the beginning of the article, a solid interlacement of silk threads is intro-duced in each corner. It is formed by five strands of silk in each bar, and woven to rep-resent basket work, and is finished by an edg-ing of buttonhole stitch. The linen lawn, of which the foundation is made, is not cut away from beneath from beneath this interlacement, because being worked solidly renders it unnec-

For a cushion top the white em-broidery silk produces the produces the dain tiest ef-fect, while for the tumbler doily, either blue, green, or shrimp pink will be effec-tion

In the execution of this style of work fault to be particularly avoided is that of bung-ling, or clumsy sewing, in places where the buttonbole edging makes awkward turns, or junctions. Another necessary point is to pre-serve the silk absolutely unsoiled by handling,

HEAD-REST OR TABLE-SCARF BY ANNA T. ROBERTS

THE design is intended to be executed on bolting cloth, which is first delicately tinted in the required shades. Have a sheet of blotting-paper under the bolting cloth to absorb the superfluous turpentine used in diluting the oil colors, which must be washed on a lightly as possible signer.

in diluting the oil colors, which must be washed on as lightly as possible, giving the effect of the dye-colors. The water lilies will require little tinting except a thin wash of delicate gray put in behind each petal where it rests against another; the stamens of the flowers are painted with raw sienna, or burnt sienna. Tint some of the leaves bronze-green, making them lighter at the top; 'others again paint a reddish tint growing into a dark, rich marcon shade.

These, as well as the long, reddish 'stems, are washed in with Indian red, shading with madder lake, bone brown and raw umber. I forgot to say that it is well before tinting the design to stretch the bolting cloth on a board and fasten with thumb tacks, so that it will keep smooth in this way and not wrinkle after the tints are washed in. When thoroughly dry, outline the petals of the water lilies with heavy white silk, and the stamens are done in dull yellow. The heaves are worked and veined with bronze-green silk and the red stems and leaves in rich, copper-colored shades. The design, when outlined, is put over a sage-green head-rest, and finished all round with a narrow gold braid. The cushions are tied together with bows with long streamers the same shade as the silken head-rest, if can be put over yellow, salmon, or blue.

A TRAVELING SPONGE BAG

MATERIALS—Three-eighths of a yard M of rubber sheeting, one yard wide. Cut in halves this makes two bugs. Fold to-

Illustration No. 3

will have a bag thirteen and a halfinches long by nine inches wide, Saip the lower edge of the rubber into a fringe two inches deep. Next stitch the side seams and across the bottom above the fringe, and make hem one inch deep at the top of the bag. A spray of forgetme-nots, blue-bells or golden rod may be painted on either side. A binding of narrow ribbon may edge the top and a drawing string through

A COMFORTABLE HAMMOCK PILLOW

BY LINA BEARD

POR solid comfort and hard wear the hammock pillow proves very satisfactory.

Make a cover of light weight bed-ticking, which can be had for about twelve cents a yard. Select a cheerful pattern of wide red and white stripes, make a large pocket on the under side of the cushion for holding the handkerchief and favorite book. If a feather pillow is not to be had, collect scraps of writing paper that are of no use, such as old envelopes, letters and torn pieces. Cut them into strips half an inch wide and from two to three inches long; curl the strips up well with a knife; next make a square bag of any material (an old dress skirt lining, which has been washed, will do nicely), fill the bag with the curled papers mixed with some woolen shreds, stuff very nearly full and sew up the end, then you will have a pillow at little or no cost. The expense of the cover need not exceed thirty cents, and if stitched on the machine, the hammook pillow may readily be made in half an hour, but the curled papers must be prepared beforehand and all ready for use. FOR solid comfort and hard wear the ham-

TWO DESIGNS FOR CORN CLOTHS

BY ANNA T. ROBERTS

THE corn cloth is useful for wrapping up ears of corn, keeping them hot while on the table. Here are two appropriate designs for their decoration. The usual size for a corn cloth is about three-quarters of a yard square, made of fine, white linen. They can be either fringed or hemstitched.

The corn flower forms the decoration for the cloth, of which one corner is given in the first illustration. The design is repented for the three corners, and senttered sprays and single flowers are then powdered along the border, making a very pretty and appropriate design for the article it is intended to decorate. The corn flowers are worked in shades of light blue slik, with the stamens in the center done in purplish tones. The steme snaes of light once six, with the stanens in the center done in purplish tones. The stems and leaves are embroidered in shades of dull, sage-green, which will harmonize well with the blue. The green calyx of each flower is worked in the weaving stitch, giving the effect peculiar to that part of the flower. The rest is simply embroidered in the usual way.

The design of corn, as in the second illustration, is so arranged that when the cloth is wrapped the decoration will show in the corners and border, displaying an ear of corn at intervals. Work the whole design in several shades of delicate silver-green, so often seen in young corn. This design is very pretty worked in white silk, but the light-green shades will be found very dainty against the white of the linen.

LINEN APPLIQUÉ WORK

Designs in this dainty and tasteful work, originated and designed by ANNA M. PORTER:

Tea cloths, center pieces, rose bowl dollys, plate, finger bowl, boubon and tumbler dellys, bureau covers, cushion tops, tables; pillows, and a variety of designs basted ready to embrodeer. Applique, Houtton and point braids by the yard or dozen. Best wash sliks, Sic. per dozen, 30c, half dozen. Three skelns, Be. Ladies can oeder commenced work where it is new to them.

Send 25 conts for one dinger bowl dolly with the and try our work. Catalogue sent upon receipt of cent stamp.

55" Recommended by THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. Address MISS ANNA M. PORTER

SILKS.

Never before have we seen so great interest manifested in this exquisite fabric by the most competent judges of Fashion.

The Types and Styles for this Season are not only beautiful in themselves, but they are specially adapted to the uses demanded of them.

Moires, always a guarantee of richness and elegance, are shown in a multiplicity of styles.

In Taffetas Glaces and Taffetas Rayes, the effects are pretty and simple.

The Illuminated Styles on changeable Twills are such as to meet with general approval.

In the Damas patterns, neatness and elegance prevail,

Oriental Silks, of Japan, India and China, are in profuse variety and very

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway and 11th Street, NEW YORK.

Upholstery Fabrics

Spring of '92

Your attention is invited to our display of BROCADES, SATIN and CHINTZ DAMASKS for Wall, Window and Door Hangings.

New FRENCH BROCADES for Furniture Coverings.
Select CRETONNES and extensive lines of MUSLIN and LACE CURTAINS for SUM-MER use.

The OLDHAM MILL'S soft Drapery Silks (both pinin and figured) in the latest high-art shades. Complete variety of inexpensive stuffs in new effects for Hungings and Furniture Cov-erings.

Samples, Drawings and Estimates on application.

Mail orders receive prompt and careful attention

W. & J. Sloane,

Broadway, 18th and 19th Streets

ormandie Plushes

to SI. (6). Agents Histord, Pleasant and profitable work, CONTREXEVILLE MFG. CO. 287 Great Ave. Massville, S. L.

RESS CUTTING

BY THE TAILOR METHOD. WAIST, SLEEVE AND SKIRT CUTTER can become a practical Dress Cutter in half an hour.

Half price to introduce it. Send for circular.

B. M. KUHN, Inventor, BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

WISTARIA

The May number of Ingalls' Magazine has a benuithi Celored Study of Wistaria. It is a cluster of gems. Locks as though it had just been out from the vine. For sale at the News stands, or sent by mail for 20 cents. Address

J. F. INGALLS, Lynn, Mass. Box J.

MENTION THIS PAPER. Agents wanted in every large place. Ledies can make from $10.00 to $20.00 a work. Address the BRAINERD & ARMSTRONG SPOOL SILK CO., 621 Market Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Digitized by Google

ATHY S DRESS MAKING BY EMMA M. HOOPER

MISS HOOPER invites, and will cheerfully answer any questions concerning home dressmak-ing which may be sent to her by the JOURNAL sisters. While she will answer by mail, if stamp is inclosed, she greatly prefers to be allowed to reply through the JOURNAL, in order that her answers may be generally helpful. Address all letters to MISS EMMA M. HOOPER, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

TING MATERIALS

E apparently wide range of new dress materials may be brought down to cropon, cheviot, serge and camel's lair effects. If on the lookont for a dressy gown, select the first-named, or a serge will answer for a general wear and good summer gown, the cheviot for "lack" and traveling, or the camel's hair for second best. Each hair for second best. Racin shown in many designs, but ided upon the fabric the theoming. No shade can tattl gray, and navy blue is Stripes are very fashion-or mixed effects. Combina-;lected in Paris.

SAT WILL BE WORK

smaker is advised to make 'her "bell" skirt just the de material if she wishes to g appearance the French hough shaped exactly alike, using need only join at the ceds but a narrow facing of the binding and an arrow facing of en binding, and an outside rial about three inches wide. : adds a pinked or bemmed shade of the goods on the tirt, putting it a trifle above iding. Five widths are put bis description, and three of goring the center back it. The bottom is now at border of wide jet passe-vet cut on the bias, fancy, noiré or satin ribbons, vel-anch width bordering silk s wide, a plain, gathered, or from three to five inches in ming should always extend eakirt. I regret to answer ats by saying that skirts are on the ground from three tough English tailors and or making a stand against hion as far as the regular a concerned. Many of the a tendency to break up the ook by a V-shaped front of risk or one outlined by risk, or one outlined by med down the front edge e or ribbon. Others have id goods, or a jabot of lace pentine bands of jet on the end "bell" went on some of ed "bell" seen on some of has the good and plaited t and sides neatly gathered. ire exceedingly scanty in tals are often trimmed with The lower edge may be bottom, showing the plain. The fronts are elaborately a the form of a weap good ext forms a point nearly to e side strands of fringe are front short. Plain a the form of a deep girdle e garoitures may sum up

DICES TO MAKE

sple bodices there are coatat basques, the first named ping and traveling. This I or "habis" back, opened single or double-breasted councied off bluntly two set line. The coat basque th no longer ranked with ry have a pointed vest, rout, with the coat-length and opened up the center at vests are worn, and known until the many ups. Bells from the side to in front. Bertha telmh of face, chillon, silk and rowing fuller over the the broad appearance of ing like a graceful half sing like a graceful half out; as many end at the buck. Pointed and and flat, are also stylish solen, and cotton guwas, orn, and many of the new se left. A Frenchy trimalization or fiche of lare, saterial sewed under the order, deepening at the and resting full over fancy bodies include the Bassian bloose, and of Bussian blouse, and of son back, full belted plas-juare jacket fronts. "One where the center storn fullness at the waist line area inches long, or reach-

SLEEVES AND COLLARS

I N cutting new steeves give as much breadth as possible and medium beight, accomplishing this by using an ordinary lining, a moderate degree of fullness at the top in soft gathers, and a cluster of downward plaits at the inside seam four inches below the arm size. Below the elbow the sleeve fits closely like a deep cuff. A puff, or short, upturned cuff is sometimes placed just at the bend of the elbow. regular draperies and deep cap pieces nearly to the eibow ornament the top. In fact, sleeves should appear as though cut amply full and caught in position while on the wearer accord-ing to the needs of her figure. The most fre-quently seen collar is the now familiar high, straight design, fitted low down on the dress, and of a comfortable width. The flare collars are worn with demi-constances, and collars are worn with demi-costumes, and odd, dressy waists. Collars are trimmed with rows of jet or silk gimp to correspond with the trimming on the bottom of the sleeves.

GIRDLES AND CORSELETS

THESE accessories are worn with round waists, deep Russian blouses and a bodice having a pointed or coat-tail back. Some extend entirely around the waist, formbodice having a pointed or coat-tail back, Some extend entirely around the waist, forming points, or a wide, straight edge at the back, and tapering to almost nothing at the sides, to end in a deep point in front. Others are merely a wide belt at the tack with a Swiss bodice front. Another design sews in the right side seam and books over on the left. The shape of the corselet varies with the wearer's form; as the long and short must wear them, so they are cut round, pointed and straight. These are made of velvet, silk, point de Genes lace, or wide ribbon. While worn on house and street dresses, such accessories are certainly more appropriate for the former. The pointed girdle, as well as the more elaborate corselet, is well boned with narrow, thin stays in front and on the sides; also at the back if it reaches there. The Directoire girdle, giving a somewhat "early empire" effect, is a sash of soft silk having fringed ends, which encircles the waist and these on the left of the front with a single knot and two ends, fifteen inches long, or may have and two ends, fifteen inches long, or may have two loops too short to hang down, and ends.

THE RUSSIAN BLOUSE

THE RUSSIAN BLOUSE

THE more Russian you can, apparently, become, the more stylish of late, consequently every wardrobe must have at least one waist of this name, though there are at least six or eight designs in vogue. There are three kinds of sleeves worn with the waists—a high, coat shape, one baving full uppers and deep, close-fitting cuffs, and the typical Russian sleeve, with a deep cap, or second sleeve extending to the close over the moderately high coat sleeve beneath. Both the cup and wrist are trimmed, also the collar, opening down the left side and lower edge if the wearer is slender. A close lining is worn, not for cotton dresses, however. The blouse is from twelve to twenty inches below the waist line, betted with a ribbon, passementerie, or leather beit, and either plain or shirred at the center, back and front by the collar. Side forms are used if the reason is subset with a ribbon of the collar. center, back and front by the collar. Side forms are used if the wearer is rather large, otherwise the garment resembles a deep sacque, having only side and shoulder seams. Every naving only side and shoulder seams. Every material is made up in this manner, and the trinamings are as numerous as the fabries. Pointed, round, and square yokes are also worn, and when of soft materials, like China-silk or crépon, the round yoke is shirred in three crosswise puffs, divided by jet or pearl passementeric. Handsome buttons fasten these garments, and they are usually worn with "bell" skirts.

HOW RIBBONS MAY TRIM

MOIRE, plain and in marré, or mother-of-peart shadings, double-faced satin, gauze, and fancy striped ribbons, are worn in widths from Nos. 1 to 40, and velvet ribbon in Nos. 5 to 16. In the latter class black pre-dominates. Short belts end under a large, close rosette, while longer once hang in ends and loops at the back, and ribbon is again and toops at the back, and rionen is again worm around the edge of basques and tied in this manner in the back. Ruffles of gauze ribbon edge skirts, and borders of one or several widths applied flatly are in good taste, as a tan metré No. 40 on a tan gown, with No. 5 velvet ribbon of a darker shade on each side. Short fly-bows are placed at intervals of half a yard at the head of ruffles, while others festoon deeper flources of thin materials. Knots of ribbon decorate shoulders and wrists, and are even worn in the hair. Velvet ribbons look esperially well with China silk and printed challie gowns. From three to five rows of ribbon are started from the belt close together, radiating as the rows reach the ruffle on the lower edge where each one ends under a fly-bow, and thus trim the front of the skirt. The very graceful Wattens bow and belt have been described before in these columns, and are still among the "successes of the season."

*DRESSMAKERS CORNER

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any reasonable question on Home Dressmaking sent me by my readers.

EMNA M. HOOPER

EVELYN-I cannot give addresses in this column. Triumess.-Huy a striped or diagonal chevist in gray tones or a blue, navy, whipcord or serge.

ANNA W.-Your letter has been crowded out until new, when it is too late to think of a velvet dress.

Ans A.—Misses of twelve years most certainly do not coar "tea-gowns and demi-trains;" such an idea is bested.

Mass M. P., Brooke, v. - Letter sent you on January lith was recurred with the information that Jefferson Street did not possess such a number,

V. P.—Certainty have a lace dress, getting more conclude for the back and not to much for the waist ad absevus. (2) Trim with jet galloon.

W. J. W<sub>1</sub>-You will have to send your satin rhadness to a dyer to be redressed. (2) Combine it with a atin broade of several shades of brown.

MOTHER'S SPOILED CELLS—Send me your private address and I will recommend a system to you, as it is most decidedly the better plan to learn one.

THEA-I most assertedly can and do recommend ellk petitionsis. (2) I profer thank or glare taffets, and the latter only when more than one may be had.

EQUISTRIAN—Lie not line a cloth habit skirt, and fin-ish the bottom with a three-tack bem blind-slitched with the raw edge left to prevent a fulky look.

LUCUL-Your hair is ansurn. (2) Your complexion not hair, determines becoming colors. A void ruse pink, yellowish tan, bright yellow and brick reds.

M.s. E. S. A.—Please do not write to use in peacil; our letter was subject almost beyond reading. (2) c plain blue sating to use with the blue and white for wrapper,

From McFinesy.—Your cream material is a crepon, one of the first patterns that came out, and it would be faily to astempt matching it now. (3) The red can be dyed a deep may blue. A Young Mirrians—White woolen Bestford need with a gathered skirs, round walst, full eval sleaves and deep collar or cage to the walst line, (2) Line only the walst and sleaves, using settine.

Bussue... You are a dark bloads. (2) Wear reddish and char browns, piak bit gray, may blue, black, cresso, 'baby' blue, delease piak, uso and dark green; the only red would be a rich dark shade.

Mas. J. M. P.—White China silk would not answer the purpose, but black would entirely covered with Prench see and a full at the tock, the slik being too flinky to wear without covering it entirely.

M. J. K. - Stik socks are soldon to be found in the size you wish. (2) With short dollars put on either plats white or black lose. The latter are the more fashion-sits, but personally I prefer white on an infant.

1. A. C.-A personal arrowersest you on January let has been returned "owner not found." You probably have your dress by this time. (2) He not wear an even-ing dress on a train even going a short distance, unless it is easirely covered with a Jong closic.

DEFERMANCE.—A cultrasse-basque is one of a perfect by round shape extending about five inches before the waist line, and takes its mome from a cultrasse or coat of mail fitting closely and willow any break in the per-fectly pialo outline. (2) It has the usual darts.

CHEESE CLOTE.—The collon cropses at differencents can be made into very most evening gowns, having a full scier, restle, round, full bodies and high imped sleeves. Sailin ribbon bolt ending in long loops at the bock, asspenders of the same, also shoulder said wrist bows. Total outlay, lockeding the limitage, is $4.

Parwe—Trim the gown with a corselet of slik benga-line a shade darker than the goods, finishing its edges, also the colour and cutts, with sarrew jet passementeries, (1) " Best" skirt, high shorves and a pointed or con-tail back, with a round front having a correlet sewed in one side seam and booked over to the other,

1. C. fl.—A reliable dyer would do the renovaring better than you could, but if done at home first brash the face, then sponge with a weak solution of becas and warin water, using an old black kin giver or a bit of silk. When mearly dry press on the wrong side with a moderntely warm fron, petting a cloth between it and the lace.

P. S. -Ges the peliow shade. (2) Have crops de chine, China silk in self-brocade, or silk-and-wood nulsed cropsu. (3) Pull -bell -skirt, ruffle of same or children on edge, pulled slever is having chiffon ruffle, here, round to decrewith ruffle around neck, ribbon belt, long how at back from between the shoulders and bows on the shoulders of satio ribbon.

Kartikan—Hold the curved back seam toward you, also bias seams, pinning or besting them to keep them from fulling. (a) The Chim silk should have a "bell" skirt, ruffle, round bodies and full topped-sleeves, with poles de Genes lace for a yoke and deep cuffs hid over the green silk bett of green suth rithon hanging in long loops and code at the back.

Miss Addits—Your veiling about have a modified "bell" skirt, as described to "Londow." Out the bodies short and round, leaving out any failness, and use the sach for the bew Directoire such passed around the wais and that on the hell able in two short loops and fringed ends of soft silk. Add yoke and deep cuffs of point de Genes lace, which, six luchus while, is from larry to seventy-the centers your.

Laurea — Make your French delains with a modified "bell" skirt which has the count back, and the front and show gathered a triffe to take away the excessively plain look. Lengthen is with a bias ruffle of the goods, and have cout steer es high and full at the top. Got the "buby" walk down to a low neck, and fill in this space with a Caina silk yoke, made full. West a ribbsm belt having long such and isope at the back, of a color similar to the yoke.

A MOTHER—Bon't put a color under the embroidered muslin. (2) Have a full skirt, high sleeves, round "baby" wake, low necked, with a gaining of inches mission and a reffle of embroidery around the low neck. (3) Line with white unbrook or laws, and trim with a Watteau bow of No. 8 (10bos, which is a bat-crossing in front, curried to the lack and factored at log of low neck at the back in two short loops, and two long ends to the edge of the skirt.

Manufacture 8.—This is not the department to write to concerning during-room decorations. C1: The lace dress make up over black settin or satin surah, with faul skirt and pointed backer. Plastered of a few secondary color of silk or satin covered with jetted net. Let passementerle on collar and writes and a lot girdle across the fraut, with its deep fringe reserve to the between of the skirt. No. It satin ribbon from the side seams failed along the lower edge of the basepot, to the back point where it fails in long loops and ends.

M.T. D.—The material for your evening dives may be one of the light woolen crypons at $1.00, forty lectors wide, with a trimining of chaffor and stalln or motric rib-less, the latter assureing for bows so the steeres, around the top of the roffle, on the edge of the skirt and as a best folied around the edge of the todies and hang-ing in long lange and ends at the back. (2) Make with a "bell" skirt harding a roffle, pointed boffer, V-shaped rock and elbow steeres, flutching the neek and wrists with chiffien roffles caught with pibon bows.

with chiffion ruffles caught with ribton bows.

ZEA.—There are so many beautiful wool and silk-and-wool black materials in the market that you can easily select many costumes from them. The hase can be need with India silk or brothen, if you have the independence to use a late that has been deemed passe by hadron. (2) Twagown of yellow crepton or Chimasia, with jabots of later and, knots of thack retwer riston, (3) Street soil of the old warper all most black serge, and a calling dress of fine black retypes trimmed with sot galloot. (4) Full dress of shifts beingaline or white third over saith, and a dinner gown of black velves, peak sees or beingaline trimmed with gold and black passessementers and late. Thus you keep be your favorite black, yellow and white. (5) Navy blue wispecord or thin "storm" seeps makes a very serviceable traveling gown.

SILKS

and SILK Goods

CATALOGUE FREE

The finest and most complete catalogue of Silks and Silk Goods in the world, is that published by the large exclusive Silk House of Chas. A. Stevens & Bros., Chicago. It now takes an enormous edition of many hundred thousand copies to supply the demand each season. This Spring's edition is now ready, and every lady interested in Dress Silks, Silk Waists, Silk Skirts, Silk Laces, Silk Parasols, Silk Veilings, Silk Ribbons, Silk Gauze Fans, Silk Handkerchiefs, Silk Hosiery, etc., etc., should send a postal card request at once and receive one, free. Address,

CHAS. A. STEVENS & BROS.

111 STATE ST., Chicago, Ill.

Send for Illustrated Catalogue.

L. L. Loomer's Sons, Bridgeport, Conn.

(Sole Manufacturers and Patentees.)

"THE COMFORT"

Hand Attackment for Sewing Machines

A simple, durable and convenient device for operating any sewing machine by hand; can be mitarbed to treatle in one minute. Leed exclusively, or as change from Soot power, invented by a lady whose physician forbade use of machine by face power, for the property of the property of

SOLD DIRECT FROM THE MILLS

Fine Worsted Diagonals at $2.25 per Yd.
Corkscrews at 3.60
Cheviots at 2.60

For Ladies' Outside Garments Also 54-inch Farmers' Black Satine for Ladies' Bresses at S5 cents per pl., which very closely resembles the S5 cents per pl., which very closely resembles the S6-in Blackmas, certing $1.75. Also Certainlys and Molestins in ceiters. All goods delivered free-Sent for simples and particulars.

BALSTONE MILLS CO.

Providence.

HAVE YOU A TORN DRESS?

UNIVERSAL MENDING TISSUE

Which is shids Silk, Sarin, Pluch, Velvet, all Catton and Widden Goods, Kid Gloves, Gossaners, Carriage Topa, Stabbers, Oll Clock, Carpeis, etc., without sewing and much nester. Also hems all Dress Goods better than can be dean by hand or machine. Price, per peckage, pertyals, 2 certs. Try R. Sala, Coosty and Local Agents Wantel, E2 per cent. profit.

Address J. P. UPSON & CO., Manufacturers and Wholessle Agents, Unionville, Conn.

Sample pair of either style mailed on receipt of 25a.

I. B. KLEINERT RUBBER COMPANY,
26 to 32 E. Houston Street, New York.

A COME A complete partners, where under the curvet of flatonia, by electing the chains from perspective. Constitution of the curvet of flatonia, by electing the chains from perspective. Charges than dress shields, one partners of the constitution of the constitution

DATTERNS. $30 sives away May Stat to Darbon Start (Sa t S) for Best Pancy Design. Drawn all sizes and styles. Stamps and easy. Boys and girls a charge for you. $50c. postpoid. EM-BRUSHERM PATTERN MPG. CA, Chicago, III.

MATS. We will send you 3 cur-our Lines Table Mais, sik to work them, also INOALSE Epp. Historated Catalog, all for 9 to-ocean tamps [18 cts.] Address J. F. Ingells, Lynn, Mass. Box J.

INFANTS GERTREDE PATTER No., Best up cheaper by this method than any other. Materials for complete central of 20 pieces, $10, Send 2 centra for samples and establique. H. J. Sprague & Co., Chicaga.

DAINTY DRESSES FOR GRADUATES

By Isabel A. Mallon

T is perfectly natural that every girl should wish to look well on graduation day. That she should wish to look her prettiest, so that the memory of her as photographed on the minds of her friends and minds of her friends and teachers will be a pleasant one. I say prettily an d daintily dressed, neither of which mean elaborately or extravagantly; nothing can be in worse taste than gowning a girl of screnten or eighteen, or even an older one, in brocades, silks and velvets in honor of this most important occasion. For the time comes only too soon when we need rich mate-rials to hide the fact that youth has gone away rials to hide the fact that youth has gone away from us, but as long as it remains do not make the mistake of attempting to conceal it under a weight of rich fabrics and belongings. The class ring or the class pin is very suitably worn, but the use of other jewelry is not advised, because there is always some girl who hasn't much jewelry, and I don't believe that any other girl would want to burt her feelings.

THE MATERIALS THAT ARE SUITABLE

THE MATERIALS THAT ARE SUITABLE
THE very general liking shown for muslins has made the embroidered and printed muslin a favorite for graduation gowns.
Those having pale pink or blue flowers sprinkled upon them and decorated with ribbon in harmony are liked, because the dead whiteness that used to be peculiar to a comneencement costome is no longer deemed necessary, and these faint bits of color come out most effectively in the goods. Fine nun's veiling, cashmere and broadcloth are chosen among the woolen stuffs, and if a silk should be selected, one of surah or of China is permissible. I do not advise tulle, unless, indeed, it is to be worn at some celebration afterward, it is to be worn at some celebration afterward, for, although it is extremely pretty it crushes very easily, and seems to tenrif anybody looks at it. Generally a white tending to cream will be found more becoming than the extremely dead white, which can only be worn effectively by girls with dark hair and eyes and pronouncedly warm complexion.

A BECOMING GIRLISH BODICE (Illus. No. 1)

WHAT TO USE FOR DECORATIONS

WHAT TO USE FOR DECORATIONS

RIBBONS. First, foremost and always.

Wide and narrow. Watered, gros grain, or satin. But whatever kind is used, whatever width is chosen, there must always be a sufficient quantity, for a scanty-looking bow or a short strip of ribbon with no reason for its existence is decidedly worse than none at all. For skirt trimmings, flounces of chiffon looped with ribbon rosettes are liked, especially on wool gowns. Sleeves puffed to the elbows and finished with a deep frill of chiffon are fancied, and where the neck is cut in V or round shape the chiffon makes a pretty frill about it and is softening in its effect. Outlining with silk beads or fine cords is fancied where a jacket is cut out in turrets. Knots of ribbon on the shoulders are pretty and girlish, and the long ribbon streamers down the back are desirable when the girl wearing them is not too short and when her gown has a slight train. And, by the by, most of the commencement dresses have this "dip," as the dressmakers call it. makers call it.

A FASHIONABLE BODICE

LLUSTRATION No. 1. With a skirt of white nun's veiling trimmed with three tiny ruffles, each formed of three-inch gros grain ribbon very scantily gathered, is worn the bodice pictured. It is only another evi-dence of the great liking for ribbon decoration. The bodice is a round one, and has starting from the back straps of two-inch wide ribbon crossed in the back just as are men's suspendders and brought over the shoulders to come down straight in front and hide their ends undown straight in front and hide their ends under a four-inch ribbon belt that is arranged in one long loop, one short end and one very long end. The short end is cut in a regular Vandyke style, while the long one is trimmed off in bias fashion. The sleeves are mised on the shoulders, shape into the arms, and have as a wrist finish a strap of ribbon tied in a knot just on top of the sleeve. The collar is hidden under a white ribbon twisted, when is ween low and a white ribbon twisted, show is worn low and a white ribbon twisted about it is tied on one side near the top. The gloves are white glace kid.

are white glace kid.

Developed in pale blue, gray, rose, or lavender creps or chiffen, this gown would be pretty where a class had decided to wear a color. Of course, they are usually in harmony, though the rainbow effect is liked.

THE WHITE CLOTH COSTUMES

THE WHITE CLOTH COSTUMES

The girl who chooses a white cloth costume will at least have one advantage attached to it beside its extreme beauty, that is, it will not crush, and it may be worn many times before it will soil. Then, too, a great deal of trimming is not required, as the smooth cloth looks most stylish when fitted with great care, and bringing out at its best the girlish lines of the figure. A typical cloth gown is illustrated at No. 2. The front part of the skirt is made with great plainness, and is decorated with a flounce of chiffon looped here and there with rosettes of white ribbon. This trimming does not extend about the short train which is quite plain, its graceful foldis being sufficiently artistic to form a trimming in themselves. The bodice is a round one drawn in front to fit the figure, and laced in the back in the usual way. The upper portion of it consists of a yoke of the cloth studded here and there with tiny pearl stars. The collar is high and has a ribbon fold as its finish. The hair is raised on the head, knotted and fastened with some ornamental hair-pins and having the favorite single curl inst

ened with some ornamental hair-pins and having the favorite single curl just in the middle of the forebend, the fash-ion which is traced to the Spanish ion which is traced to the Spanish lady.

The sleeves have high puffs of the same cloth on each shoulder, and below that, reaching almost to the wrist, is a full frill of chiffon, the gloves coming up well under it so that the arm is not exposed. About the whist is a ribbon band arranged in a clover bow on one side, and having rather short ends falling toward the back. The slippers and stockings are white. By the by, I advise even the economical girl to buy white slippers in preference to any of the pale pinks or blues, because in the days to come the white ones will adapt themselves to almost any costume and will in addition stand many visits to the cleaner's; where a black satin slipper can be worn it, of course, has the preference, but with a white toilette or indeed any light one worn by a graduate the black satin slipper seems much out of place. The same law applies to gloves; for the white glove will stand no end of cleaning when the blue or the pink are likely to come out striped like the zebra. One's stockings must invariably match the shoes, and no matter who may cite it as a fashion, be very certain that to have stockings of one color and slippers of another is in very bad taste.

A DAINTY MUSLIM DRESS

A DAINTY MUSLIN DRESS

A DAINTY MUSLIN DRESS

I LUSTRATION No. 3. This costume is made of white muslin stamped in pink roses, the pink being a very pale shade. The skirt is plain and sufficiently full to be graceful, and has the regulation "dip" in the back. The bodice, slightly full in front, is draped over the lining, and is laced in the back; it comes to a short point just in front and has as an edge finish a frill of enabroidered chiffon. The neck is in a V shape and is finished to harmonize with the edge of the basque, the chiffon being caught just in the center of the front with a narrow pink with a narrow pink ribbon rosette. The sieeves are of the muslin and come to a Valois point over the hand, a tiny frill of chiffon describing the resitive audine. of chiffon describing the positive outline. High puffs of the chiffon are on the shoulders, and give an air of elaboration to the steeves, and breadth to the wenter. The hair is worn low, plaited and looped and tied with a pink ribbon which is carried up on one side, forming a butterfly bow just be hind the bang. The gloves are of The gloves are of white undressed kid, stockings of white silk and the slippers of white satin. A white gauze fan, having pink roses upon it is carried. If the ribbon on the hair is not becoming, then one of the latest fads, small wrenth of very tiny roses, may be worn. Pretty white muslin, either with dots, tiny stars, or cres-cents, is also liked for graduation toilets, and may, of course, be trimmed either with ribbon, chiffon, or lace. Very often three narrow flounces of the material edged with Valenciennes lace about half an inch wide are noted as skirt trimming, and then an old-fash-ioned fichu of the First Empire of France is made of the muslin, trimmed with deep lace, and worn as bodice decoration. With such a gown simplicity must be the key-note, and nothing more elaborate than a ribbon bow must appear on the dainty slippers.

A DAINTY MUSLIN DRESS (Illus. No. 3)

VALUE OF THE COIFFURE

To know just how to arrange one's hair, not only decently but in good order and in the most becoming fashion, is an art. But with a slight exercise of common sense and good taste, it is not difficult to learn. Its accomplishment will do more to make one's costume look well than anything else, and I just want to say one word to the girl who likes to have her hair fixed as she has seen it in some picture. First of all, she must find out that the picture style will suit her face; a nose that turns up a little, but is coquettish looking, doesn't permit a Grecian arrangement of the sunsy locks. Instead, it wants the hair closely curled in front, and pinned rather severely in the buck. The girl who has a straight nose, and whose face inclines to the oval, can part her hair in the center, after the fashion that pointers call "Madonna-wise on either side her head;" it can be drawn back softly, just caressing the top of her ears, but not low in the back, and fastened with a shell pin, or a silver or gold dagger. This looks as if it were going to fall any minute, and yet she must so thoroughly understand the art of the coffure, that concealed hair-pins hold it firmly in the position that seems so very doubtful.

A WHITE CLOTH COSTUME (Illus. No. 2)

THE FEW LAST WORDS

If for some personal reason white is not desirable, a costume of pale grey silk trimmed with grey chiffon will be in good taste. And, by the by, I want to say just these words to the girls who are going to graduate; Don't let your going out into the new world begin with an exciting of envy, hatred, malice and uncharitableness. By which I mean, do not make the mistake of overdressing on commencement day. There is al-ways some girl whose purse is not quite as well filled as yours, and if you are the girl I think you are, you will not make her feel ashamed and mortiashamed and morti-fied because her dress is plain and possibly badly made. If I were you I would try and get all the girls of the class to dress alike, and I would let that dress be of some simple material. All over the world the children and young girls simplest are those whose parents are rich, not only in rich, not only in ducats but in good sense, and be very certain that you can never err on the side of simplicity while you have that ex-quisite flower, youth, to make your gown beautiful. Won't you just give a thought to my little sermon, rending be-tween the lines and seeing that the un-told text is the doing told text is the doing unto others as you would be done by?

Would you have the heart to hurt another girl simply to gratify your desire to wear a very fine gown? I don't believe you would. I think the American girl is sufficiently unselfish to wear a simple gown, that she may not cause a heartnehe for her companion, who doesn't possess a more elaborate one. a more elaborate one,

LANGDON & BATCHELLER'S

Genuine Thomson's

Glove-Fitting

"I would rather fit a dress over a GLOVE-FITTING Corset than any other," said the dressmaker-in-chief of one of our largest dry goods establishments. So would all good dressmakers. They are very often blamed for a poor fit, when the trouble is that the customer does not wear the proper corsets to insure a good one

GLOVE-FITTING Corsets not only produce this result, but comfort and grace as well These goods are justly renowned all over the world, and can be seen and purchased at all the leading dry goods establishments.

Money refunded if not satisfactory.

WE WARRANT "GLOVE-FITTING CORSETS"

LANGDON, BATCHELLER & CO., Manufacturers, New York and Chicago.

Wear a Silk Glove that fits well, keeps its shape and does not get ragged in the finger tips. You can get such a glove.

How have Pretty Hands

The celebrated "Kayser Patent Finger Tipped" Silk Glove gives a beautiful shape to the hand, and the finger tips never tear or break, but outwear the rest of the glove. With each pair you receive a guarantee ticket, and if by any means the tips should wear out before the glove, you will receive another pair free of charge.

If your dealer does not keep them, notify JULIUS KAYBER, manufacturer, New York, and he will see that you get them.

6th Ave., 13th to 14 St., New York.

SINCE MOVING INTO NEW BUILDING

We have added 75,000 square feet to our floor area, thereby

GREATLY ENLARGING ALL DEPARTMENTS.

Our Spring and #### Summer Catalogue

The most complete of its kind ever issued, of 215

WILL BE ISSUED ABOUT APRIL Ist and mailed free to any address outside the city.

"It is a Sin to Steal a

To steal a 'tater' that's a greater,"

Such homely phrases as this Puritan aphorism diduced toward modeling morals in the past. The degeneracy of modern lines extends even to "Fea." You, everyteds, has experienced the petity atmosphere, and all the more vexing because petry, of using a poor pis. Recognizing this, the solical and largest reaumheturers of pies in the world have insued a board that is simply posted as not call the "Turnian". Every store sheard keep them. Ask for and insuft on porting the "Puritan" Pitts. Sample 'card free to any address.

American Pin Company

Waterbury, Conn.

Ladies, if you wish to dress well at moderate cost, write for our Spring and Summer

FASHION CATALOGUE

illustrating the NEWEST PARIS STYLES in what to wear at the Lowest New York Prices.

SENT FREE! IT IS Cloaks and Suits a specialty. by addressing MAHLER BROS., 503-504 Sixth Avenue, New York,

THE SMALL BELONGINGS OF DRESS

By Isabel A. Mallon

MRS. MALLON will be glad to answer any question about woman's wear which may be sent to her by JOURNAL readers. She asks, however, that she be permitted to answer through this Department in the JOURNAL; though, if stamps are inclused, she will reply by mail. Address all letters to MRS. MALLON, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

N one respect every woman is like a rose; she should suggest, rather than make suggest, rafter than make you conscious of a delicate perfutue. Many times this is obtained by lining the entire chest of drawers with suchets well filled with one's favorite perfume. But even in performes there is a fashion, and as no by a fastion, and as no gentlewoman would think of using mask, or patchoull, frangipanni, or white rose, because they are too heavy, so she is particular to select a perfume that, while it is dainty, makes one conscious of its existence, and combines the two virtues of being delicate and lasting. The violet, that suggests the sweet, purple flower of the woods, and the clear, clean odor of orris, are most charming, while the fragrance of the arbutas is liked. One's performe must seem to percade everything belonging to one, and so tell of a special personality. This, of course, will result when all one's belongings course, will result when all one's belongings are sprayed with the delicate odor, and when they rest in soft beds of cotton batting in which the powder that is so sweet has been thickly strewn. In this way, and this only, can one become thoroughly identified with a perfume, or rather have a perfume become part of one's individuality.

IT is said that sage green will be greatly in L vogue during the coming season. This is a stated that is remarkably trying, and all that I can commend it for is the good effect it produces in combination with black.

THE dress which, during the spring days, and, indeed, almost the entire summer, may be quoted as a good everyday one, has a skirt of blue and white, brown and white, black and white, or green and white check suiting, made in short bell fashion, that is, one escapping the ground all around, but still not awkwardly short. With this will be worn a percale, piqué, or lineu shirt and a cutaway jacket of light-weight cloth the color that is in the check. As this flares away from the front its lining is apt to be seen, and this should match the skirt. A black silk or a leather belt worn about the waist conceals the skirt binding. A natty costume like this deskirt binding. A natty costume like this de-mands that a list, rather than a bonnet, be worn with it.

HANCY belts of enameled leather, white, blue, scarles, or any color funcied, will be in vogue during the coming sensor. They are oftener laced down the front than backled, and they are the control of t and they may be as narrow or as wide as is PLAIN broadcioths are always in fushion, and to them can be attached the adjec-tive that has been much abused, but which tells a great deal, i.e., they are ladylike.

THE woman who fancies the blue and black THE woman who fancies the blue and black combination for summer wear can have it by choosing a black foolard, upon which are oval figures of light blue. This should be trimmed with bands of pale blue overlaid with black guipure lace. Apropose of laces, in black, the beavy guipure is funcied when it is to be laid on as passementerie; when, however, the trimming is in full frills, or in jabot fashdon, then French lace, or point d'esprit is chosen. In white, Genoese point, Russian, or the imitation of point d'Alençon is in vogue.

MOIRE ribbon is noted on all the new hats, and seems to be generally liked on dresses; however, as ties on bonnets I do not recommend it, for it creases, soon becomes shabby-looking, and is not as becoming to the face as either the soft gros-grain, or the black

PRETTY arrangement in ties shows a stiff resette of the same material fastened on one tie, so that when the ends are crossed and drawn to the back the small resette is printly placed a little to one side of the face,

COSTUME that will be of use all during a skirt either of broadcloth. or black silk, while to be worn with it is a three-quarter coat of dark blue, brown, or mess-green velvet. With a bounct to match, gloves in harmony, one would be dressed for almost any time in such a toilette.

THE favorite boutonnière affected by the This tayone isomorphic above by the tailor-made girl is of pure white snow-drops, or, as there call them in England, "The Edr maids of February." With us, however, they bloom in April or May, so the quaint name loardly applies.

JEWE48 possessing a history, or to which some superstition is attached, are greedily sought for by the girl of to-day. How many of them would like to possess the necklace which is worn by Modaue Bernhardt when ship plays "Theodorat". It consists of square gold plates joined by gold chains; each one is inlaid with stones that represent a charm, or a virtue, or, best of all, bring good lock.

WHITE undressed kid gloves will be worn during the entire summer with cotton gowns; the verifiable mosquetaire, which slips right over the hand, and which should be hought a size larger than you are in the habit of buying, is the shape favored,

FOR general use a silk parasol of medium size, having a pretty handle of Dresden, or of natural wood, is not only the most desiror of natural wood, is not only the most desirable, but is counted best form. The very emborate parasols are really only fit for use when driving, at garden parties, or at the fashionable summer resorts. Among the bandles liked are those of the German cherry or weichel, carried by hand in all sorts of quaint devices. Miniature animals or birds are seen, and make one think that they must have been wrought out to some imbarrious boy during wrought out by some industrious boy during the long winter nights. Ivory handles have a gold inlaying and sometimes a minister is set in the top of it; however, that one should put one's sweetheart's face there is not advised, so the ropics of old pictures of famous bentities are still selected. They are found in the lids of our bonbon boxes, of our puff boxes, set in the back of our hand glasses, and now they appear in the latticles of our parasols.

THE beavy Russian net, that which is called Cronstadt, is not advised by a sudent of veils for small women, as it tends to so disguise their fixes that they have a headless look. A veil with a border will age the face. Al-though they are the most delicate, and can only be counted on for one wearing, still there only be counted on for one wearing, still there is nothing as absolutely becoming as folds of fine tulle. These, of course, can be chosen to match the bat, and give any shading desired to the face. A red or a pink one will throw a little color on the cheeks of the woman who is pale, while a gray, a pale-green one, or a light-brown one, as well as one of blue, will subdue the roses that are sometimes found too intense.

THE woman who finds the ordinary saller hat becoming will be wise to wear it in L hat becoming will be wise to wear it in its simplicity, although it is shown with soft "Tam" crowns of velvet or silk, square crowns like "mortar boards," and pointed ones that really take away entirely from its original character. Always a trying hat, a hat devoted to the sea is, nevertheless, when it is becoming, to be assumed in its greatest simplicity, that is, with nothing but a band of ribbon upon it.

HANE French nainsook is liked for night-dresses. Most of them have a full Wattenn back, sleeves raised high on the shoulders, shaping in and coming out in Valois points far over the wrists,

WOMEN who have broude dresses that have out-grown the feshions are wisely enough making them into petticosts trim-med either with fron-fron ruffles, or those of lace. These are counted elaborate enough to be worn in the morning with a breakfast jacket.

TWO shades of yellow, or yellow and black, or yellow and white, are combinations fancied in hats or bonnets by women who can wear this trying color.

H Egrand high Mogul of the esthetic world has decided that if a woman wears rings at all she must wear a great many, so that her fingers seem to glitter and glisten, and look, not like the hands of a lady, but like stalks of

A. GIRL who wishes to be very English, and who wears a straw but in winter and a felt one in summer, is now appearing, when she starts out to travel "strange countries for to see," in a brown felt sallor hat, made with a decidedly broad brim, and a low crown. The but itself is bound and finished exactly like the brown derby worn by a man. It will not bear cocking back on the bead as does the more coquettish straw sailor, but must be worn severely over the eyes, not the least sign of a bang being permitted. of a bang being permitted.

A MONG the very dainty bonnets are the square-crowned ones, made of black, gold, jet, steel or silver passementerie. The crown is square, and the brim rather wide, so that it may be bent in bonnet fashion and ties worn with it; or the brim may be permitted to stand out straight and give a but ofthe trimming is invariably a restla of roses, the small, trim-booking roses that conse in pale yellow, pale rose, deep trimson, or that very, very dark erimson which the florists call However, the woman with taste, that is, good tarte, will, by preference, choose either the pule pink, or the yellow ones,

THE lines shirt used to achieve what it de-The sines shift is-sit to achieve what if de-serves, that is, being called "smart." should have its collars and cuffs of pure white; it may be a pink, pale blue percale, striped, dotted, or indeed, any material that differs from linen; and, by the by, the higher you can wear these collars, and the broader the cuffs, the more certain you are of being dubbed as absolutely good form. But the linen shift is more or less what is called "ultra style," and it will never become a seneral sarment amore. it will never become a general garment among

O's the long mode, or white cloth coats, made with the loose sack back and dou-ble-bressled in front, enermously large pearl buttons are used, and to match them very large pearl buttous are also noted on the walking gloves; that is, those having the over-lapping scams, and which should be worn sufficiently loose to be assumed without any

KODAKS

We recommend the following improved Kodaks especially for ladies' use:

No. 2 REGULAR

31/2 in. Circular Picture Price, $32.50

Makes 100 pictures without reloading. Fitted with register for counting exposures. Requires no focussing. The easiest camera to use. Best finish, best lenses.

No. 4 REGULAR

4 x 5 Pictures. Price, $50.00

Makes 100 pictures without reloading. Register for exposures. In use by hundreds of amateurs throughout the world. Popular size. Best finish, best lenses.

B. DAYLIGHT Picture, 31/2 x 4 in. Price, $15.00

C. DAYLIGHT Picture, 4 x 5 in. Price, $25.00

These Cameras can be loaded in daylight. hence, no dark room is required for changing load, a great convenience in traveling. pictures without reloading. Register for exposures. Automatic lock and all improvements.

10 other sizes and styles for films and glass plates, $6.00 to $65.00

Every Kodak tested in actual use, loaded and sealed. We guarantee each one pertect.

Complete Developing and Printing Outfit for any of above cameras, with manual, $1.50.

The completion of our new works at Rochester and Harrow, insures a full supply of sensitive films hereafter.

Catalogue sent free. Specimen photographs on receipt of two 2-cent stamps.

THE EASTMAN COMPANY, 999 State St., Rochester, N.Y.

FASHIONABLE AND HEALTHFUL

THE GENUINE

Jackson Corset

Waist

A perfect correct and walst combined. Famous for its style, graceful symmetry, and healthful qualities. Take no other. Patented Feb. 22, post.

IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, WRITE TO US.

You need be in so doubt as to what kind of Spring or Summer Jacket or Wrap to purchase if you have our new spring enalogue and samples before you. Jackets, $4.90 up; three-quarter length Jackets, $4.00 up; Receivs, $4.20 up; Long Capes, $4.50 up; Usters, $4.30 up; three-quarter length Jackets, $4.30 up; Rox and higher qualities, $4.10 up; Usters, $4.30 up; three-quarter length Jackets, $4.30 up; How and higher qualities, $4.10 up; Usters, $4.30 up; How and higher qualities, $4.10 up; Usters, $4.30 up; How make every garment to order, thus having a perfect fit, and pay all express changes.

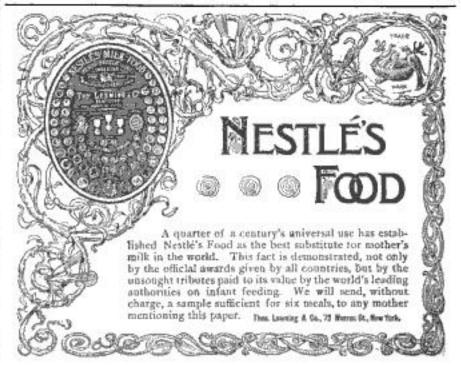

We will mild you our entalogue, together with a laps measure, now inconvent diagram and a full assortment of samples of the clothes from which we make the garments to schee from, on receipt of four events postage. Among our samples are Chevelits, Bedford Cords, Clay Diagnals. Devendanters, Cortoscreva, Rasket-clothe, Revents, Benadelotte and all the fastionable olethe in the newest spring studies. You may select any style garment you wish, and we will make in a Jacket or Wrap for you from your own tablerial.

We also make suits and dresses from landles' own samples for the from $40 up. Ladder residing from designes selected from any fastion plate or magnitude; over prices for making dresses are from $40 up. Ladder residing in to rear New York City should viol our salesmosts.

THE NATIONAL CLOAK COMPANY, 21 Wooster St., New York City

BANDY LEGS PREVENTED. bent for Catalogue of PATENT CORSET SHOTS, recommended by Physicians and Jurgeon Levillation bearing to the life the B. NATHAN, 221 6th

PRETTY COTTON GOWNS FOR SUMMER

By Isabel A. Mallon

we called out that cot-ton was king, I do not think we would be very far from wrong. The availability of simpse cotton makes it suitable either for evening or morning, driving or or morning, driving or walking, and it is the style rather than the material that adapts it to the hour of the day when it is worn. You may see the jaunty girl in the morning wearing a gingham gown that has a plain skirt, a coat bodies that flares away to show a striped shirt. Later on Mademoiselle will rest in a simple sateen frock made with a round waist softly confined by a ribbon sash. The afternoon sees her in a corded cotton, showing narrow stripes of blue and white, black and white, or any favorite color, the gown made exactly as if it were a cioth one and trimmed with velvet; while still later on, in the evening, she will wear a printed muslin elaborately trimmed with chiffon and velvet.

THE FAVORITE TRIMMINGS

THE FAVORITE TRIMMINGS

THE FAVORITE TRIMMINGS

I ACES that are rather coarse in effect, indeed, those that look almost like embroidery, are funcied on cotton gowns for shoulder capes, cutts, panels, and foot trimmings. The finer laces, those that so admirably make jabots and frills, are only liked for gowns that are counted somewhat elaborate, or are intended for evening wear. Rows of time soutache braid in white, scarlet, or dark blue are noted as in general use for forming a border on the edges of very simple dresses, the skirt itself being finished in this way, and all the parts of the costume harmonizing in decothe parts of the costume harmonizing in deco-ration. Ribbon is very generally in use, three scant ruffles of it being liked around the bottom of a skirt; then, of course, ribbon knots, ribbon sasbes, ribbon girdles, indeed, knots, ribbon sashes, ribbon girdles, indeed, almost any disposition of ribbons liked is in vogue. Except for yokes and cuffs, few embroideries are noticed. Velvet is used, not only as a trimming, but also as forming a special part of the gown. A pointed jacket, a special part of the gown. A pointed jacket, a girlle fitting high up on the bodice, a shoulder cape, and sometimes entire sleeres of the rich material are seen. When a very great deal of velvet is used upon a cotton gown, it at once stamps it as being a toilette sufficiently elaboveret is used upon a cotton gown, it at once stamps it as being a toilette sufficiently elabo-rate for visiting, or ordinary evening wear. Gilt sequins, girdles, nail-heads and bands for collars are proffered by the stores as specially pretty on cotton frocks, but personally I must confess I do not like the combination of cotton and gilt, It seems inharmonious and in-artistic.

A PRETTY EVENING BODICE (Illus. No. 3)

SOME OF THE MATERIALS

THE newest among the materials is the heavily corded cotton, not unlike Mar-seilles; however, although this may be gotten in all the plain colors in vogue, it is considered more novel when the narrow cords contrast, for then a glacé effect is given. Scarlet and black, pink and black, mauve and white, pale blue and black, navy and black, moss and black, absinthe and white, scarlet and white and black and white are the corded cottons shown. The sateens, although they are on ex-hibition, are not considered as good form as the replier ginghams, which are shown in stripes, plaids, and the "cram" effects, that is, the color produced by the use of two parts of the bright shade and one either of white or black.

Printed muslins are in great favor for even-ing and house wear, but, of course, they are too light and airy for the street. The flowers of the field and of the hot-house bloom upon the pale blue, pale rose, lavender, gray, mode, or white ground, and make it possible for each maiden fair to trim her gown with "ribbon tags," as an old poet irreverently called them, such as are best suited to her. Embroidered mustins are also liked, and are usually node with great simplicity, the three narrow ruffles at the foot, a round bodies belted in by a ribbon sash and very full sleeves with cases of elaborate embroidery upon them usually being the design chosen. These fabrics are es-pecially liked for young women, and are in themselves so dainty that it is easy to under-stand why the Frenchman always writes of the young girl as "Mademoiselle Mousseline."

A CORDED COTTON COSTUME

THE possibility of the corded cotton is great.

It is soft enough to be arranged in almost any way you like, and yet has a sufficient amount of body to permit its development in designs that have usually been dedicated to cloth, and cloth alone. An illustration of this is given at Figure No. 1, which at first glance suggests the tailor-made girl. The material is a pule blue and white cotton cord. The skirt, which escayes the ground all ground, is made suggests the tailor-made girl. The material is a pale blue and white cotton cord. The skirt, which escapes the ground all around, is made with perfect plainness, smoothly fitted over the bips, and having its fullness laid in fan pleats at the back. The skirt is of white percale with tiny blue figures upon it, carefully closed down the front by three small gold buttons, and having about its flaring collar a pale blue china silk tie, which is knotted just in front. The belt is of white leather, with a dainty gold clasp holding it in place. The jacket is a close-fitting one, as illustrated, having a shawl collar and revers faced with pale blue bengaline. The sleeves are of the cotton, have deep cuffs of bengaline, while from under them show the blue and white cuffs that are attached to the shirt sleeves. The hat is a jaunty one of dark blue straw, worn well forward over the face and with nodding white blossoms seeming to bow their "bow-do-you-do" every time the wearer moves her head.

If one desired, a soft silk shirt could take the close of the lines one but it would not a sile was the close of the lines one but it would not an analysis of the lines one but it would not be the country to the straw of the lines one but it would not be the country to the straw of the lines one but it would not be the country to the straw of the lines one but it would not be the country to the straw of the lines one but it would not be the country to the straw of the lines one but it would not be the country to the straw of the lines one but it would not be the country to the straw of the lines one but it would not be the country to the straw of the lines one but it would not be the country to the straw of the lines of the lin mores her head.

If one desired, a soft silk shirt could take the place of the linen one, but it would not have that positively trig air which is peculiar to the cotton shirt. Of course, the wearer of this must realize that she must set an example to mankind in having her shirt, cuffs and collars perfectly immaculate.

THE DAINTIEST OF GOWNS

THE DAINTIEST OF GOWNS

A VERY effective dress, and one that is suited to visiting, or for general afternoon and evening wenr, is pictured at Illustration No. 2. The combination is an essentially French one. The gown proper is of cram rephyr of a faint pink tone, and the decorations are of moss green velvet, the ribbed variety being chosen. The skirt is quite plain, having for its finish the three scant ruffles so much liked, and which in this case are of pale pink gros-grain ribbon. The bodice has its upper portion formed of moss green velvet, and then coming out from each side are full soft folds of the cotton, that are draped over the bust and down to the waist line in surplice fashion. A broad waist band of the pink ribbon comes from the under arm seam at each side just at the waist line, and is looped in bows and ends slightly to one side near the front. The sleeves are very high, the fullness being caught in near the shoulder by a small ribbon bow, while lower down they come into deep, plain cuffs of the velvet. The bonnet is of moss-green straw, trimmed with moss-green velvet ribbon and having a cluster of pink heather standing up high just in front.

A gown of blue cram combined with green velvet, of pale lavender and dark blue, or of golden brown and olive green would be extremely pretty.

FOR EVENING WEAR

FOR EVENING WEAR

FOR EVENING WEAR

TO Be evening wear the cotton gowns are made almost as elaborate as those of silk, muslin, china silk, or any of the light stuffs dedicated especially to the bours when the sun has gone down. The printed muslins are especially pretty, and have, when properly made, a very dressy air. "Properly made" means having the skirt as plain as possible, and the greatest amount of decoration put upon the bodice. An artistic bodice is shown at Illustration No. 3. The material is of muslin with blue is of muslin with blue forget-me-nots and forgei-me-nots and tiny wreaths printed upon it. The skirt has a simple hem finish, and though it is not fastened to its lining, which is of silk-finished silesia, it is caught here and there on the outside to hold it in position. The bodier is plain at the bock, where it is the back, where it is fitted to the figure, and terminates in a sharp point. In front it is draped over the lining in soft folds, and has from the neck down a froufrou of white chiffon that reaches to the waist line, and is hid-den under a folded belt of blue silk, from below which shows a folded, plaited frill of chiffon which ex-tends around the edge of the busque, terminating in the back on the point, at which an oddly-shaped bow of ribbon is placed. The collar is placed. The collar is a high one, overlaid by a stock of the ribin. The sleeves are very full ones of the muslin, finished with cuffs of blue velvet a shade darker than the ribbon used, and which have as their finish frills of chiffon fidling far down over the hands. The chief decorations of the bodice are the pointed jacket fronts of blue velvet, which are fitted into the bodice just as were the Figuro fronts some time ago,

A CORDED COTTON COSTURE (Illus. No. 1)

ABOUT THE LININGS

W E are always being told what the wise man does, but as there are no end of wise women in the world, and as it is always supposed that you or I are acquainted with one, what they say or think is not so often told. The wise woman, when she comes to make her extra freely was through her her. make her cotton frocks, goes through her be-longings to find out if she has folded and carelongings to find out if she has folded and care-fully laid away a silk lining from last season. If she finds one that will answer, she has the pleasure of knowing that her costume is made just as the great French modistes make their cotton costumes, and she begins to understand why they dare charge so much. When a figured cotton is used the silk lining is, of course, of a plain color, and it is only required that it should incline toward the most prominent shade in the gown fabric. Personally, I am an ardent advocate of a silk lining. It not only makes the cotton gown more elegant, because it will tend to keep it clean longer, and will, in addition, make it much daintier, and is much lighter to wear. Even if a new lining is to be bought, and as light-weight silks are not expensive, it will seem quite silks are not expensive, it will seem quite worth one's while to buy a lining to give to the cotton gown that air which makes it dis-

AN EFFECTIVE VISITING GOWN (Illus. No. 2)

THE LAST FEW WORDS

You and I know that while the dresses il-lustrated are very smart, still we do like to have some that are a little plainer, those that are to be worn to breakfast, and which one will like to put on when a morning's sew ing, reading, or work of any kind is to be done. Now take my ndvice about these, and while you make them as pretty as you like, have them sim-ple. Put three little ruffles on the skirt if you fancy them, have a round bodice, a belt to hold it in place and a ribbon knot at and a ribbon knot at your throat. Don't be induced for these simple gowns to go in for frills of lace in for fittle of face and decorations of velvet. It isn't in good taste, You want to make your frock to suit the time in which it will be worn, no matter what that may be, and though you must look like a flower, it must be rather like a field than a hot-house one. And here's another bit of advice—a bit of advice that I am al-ways giving—it is, do not have your gowns laundered any sooner than you can belp; they never look quite so nice, no matter how clever the laundress may be. And really, between you and 1, I don't think you are a very care-ful woman if, barring accidents, you cannot wear a cotton gown

all summer without having to introduce it to the lady who presides over the sonp-side. I am speaking, my dear general woman, from experience, which, by the by, is the only thing that gives one woman the right to sermonize to a lot of others.

FINEST QUALITY IMPORTED GINGHAMS 37½c.

SAMPLES FREE if you mention this Magazine. THESE ARE regular

50c. and 62c. GINGHAMS

offered at this price as a special inducement to the readers of "The Ladies' Home Journal" in order to introduce them to our Wash Dress Goods Department.

R. H. STEARNS & CO.

Tremont St., Boston

Betablished 50 Years. BROADWAY, 9th and 10th STREETS, NEW YORK We pay Mail and Express changes within 100 miles of N. Y. Cuy. Furchases of East over small FREE to may part of U. S. SAMPLAS froe. State print, color and material. Fastion Seek mailed froe. Mention Two Lastent House Journal.

BLACK DRESS GOODS AND GREY SUITING

in Nun's Velling, Cashmere, Serges, Bathte, Bedford Cord, Hesrictta, Storm Serges, Cheviots, Grenadine, Mobalr, Armures in finely senves and Black and White Halr-Line Serges, ranging in price from 200, to $1.25. SHLKS:

Black and Black and White India Silk, Surah, Armure, Creps de Chine, Faille Franculez and Gree ternin Dress Silks, ranging in price from 59c. to $1.78.

WASH DR ESS GOODS: Giaghams, Saleers, Organdies, Laws, Estistes, Canton and China Cloths, Ostlier Flaved, French and Domos-tic Challes, ranging in price from 12c. to 25c.

POR CARPET RAGS Peerless Turkey Red IS ABSOLUTELY FAST. Something new. Single package 10c. Write for sample Card to

PEERLESS DYES, ELMIRA, N. Y.

BACH Pringed Lines Tidy, Floss to work II, I No. 11 S BOOK OF STITCHES, and Steps, Catalog of Stanger George, etc., all for 7 two-cent stamps (14 cents). Address J. F. Ingaille, Lynn, Mass. Box J.

Ladies, Send Stamp for Primer. I do shopping of all kinds. Nine years' experience, best reference. Mansonic Mansin, 301 Spruce St., Phila.

A DRESS FOR

DELIVERED FREE to your Post-Office. We have bought over 100,000 yards of an excellent fabric made by the famous Arnold Print Works and printed in 10 handsome patterns, all fast colors. The width is 26 inches. We will send by mail, prepaid, 12 yards for $1.10. Send for samples to make a selection. Ten different colorings or designs will be sent you. Please make a second choice so that your order may be filled at once if first choice is sold out. Orders must be returned promptly.

SUEZ CLOTH

SHEPARD, NORWELL & CO. BOSTON, MASS.

A Department devoted to a sociable interchange of ideas among Journal readers Address all letters to Mrs. Lyman Abbott, care of The Labies' Home Journal, 433-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HE usages of good society are often made the butt of ridicule with those who are fond of boasting that they do not belong to "society." Polite forms, and the rules of etiforms, and the rules of etiquette, are spoken of with a sort of contempt. And it must be confessed that many of the customs of social life seem absurd; but I believe that a great deal of the smeering comes from those who are not willing to take the trouble to habitante themselves to what they regard as fetters; and very often what appears ridiculous

fetters; and very often what appears ridiculous will be found to have some foundation in common sense. Gentle manners add a charm to every fine quality of head and heart, and no one is the less a man or woman for being courteous.

The youth who does not care to make the effort necessary to train his awkward hands and feet, and to make his speech agreeable, finds it much easier to excuse himself, after the manner of the fox of old, who saw the grapes beyond his reach and called them sour. One need not say he has no time for sour. One need not say be has no time for such things; it is not a matter of time, it is a matter of purpose. I could take you to a farmhouse in the midst of finely cultivated fields, where hard work is done, and where everything from polatoes to horses is of the very best, as the result of the toil which goes on from morning to night in the most manly fashion, but where gentle manners make the home a joy, not only to those who compose the but to every one who comes within its rest-ful borders. One of the best bull players I have ever known, a sturdy athlete, is a wel-come visitor in a sick room, adds pleasure to every feast, and is the admiration of all the young girls for his tender and gracious be-havior. Gentle manliness and gratle woman-Gentle manliness and gentle womanliness are to be honored.

DEAR MISS. ABBOTT: These letters concerning the billed in domestic service, which you so kiledity guthered from the four winds and forwarded, were not answered premptly because I could not stop practicing long crough to preach. It was a weedling and the Joefs not was the first to biam. Yet see my daughter whilst read everything concerning the care of little children, though I hide her here would be time enough for that when she was engaged. As I had notifling for that when she was engaged. As I had notifling for her to gractice on but a len-year-old nephew, she proposed that we should take a ready-made taby (you know they come cheen). Accordingly a little bourder, in her second sommer, was admitted, and the theories worked beautifully. The faither, a young widewer and perfect stranger, was strictly charged to confide his altentions to his own daughter. You needn't hanch at me-I know batter, now. Well, when I finally gave my consent, there were only two weeks left for perparation, and, as if by surcery, hired help failed are on all sides; maybe I confide see to work, but I worked all the same. Made sheets and pillow cases, bemmed map kins, transferred feathers, went shopping for the belociest, helped on her wedding dress, troned her tarticitie flacers, packed all her canned fruit and Jelly, manipulated the small key, tended the baby and sat up with the young takes eight nighten week, to outwit Madaim Gruoding breakliest, set the house in sector, and was just going to "mach the windows," when the good-natured bridgeroum came to say relief. Finality I interviewed the reporter and the two difficialing clergymen, received my gassts, pulled wires with a relief corps in the kinden. Introduced the hady to he new manoms, and the for rest to the house where I was born. These simple pardon—I will keep them for my own use. C. B. A.

It strikes me that it is a little aggrataving to

It strikes me that it is a little aggravating to send such a fetter as this, and still decline to tell us your methods. To picture results in such a graphic way only stimulates our desire to know how you "do it." And what a beautiful chaperone you would make! A friend suggests that you might make your fortune going into that business. Blind chaperone! What a delightful idea for the young folks! We hope the future will abundantly justify the JOUNAL if it is responsible for the founding of this new home. May it be a center of truth and goodness, a light to all its neighborhood; and may we hope many more such happy homes result from the JOUNAL. After the needed rest has come to you, and the baby and the daughter are no longer requiring your It strikes me that it is a little aggravating to and the daughter are no longer requiring your attention, we hope you will give to your siste as graphica description of "how you did it," as you have given of the things done.

I CANNOT refrain from mentioning the aspalling purilibraries of a little three-year-old grand-daughter of an Irish kerf, by its mother, which occurred in thely, and of making an appeal to mothers to be merriful while punishing their children. We are often more hasty and severe than we realize. But while we are sure we would never be guilty of such cruelty, still it is possible for as to inflict too server a punishment. We ought to pray to our heavenly Falber daily to restrain to from olding say violence to those committed inhoust keeping, and above all cise do not piace a little child in a dark closed or room. I think this is the weakest and most wicked form of punishment. A You've Morance.

Impatience and irritability cause great in-justice in the treatment of young people; and little children, weak and unable to defend themselves, suffer unmercifully at the bands of those who should be their tenderest guardians. An angry blow is, alas, not a rare thing for a An angry blow is, also, not a rare thing for a mother to visit on an innocent child; the anger quite as often caused by something wrong which the mother herself has done, as by any other cause, and the child made the victim merely because it is "in the way." The dark closet is toriare to a child of sensitive temperament, and too often there is in the child's mind a store of lying tales from which added hormer ancear in the solitary darkness. added horrors appear in the solitary darkness.

I AM sort of a universal genius, but I am beginning to get quite ancient, and as yet I haven't distinguished myself in any way, while there are dones of ways in which I unique. For instance, I can write charming stories which the — perumptly declines, but which the efflor of —— accepts and declines to pay for. I can write declinitist line verses on any subject without a moment's warning. If that were sail I would be all right; but it look. I can paint; I have a possilive ground for sketching bright little faces, and I can paint in water colors by the yard, without any effort whintever. As for designing and making thristmas presents I am a born saints Chais. I can make the most be different facings out of nothing, absolutely nothing. With a deliar and a quarier, and a rag long, I can make presents for eighty-seven relatives and have something left to begin with next year.

When I write for a week I am wild to paint; when I paint for a week I find myself compelled to drop pen and truston, and make theisimas presents (this frequently happens in August when notsely warns Christmas presents in his I can positive grains for amateur acting. Now what would you advise me to do? You way little I am conceived, but I am really an absurder shy a plain statement of facts, and I am really an absurder shy in think it is right, do you, for all this talent to go to wasta?

When I believe a believe we want to be seen and the side of the same presents of the same processed and would not publish a story, or exhibit a picture in we not well that a believe to be got to wasta?

My her all this talent to go to wasta?

What a blessing you must be to your neighborhood! How many poor girls who could not use their fingers in dainty ways you must have helped and instructed! How gladly your friends must welcome you as a visitor! Your dainty touches have undoubtedly left many a goest room prettier for your stay in it, and how eagerly your letters must be watched for by the lonely and sorrowing. Really I envy you the amount of joy and gladness you have been able to put into the world. world.

world.

And what would I advise you to do? I would advise you to keep on using all your talents for the "greatest good of the greatest number." But seriously, ought you not by this time to have made one thing a specialty, and have so trained yourself in that as to be an expert? Robert Burdette suys, in commenting on the large salary paid to a certain cook that it is given presentable because he cook, that it is given presumably because he could cook better than any other man in America; that if "Monsieur Sauseangravi could cook tolerably well, and shoot a little, and speak three languages tolerably well, and keep books fairly, and sing some, and under-stand gardening pretty well, and could preach a fair sort of a sermon, and know something about borses, and could telegraph a little, and could do light porter's work, and could read proof tolerably well, and could do plain house and sign painting, and could help on a thresh-ing machine, and knew erough law to prac-tice in the justices' court of Kickapoo town-s. 'n, and had once run for the legislature, and knew how to weigh hay, he wouldn't get ten thousand dollars a year for it. He gets that just because he knows how to cook; and it wouldn't make a cent's difference in his salary if he thought the world was flat, and that it went around its orbit on wheels. There is nothing like knowing your business clear through, whether you know anything else or

I should say that it would be a good plan for you to select one thing and make yourself perfect, as nearly as human limitations per-mit in that, while you enjoy and appreciate as much else as possible.

I HAVE been much impressed with some of the let-ters in this department. I would like to say to the women who are discontented with their let in life-that I have found it possible to be happy in the midst of great decorragements and failures. I feel the truth of the quotation:

the quotation:

"Stutborn reafities never can bind.

"But free-spreading wings of a Joyful mind."

When clouds have been darkest I have found it possible to be cheerful and even happy. To the young wissien who contemplate marrisony it may not be superfluids advice to give: Do not expect the much from the coming man, nor set your hopes too high, as you will then be spared very many bitter disappointments, and will be inach happier your whole life long.

Jassen.

It is a good plan not to expect too much of other people; and although there is sometimes danger of expecting too much of one's self, it is a danger not often met. I was struck a day or two ago with an incident. A committee was considering a variety of philanthropic and Christian work, and making preparations for the coming year. One man, of pessimistic turn, contributed principally dis-couraging remarks. This had not accomplished much in the last year; that had not fulfilled the hopes with which the early months started; these people were not so de-voted as they should be; and that effort had resulted in too little. Finally, one gentleman arose and said: "Gentlemen. I must leave; I have not grace enough to endure all this discountingement. I am saved by hope." Fortu-nately, the hopeful brother was persuaded to remain, and the hopeless brother was counseled to turn his eyes a little toward the sun, and the future of a great many good works was not periled by the breaking up of the committee. I am inclined to think that we should all do better for ourselves and for our friends to put our hopes high, and then to have grare enough to keep them high in spite of grace enough to seep them right in spite of occasional discommement. It is often said that children live up to the expectations of their parents. If the father expects his boys to be disobedient and careless, they are very sure to be. Perhaps husbands are subject to the same rule, they may not be worth much if there is not much expected of them.

I have being first like teiling you how happy we all are in the near completion of our new church; but we all, old and young, have been so tony with our enternalments and sociables that we have last so line to thank those who gave us the idea of how to raise money for our cherch, and, bester yet, how we could get the young people to take an active interest in a.

That we have storeded beyond our findest expectations we fact we are indebted to The Lancas' House for the fact, and expectably to the October number, in which we found leaven for our whole winter's leaf of good things, so we have literally lived on the fat of the land. But we mist not boast, for we know we come sheet of perfection. If we should rive to know we come sheet of perfection. If we should rive to the fat of the land, and one lengthy than enternalmen. But one things we will say with all candor. The Journal, ought to have a good many new subscribers in this commonly in recurs for what it has done for us, and will continue to do, we are sore. Our chared is ready for defication. I wish I could send you a pecture of E; it is to us like the food mother's first baby; because it is do den't to her she thinks it lovely to everybody, while to others it is easy as ordinary child, and God only knows what he little had of promise will prove to be. If our church is dedicated in a Christian applit to the Buller of the universe, though transitie it be, if will not be rejected. Our church will be descreted in a Christian applit to the Buller of the universe will be descrete to an all for the forancial struggle we have had. We have a Sabbath school, and a small library, which we hope to be able to enlarge soon. Bull its article the relief are the first and bessen to according to the teacher's belief or capacity for se doing. The Golden Rule is taught as the one great rule the rules all rules. Yet one backer any she has always taught her children to stay on the same and blessed? Is a limitation of the first to any to a strike the first blow, was it not wrong t

Thank you for your invitation to attend the dedication of your church. The card was very neatly gotten up. I am sorry I cannot reproduce it here. I thought of you at the time of the exercises, as I was kept at home that day by illness, and could easily send my thoughts in various directions. I trust the day was pleasant, and that all the services were a fitting culmination of your efforts to have a church building. Now, having a church, what will you do with it? That is a vital question. Will it be for the comfort and the pride of a few, or will you all take it as a blessed means for reaching the wayward and the lonely, and bringing them into the light and the joy which the church represents?

The question you ask it is not easy to answer Thank you for your invitation to attend the

and the joy which the church represents?

The question you ask it is not easy to answer briefly. It is very difficult to make people understand that mantiness is not increased by acts of revenge. In large things we do understand it, and the citizen who does not call upon the law for protection, but takes vengeance into his own hands, is acknowledged to be an unworthy citizen. The child can be taught that it does not lessen self-request to refrain that it does not lessen self-respect to refrain from avenging a wrong done to itself. It is necessary, I think, to make very clear the dis-tinction between violence exercised for the protection of a weaker person, and violence exercised in redress of one's own wrongs. And there is a duty of self-protection which cannot be quite overlooked. As soon as a child can be taught that there are better ways of selfprotection than by means of barbarous blows. the better for his manliness. A suenk and a coward are abominations, and bravery should be taught a child from his earliest days; but a quick blow, struck back in the heat of passion, is not an act of bravery.

VACATION will soon rome, and many mothers regret it since they cannot set rid of their children by sending them to school; so they send them off anywhere, to their noighbor's, to my one who is good natured enough toput up with them. Never mind if they are in the street, killing birds, throating stones, breaking wholens, annoying every one, so long as they are "out of the way." Indifferent has entanged are no help at home, since the parents do not take the treathed to leach them anything. They are, in fact, very designed children for other people to be annoyed with. If they are very beat, the mother mays they fearm evil things from those people who are kind enough to tolerate them. Piesse tell me is it a kindness to get up with such children' is it not better to send them home? A mother cannot teach her own children as also would if such neglected children are their companious. Very eiten the mother of these children calls so her neighbors, very early in the morning, to reinte the latest the ontidions of your home and many little family, affairs that one can did out by calling at untimely hours measurements.

mass consect,
There is a proper time for calling when a weman's work is done; a proper place, at the front door, to be received. It as so much better to visit in such a way than to design in at the back door unexpected. However, the women to be treated? What do you think of the neighber who always borrows a cop of sugar, a pinch of tea, a sifteed butter—little things that a housekeeper ought to have in the house at all times; and the person who berrows so much never returns anything. It seems too had that kind-hearted neighbors, very often poor, are imposed upon in that way.

A.

Mothers may relieve themselves temporarily from annoying interruptions from their chil-dren by sending them either to school, or al-lowing them to run in the streets, or in neighbor's houses, but they cannot thus rid themselves of responsibility. It is as much a sin of self-indulgence to please one's self for entiones: what penalty must be paid in the future, as is that of the man who secures a brief exhibara-tion from the cup which brings to him degra-dation in the end. It is impossible to leave children to chance care, or none at all, during their early years, and not have hours of bitter their early years, and the grief in consequence.

The borrowing habit comes of lack of fore-thought. Except in emergencies, when every neighbor should be glad to "lend a hand" in the shape of a needed article of food, or a kind service, the housekeeper should make him service of other she has in the house, baying the most of what she has in the house, baving seen to it that her store-room is well filled.

A.F. H. Abbott

Entruit' Note—At the request of the Faltor of the Journal, the was de plume of "Aunt Patience," Bard in contrection with this department, is discontinued with the current month, and Mrs. Abloit will becerfer similar over her own name. This rourse has section to be a wise one to adopt since indictinality is more closely encouraged and situation in this department of the Journal than in any other, and surely the editor should set the regardle. Many have written "If Antil Patience is Mrs. Lyman Abbott, who shouldn't we know in, and write to her as an individuality instead of as now in a myttowal being?" The answer is given in the present change.

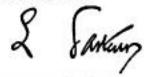

The old way of cleaning brass, steel, nickel, gold, silver and glass is to set apart a day, make a liquid mess in a sancer, rub the article with a rag wet with the liquid, and incidentally soil everything within reach. The new way is to use a "Stilboma," a carefully prepared chamols skin, which is nest and clean, burnishing polished surfaces without scratching them

A large sample of "Stilboma" will be sent free to any one who will mention where this advertisement was seen and incluse six costs in stamps. THE CHANDLES & BUID CO., thereiand, O.

The "PASTEUR" THE ONLY GERM PROOF FILTER IN THE WORLD.

Paris, France, March 1, 1886.
This Filter was invented in my laboratory where its great usefulness is put to test every day. Knowing its full scientific and hygienic value, I wish it to bear my name.

j

Dayton, Ohlo,

Tooth-Food.

This medicine for babies prevents and cures pains of teething and resulting diseases, not by putting children to sleep with an opiate, for it contains no harmful drugs, but by supplying the teeth forming ingredients which are lacking in most mothers' milk and all artificial foods. It is sweet and babies like it. $1.00 a bottle, at all druggists. Send for pamphlet " Teething Made Easy."

> THE REYNOLDS MFG. CO., CINCINNATI. O.

50,000

(men's sizes) are now) in use which we have altered from key to stem-win Ask your Jeweler about it, or write us. We can also sell you Watches.

Diamonds or Jewelry. HENRY ARROTT & CO. '14 Maiden Lane,

New York,

THE READ UMBRELLA

FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN Silk unsbrellas of special qualities at very low prices. livered free on receipt of price. Send at once for our free Illustrated catalogue, which contains full information. We guarantee satisfaction.

CHARLES F. READ & CO. 45 BROAD STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

LILY DRESS SHEETS ARE THE BEST HADE

MISS PARLOA will at all times be glad, so far as she can, to answer in this Department all general domestic questions sent by her readers. Address all letters to Miss Maria Parloa, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Cooking receipts are not given in this Department, hence do not ask that they be printed, and do not send manuscripts of that nature to MISS PARLOA.

T is such a burden to get the bouse ready for closing during the summer, in case the family is to be away, that many a bousekeeper un-wisely postpones her house-cleaning until fall, reason-ing that as there will surely be an accumulation of dust bean accumulation of dust and a certain amount of cleaning must be done at the end of summer, it will be just as well to do all the work at once. Such women forget that cleanliness is a great safeguard against moths and other pests. Besides, it is much easier to have the labor done properly while actually living in the house, than just before or aeftr the return of the family, unless it be possible to engage some thoroughly trustworthy woman to take charge of it.

SPRING THE TIME FOR HOUSECLEANING

In the spring one is looking forward to months of rest, and therefore can afford to undergo some extra fatigue; but if the housecleaning be left undone till fall, and must then be done under one's own supervision, much of the benefit gained during the season of rest will be exhausted. For these season of rest will be exhausted. For these reasons it seems to me that the spring is by far the best time, a thorough sweeping and dusting being all that is necessary in the fall. In any case, the bouse must be well sweep and dusted before it is closed. All woolen and fur garments, hangings and rugs should be vigorously beaten and brushed, particular care being taken to reach every crevice and seam; and then the articles should be folded and put away, as directed in the October number of and then the articles should be looked and part away as directed in the October number of the JOURNAL; or, the draperies may be re-hung, if one wishes. If there be a closet lined with tar paper, or, better still, a cedar closet, all articles that are better for hanging can, of course, be placed there.

BEWARE OF MOTH MILLERS

If moth millers be found, kill them, and look enrefully for the eggs or worms. In every case where there is the slightest suspicion of the existence of either, steam the spot, if possible. If you cannot do that, use naplithal generously, and after a few days repent the set.

the generously, and after a few days repent the act.

In sweeping carpets use a small brush broom for the edges, and then pour maphtha all along and under the edges of the carpet, having the windows opened, and no light or fire in the room. Do this with any stuffed farniture which may have traces of moths about it. Nothing is cleaner or more effective than the naphtha, but great care must be used to have the windows opened, that the gas shall escape, and there should be neither a fire nor a light in the room for several hours. Oil paintings and other pictures with fine frames can be covered with pieces of cheap cotton cloth. Delicate pieces of stuffed farniture can be covered with sheets. The mattresses and pillows should be thoroughly beaten and aired. The bedsteads ought to be brushed and wiped free from dust, and every crevice saturated with naphtha; return the mattresses to the beds and cover with sheets. Send all silverware and other small valuables to a place of safety. Have the water turned off, to guard against any leak. When possible, leave some of the window shades up, that the sun may keep the house dry and sweet. leave some of the window shades up, that the sun may keep the house dry and sweet,

ON COMING HOME IN THE FALL

In the fall, when you return, your first thought should be, of course, to have all the windows opened, flooding the house with fresh air and smalight. The next important thing to do is to have the water turned on. and flush all the pipes thoroughly. If some one of the many good disinfectants be used in the pipes at this time it may prevent illness in the family. It is not surprising that so many people become sick on returning to their city homes when one realizes how these houses are boxed up for months; every ray of light and air being excluded, and not one housekeeper in ten realizing the necessity for the careful flushing and disinfecting of the plumbing.

TO PREVENT DUST FROM FLYING

SUBSCRIBER asks how to provent the dust from rising when sweeping carpets. There are several substances that can be used for this purpose, but I prefer salt, or Indian meal, to anything else I have tried. Sprinkle the earpet with common dairy salt, or with coarse Indian meal, having the ment slightly dampened, not really wet, and sweep with short strokes of the broom.

SOMETHING ABOUT STAINING FLOORS

A T any good paint store you can get for a dollar or a dollar and a quarter a galton of staining liquid, which will give you an imitation of almost any wood you want; or, you can prepare your own stain. The method which I shall give for using the home-made stain applies also to the prepared article.

After filling the cracks in the floor with putry; see that there are no paint spots on the boards. Should there be any, pour turpentine on them, and, after a while, scrape off the paint. Wipe all dust from the floor, them apply the stain with either a brush or a piece of cloth. I think, however, it gives a handsomer floor if you first rub in a little of the stain with a cloth. Color only a board or two at a time, moving the brush with the grain. When the floor is finished, close the room for twenty-four hours; four or five days with for twenty-four hours; four or five days will be better if you can spare the room. At the end of this time pin some pieces of carpet on the weighted brush and rub the floor, one or two boards at a time, until smooth and glossy. After all the floor has been treated in this manner, take the piece of carpet off the weighted brush and replace it with a clean piece. Now polish the floor with wax, as directed in the polish the floor with wax, as directed in the article on polishing floors in the April Journal. The floor may be varnished instead or waxed. In that case it will never require polishing. Get the prepared varnish at a paint shop, and put it on with a brush, being careful to draw the brush smoothly over the boards, and with the grain. Be careful to put the varnish on evenly, and to have only a thin coating. If you are to varnish the floor, and do not own a weighted brush, you can get down on your knees and do the rubbing with an old piece of carpet.

THE PREPARATION OF STAINS

THE foundation for nearly all kinds of wood stains is a combination of boiled oil, turpentine, burnt umber, burnt siema, lampblack and chrome yellow. The colors are all ground in oil. To make a light, hardwood stain mix together one pint each of boiled oil and turpentine, one tablespoonful or burnt umber, one tablespoonful of burnt si-euma and two tablespoonfuls of chrone yel-low. This gives a light stain, suitable for hard pine and other light woods. It can be made several shades darker by adding an extra tablespoonful each of burnt umber and burnt denue. To make a mod melant stain are two sienna. To make a good walnut stain use two tablespoonfuls of burnt umber, three tabletablespoonfuls of burnt number, three tablespoonfuls of burnt sienna, two tablespoonfuls of chrome yellow, half a tablespoonful of lampblack, one pint of turpentine and one pint of boiled oil. Mix together thoroughly. For an old oak stain use one pint of boiled oil, one pint of turpentine, two tablespoonfuls of burnt umber, one tablespoonful of burnt sienna and two tablespoonfuls of lampblack. Great care must be used in mixing this that the lampblack shall be wholly dissolved in the liquid.

TO GRADUATE THE STAIN

It often happens than one does not care to imitate a particular wood, but would like to get a soft, medium shade. This is easily accomplished by adding burnt umber, burnt seems and chrome yellow in small quantities to the light hardwood stain, and then testing on a piece of board until the required color is produced. I think this method gives the most satisfactory results. The colors the most satisfactory results. The colors used, ground in oil, cost from fifteen to twenty cents a pound, and can be purchased in pound boxes. Wood stains, to imitate any wood, can be purchased in paste form at about twenty-five cents a pound, and you can thin it your-self, using equal parts of boiled oil and tur-

THINGS IMPORTANT TO REMEMBER

THE colors used should be ground in oil.

The longer a floor stands before it is rubbed as a preparatory step for applying the polish, the handsomer it will be. After the stain has been mixed it should be tried on a stain has been mixed it should be tried on a piece of planed board. The softer woods, such as soft white pine, will take a deeper color than hard woods; and if there be any sappy places in a board they will be darker than the smoother and harder parts. The strength in colors varies, and it may be that the propor-tions which are given will, with your colors, produce a lighter or darker effect. The polishing brash must be washed about once in four or six months; this depending of course, upon the number of floors on which it is used. Half fill a pail with tepid water, and add to it a gill of household ammonia. Soak the a gill of household ammonia. Soak the brush in this for half an hour; then rub the bristles well, and rinse in several waters. Dry

CLEANING LACE CURTAINS

LACE curtains will not bear rubbing. All the work must be done carefully and gently. For two pairs of curtains half fill a large tub with warm water, and add to it half large tub with warm water, and add to it hult a pound of soap, which has been shaved fine and dissolved in two quarts of boiling water; add, also, about a gill of household ammonia. Let the curtains soak in this over night. In the morning sop them well in the water, and squeeze it all out; but do not wring the curtains. Put them into another tub of water, prepared with soap and ammonia, as on the night before; sop them gently in this water, and then, after squeezing out the water, put them in a tub of clean warm water. Continue to rinse them in fresh tubs of water until there is no trace of soap; next, rinse them til there is no trace of soap; next, rinse them in water containing blueing. After pressing out all the water possible, spread the curtains over sheets on the grass; or, if you have no grass, put them on the clothes-line. When they are dry, dip them in hot, thick starch, and fasten them in the frame that comes for this purpose. If you have no frame, fasten a sheet on a mattress, and spread the curtains sheet on a mattress, and spread the curtains on this, pinning them in such a manner that they shall be perfectly smooth and have all the pattern of the border brought out. Place in the sun to dry. If it be desired to have the curtains a light ecru shade, rinse them in weak coffee; and if you want a dark shade, use strong coffee.

ART SQUARES AND OTHER RUGS

A SUBSCRIBER asks what the cost of art squares is, and what would be the expense of having a square rag made from Brussels or other carpeting. The term "art square" may be applied to a certain kind of carpet in one place, and to something entirely different in another locality. The common American art squares cost about a dollar a square yard, and come in sizes of from about 24 x 3 yards to 4 x 5 yards. Art squares of English manufacture, known as Woodstock, cost one dollar and a laif a square yard.

A rug of good quality of body Brussels would cost from ninety cents to a dollar and a quarter a square yard. Made of Wilton, the rug would cost from one dollar and eighty cents to two dollars and twenty-five cents a square yard. These squares, or rec-SUBSCRIBER asks what the cost of art cents a square yard. These squares, or rec-tangular rugs, are used a great deal on floors that have a natural-wood, stained or painted border. It is best to fasten them to the floor at each corner and in the center of each side.

When having rugs made, avoid the use of carpeting with large and pronounced designs. Select instead such as has small and mixed figures and colors like those found in Oriental rigs. Moquette carpets have small figures, as well as the soft blending of colors so desirable, but they are not so closely woven as the body Brussels, and therefore do not wear so well.

WHERE THE SWEETBREADS ARE FOUND

A WOMAN who lives in the country where they butcher their own meat says she cannot find out, even from the butch-er, in what part of the beef the sweetbread is found.

Butchers know this organ as the throat and heart or stomach sweethreads. In physiology the organs are known as the pancreatic glands, the throat sweethread being the pancreas, and the heart sweetbread the thymus. The heart sweetbread is much better than the throat, besweetbread is much better than the thront, oc-ing of good shape, compact and tender, while the throat is long, loosely put together, and inclined to be tough. In the common books on physiology nothing is said in regard to the change that takes place in these organs as the animal matures. I find many butchers who animal matures. I find many butchers who know that there are no tender sweetbrends in the matured animal, but do not know the reason why. These organs are tender and delicate only while the animal is quite young. While the calf is still on a nulk diet the sweetbread will be white, plump and tender; but just as soon as the food is changed to grass the organ begins to grow tougher, loses its plump form, and grows darker, until in the full-grown beef it would not be recognized. What is true of beef is also true of mutton. The sweetbread in the lamb is delicate and deficious. One never finds it in this form in the matured sheep. matured sheep.

TO CLEAN OLD OIL PAINTINGS

HOW she shall clean an old oil painting that is covered with dirt and fly specks is what one render asks. Wipe all the dust from the painting with a soft silk cloth. Put a little lineed oil in a sancer, and, dipping a finger in the oil, rub the painting gently. It will require time and patience, but the effect will repay you. Artists say that in cleaning a painting nothing but the fingers, dipped in oil or water, should be used. or water, should be used.

THE SOAP QUESTION AGAIN

MANY letters have come to me in regard to the rule I gave for soop several months ago. Some correspondents have made the soap with great success, and want rules for toilet sonp; others who have made it want to know if there is not some mistake, because it is so hard. Several have written to know if the potash is not bested; and still another asks if fat in which fish was fried is fit to go into the some grease. into the sonp grease

Having never made a toilet soap, I could not give a rule for one. If my directions for the ordinary kind be followed the scap will be as hard as castile, and of about the same texture lard as castile, and of about the same texture.

If one prefer a softer soap, four times as much water could be used, and still the mixture would form into bars. No; the potash is not heated. Pour the cold water upon it, and the mixture will become very hot. You must wait for this to cool before using it. Fat in which lish has been fried can be used, provided it by strained. it be strained.

I want to say here that I never give a rule for anything until after thoroughly testing it. You are safe in adopting directions printed in this department. Remember, that following them in part, and using your own judg-ment for the rest, will not give the result at

HIGHLAND

A TABLE LUXURY. A CULINARY ARTICLE, AN INFANT'S FOOD.

Unsweetened and free from all preservatives, Keeps for any length of time in all climates,

Its Uniform Quality, Convenience and Economy render BlobLand BYAPONATED CREAM preferable to all other forms of cream or milk for Unifer, Ten, Choccate, Ice Cream, Charlotte Ruser, Custards and all uses to which ordinary cream or milk may be put.

Sold by Grocers and Druggists Everywhere Write for our Infant Food Circular and Highland Evaporated Cream bookiet entitled "A FEW DAISTY DISHES."

HELVETIA MILK CONDENSING CO.

BURNETT'S FLAVORING EXTRACTS

ACKER, MERRALL & CONDIT Dec. 2d, 1800. New York

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa from which the excess of oil has been removed, absolutely pure and it is soluble.

> No Chemicals are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Eugar, and is therefore for more economical, costing less than one conta cap. It is delicious, nour-ishing, strengthening, Eastly

DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalida as well as for persons in bealth.

Sold by Grocers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

45 to One.

45 lbs of lean Beef required to make one pound Armour's (Chicago) Extract of Beef. There are many ways of using Armour's Extract. Our little Cook Book explains several. We mail it free.

Armour & Co., Chicago.

SHREWSBURY TOHUP

"ONE feast, one house, one mutual happiness," yet sauces two for relish to our meat, Tomatoketchup and Tomato Chutney, -Shrewsbury both.

E.C. HATATASG: NEW YOTK YOM

with

KEUKA GRAPE CATSUP

Will give you a taste of pleasure if happy or not. We'll send you a trial bottle of this deli-cious relish made from grapes which will make you a constant user if you send as cents to pay postage and packing. Try it with baked brane or fried oysters. Grocers sell it. Sraha Grape and Frait Co. 100 S. Water St., Rechoster, S. L.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our evirbment Tens, Coffees and Baking Powder, and scotte a beautiful Gold Rand or Moss Rose China. Ten Set, Binner Set, Gold Rand or Moss Rose China. Ten Set, Binner Set, Gold Rand Webster's Dirthouay. For particulars, address THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO. P. O. Box 180.

LONDON TEA CO., S11 Wash. St., Beston.

PERFECTION CASE TINE, how between Caker reserved with a function for Digital agency for Google

This Department is under the editorship of EBEN E. REXFORD, who will take pleasure in answering any question regarding flowers and floriculture which may be sent to him by the Journal readers. Mr. Rexroro asks that, as far as possible, correspondents will allow him to answer their questions through his JOURNAL Department. Where specially desired, however, he will answer them by mail if stamp is inclosed. Address all letters direct to EBEN E. REXFORD, Shiocton, Wisconsin.

HINTS FOR THE MONTH

AREFULLY plan out your spring campaign before beginning work in the garden. Unless you know just what you want to do before work is begun, you will be likely to give yourself a great deal of unnecessary labor, be-cause, like all things done without plan or system, your garden will be lacking in per-fection of detail. It will be on the haphaxwill be on the haphaxard order, and although it may turn out halfway satisfactory, the chances are against it.

Decide, first of all, on what plants you are going to use. Then decide where you will have them. Locate them according to their habits of growth and their seasons of bloom.
If you now seed without taking into consideration the character of the plants it will produce, very likely you will have a tall-growing kind by the path and a low-growing kind back of it, where its beauty will be hidden.
Or, you may get a late full bloomer in some spot where you want brightness through the summer, and the summer bloomer in some summer, and the summer bloomer in some corner where it will fail to attract attention. Study up the catalogues carefully, and learn the flowering season of plants, and the heights to which they grow, and then you will be able to group them intelligently.

PLANT low-growing kinds under the win-PLANT low-growing kinds under the windows, where you can look down upon them. The verbena is most effective when planted in this way. So is the portuinces; and have them in bests by themselves. They do not combine well with other plants. This is true of most flowers, you will find. In order to secure the best results from them they must be grown by themselves. The most artistic bouquets are those in which but one kind of flower is used, though very beautiful ones are often made containing more than one kind. In this case the kinds are chosen with referoften made containing more than one kind. In this case the kinds are chosen with reference to harmony and contrast. The same rule holds good when applied to garden work. It is safer to keep each kind by itself. If you combine, be very sure that there is perfect harmony of habit, as well as color, and aim at securing such a contrast as will bring out and heighten the peculiarities of each. In and heighten the peculiarities of each. In order to do this you must understand your plants perfectly. A bed of pink, or white phlox, or a bed of pink and white, is sure to johlox, or a bed of pink and white, is sure to attract admiring attention; but mix in a tew crimson, purple, or libro petunias, and some scarlet poppies, and you destroy its charm, which consists in perfect harmony of color and simplicity. Remember that there is always strength and dignity in simplicity. Perhaps women who have had but little experience in the flower garden will understand this better if they apply it to the rules which govern them in selecting their gowns. Here inharmonious colors are not put together, and no woman of taste allows many colors to appear in the same costume. The rule which applies to and governs the one, should be apapplies to and governs the one, should be ap-plied to and allowed to govern the other.

FOR tropical gardening the musa ensete, or The tropen gardening the mass easete, but has larger, more luxuriant foliage, and is of much larger and statelier growth. It is most effective when planted in groups. To succeed with it you must give it a very rich, mellow soil, and keen it outer wet at the roots. succeed with it you must give it a very rich, mellow soil, and keep it quite wet at the roots. Fine beds are made by planting three or four roots of this plant in the center and surrounding them with some of the dark-colored cannas. The contrast between the coppery foliage of the latter plant and the bright green of the banana, and especially between the flowers of the canna, which will appear during the latter part of summer, and the leaves of the latter part of summer, and the leaves of the banana, will be very pleasing and brill-iant. Cannas are excellent for massing in beds where a height of not more than three or four feet is desired. Until quite recently these plants were not considered worth much as bloomers; but the new French sorts produce bloomers; but the new French sorts produce flowers as large as those of the gladiolus, and quite as rich in color. In shape they bear considerable resemblance to that flower; and, at the same time, they suggest some of the richly-colored orchids. Give a deep, rich soil, with plenty of water. My readers are so in miliar with the effects which can be secured by the use of the colema achyranthus, alternanthera, and the variegated geraniums, that it is not necessary for me to do more than mention them in this connection. They supply color, which can be made very effective, when used to supplement the effects given by the plants having larger and more luxuriant. the plants having larger and more luxuriant growth of foliage.

POR producing rich effects on the lawn few P plants are more striking than the ricinus, or castor oil plant. It is easily grown from seed. It is of rapid development, and a plant in rich soil will be some feet high by midsumin rich soil will be some feet high by midsummer, with leaves from one to two and a half-feet across. In most varieties the foliage is palmate, and generally of a dark color, with bronzy, coppery or other metallic effects. By the end of August plants are often eight or ten feet high, much branched, and covering a large space. Indeed, I know of no single plant able to produce so striking and tropical an effect as the richus can and will, when well grown. It is often used with other plants, in large groups or beds, but I think it gives the best satisfaction when grown by itself,

Do not put your house-plants out before D really warm weather comes. A cold night may happen along and chill some of the tender growth of the more delicate kinds. If you have a veranda where you can keep them, they can be given the protection of a blanket if the night bids fair to be frosty, but if put out in the yard, no such protection can be provided easily, and the chances are that none will be given.

Do not let plants that have blossomed through the winter, and which you intend to use another season in the house, go on blossoming. See that they get at their summer's work as soon as possible. That work is to rest. Encourage them to do nothing but reconsents. Do not him which sail or leave recuperate. Do not give rich soil, or large amounts of water, for these encourage vigorous growth. You want the plants to remain as nearly dormant as is consistent with health, Out back well. Prune into something like Out back well. Prune into something like symmetrical form, and keep watch of them as growth is made. Pinch back whenever it seems necessary to do so to secure good form. Act on the principle that you are training the twig from which the tree is to develope. Training and development go on together. If you wait until a plant is developed it will be too late to train it.

A S soon as your sweet peas begin to run, provide some kind of a support for them. I find nothing suits them as well as

HAVE you an old root of salvia splendens that has been wintered in the house?

Don't throw it away thinking it is worthless.

Put it out in your "odds and ends" corner.

It will soon send up a healthy growth. From such a plant you can cut many a handful of brilliant flowers for use in large vases in the

B<sup>E</sup> sure to keep in mind the fact that a plant exposed to strong winds and warm air requires much more water than it would if in a sheltered place, like the greenhouse. Many persons complain that their cleanders, hydran-geas and crape myrtles, growing in tubs on the veranda during the summer, fail to do well. The flowers drop almost as soon as out, and often before. Nine times out of ten it will be found on examination that the soil in the bottom of the tub is dry as dust. Give enough water to wet the soil all through. A plant whose roots fill a tub holding a bushel or two of soil will require as much as a pailful of water daily.

DON'T let the weeds get the start of you.

But they will do so unless you are prompt with your warfare against them. If you are not aggressive, they will be, and it takes but a little time for them to get so fully established that you will find it hard work to get rid of them without doing injury to the plants among whose roots they seem to weave their roots as if it gave them a greater sense of safety, or, at any rate, a feeling that if they must be disturbed they will make others suffer with them. Begin to fight them early in the season, and fight to win. In the question of weeds, perseverance is an all-important element, and a winning one. A few moments, if given over each day to the extraction of weeds, are ample; then you will keep shreast of them, but let them get ahead of you and discouragement is inevitable.

EEP your plants in a cool and airy room K EFF your plants in a cool and airy room if you want fine, large flowers. In a hot room your plants will spindle up, and very likely the buds will blast. Red spiders will be pretty sure to attack them if the air is dry. A temperature of sixty-six or seventy degrees by day, and fifty five degrees by night, is much better for them than a higher one. To guard against the spider use plenty of water on the plants; syrings them daily. When flower-like buds appear, give fertilizers about once in ten days. Keep the branches tied to stakes. Give plenty of sunshine, and all the air you can let into the room without chilling the plants.

NEW VARIETIES OF THE ASTER

you want the best of all the fall-blooming annuals be sure to include a package or two of aster seed in your spring order. This flower is quite as beautiful as the popular chrysanthemum, which it so closely resembles in form that white asters are often seld in full to those who are not as familiar resembles in form that white asters are often sold in full to those who are not as familiar with flowers as they ought to be for choice varieties of chrysanthemums. It is so late in coming into bloom that it can be planted among earlier blooming plants, thus continuing the beauty of the beds up to severe frosts. There are several very desimble varieties. I give a list of the very best: The cocardean, or new crown, is two-colored. The center is white, generally "quilled," surrounded by several rows of large flat petals—blue, crimson, rose or purple. A new variety, bearing a son, rose or purple. A new variety, bearing a close resemblance to the Japanese chrysanthemum, is called the comet, and is in color rose, pale blue, lilse and white, and pink and white. A variety of very strong habit is the Goliath, bearing flowers of great size, and very perfect in form. The peony-flowered perfection is a flower of pale and dark blue, lilac crimson, rose and white, large and perfect in shape, and very freely produced. Each plant is a bouquet in itself. Asters are excellent for cut-ting, as the flowers last a long time. The best plan is to sow the seeds in the open ground, after the weather and soil are in a condition favorable to the germination of plants. Later on transplant to the beds where you intend them to bloom. The young plants can be transplanted as safely as a cabbage. Plants "run to leaf" more than to flower. They are favorites for cutting for use in vases.

CARNATIONS ALL THE YEAR ROUND

AM asked by several subscribers to tell "how to have carnations the year round," and to give some general hints as to culture, etc. I find it very easy to have these flowers through the summer. Old plants that have bloomed in the house during the winter, will, if cut back sharply in May, and planted in the garden beds, in a good soil, soon make a vigorous new growth, and from this make a vigorous new growth, and from this plenty of flowers can be expected after June.

plenty of flowers can be expected after June.
Young plants can be grown for winter use by layering; that is, taking a branch whose wood is past the very brittle stage, half breaking it, and putting the broken part under the soil, leaving the branch still connected with the old plant. You get the idea, don't you?
Will it be any clearer if I tell you to bend a branch in V shape, almost breaking at the angle, and inserting this bend in the soil? A callus will form at the partially broken part.
Circulation will be diverted from its normal action to a certain extent, and roots will form. nction to a certain extent, and roots will form.
While this is being done the branch receives nourishment from the old plant. It is rather difficult for the amateur to root cuttings of the carnation in the way geranium cuttings are rooted, and I would always advise layering.

However, if I wanted strong plants for blooming in the house next winter, I would order young plants in spring, and plant them out in the beds to grow during summer. If a flowering stalk appears pinch it back at once, Neep the plant from blooming. By attention of this kind you can seeme a bushy, compact plant. Pot in September, using about six-inch pots. Use good garden loam, and some old manure, if you can find it. If not, depend on such fertilizers as Food for Flowers or bone mend; but do not use these until the plants meal; but do not use these until the plants show signs of blooming.

TWO OLD-FASHIONED FLOWERS

EALLY, it seems as if all the "good old flowers" are becoming pop-ular again, for the poppy was grown very extensively last seagrown very extensively last sea-son, and this spring's entalogues are enthusiastic over the beauty and brilliancy of these long-neg-lected flowers. The chief fault to find with them is that the texture of the petals of most varieties is so delicate that they are of most varieties is so delicate that they are easily injured; therefore they are not as useful for cut flowers as many others. But for making brilliant a bed or corner in the garden they are unexcelled by any other flower. Daneborg is a variety of intense shining scarlet, with a white mark on the lower portion of each petal, this mark on the four petals of which each flower is composed giving a cross, which resembles the Danish flag, which is a white cross on a scarlet ground. Peacock is a vivid scarlet, Danish flag, which is a white cross on a scarlet ground. Peacock is a vivid scarlet, with a black zone; fire dragon has flowers four inches across, of a deep, glowing scarlet, with a black spot, having a white margin at the base of each petal. The Shirley poppies are very fine, varying from pure white to dark scarlet. Many of them are veined, striped, or flaked with contrasting colors. Have a bed of poppies.

THE TIME-TESTED NASTURTIUMS

THIS good, old-fashioned annual has, of late, become extremely popular, because artists who are quick to see the pictorial possibilities of a plant have worked it into their bitnes of a plant have worked it into their pictures, and persons with a keen artistic sense of the beautiful have made use of it for cut work and personal adoratment. It de-serves all the popularity it enjoys, for it is a really magnificent flower. Its foliage is a pale pea-green, and above this are thrown its many flowers, varying in color from a pale creamy yellow to a most brilliant crimson, searlet and marroon. Some of the darker sorts are so in-tense in tone that they seem to have petals maroon. Some on the universe of the petals cut from velvet. The contrast between follows and flower is very pleasing. These plants are excellent for poor soils, and hot, some

DUE MEW 1892 FLOWER CEED OFFES.

colon't pai it off? He suffertplines and six news.
Calbethers and fee to rests.

SPECIAL OFFER: To any lady answers.

PROBLE OFFER: To any lady answers.

For any lady answers.

For any lady answers.

A suffer to the series and popular important Leave-in-a. Miss; of the news and leave-in-a. Miss; of the news and leave-in-a.

No will also assume the news and the news and the news and the popular important leave-in-a. In the newslet of Thirty-in-and and value least leave-in-and leave-in-a.

It can receipt of Thirty-in-and-in-an

ANOTHER GREAT OFFER! Ever Centre for the Conspecial policy of the Contract o and or "Reseal of Florishters." Address: S. H. MOORE & CO., 27 Park Place, New York-

PARK'S SEEDS

"Mn. Park :--Your Flower Seeds are simply perfect. All grow, and the flowers are the worder of neighbors who buy the seeman needs." So writes a parton, and the speaks the mind of a hast of flower lovers who will buy only of Park.

Choice Flower Seeds are Park's specialty, and his FLORAL GUIDE tells all about three CF Paney Victor Plans, Mixed Seeds and STDE—off her transparence of the transpare

GEO. W. PARK, Libonia, Pa. P S.-15 splendid named everklooming Roses only 15 cents.

E. P. ROE STRAWBERRY

(colored plate) will be mailed free with illustrated catalogue of all good fruits and ornamentals.

T. J. DWYER, Cornwall, N. Y.

WATER LILES Bay and night blooming varieties. Egyptian Letus and other choice aquatics. Catalogues sent free. W. TRICKER, Donnas Hills, N. Y.

HOW TO GROW CHRYSANTHEMUMS AT ONCE

FLOUR OF TOBACCO & SULPHUR.

An Insecticité and Ferdiller. Will destroy lier and lis his durin. Has greet deanning qualities. Used extensively regres and positre because are fouch to commit. Real er, 50c. F. O. STURTEVANT, Hartford, O.

YOU WOULD LIKE

Piano or Organ if you could see and hear one. Tone pure, action perfect, finish and workmanship the very best. And prices are very reasonable. Would like to say more, but rather send you a catalogue. Write for one—it will interest you. Sent free.

GEO. P. BENT, Mnfr., CHICAGO, U.S. A.

FARGO'S $2.50 LADIES' BOOT

and Pocket Mirror sent on

C. H. FARGO & CO. Chiengo, Ill.

ROMAN INSECT DESTROYER"

Exterminates Cockroaches, Water Bugs, Carpet Sugs and foul insects of all kinds. Not potson, and is harmless to human kind or animals. Halfand can by mail on receipt of 35 cents

FLORENCE MANUFACTURING CO. 150 State Street, Boston, Mass.

VAN HOUTEN'S

"Bamirel, my beg, They've a quarreli(ed. Yer mether-ig(Law says there is (Notkin' like You
Houven's Cocoo,
'An' the shepherd Sticks to his van
And water.
"There's no need
To drep him in the Water-butt after (All, Saminel,"

the Standard Cocoa of the World. A Substitute for Tea & Coffee, letter for the Nerves & Stomach.

Perfectly Pure.

The most eminent European Analysis loctors, certify that VAN HOUTEN'S PATENT PROCESS eret of the firm) highly develops the sibility, errough and natural flavor and t of the cocca bean.

roma of the cocce bean.

Sold in 1-8, 1-4, 1-2 and 1 th Cana. 23-1f of chalcable, enclose 25 at. to either Van fourtg & Zoon, 106 Beade Street, New York, r 45 Wahash Are. Chicago, and a can corsining enough for 35 to 40 caps will be matical.
contion this publication. Frequent only by an Houran & Zoon, Weep, Holland. al.

THE STOCKINGS THAT ARE STAMPED

ON THE TOE

LOOK WELL, FIT WELL, WEAR WELL,

AND ARE-

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS. For sale by the trade generally and obtainable direct from the makers, who will send a POST-PAID PARCEL PRICE-LIST,

FULLY DESCRIPTIVE, TO ANY APPLICANT SHAW STOCKING CO., LOWELL, MASS.

JOHN H WOODBURY, DERMATOLOGIST,
125 W. 125 W

Consultation free, at Office or by letter.

Stamping Patterns

ther keep and return the rest. Address HENRY MITCHRLL, North Beading, Mass.

LACE CURTAIN Catalogue, 1 cent.
wall Paper, 4 cents. WM. DEAUNESS, Cinciunati, O.

"MUSIC MADE EASY." Learn at home Large chart letx 22 3 times, 5 lessons loc PROF. JAS. MacMASTER, 26t Waboth Ave., Chicago

OLD MAIDS made new by "Prof. Baxter's in yeather." Pr. Sc. List of new joays PRES BAKER'S, 20 Winter St. Boston, Mass

4 FR EE Samples matied for Sick Buschiche," fittenma tion, Dyspeicia. Busine's System Tests Co., Cleveland, 0.

TOILET TOILET PARLORS
PARLORS
OPENED.

Bediable woman wanted in every County in establish a Toilet Parlor for like sule of our celebrated Toilet Articles, etc., Wager 84.3 to 885 per month and expenses. We fire such complete stock on crossignment, Settlements monthly. 83 Sample Outlit Free, Sichola Mig. Co., 378 Cacal St., N. Y.

PARK'S ROSES

Not stekly, forced alips, but strong healthy plants, on their own roots, just ready in 'sed and bloom. Increase short. But study. They will delight you. Safety sailed, perguid, as blows:

106 Roses Tea. Perpetual Prairie and Moss. 85-13 Roses, 35 cents, or with 5 flux Tuberoses, 11 16 Roses, 60 cents, or with Park's Florat Magazine, a chaeming monthly, I year, 81

PARS'S ROSE BUDGET describes these Roses and sells just how to grow them. From to turcers; in others, 10 come. Order new, ICFTE set, will not appearaged, 1 600, W. PARK, Forent, Liberts, Pa. P.S .- Park's Floral Gulds, mixed seeds, etc., for two stumps.

H. S. H.—Perhaps the best "general purpose" clemn its is jackminil, with large, violet-blue flowers.

Miss B.—The scarlet-flowering bean in a very pretty plant to train up about the window. I would, however, prefer the morning glory.

P. G. M.—When the hydranges is coming into bloom give blood massize. When making its annual growth give pienty of water. Put out on a versaids in summer.

Mus. 1. The best rose I know of for cemetery use is Madaine Plantiler. It is not large, but its flowers are very deable and borne in classers. It is a profise bloomer, and quite hardy. You will be pleased with it.

Mess H. S.—The best variety, at bast the most popular, is doubtless rubra. Weltooleasts is one of my favorites. It has benetiful foliage, is a compact, bushy grower, and is for anothis covered with delicate, rescolored flowers. Try both.

H. S. P.—The herbaceous spiress are among the most beautiful of our hardy plants. S. ress has pink flowers: S. alba, white. The helividinal flowers are very small, but there are hundreds of them in each cluster, and they have a delicinic graceful effect, which makes these rescondide plant and while plumes.

Mas. W. B. E.—I would put the daphne out of doors during summer, along with sandon and other plants of a similar character. Keep them on a shady vennch, where they can get plenty of air. Water moderately, but be sure that at no time they suffer from inck of it. Great injury is done to such plants by letting them get very dry.

W. F.—Do not reseave the covering from roses and other plants which were laid down, until very cold, freezing nights are past. Nothing is gained by lifting too early, and a great desi may be lost. The bods with not start until the wenther becomes somewhat warm, and then, but not till then, should the winter covering be taken off.

T. W. W.—Balsams are very tender plants, and even a slight freet kills them. If seed he sown in the bed, he stree that warm wengher has conce before you sow it. In order to get the full effect of the rese-like blessoms, it will be necessary to clip off some of the leaves which grow so thickly along the branches that they half con-ceal the flowers.

Box writes—"I noticed your reply to T. B. C. in the December issue of the Jou sex at. . Box is perfectly hardy in the vicinity of Ricton, but it is of too slow a greath to make a good hedge. I have one on an old family estate which we know to be at least forty years old, and the plants of which it is composed are not three feet high, though its a condition of perfect health."

high, though is a consistion of perfect health."

M. T.—Among all the hybrid perpetinals I have ever grown, I know of none gathe equal in freedom and continuance of bloom to Perfection das Blanchas. This variety is seident without flowers from June to Getober. It does not bloom with the profusion of a ten rose after its first large crop of flowers, but it will always have several in it. If given proper treatment. It is a rose of milky winteness, slightly suffused at the heart with flesh, sometimes; very sweet, and of medium size. It blooms in clusters. It is among the perpetuals what Madame Plantier is among the summer-bloomers.

A correspondent who gives no name writes: "In all that has been said in the Jorneau shout begonize, I do not remember to have seen anything about B. mankait anera. I have a paut of this variety sisteen months old, which measures two feet each way, with many leaves deven inches across. If has been a constant source of pleasure, and is a very ornamental piant. The leaves are a dark green, marked with cream and white in irregular blobcless. It is of vary eacy sulture." The variety manual is one of the most desimble of the ornamental-based leone of the most res, therefore it is well adapted to ordinary room culture.

colling.

P. C. C.—This plant is not tuberous. It has thick, fissiny rocks. It can be increased by rost-cuttings, which should have a portion of the crows attached. Its flowering season is May or Jose, generally, though sometimes it blooms earlier. It sends up a flower stalk three feet high, crowsed with a cluster of small, lignificate flowers. There is a white and blue variety. The individual flowers are not large, but there are so many in each cluster that the effect is extremely fine. The plant is what may be called an evergreen, that is, it is one that can be kept growing the year round, though it can be wintered in the cellar. Large, old plants are very semamental.

L.—Do not scatter year roses about. Plant them by thereselves and group them. Never spoil the offset of a small laws by scattering shrubs all over it. Keep them near the edges, in groups, and the effect will be much more satisfactory. If you have shrubs here, there, and everywhere, it will be so difficult in work among them with the harm-never that you will not keep the grass cut close, and the consequence will be a ragged laws which will be in "syresore" to you. If I wanted many shrubs, and they must grow where the harm ought to be, I would not attempt to have a lawn, but would give the greend up which to the harm and allow so grass-to grow among them.

Mas. C. A. S.—There are doubtless many readers of allow no grass-to grue among them.

Miss. C. A. S.—There are doubtless many readers of the Jovanna who find it difficult to keep runtless by the peoper condition as regards moisture. I wested actual them to try this plans, which I have found uniformly successful. Take an eight-inch pot. Stop up the bole in the bottoms of it. Fut us enough clean unrel to gase the top of a four-lack pot even with the top of the larger pot. Fut the smaller pot into the larger one, without stopping the hole in center, and fill is between them with sand. Place in a warm and sumny position, and poor water into the small pot. The sand will take up the moiscare and discribate it evenly. Insert cuttings between the riors of the two pols, and they will seen root. In this way the sed can be kept just right as to missure.

A. M.—If you write to any of the leading florids you can obtain catalogues of wire frames for making up "florent designs". But—don't get them. They are, without exception, almost, in bad taste. I saw sense flowers this morning which were being prepared for a florent, and no formal "design" could compare with them for simple boundy. On a base of ferm were hald pure white arabus, and one cluster of pluk observices. Solding more, They were their hypothese with a white "design," and you admired them because of their beauty, and that is always what a dower should be admired for. Never "arrange" flowers in such a manner that the peculiarity of arrangement will be more noticeable than the flowers themselves.

peculiarity of arrangement will be more noticeable than the flowers themserives.

C. C. Millem-Tals correspondent writes: "I enjoy your flow talk in This Lannor flower Journal, and am normal to sive you a little of my experience. It you think any of it would be useful you can give it in your trinks any of it would be useful you an give it in your readers. I prefer to get small plants from the growthome in spirite, rather than dermant plants, because I can get three or four times as mainy. A year later from entities of the trinks difference. If I had plenty of morely I would get dermant plants; they sold including north, well entities, hit is at due deeper than one space. In addition to the immures you mention, I fike result; manure, For the beader feel I make it into liquid manure and apply often. In wintering I have not the set success with leaves. The bears without top or bettern, we fearth set up parallel, and after factuage down tops, fell is will leaves for the very better yet wet. Although there are some beautiful Jone roses I do not care for them because I do not care for them because I want about two hundred remotions, and they will give me more messe in Junk than I can for. When the first baids are set, I pick off every last one of them, except live to there of the most advanced on each bath. This gives finer thosess, and allows the limber to give more of them laser in the season. For some reason I have rever succeeded in gretting a La Prance to zow to any ster. Amorfann Sennity and Her Majesty have been a disappointment in the open. Nearly all the other remoinability of mention I have trivel uned like. Try John Happer, Jend Roden well with him, built and out-deers. Story of bailt is added to my coses one year. I la ton parts greet strong. Killed shaps: bashes has Shows then use it very very weak, with soap-ends,"

Contains No Alcoholic Liquors. Makes an every-day convenience of an old-time luxury. PURE and wholesome, Prepared with scrupulous care. Highest award at all Pure Food Expositions. Each package makes two large pies. Avoid imitations-always insist on having the imitations—always fisses on having the NONE SUCH brand.

If your grocer does not keep it, send soc. (or stamps) for full size package by mail, prepaid.
MERRELL & SOULE, Syracuse, N. Y.

with Pastes, Enamels and Paints which stain the hands injure the iron, and burn off. The Rising Sun Stove Polish is Brilliani, Oderless, Durable and the consumer pays for no tin or glass package with every purchase.

HAS AN ANNUAL SALE OF 3,000 TONS.

GOLD-SILVER-NICKEL PLATING. A trade easily learned; cases little to start. I will furnish outfits and give work in part payment. Circulars free. Address F. LOWET, 252 Merges No. Sesskips, N. Y.

45 sold in '88 2,288 sold in '89 6,268 sold in '90 20,049 sold in '91 60,000 will be sold in '92

A Steel Windmill and Steel
Tower every 3 minutes.
These figures tell the story of the ever-growing,
ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermotor. Where
one goes others follow,
and we "take the country."

Steel Aermotor. Where one goes others follow, and we "take the country."
Though side, we were easile to make all of the fills Aermotors to No. Orders after which it would be being the fills of the fills of the fills. Orders after which it would be be filled, teahner we have yearly increased or place in the same party habitance portless of the fills of the fills. Are yet earloan to know how the Aermotor Co, in the 4th year of its saids seek, same to make many times he manny winderslills as all other mankers comblined? Blow we came to testigate the Sieet Wheel, the Sieet Viset Turer, the filled Tilling of the fills of the f the random mill, and many siter man sharinan, though not been important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the Beet wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has a been don-

ZE

ΞŪ

A ERMOTOR GRIP Germonstrates in hose of Deep dors.

3 Deep dors.

5 M. To the blend policy of the Armente Co., that guarante of the transfer of the first policy of the Armente Co., the guarante of the transfer of the trans

Tillion of the Aermotor and Towers.

Tow what shower, stiff, Sheel Fixed Towerser if year want the lower year don't have to climb (the Steel Tilting) that over year the breef that reas when all others shad in that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long

(the Steel Aermotor) or if you want a General Aermotor is charmotor in charmotor is now waste, term grindersor and

charmotor in charmotor in the same grindersor and

charmotor in

charmotor in the same grindersor and

charmotor in

charmotor

cha

WALL Non-Arrenteal
Factory prices
Enormous assertment Enormous assertment of styles. Goods sent to any part of the United States. A very large line of samples sent for S ets, postage. Tapers without gold, 4c to 6c, Gold Papers, 5c to 15c. Elegant Embossed Gold Papers, 15 cts. to 20 cts. Boodsen, all soldly to make Borders, all widths to match, in proportion. The Providence Wall Paper House, Westminster St.

Previdence.
R. I.

$500 FOR A PANSY BLOSSOM!

Every reader of this paper should not fail to only some of the Alice Pansies this summer, which were massed by Mrs. Harrison. They description. These Mammoth Sins of old robers is wondered, and they have cost no an examinate given to severathere and their Beauty in beyond description. These Mammoth Sins of old robers is wondered, and they have cost no an examinate given to severathere that they are far shead of all other varieties of Pansides and can be bed from no other section. I want to increase their size and will pay $500 in CASH to any person growing a Edward measuring 3 in. in diameter; 18 m, are very common size. See catalogue, Per Blo. in milver or 28c. in stamps, I will mail control packed, so they will go several days. It y laints of the "Alice Pansice" (noon be bicoming a Pearl Table Rose Builb and my litustrated that begins are the particles in the world, which were samed "ALICE" by Mrs. Harris some You can have the bleet besieve at least a few of the sheet parasites in the world, which were samed "ALICE" by Mrs. Harris some You can have the bleet besieve at least of Mammoth Pas
1 slon Plower Seed. Harry Climbing Vine, perfect beauty and the parasite of the lower seed. Harry Climbing Vine, perfect beauty also in Proceedings of the above will receive Falls. Oncodes and is world still, which were same the control and it would still hower the first year from seed and is world still, which were first year from seed and is world still, which were the first year from seed and is world still, which were the first year from seed and is world still, which were same the particle of the seed of the short year from seed and is world still, which were the first year from seed and is world still, which were the first year from seed and is world still, and the particle of the part Beauty often depends on umpness; so does comfort; does health. If you get there is something rong, though you may feel sign of it.

Thinness itself is a sign; metimes the first sign; metimes not.

The way to get back umpness is by CAREFUL VING, which sometimes inudes the use of Scott's mulsion of cod-liver oil.

Let us send you-free-a tle book which throws much ght on all these subjects.

COTT & BOWNS, Chemists, 122 South 5th Avenue, a York. our druggist Keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver all druggists everywhere do. 81.

sther stars in the U.S. The Sait alians withthe extra Pents and hat! would cost you where else $5.00. If you once order one, will never have any other. Will send one see saits ALL CHAPOES PEPAND 10 ABY
1 OF THE U.S. FOR $5.00. WE EXPRESSLY 7 ANTEE to refund money if suit is not factory. THE HUB is one of the largest sing, Furnishing, Mat, Shoe, Clook, Giove rank Stores in the United States. We everything from head to foot, and can you money. Send 4s in stomps for our iful 32-page lithographed fastion book ises of cloth for Men's Saits and Overcosts Clothing and Ladies' Cloaks and Jachets free on application.

AND CHILDREN'S OTS AND SHOES.

1877 Frankfort nd wherever else exhibited.

THE BEST. SEELY'S Flavoring Extracts. VANILLA, LEMON, And Assorted Flavors. DON'T min your Cake, lee-Cream and Postry by using pour extracts. SEELY'S have stood the test for twentymine years. Ask your grover for them. Sample by mail on receipt of 25 cents.

AFG. CO. Detroit, Mich.

CLAMS, OYSTERS AND LOBSTERS HOW TO MAKE DISHES OUT OF THESE WHEN THEY ARE CANNED

ANNED clams, oysters and lobsters, provided they are fresh, can be put to a great many uses, and not a few most palatable dishes can be mode of a can of each.

As a few examples, we give the following, which have the endorsement of successful trial by experienced housewives;

CLAM SOUP

ONE can of clams drained from the liquor. ONE can of clams drained from the liquor.
Chop the clams very fine and set them aside; strain the liquor to free from sediment. Fry half an onion in an ounce of butter; asid a little chopped celery, a blade of mace, a salted anchovy, six whole peppers and a pint of sonp stock. Let it boil slowly half an hour, then strain into a sancepan, add the clams and the liquor, and boil slowly about affect minutes; add salt and cayenne. Buil one-half pint of cream and add it to the sonp, Mix a small teaspoonful of corn starch in a little cold milk; add to the soup. Four into a hot tureen and serve.

CLAM BROTH

DRAIN the liquor from a can of clams; to it add an equal quantity of stock, or hot water; boil, season with salt and cayenne, or what is better, two or three drops of tobasco stace. Add a piece of butter; pour into the tursen. Add a slice of toast, and serve. The clams may be chopped fine and added to the broth, but it is better without them.

CLAMS BAKED WITH BACON

TAKE one can of clams, from which drain the liquor, which can be used for broth. Cut three thin 'slices of bacon, and freshen by putting them in a pan of cold water, and allowing them to boil. Take from the fire and cut them into dice. Have a small baking dish in which lay a layer of clams, then one of the bacon dice; over this sprinkle a teaspoonful of minced celery; add a dash of pepper. Continue in this way until all the material is used; strew fine bread crumbs over the top, on which place a few pieces of butter; bake in the oven until brown.

FROTHED CLAMS

Deally the clams very dry. Take three eggs, separate the whites and yolks, and stir the clams into the yolks; add salt and pepper. Bent the whites to a very stiff froth. Take up a spoonful and place in it a clam; then drop in hot fat for a moment.

OYSTERS SAUTE

DRAIN the oysters in a can from the liquor, which heat in a flat pan. Toast several slices of bread, dip quickly in the hot liquor and lay on a hot platter. In a frying-pan melt a small piece of butter, and when very hot put in the oysters, turning them constantly with a knife. They will take about a minute to cook. Spread them on the toast, put a few pieces of butter on top and a drop or two of tobusco sauce. Serve.

LOBSTER SOUP

THE liquor from a can of lobeter, a pint of milk and a pint of I milk and a pint of stock. Heat to boil-ing in different vessels the milk and stock. Heat the lobster liquor, but do not boil. Pour the stock into the tureen, whisk in the milk, add the lobster liquor, salt, a speck of cay-enne and a grating of natureg. Whisk thoroughly and serve.

LOBSTER CURRY

OPEN a can of lobster and pour the contents into a bowl: break the meat into small pieces. Put a tablespoonful of butter over the fire, and when meited add an onion cut in fine pieces. When the onion is tender, add a tablespoonful of flour and half a pint of stock; season with a dash of cayenne, salt, a teaspoonful of curry powder and the juice of half a lemon. Cook a few minutes, add the lobster meat and liquor: cook five minutes.

STEWED LOBSTER

DRAIN the lobster from the liquor. Melt an ounce of butter in a frying-pan; add the lobster meat and let it simmer for a tew minutes, then add salt, pepper and a very scant half pint of stock, or hot water; cover, and let simmer three-quarters of an hour. Put is a supercap half an ounce of batter and half. and set summer three-quarters of an hour. Put in a suscepsu half an ounce of butter and half an onion, minced; fry brown, and add two sliced tomatoes, or half a cup of canned, three okra pods, sliced, salt and a drop or two of t-baseo sauce. Cook fifteen minutes, add the liquor from the can of lobster, and in about five minutes add it to the stewed lob-ster. Let all cook about five minutes. Add a little benom inice, and serve.

a little lemon juice, and serve.

Besides the above ways, clams and oysters may be fried, escaloped, panned and otherwise treated as when fresh. I have made delicious chowder from canned clams; but great care is needed to properly proportion the other ingre-dients to the claus.

WOMEN AS MARKET GARDENERS

S<sup>0</sup> many women who wish to earn their own living have some into the milliness had living have gone into the millinery business, that it has been suggested that some other field of labor might prove more profitable. Women as a general rule are good gardeners, and it is strange that some of them do not go in for fine market gardening. Years ago, before Mrs. Langtry went on the stage, she bes-itated which she should do, go in for growing lettnee, cauliflower and asparagus, or play "Pauline" and "Lady Clascarty." She was certain she would succeed in the first, and she felt sure that vegetables from her farm would have a good sale; however, she elected to go on the stage. But why does not some other roman follow her iden, and make the vegetables from Mrs. Brown-Jones' farm the most de-simble and the most sought after in the market?

Milk Men Milk Maids

and everything else faultlessly clean, and there is nothing half so good for such clean-

Gold Dust Washing Powder.

Housekeepers too have much to clean, and they can't afford to do without GOLD DUST WASHING POWDER, which makes things clean in half the time, and keeps them clean for half the money,

Gold Dust Washing Powder is sold by all grocers,

Less than ONE HALF the brice of others.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE, PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE.

"PILLSBURY'S BEST" FLOUR

Makes More Bread Makes Whiter Bread Makes Better Bread

THAN ANY OTHER FLOUR MANUFACTURED.

)isbury eapolis.

For Sale by all First-class Grocers.

STUDEBAKER PHAETONS

No. 521. STUDEBAKES SPECIAL PRARTON

and Carriages of all descriptions have an established reputation for style, beauty of design, excellence of make and finish second to no similar productions in the land.

Illustrated Catalogue on Application Address, mentioning this JOURNAL

STUDEBAKER BROS. MFG. CO-South Bend, Ind.

OVER 60,000 SOLD THE PARAGON PAT. FOLDING COIN PURSE.

The most recent and least bulky purse made.

Ask your dealer for it, or 1 will send you sample at following prices, postpaid:

No. 5 holds $4.00 in silver. $2.00 $4.50 $7.50 $1.00 $1.25 $1.75

Sole ManPr, JAMES S. TOPHAM, 1231 Penn'a Ave., Washington, D. C.

52 IN A YEAR MARION HARLAND you a new sequation. 84.60 a year. Every yearly subscriber, if she subscribes within one more and members this paper, may become a shareholder in our Divisions' Fand by soulding cert selected names. (A blank with instructions sent on receipt of subscription.) No free sample Ten works' brial, She.

HOUNEREEPER'S WEEKLY, Philadelphia, Pa

LADIES OF FASHION can not do without

L. SHAW'S Skeleton Bang and Ideal Wave, Natural curled, feather light, lifelike, beautiful, from $2.00 up.

WAVY HAIR SWITCHES, All long, convent Hair, from $5.00 up. $10.00 elsewhere.

COCOANUT BALM.

The only Complexion Beaudifier endersed by eminent physicians. Makes the skin as fair and sett as a child's Price, $1.00 per hox. All Tublet Preparations of the Celebrated PARFUMERIE MONTE CHRISTO. HAIR DYIES ALL SHADES, A SPELIALTY. Send for free pamphiet." How to be Beautiful."

54 West Fourteenth St., New York.

BEAUTIFUL LOOK AT THESE PRICES:
3 cests, 5 cests, 75, cests, 10 cests, 125,
WALL PAPER cests and 16 cests per roll. Write WATKING BROTSIERS, South Manchester, Conn.

Every "shaver" REY STROPS. This Dressing knows the TORREY STROPS. This Dressing has made them famous. For sale by dealers, or direct from factory. Frice 25 cents, postpaid.

Send for Cutalogue-tolls Bose to Sharper a Rason, J.R. TORREY & CO. Worcester, Mass.

$5 A DAY SURE. 82.15. Samples Free. Horse extracts buy 1 to 6. 20 other specialities. E. E. BREWSTER, Helly, Mich.

PRINTED BATISTE,

36 inches wide. King Philip Mills.

Send two-cent stamp for samples of

Cambric, Lawns,

Nainsook and Batiste,

KING PHILIP MILLS,

85 Worth Street, New York, N. Y.

ORDERS EASILY FILLED BY MAIL.

MADAME GRISWOLD'S Patent Skirt-Supporting Corsets AND SKIRT SUPPORTERS,

For circulars and terms to agents send to MADAME GRISWOLD, 923 Broadway, New York; 7 Temple Place, Boston, Mass.; or to General Agents, M. M. Wygant & Co., Fredonia, N. Y.; J. B. Putham, 126 State street,

Very Satisfactory Garment, P Because it Supports Stockings and Underclothes from the SHOULDUNG, and has no still contact its with perand freedom. Elegam, and strictly bygienic.

ADY CANVASSERS WANTED. THE FOT, MARMON & GRADWIOL CO., Drivelpa, N. L.

The New Shape in Hoslery.

The Most Durable. The Only Comfortable.

The toes are not distorted as by the old style stocking, and the big toe, having room enough, stays inside.

Sold by Denlers or by Mail.

Men'ar: 4 pairs of medium exten; 3 pairs fine extens; 2 pairs fine cuttin; 2 pairs soft Lists, merino er worsted, $1.00

Women'as Elack cotton or Balbrigann, 5 Oc.

Mention size shoc, and whether man's or woman's.

Mastrated Rocklet on application.

MAUNEMHOSE COMPANI, 75 Channey Street, Boston, Mana.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Ne can step a Chert or Square on suspense with The McDewell Garners Draking Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Frieng Garneries, Easy to Learn, Rapit to Lee, Fits any Form, Fullway analy Fastion, As in vention as Burful as the Sewing Machine in Company of the Sewing Machine in Company of the Sewing Machine, and the Sewing Machine in Company of the resision as Darras

chine.

Free 50 days to test at your own bone.

Bend for Illustrated Cheedar.

THE Methodwald CO.

6 West 18th Breat, New York City,

West-Arthur Fashion Send 25 cents for copy of our elegant French Fushion books explaining how to cut latest style garment.

rembet. Require booken one in the minotes without une or house. Personne and supports the water and hips. A y investion, securing consumpt wid perfort confort. At all leads and Ladfor' more extra the second confort. At all free, Wolczakie Depth 181 and 183 Green Storet, N. Y.

THE STORY OF AN OLD SHOE

BY ANNE REESE ALDRICH

NLY a quaint little leather shoe. worn smooth and shiny, and almost as hard and solid as ninest as hard and solid as wood from a century's keep-ing lain away with other precious relics.

It is so stiff and unyielding, a mother of to-day would shudder to squeeze little, rosy toes and a dampled foot into-such a honey demonstance.

toes and a disspled foot intosuch a heavy, clumsy shoe.

One fancies the horror of the mother and nurse of "Baby McKee," for instance, at the mere thought of putting those little feet intoclose confinement in so solid and unornamental a specimen of foot-gear as this. Yet it was no less a person than the great-grandmother of the darling of the White House, Anna Harrison, the wife of the brave general, whose little feet took their first steps in these tiny sabots, one of which is pictured here.

They were evidently made to last. You can imagine half a dozen generations of bables learning to walk in the same pair, and even then the thick soles and the uncompromising brown "uppers" would hardly be the worse for wear. None of your dainty, modern knitted boots, or soft kid shoes, as pliable as a sasie glove, lest it should, perchance, press roughly on the tender flesh; no little socks of inited silk, or flerciest lamb's wool for American babies of an hundred years or more past. These sturdy children of a sturdler race than to-day, even among the rich and well-to-do, wore, as a rule, such coarse, home-spun fabrics, such rough shoes and stockings as the little denizens of our city tenement houses now would look at with supreme scorn, and would probably refuse as a gift.

now would look at with supreme scorn, and would probably refuse as a gift.

There is nothing that appenls more effect-unly to a tender, maternal fancy than a baby's worn shoes, the stubby toes, the heels run down, perhaps, at one side. The impression of the restless, shell-pink little feet that have learned to take their first cautious steps in it, or have trotted about all day long, bearing a very small relumn besty into such mischief it, or have trotted about all day long, bearing a very small, plump body into such mischief as it can find to do. When those little sloces are kicked off at night and lie with the socks by the side of the crib where the little wearer cudiles, warm and flushed in the gracious sleep of babyhood, how many a mother picks them up lovingly, with a sudden swelling of the heart and a warm impulse to wake the sleeper with a kiss. And ah, if those little feet should be destined never to tread the long, weary journey of life, if they are to stop while the path is only traveled a short, short way, while the sun has only just risen, and the dew is yet on every flower, ah, then, not even the little cradle, or the tiny, half-worn frocks, or the playthings that will half-worn frocks, or the playthings that will never be used again, are such beloved relics to the mother's broken heart as the shoes that keep so well the very shape of the feet that they once held.

they once held.

But these dear, clumsy little shocs belonged, as you know, to feet that did have the long journey to travel, and from letters, yellowed with age, in the writer's possession, we may know that the wearer lived a happy, simple life, rich in all womanly graces and virtues, conspicuous among which was the deep, wifely love and reverence they show for the brave, soldierly husband, who was, unhappily, scarcely to trend the floors of the White House as President ere death claimed him. House as President ere death claimed him, and to whose grandson we now give the honor due to a ruler and chief magistrate of our country.

A GAME FOR SUNDAY

By J. D. COWLES

CHILDREN from seven to twelve years of age soon tire of scaling, and become restless; and a game called perhaps "Books of the Bible in Syllables," could be made after the following plan, and would be appreciated by many who know how difficult it is to keep children interested on Sunday.

Let the names of the books of the Bible be printed on slips of paper, one syllable on a slip. For instance, Genesis would require three slips, Genesis, using the capital letter for the slip containing the first syllable of the when all these slips are thrown together in the box, the child could take a Bible and us-ing the index as a guide, construct the various

First, however, he should make as many as

First, however, he should make as many as he could without the help of the index.

After constructing all the names, he could close the Bible and see how many of them he could place in their proper order; then compare his work with the index, and correct it.

Such a game would be quite as interesting as any puzzle, and would be practically helpful in hater years.

ful in later years.

A game similar to authors could be played with the cards when the children had become sufficiently familiar with the various names. Syllables, instead of titles, could be called for, and the one securing the greatest number of complete names would "beat."

Canada is famous for its excellent educational standards.

HELLMUTH

LONDON, ONTARIO, CANADA. Completely equipped for giving an extensive and thorough education to Young Ladies and Girls.

Full Academic Course, Conservatory of Music, School of Art, Elocation, etc. Beautiful Home. 150 acres. Prasenger elevator. Riding School, On through route between East and West-Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific and Michigan Central Railways. Students from 25 Provinces and States. For illustrated satalogue, address Rev. E. N. ENGLISH, M. A., Prin.

Morning Noon Night

Good all the time. It removes the languor of morning, sustains the energies of noon, lulls $ the weariness of night.

Hires'Root

delicious, sparkling, appetizing.

Don't be deceived if a dealer, for the sake of larger profit, tells you some other kind is "just as good"—"tis false. No imitation is as good as the genuine Hunes".

immeni

YOU RIDE?

Guaranteed $ 55.00 BUCCY.

We sell direct to YOU and save you big Dealer's profil. Our $53.00 Buggies, $48.50 Phaetons. $97.50 Surreys, $11.00 Road Carts, $5.93 Harnesses and $53.50 Farm Wagons are used everywhere. Liverymen in all parts of the United States use our goods. EVENT 208 CRLY GUARANTEES.

Refer to Commercial Agencies or any Bank here. Write for catalogue and mention this paper.

UNION CARRIAGE CO., Cadiz, Ohio, U. S. A.

Allcock's surest, cleanest Orn and and bunions ever produced. Easily and cheapest remedy for corns applied—give im-mediate relief— afford absolute comfort. A pack-SHIELDS or a sam-

SHIELDS sent, prepaid, on receipt of 10 cents. The Corn Shields are made large and small. In priering, state size wanted. POROUS PLASTER CO., 274 Ganal Street, New York.

TAKE AN ACENCY for DAGGETT'S SELF-BATTING PAN Noeded in every family. SAVES 20 Per Cent. In Exciting, and Babes the Medicine, and Control of the world. Address pages of offer for pages. Address reacest office for the world, W. A. Badis ETT & CO., Viscined, N. J. Chicago, Ul. Sait I also City, Ctab. East Portland, Oreg. Oathland, Cal. Gainston, Tex.

THE YELLOWSTONE PARK AND ALASKA
The finest trip in the world is by
THE NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILEDAD
From Chicago and St. Paul to Tellowstone Park, thence in Paget Sound and Alaska. New roads, new motels and unequalised transportation facilities now make the Park Irip one of comfort and delight, while the journey to Alaska is a fitting climax to the tour through the Ameerican Wenderland.
Write for full information, maps and books to
2. M. EASYAPHED.
Gen'l Traffic Manager.
Gen'l Traffic Manager.
Gen'l Traffic Manager.
MINN.

SILK SATIN and PLUSH REMNANTS for Crazy Patch. A large pice, prelip pieces as worked colors, lice, 2 pias, 26. A large pig., all colors, Embroidery Silk, 26. Sheet of Crazy Silichou and Ep. Cut. of Fancy Work with every order. LADIEST ART CO. Box 584, 38. Louis, Mo.

2 POUNDS of the Best Linen Society STATIONERY Delivered at your nearest Express Office, for $1.00 Derman, the Stationer, New Haven, Ct. $1.00

NEW CARDS STATE OF THE CARD OF A LABOR OF THE PARTY OF TH

SOLID COMFORT, Rheumatism Cured, In-somila dispelled, is the verifict of everyone who skeps on our SLECTRIC AIR MATTERSS. Hygicals in principle. Order one for your Jome, and take one in your trunk on your cuting this summer, EXTROPOLITAN AIR GOODS (O., I Temple Place, Series.

COMPLEXION POWDER

is a necessity of the refined toilet in this climate. Pozzoni's combines every element of beauty and purity.
It is universally known and everywhere esteemed as the only Powder that will improve the complexion, eradicate tan, freckles and skin diseases

For Sale Everywhere.

CLEANER

BEAUTIFULLY.

Takes off RUNT, NTARCH, DIRT, or any Roughbress, and waters the Iron with BHSWAL.

Solingianton Berth by 25c,
AGENTS Wastel Energubers,
SHERWOOD MANUFING CO., Manufield, Ohio.

FOR THE HELPLESS Send for IN-page illustrated catalogue (free) of Reiling, Reclining and Carrying Chairs, Invalids' Comferts, etc. address flargent Mfg. Co. 84 Broadway, New York or Muskegut, Mich. Hention Tax Laraw Hose Joseph

DO NOT STAMMER."

No extra charge. All makes new or h hand. Lowest price guaranteed, Large's stock and oldest dealers in U.S. Cata coled. Stock Standard & Co. 20 USt., Paris, N

DAISY KNIFE-CLEANER

Nest, clean, efficient, durable. Complete by mail 25 ets. LYNCH & FLETCHER, 2374 Third Ave., New York.

PEN-WRITTEN CALLING CARDS are the most fashionable. Two one-cent stamps for land-somely written samples. 0. 2. Pen Co., Secondle. N. Y.

$Full \, Dress \, Suits$

TO ORDER From $25 to $40 Equatin fabric, style, workman-ship, fit and finish, to Sys and Snoo suits of leading houses.

Why this is possible: We are the only Tailering house in the U. S. making a specialty of Full Dross Garments and have every facility for producing at lowest possible cost. It is well known that Tailers regard the Dress Soit a mere incident in their business and accordingly characterized and of the characterized and the second seco charge prices greatly out of pro-portion to prices charged under brisk competition for business mits.

suits, The Dress Suit is to-day an Absolute Necessity an Absolute Necessity to performes attending Weddings, Receptions, Parties etc., It is not only the Cornex Dwess on such excusions but often other forms are absolutely prohibited
Every gentleman should own a Duess Soin, Comparatively few cloths are suitable for Dress Gaements, Samples of these we mail free on application with samples of time application with samples of tristseed be discouraged at the self-measurement requirement or our system is very simple.

Our Customers Risk Nothing. Garmens may be returned to us for any cause and when so returned, we obligate ourselves to pay all Express charges. We are general unitors and can farmish by mail samples of may sayle of goods desired. For particulars and samples address (enclosing 6 cts. for postage)

EAHN TAILORING CO., 14 E. Washington St., BOX T , INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

TO ALL CORRESPONDENTS:—Any question from our readers of help or interest to seesen will be cherrially sussecred in like Department.

But write your questions plantally and briefly. Do not use any unnecessary words.

The right to answer we reject any question is reserved by the Editor.

Answers control by premiered for size special issue. They will be given as quickly after receipt as possible.

All correspondence should be accompanied by full issues and underes, and for publication, but for reference.

VENNOR-The United States has no national flower. SHELEY-The 27th of December, 1962, came upon a Suburday.

G. R. Y.-About 990 will be the best temperature for your buly's bath.

Bose-There is a Woman's Exchange in almost all the large cities.

Penntaxio-Chieroform will remove greate spots from site and poplin.

Points.and-The word "suite" is pronounced as though spelled "except," Supersuman-Brides revally take with them to their new bosses a full supply of house fines.

hissocuray - Mrs. Cornelia M. Stewast, widow of the New York millionaire, died on Oct. 23th, 1885. SUBSCRIERS—An article on the care of scalakin and other turs is published in this issue.

Rose - Abstitus is prenounced as though spelled A-bu ti-lon, with the accent to the three last syllables.

SALLIE-The widows of Presidents Grant and Gar-field are allowed to send their mail matter free of post-

LAUKA—Madam Blavnisky, founder of the Theo-sophical Society, died at London, England, on May 8th, 1689.

ALMINA.—The clissate of California varies according to elevation and tarneds. It is mild and pleasest on the

Entis—1; is entirely a matter of personal feeding as to now soon formal calls may be made after a death in the OARLAND.—The belief has always prevaled that it is more beauthy to sleep with the head turned toward the north than toward the south. Naoart - The collect of the Protestast Episcopal Church for Assauctacion Day is a literal translation of the Latin prayer of the Angelia.

INQUESTIVE-Rubber gloves are a great help to women who have to do their own housework. They may be bought at any rubber store.

T. L. L.—We cannot answer any questions relative to the value of colos in this colosies. Prices for them vary according to the supply and demand.

FLORENE-The only summeried daughter of the house should have the family rame, preceded by the prefix "Miss," engraved upon her visiting cards.

Manast—Sarah Bernhardt was born in 1881. Her mosther was a Berlin Jewes, and at the time of Sarah's birth was a struggling milliner in the city of Paris. Brancourroux—Address the letter to Mrs. Mary Smith, M. D. (2) Physicians, as a rule, do not pay social calls, they are itentify too busy; we know of no other reason.

Inverse Park—For information enecessing the Art Schools of the Cooper Union in New York city, applica-tion must be made to the officers in change of the Insti-cution.

Lectuse—The word "inach" is usually applied to a alight and hurrled ment; the word "lunchesn" is the proper one to use in speaking of the formal midday repeat.

It. B.—The interior of a caraft, that may have become evated from hard water, may be cleaned by rising with excer to which a little mortalic acid has been dissolved.

KNOAGED-A white safin gown, with veit and orange bloscome, are quite in order for a murchay wedding. Announcement cards are usually send out about a week after the wedding.

COLLEKS BAWS—The Jobins'at cannot give any advice as to the investment of money, resident on its express any opinion as to the relative statisting of financial isotherious.

A. E. N.—To speak of a person as being a "goodgram-markan" is as attored as to speak of a gentleman as being a "perfect gentleman; " one expression is as incorrect as the other.

Hox.—To remove the stains from white linen, dis-serve a temposcalal of multicacid to a cup of lest water, rub the stained part well with the solution, and expose to the son senti quite dry.

Canvi.—A will may be drawn by any person who knows how to prepare it; no particular form of words is necessary. The number of witnesses required is different in the different square.

PERFLEXED HOUSEREEGER—It is said that if the wordwork in the kitchen is kept constantly acquired with water in which potech has been dissolved, that conclars and acts will specificy disappear.

Max.—Keep your face perfectly clean by washing it, two or three times a day with het water and song, rubbing it dry with a crosses towed. The friction may remove the trouble of which you complain.

J. M. V.—Helena, the capital of Montana, is pro-nounced as though applied Helesona, with the accept on the last syllable. There is no place to which old pastage stamps may be sent they are of no varie whatever. P. R. Q.—The crown of England descends to the nearest heir of the last weaver, he that heir make or female. The deachers of the Prince of Wales would inherit in their respective order should bring descend dewicely disconnection.

E. W. W. - We know of nothing which will remove the stain which has been caused by your skirt eleming in exchart with street mut. Try and avoid such treather in the forcine by having your street skirts made to clear the ground.

Burkesing-When cards of thanks are merived to Miss El. - At a ladder' buncheso the bertess takes the head of the table and places the gived of honor at her right band. If place cands are not used, the hostess must direct such gives to her cent as quietly test with as little confiscion as possible.

C. C. G.—Philip Bourke Martins, the bited port, and the hero of Mrs, Craik's poem, "Philip, My King," was not have blind: where about three years of use he re-ceived in blow in one of his eyes, and inflammation set-ting in its institute sight of both.

HAM.—Anthosities differ as to whether the knote and fork should be retained or laid upon the plate when n is present for a second helping. For opinion is that it should be laid at one side of the plate. When coup is served in caps it is becally easen with a spects.

percent in Gaps it is meanly success while appears.

P. E. To become a Colonial Dame it is necessary to bave load an accessor in the films of the Revolution, or previous to that films, who had reinforced some impartation services to the colonials. It need not have been military services any public services would qualify.

Manie.—We think you ought to feet very thankful that the young weman who cam away with your lever was other than yourself. We would give you to report any presents that he may have given you and to treat him politely and coolly a henever you shall import to used him.

Lauras - Women have voted on the same terms with most in Wyoming since EGs. Mr. Hamilina Wileau, Chadrana of the New York Stage Executive Committee of the Women Staffings Party. New York US, will specify offerential the converting this matter. We cannot space for its decision.

Max. C. L. R.—A card should be left for each lady whose name appears upon the cards of invitation to an afternoon ios. 4:D if unable to be present at the after-soon tes send your end upon the day named; it will say to a nethrostotyment. (3) Party calls and din-ner calls are obligatory.

BETTY—Women of refined tastes do not use flancy note paper. (2) When writing a friendly note to a grutheman begin poor letter. "My done Nr......" (3) in addressing a letter to a married woman, use her lass-hard's middle. (4) A card left or sent to an afternoon ten discharges the obligation.

STELLA—The bride should stand at the left of the bridestroom during the materiage executions, (2) It seems rother hard to condense a man to culture for site that the ancestors may have committed; but may good man will besitate before offering a samplehed mane to the woman be loves.

T. C.—Generally speaking, the lady is placed at the left of the gentleman, so that his right hand and arm may be free to protect and serve for. 12. The halfy should precede the gentleman when entering a hole dinder-cosm. (3) The boot at a dinner party always re-mains standing until all the gueste are seated.

CADDIE—We know of nothing in the connecte line that will make your complexion beautiful; but we do know that plain, wholescule frod, regular correle and plenty of frush air will help to make a plain girl attract-tor, and will do more toward improving her looks than all the cosmettes that were ever manufactured.

Any—Any pretty street costume may be, were to an afternoon ten. (2) We think that the ladies should bear the expenses of the environment, (3) McKelpan is pronounced as though specied Mish-egan, with the accept on the last syllable. Massachusetts is pronounced as it is spelled. (4) It is very had form to address an envelope crosswise.

HELPFUL WIFE.-We think that your desire to help your husband is a very prabeaucity one; but we are glad for your sake that he is manify enough to wish to have care of you himself, and keep you within the shel-ter of your home. He content with the income which your hested caras, and keep his fore by being willing to be guided by his winker.

A numeric -University Extension has been defined as "the higher education from the college nucleus to the people, by the means of lectures, teachers, publications, the holding of examinations, etc." Instead of oblighing the student to come to the university, the university proposes, as addition in ms home work, to go out to the people. In moths is, "Help people to help them-seives."

F. R.—In 1891 Messars, Chiarles Scribner's Sons, of New York, sold out their interest in their magnature on the nagreement that the manne of the imagnatine and of the ownpuny should be altered, and the names were accordingly changed to the "Contray Magnaline," and the themory Company. Charles Scribner's Sons agreed also not to publish any magnatine for five years, but after the experiation of that item, in January, 1891, they began the publishation of a new monthly, the prosent "Scrib-ners' Magnaline."

Innonance—We think that your beates was to blastic; she should have signified to you in some way whose secont you were to be. At formal dinner parties the host beads the way to the dining-room with the most distinguished lady guest upon his arm, and seats her at his right land. The bostess enters had, upon the arm of the most distinguished gentleman guest, who ingiven the seas of the most distinguished gentleman guest, who ingiven the seas of honor, at her sight; the host remains standing until oil the guests are sented.

M. S.—In the Episcopal marriage service the brists's father stands directly belief the brick during the service. When the chargemen asks, "Who giveth this woman to be married to this mon?" the father stops forward a pare or two, saying, "I do," (2) When two rings are used the bride pays for the groom's ting and the groom for the bride pays for the groom's the ring on the groom's finger at the allar. (3) The bride's family should pay all the expenses of the weeking.

LITTLE BOPESS—Any light refreshments, such as tea, coffee, cheecolate, lee cream, and cake may be served at an overlar party. For the gentheness it might be well to have a dish of sandwickes. These may be made of chicken, logging, or ham. Filed invitingly man it along this inversed with a presty doily, they make quite an oldston to the supper table. The thing that always seems most source at parties at or water; see to it, therefore, that there is a supply on band at yours.

Max vire—their schoold not go out driving, now to the theater, with men who do not visit at their homes. We must advice all our girl correspondents very strongly on this point. If a gentleman is introduced to you conpart yourself be such a dignified manner that he shall not yourself be such a dignified manner that he shall not you premise on to call approxyourself and your parents permission to make year of ammenter; and your parents permission to make year on the order of ammenter; and even then you should not go unless accompanied by a chaperone in the person of some married lady friend. (2) It is given properly for a gentleman to neste a lady to going down stairs, and there would be no improprisely in his offering her bis arm when they shall have reached the bottom.

Croroan.—Within white powers bride should regionly wear white shores and stockings. (2) A wedding gover should be made as plainly as possible, with high needs and long observer; of coaters, it may be cut away a finite at the threat. If the gover is to be of beavy finaternal, have the skirt mode with a coset tests and no drapery wherever; if of thin material, have as much drapery as possible, in order to have a light, there as much drapery as possible, in order to have a light, there is the first her head to be feet. The west about the long enough to cover the bride from her head to be feet. The bride should not marry a fan, she centally carries a brougest, and sometimes a prayer book. Obtain may or may not be wern according to the bride's own desire in the finiter. Table is a question that each bride may devide for hercelf.

desire in the finiter. Table is a question that each bride may devide for beveal?

Diana - We think your fields beer too young to wear the subor out with long treateers. Boys of the ray are mostly devesed with kill skirts buttoned on shirt water. Treateers are not geterally wrom until after the fifth your. It's he wood engaging the flee is engaged or cut into a prepared block of box wood, special hook being used. In also engaged the line is engaged into a sivel plate. For etchings, a sheet of copper is prepared with a very thin depted called the "ground." Through the arts thin depted to the "ground." Through the acts of the copper is a sufficient depth wherever it lines between the copier to a sufficient depth wherever it lines have been demiced. In printing seed engaged has and etchings, the paper is present into the fact, ink having first been introduced. In printing wrood-engageraving, the lines that the engages has small appear while it the proof, the chick line being produced by the suffices of the wood left untompled by the surfaces been. This surface it is that the remaining the proof of the manufaction. "Graphic Artis" enters in three and Rindred subjects no more helpful or religibility work over the war und Emillar with, cause propelly we resided aware your questions cause rings greatly we confidence in the contraction of the religibility work over the war und Emillar with, cause peoply we resided account your questions cause rings the prices of causing is the colours.

Premiums for Verses.

S many of the best verses used in the advertisements of Ivory Soap have been sent us by those who recognize its merits, we have concluded to offer twelve premiums for contributions from the many who have used the "Ivory" and know its value.

The premiums to be as follows:

First,	$300.00	Seventh,	$150,00
Second,	275.00	Eighth,	125.00
Third,	250.00	Ninth,	100.00
Fourth,	225.00	Tenth,	75.00
Fifth,	200.00	Eleventh,	50.00
Sixth,	175.00	Twelfth,	25.00

CONDITIONS:

The verses must not contain more than twenty-four lines nor less than twelve lines; the lines must not average more than eight words each.

Three competent persons will act as judges.

Write the verses on one sheet of paper and your FULL NAME and FULL ADDRESS upon another.

It is to be understood that we are to have the privilege of keeping any verses not quite good enough to entitle the writer to a premium upon payment of ten ($10.00) dollars. All verses to be received by us not later than July 1st, 1892. Payment of premiums will be made as promptly after that date as possible. Address,

> THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO. CINCINNATI.

PERSONAL LOVELINESS

is greatly enhanced by a fine set of teeth. On the other hand, nothing so detracts from the effect of pleasing features as yellow or decayed tenth. Don't lose sight of this fact, and remember to cleane your teeth every morning with that supremely delightful and effectual dentifrice

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

which imparts whiteness to them, without the least injury to the cannot. The pures are made healthy by its use, and that mostlying defect, a repulsive breath, is completely remedied Sozodont is in high favor with the fair sex, because it lends an added charm to their pretty mouths,

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

The Art of purifying Feathers for Redding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has seached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the courses of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyont, while retaining their Feathery FEATHER PULLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.

LADY WANTED!

MAKERS OF Faultiess Bedding.

in each locality to measure a Tolice Parlot at home for the SYLVAN TOILET PREPARATIONS. Entertaining paying and congenial employment the entire year. Also want Lady Agenta.

BALM of LILLES, a Magic liquid, includie Pace Provier. It is harmless. Charming in effect, but down it show. Removes Recolshes. By noth Scients. The Sylvan Forest Mayone Treatment for Withkles, with both, 81-5. Sath Skin Song, fragrant, pure, libeling, 25 cents. Benind Cream, 55 cents. Greathum Jelly, for ins, horses and chaps, in elegant tutes, 25 cents. Carlola, the hadies' favorite curious fluid, 35 cents. Perfumes, ep. Circulars describing our New Todet Art, New Plan and Liberal Offer, went-ree. Address Sylvan Todet Co., Port Horon, Mich.

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS

Allcock's Porous Plasters are the only reliable plasters ever produced. Fragrant, clean, inexpensive and never failing; they fully meet all the requirements of a household remedy, and should always be kept on hand.

> For the Relief and Cure of Weak Back, Weak Muscles, Lameness, Stiff or Enlarged Joints, Pains in the Chest, Small of the Back and around the Hips, Strains, Stitches, and all Local Pains, ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS are unequalled.

Beware of imitations, and do not be deceived by misrepresentation. Ask for Allcock's and let no solicitation or explanation induce you to accept a substitute.

1892, Book No. 2 NOW READY Offering . $3,000

In Prizes for Needlework.

For sale by small ware dealers, or sent by mail upon receipt of 30 cts. by

THE BARBOUR BROTHERS COMPANY

218 Church St., New York.
67 Lincoln St., Boston.
108 and 110 Franklin St., Chicago.
schington Ave., St. Louis.
517 and 519 Market St., San Francisco.

Three-cord 200 yard spools for Lace Making, Linen Ball Thread for Knitting and Crocheting, Linen Floss (all colors and sizes) for Embroidery.

ASK FOR BARBOUR'S

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

SUS STARPING CO., 404 P Street, KALAMANDO, MICH.

FREE.

Our large 24-page Catalogue, profuse-ly illustrated, Full of Information on the proper construc-tion of Pianos and Organs. Weshipon test trial, ask no cashinadvance, seli on instalments, and give greater value for the money than facturer in the world. Send for this book at once to

BEETHOVEN ORGAN CO., WASHINGTON, N. J.

MME. CELIA CONKLIN'S CURLING CREAM

The best proporation on the market for holding the Harrin Curl, Rarga and Friesce, absolutely harmless. It is an excellent tools for the hir, Oriented always used.

Price 50 cents.

Earlose Scent stamp for fine

Ation of the November of the N

SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE

P. DOWNS, PURLISHER, 243 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

ANOTHER CYCLE SHOW

the Jaburg Manufacturing Company's raiserours, 221, 221 and 125 North Eighth 81, Polladelphia. It includes the Sprinter Safety, a Diamond frame, long head, long wheel same, straight tubes throughous, etc. and the Ladder Sprinter, a handsome drop frame. The Traveler Sufeties are the best value ever offered, and range in price from $15 to $20; about two headerd different styles to select from. We also manufacture Children's tax-riages. Refrigerations, office bests, Rectinging and Invalid Holling Chairs. Natoe goods wanted and catalogue will be sent.

Libbertal Discounts to the Liberal Discounts to the

LANTI Dress Reform UNDERWEAR SPRING GOODS REDUCED IN PRICE.

Sanitary Balbriggan, Sanitary Liste Thread, Sanitary MERINO, SILK and Sanitary Balbriggan, Slik and Cosamere mixed For SPRING and The ONLY Sanitary Underwear, and SUMMER WEAR. Endorsed by the leading medical profession.

Send for new Catalogue, Samples, and revised Price List. If your dealer can-sot sopply them, they can be obtained of the manufacturers.

DON'T BE DECEIVED. See that each garment is stamped with our Trade Mark-

"Ypsilanti Health Underwear." HAY & TODD MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

Either with HOT WATER or STEAM as preferred.

If you are building a New Home, or want to make the old one Comfortable, it will pay you FURMAN BOILER 130 page Hawkeare of Heating to investigate Office FURMAN BOILER 130 page Hawkeare MANUAL on House Breating and Ventilation sent free. Address.

HERENDEEN MFG. CO., 10 CLARK STREET, GENEVA, N. Y.

An elegant dressing exquinitely perfumed, removes all purnies from the scalp, prevents haldness and gray hair, all causes the hair to grow Thick, Soft and Beautiful. In libbs for coping erupons, disease of the skin, glands and n one grain pure popula, suffici food. If it current he obtained s in stamps for sample package BEEMAN CHEMICAL CO., 28 Lake St., Cleveland, Q.

CELEBRATED FOR THEIR Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Sup Workmanship, and Great Durability. SOLD ON EAGY TERMS.

Old instruments taken in exchange. Write or catalogue and full information. 170 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

AGENTS WANTED $50 TO $150 WEEK working for would's consustant electric tight in the state of the cond's Pair. Most beautiful, interesting and popular blication issued. Sells at sight. Send lie in stamps of the cold pair. for full particulars and sample copy containing colores litheographic views of Exposition suitoings J. B. Campuell, Pres., 213 Laballe St., Chroago III.

State of the "OPERA" Plano with Prices & Terms of a Price of the Community of the Co Tipped.

Through. See Name "EVER READY" on Back of Each Stay. Gutta Percha on both sides of steel. Warranted watergroof. Heware of Imitations. Gutta Percha on both sides of steel. Warranted waterproof. Heware of Imitations.

Macrafactured by the YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFC. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

AS far ahead of all others as the Electric Light excels the candle. Seven Walls to preserve the Ice. Airtight Locks. Dry Cold Air. Hardwood An-tique finish. Elegant designs, Sideboards or China Closets in com-

Beyond question the most perfect Refrigerator made. Send for Catalogue. We pay freight where we have Northern Refrigerator Co.

HOME HOT AIR FURNACES

GUARANTEED FREE PROM GAS, SMOKE, OR DUST!

MADE ONLY BY

Wrought Iron Range Co. ST. LOUIS, MO. Established 1864.

HOME COMFORT STEEL RANGES.
Write for Cook Book—Mailed FREE.

LEAVES A DELICATE AND LASTING ODOR. An Ideal Complexion Soap

For sale by all Drug and Fancy Goods Beniers, or if unable to procure this Wonderful Scap send 25 cents in stamps and receive a cake by return mail.

JAS. S. KIRK & CO., Chicago SPECIAL—Shandon Bells Walts (the popular Society Walts) seed. FR RE to asymme sending to three wrappers of Shandon their Scope.

BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Will Not

Cut

SWEET TONED. SOLD ON

TERMS REASONABLE. Every Instru-ment Fully Warranted. Catalogues Pres.

MERIT. EMERSON PIANO CO. 92 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK. 174 TREMONT STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

Millions use Pearline! FOR House Cleaning & Washing Clothes Dishes Glass ware Silver. SAVES Time Patience Money Health Wear and Tear: MITATIONS MY BUSY DAY.

As Proof that you will try Pearline for some of the above purposes, send us one trade mark cut from the front of a package Pearline and one uncancelled 2 ct. postage stamp, and we will send ou a copy of the above picture, "My Busy Day," printed in 14 colors; size, 4 x 10½ inches, which is slightly larger than above; with no advertising on the ont of same. The picture is an exact reproduction of an oil painting and is fit to ame and hang in any home. Send your name and address plainly written James Pyle, 436 Greenwich Street, New York City.

(4) (20) /

This is a fac-aimile (reduced in size) of the trade-mark; which you are to send with 2 ct, postage stamp.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

PHILADELPHIA, JUNE, 1892

TEN CENTS A COPY

幾 Contents 幾

(47%,0°6.65)	MILE
	over
Mr. Beecher as I Knew Him-VIII . Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher
Illustrated from Photograph	. 1
Flowers at June Weddings H. H. Battles	2
The First Year of Married Life Christine Terhune Herrick	2
Life's Lesson-Poem Grace Pearl Macomber .	3
Unknown Wives of Well-known Men-
XVIII-MADAME VICTORIEN SARDOU Lucy Hamilton Hooper .	3
The Music of Silence-Poem Harry Romaine	3
Literary Women in Their Homes—  1-MRS. AUGUSTA EVANS WILSON	3
Compensation—Poem Abram S. Isaacs	4
The Wife of Your Minister A. J. Parry	4
Womanhood-Poem	4
Why Our Women Fade Felicia Holt	4
An Every-day Girl-Part 1	5
The Art of Finding Fault Lilian Freeman Clarke .	6
The Woman Who Is Nervous Kate Upson Clark	6
A Privileged Person—Conclusion Caroline Atwater Mason .	7
Pot-pourri of Roses Laura Whitten	8
As It Ia Told in Our Faces Gerald S. Lee	8
The Queens of Westminster Abbey . Miss E. T. Bradley	9
A True Idea of Reverence Cora Linn Daniels	10
Hints from a Mother's Life-III Mrs. William E. Gladstone	10
The Brownies Through the Year-IX . Palmer Cox	11
TOEPARTMENTS

DEPARTMENTS
At Home with the Editor	13
The King's Daughters	14
Under My Study Lamp T. De Witt Talmage	15
Side Talks with Girls Ruth Ashmore	10
Side Talks with Boys Foster Coates	17
In Literary Circles	18
WOMEN AS ADVERTISEMENT WRITERS . Virginia Frazee	18
A MODEL MANUSCRIPT HOLDER	18
LITERARY QUERIES	18
Art for Art Workers	19
Mothers' Corner Elisabeth Robinson Scovil	20
Knitting and Crocheting Mary F. Knapp	21
	22
Going-away Gowns for June Brides Small Belongings of Dress	23
Small Belongings of Dress	24
Summer Dresses for Small People (	25
Just Among Ourselves
Everything About the House	27
All About Flowers	28
Floral Helps and Hints	29
Useful Things Worth Knowing	30
For Handy Ones to Make	31
Questions and Answers	32

ROSES OF JUNE

CLINTON SCOLLARD

TWINE not for me those crimson queens of bloom That make Damascus gardens a delight; Wreathe not the royal blossoms that perfume The star-bright spaces of Egyptian night,

Nor yet the Italian rose that garlanded

The brow of Petrarch's Laura, nor the flowers

That warred in merry England—white and red—

Till Joy's head drooped and Sorrow knelled the hours.

But plack from yonder hedge-row in the field— As pure as sweet, as delicate as fair— The dearest boon these days of Junetime yield, The pale wild-rose that Sylvia loves to wear.

(VRTIS . PUBLISHING . (OMPANY . PHILADELPHIA

THE MARVEL TO-DAY 5 5.00 PER MONTHS 50 RNISH'S WORLD'S FAIR

The Columbian No. 19000

that the above terms aport to the public. Bear in mind that the above terms aport to the FIRST PIVE THOUSAND COLLY.

DOU'T pay an Agent or Bealer $100 or $300. MANUFACTURED IN THE WORLD, FROM $175

Put it in your pocket. If you will write for our catalogue, we can prove our statements and give you facts that will astonish you. Visit our immense factories and make your own selection. All purchaser's expensee paid Note what you have to do and DO AT ONCE. Delays are dangerous.

Send for our Catalogues "payton this" You get them free. Reference, First National Bank this City. Address the Manufacturers at once. Time is short. The rush is great.

CORNISH & CO. Washington, New Jersey.

Established 25 years.

FOR THE SKIN, SCALP, DODBURY'S FACIAL SOAP and COMPLEXION

FACTS, NOT FICTION, CONVINCE

It is unexcelled as a toilet soap for all hathing purposes, it in its action as a cleaner and beautifier of the skin, curing ples, eruptions and offiness.

2d. Facial Scop replaces cosmetics, powders and lotions, and counteracts their injurious effects. Money and skin saved.
2d. It contains a destrictant, and is of excellent use in hospital words, and for the cure of contagious cruptions.

It is especially recommended for physicians' use, and when ed will prove its claims.

5th, It is invaluable for shaving preventing disease alloying irri-ion, cleanning and healing in its nature. A sweet, pure, and clean in gizarnited after its use.

6th. It is used for washing the Hair and Scalp, and acts like a tonic, eventing dandruff, tetter and eccema; gives to the lair a fresh, sey appearance, prevents its failing, removes excessive oil, and also the hair soft, light, and pitable.

7th. Blackbeards do not linger after their first introduction to this, their enemy. All old discolored secretions depart, the skin presents a fine, smooth, glowing appearance, that is soon apparent; beauty and bealth of tissue is the result.

8th. Where soft coal is burned it is the only soap that will suc-sfully combat the dirt-inden air and keep your beauty and complex-

9th. It reduces undue reduces of the nose when not of long stand-ing, thus preventing one from becoming unsightly and a target.

18th. For removing the make-up of actresses it is excellent. It dissolves quickly and thoroughly all paints, iders, and lotions of all kinds. Hith. For excessive perspiration of any part of the body this soap accomplishes wooders, removing all odors.
12th. Prepared by a dermatologist of twenty years' practice in treating skin and scalp diseases.

For sale by all Druggists, or sent by Mail, 50 cents.

A sample cake of soop and 145 page Book on Dermatology and Beauty, Illustrated, on Shin, dp. Nerrons and Blood Diseases, also Disfigurements like Birth Marks, Moles, Warts, India Ink Powder Marks, Scars, Pittings, Red Nose, Cancer, Superfluous Hair, Acre and all Skin and alp imperfections and their treatment, sent scaled for 10 cents; also article on facial development.

JOHN H. WOODBURY, Dermatologist

nsultation Free at Office or by Letter

125 West 42d Street, New York City

GENTS (silver) pays for your address in the Thousands of ferms wan indirense of persons to whom they can mail papers, magazines, pottures, eards, &c., Filet as samples, and our patrons receive bashels of mail. Try its you will be will a Plaistle with the small investment. Address T. B. CARPENIA, D. 621, Reviseles, Indian.

YOUR NAME OR SHOT OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY

OO SCRAP FREE

ARDS

WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$12 Buys a $65,00 Improved Oxford Singer Said States and Relations, adapted to High Said heavy week, with a sample soin of the base beginned a facility based on the Said States and specific said based on the Said States and specific said for PREE Carladoute. Member passed to XXVOED MFU. CO., Bept. 30, CHICADO, T.L.

o Send Of Wall Paper. Write for samples Gill.
Paper, 6 to loc. Embossed, 125; to 15c.
arge WATKINS BROS. amples South Manchester, Coun.

TWO CENT STAMPS sent to Publisher, Box1821, New York will get the latest prize puzzle game, "BLIND LUCK," by the author of the famous "14-15 Puzzle," "Pigain Glover," "Parchisi," etc. A fascinating, instructive game, backed by a nine old boy, who defles the mathematician d scientists. A NEW HOME SEWING ACHINE, now the leading machine of the orld, given to solvers, "Mailim this paper.

Allcock's Corn and and busions ever and cheapest produced, Easily applied—give im-mediate relief— a flord absolute comfort. A package of the Coan Shields or a sample of the BUNION

The best.

surest, cleanest

SHIRLDS sent, prepaid, on receipt of 10 cents. The Corn Shields are made large and small. In rdering, state size wanted. POROUS PLASTER CO., 274 Canal Street, New York.

DUU Cornet Waist. Send 2c stamp for terms.

Send for 12k-page illustrated calalogue (fired) of Rodfing, Rodfining as of Carry in a Chairs, Invalids' Comforts, etc., address flargent Mig. Co. 814 Broadway, New York or Musicaput, Mich. Restion Tax Lacor Huse Jock's

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE

The Family Wash Bios, always giving satisfaction, For sale by Grocers. Ask for H. D. S. WILTERS URB Proprietor, 23 North Second Street, Philadelphia, Ph.,

TEA CLUB ORDERS, The greatest induces.

An entirely new departure, and one that will belp the person getting up the Chib to secure orders. Full particulars furnished upon application to 68238 USBO TEA CO., 72 and 79 Front St., New York

BANDY LEGS PREVENTED.

Send for Catalogue of PATENT CORSET SHOES, reconstanted by Paperties and Aurgous for Children learning to walk, and those treatment with section or pyruined unbies. B. NATHAN, 221 6th Arto., New York.

REGISTERED SHETLAND PONIES
LARGEST HERD ON EASTM.
Fall line Part Telkilon, Blavers, Saddles, Blackets, etc.
Excluse causes for Descriptive Princ List.
J. MURRAY HOAG, Maquoketa, Iowa.

How to Make a Fortune

WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make twenty-five to seventy-five dollars per week, selling the Celebrated "Pinless Clothes Line," or the Famous "Macomber Fountain lak Enser"—Patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Macomber Fountain lak Enser is entirely new; will erase lak instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c, will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. Address THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 120 Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.

ORNAMENTAL HARDWOOD FLOORS

WALLS, BORDERS, WAINSCOTT NOS, CEILLINGS, of floss grades. Foreign and domestic hardwoods.
The interior Hardwood Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

The Latest Style, only $4 Each A 14k Gold Necklary and Pendant, strictly guaranteed, sent to any address C. O. D., privilege of examination, or cash, with money refunded, if not as represented. Bon't let this chance slip by. Ask foreur catalogue of new styles in necklares.

GEO. E. MARSHALL,

Wabash and Adams St., Chicago.

We take pleasure in announcing that our line is now open for travel West

Via OMAHA and LINCOLN

and our Through Vestibuled Train is called

"THE BIG 5 LIMITED."

It leaves CHICAGO daily at 10.00 p. m.; arriving at DENVER 7.40 a. m., COLO-RADO SPRINGS 7.30 a.m. and PUEBLO 9.15.

Returning, this fast train is called "The World's Fair Special," And leaves DENVER daily at 8.10 p. m.; arriving at CHICAGO at 7.45 a. m.

The New Route shortens our mileage to Denver very materially and the new trains are models for beauty and convenience, and leave and arrive at these great clines at hours practical for the tourist, and the right hour for the business man.

Sold Vestibuled Trains are still run over our firmer lines via Kansas City and St. Joseph, and the elegant service hereinfore given on these routes by "The Great Rock Island" will continue.

E. ST. JOHN, JNO. SEBASTIAN, General-Manager, Gen'l Ticket and Paus'r Agt

THE ** GEM ** SELF STAMP 25:

Belowd Over 10 seeks. Seat porquist.

In full micked-plane, with your manns to knowlesses relater type seed a vital of say outer lank. Seatlene as Eagle Stamp Works, New Haven, Conn.

Latest Styles at Factory Prices. Good paper, 14c per roll. Gold paper, to per roll. Gand 9 inch borden, to per yard. Prices quality and assortment onequalied. 128 samples and guide

FREE Catalogue of ORCANS, prices EIS and upwards. PIANOS troe 6129 up. Write test Plano and Organ Co., Washington, N. J.

PLAYS Dialogues, Speakers, for School, Cique and Parice, Chialogue from T. S. DINISON, Publisher, Chicago.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Vol. IX, No. 7

PHILADELPHIA, JUNE, 1892

discomfort.

A BUCOLIC WEDDING FEE

Yearly Subscription, One Dollar Single Copies, Ten Cents

Mr. Beecher As 1 Knew Him

By Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher

EIGHTH PAPER

(All rights protected and reserved)

Y stories were printed during Mr. Beecher's lifetime regarding his original intention, in boy-hood, to become a sailor and spend his life on the sea, and perhaps I can do no better than to open this instalment with the correct version of that early tendency on Mr. Beecher's part,

HIS DREAM OF A SAILOR'S LIFE

Without the slightest, hore that his

Without the slightest hope that his father would sanction his entering on such a life, and his desire for it becoming more and more intense, he began to make plans to run away, and go to sea at all hazard.

This coming to his father has nake plans to run away, and go to sea st all bazard.

This, coming to his father's knowledge, he was too wise to oppose him. By kindness he gained his son's entire conlidence, and inquired:

"But, my son, instead of going to sea at once, as a common sailor, would you not choose to prepare yourself for something better and higher?

"Oh, yes, sir! If I could, I would like to work my way up to be a midshipman—and sometime become a commodore."

"To do that, Henry, you will be obliged to study hard for some years. A thorough knowledge of mathematics and navigation, and of all connected with such studies, will be absolutely necessary. Now, if you are really in earnest, and willing to devote some years to hard study in preparing for this work. I will send you to Mount Pleasant, in Amherst, Massachusetts, But remember, Henry, if you wish to stand high in this profession, there can be no idling; you will be obliged to work hard in the lines the teachers prescribe; and then, when you have acquired the needed education, if you still prefer that life to any other, I think I can secure you a position from which you can rise to the highest rank."

Never was a boy more overjoyed, or more grateful to his father, for so readily which you can rise to the highest rank."

Never was a boy more overjoyed, or more grateful to his father, for so readily acceding to his wishes; and he was so much in earnest that he looked forward to study willingly.

This was just what his father desired; something that Henry would be so eager to secure that he would be ready to give attention to his studies more earnestly than he had ever done before. But the good father had no fear that his son would become a semman. So, when he sent the "young come a seaman. So, when he sent the "young commodore" to Mount Pleasant, he said in his heart: "I shall see that boy in the ministry

TURNING FROM THE SEA TO THE PULPIT

HOW long after going to Mount Pleasant Mr. Beecher continued to look forward to the life of a sailor, I do not remember; but I think that during a senson of deep religious interest in the seminary the first year he was there, that idea was forever banished.

This sesson of excitement produced what he called "mushroom hopes," which departed whenever he alluded to it. He said: "It was to me a sort of day-dream in which I hoped I had given myself to Christ,"

As another has said: "His religious experience at that time was, in many respects, unsatisfactory, yet powerful enough to change his whole 'ideal of life'"

Nothing more was said of being a sailor; and from that time he studied with the ministry in view.

If his early religious experiencer were, in a measure, unsatisfactory, he was steadfast in his determination to press forward—to scarch for clearer light and more perfect faith. But all that relates to this part of his experiences his hours of doubt and fear which came over him all through his life at Mount Pleasant, at Amberst, at Lone Seminary, and at in-tervals during his Western postorates, have been often discussed, and largely quoted. No repetition is therefore necessary here. I may only say, when he referred to such fears and doubts, it invariably filled me with surprise, not nomived with sains, to think that one not namixed with pain; to think that one who, in his most sacred home and private life seemed to me to walk so close to his Master, could have such fears, was what I could not understand.

HE VISITS HIS NAMESAKE No man ever loved his children more de-No man ever loved his children more devotedly than did Mr. Beecher, and grandchildren soon became loving rivals of their parents, and both were the joy of his heart. His pride in them, his delight in their every undertaking and his desire for their happiness were very strong. This was evinced in his letters and in innumerable ways; sometimes quietly expressed, at others in a very anusing manner, or in an openly acknowledged gratification. The following may convey a slight idea of these moods:

In 1883, Mr. Beecher engaged to lecture during his vacation through all the northwest, through Winnipeg, or Manitoha, out to Puget Sound, Oregon, California, Texas, the Southern States and home. I was to go with him, But the one great joy in this delightful journey was to see our youngest discomfort.

The log-house was packed with the guests, and after the ceremony Mr. Beecher was arged to remain and partake with them of the remarkably inviting supper. But it was growing darker and raining very hard, and with the long ride before him he was obliged to decline. When his horse was brought the groom followed to the door, saying, "Wall, purson, what's the damage?"

"I trust, none," said Mr. Beecher, smiling. "Wall, but what do you ax?" "Wall, but what do you ax?"
"Oh, whatever you please."
The man took a roll of bills from his pocket and began looking them over, muttering to himself as he took up each bill: "One dollar;

country. It was a very stormy day, with no promise of any change at night. As the ride to the place would be by daylight, Mr. Beecher could reach the house without any very great

MRS. BEECHER IN HER STUDY AND SITTING BOOM

[Taken two months ago while engaged in writing this series of papers] son, Herbert, and his family. His wife we had never seen, nor the little one, Henry Ward Beecher of "'Cific Coast" as he would always call himself. He was Mr. Beecher's namesake.

A friend had written pretending to ridicule ome of Mr. Beecher's expressions of admiration for the country w and comparing it to California. I copy a part of his reply:

"In taking this trip, Paget Sound was, of course, the very aim and center of our journer, for there our youngest son and his family were located. All our expectations and more were realized. His wife, his boy, and Herbert, himself, fully equaled our best hopes. bert, himself, fully equaled our best hopes. He has carned a solid reputation for energetic enterprise, for integrity, and good social qualities. His wife is an artist, and no mistake. I know of no castern woman who I think could equal her had she devoted her life to it. I told her she ought not to have married, but since she would do it I was thankful she had taken my son for her husband. She ought storaged to my wife, wife band. She quietly stepped to my wife's side, who was holding the little boy, and said as she laid her hand on his head, 'Is not this better than painting?' Good! The boy is a noble little fellow. He bears my name, and I um content to let it go down with him for the

In a letter written home at the same time, after speaking with great tenderness and satis-faction of our son and his wife, he adds; "But oh! The hoy! Only eight months old, and walking by chairs; with an eye that searches into everything, an ear that loves searches into everything, an ear that lores music and bears every sound, a countenance that changes every moment, full of smiles, love, fun, or sobriety, a noble body, and as good a specimen of cramps and crying—when he has to—as I ever heard. So get out of the way for Henry Ward Beecher of the Pacific count and these closers for his expeditables." coast, and three cheers for his grandfather, three dollars; five dollars; no-but two dol-lars." Over this latter amount he paused a moment, then turning the bills back repeated the same, in a dreamy sort of a way, as if un-certain what he ought to do, but at last, leav-ing one dollar in his hand, he rolled up the others, and putting them in his pocket, handed Mr. Beecher one dollar, saying, "Will that du, Mr. Beecher one dollar, saying, parson?"

"Oh, yes. Good night," said Mr. Beecher, and mounting his horse rode away.

After a miserable ride of over four hours, too dark to see his way, and obliged to depend on his horse for guidance, he renched home drenched through, paid the dollar for the use of the horse, and said merrily to me, "Well, I had the fun and a good wetting free."

A MAN OF MANY WIVES

M.R. BEECHER was once called quite a M distance from town to attend the func-ral of a furner's eighth wife! Why this man should have been so unfortunate in losing his wives, and so fortunate in easily filling the place of the departed, was a riddle none could sorre,

His two or three first wives left him with large families. He could not, certainly, have had himself sufficient attractions for one to renture to take the care of such an household nuless his offer was made to those who, through great lack of personal charms, or advanced age, knew their chances of securing a home through marriage were small. The man had a good farm, was a good provider, and known to be kind to his family, and therefore, perhaps, found little difficulty after each loss securing another wife from among those not likely to be offered a more desirable home.

About two months after Mr. Boecher officiant at the funeral of this eighth wife the funer came to our home, took a seat in the portor, and resting his arms on his knees, stooped forward, clasped his hands together, MOST clergymen can doubtless recall many M OST clergymen can doubtless recall many amusing incidents connected with marriages they have been called upon to perform. While at the west Mr. Beecher was often sent for to marry persons living at a distance from the city, in the half-settled country, sometimes eight or ten miles distant. Among the farmers such weddings were usually in the evening, when the neighbors in all directions were invited to be present and partake of a most generous and elaborate supper, always expected after the ceremony.

On one occasion the wedding was to take place at an unusually long distance in the country. It was a very stormy day, with no stooped forward, clasped his hands together, and twirling one thumb over the other rapidly, as if greatly embarrassed, said, hesitating between each word as he spoke:

"Parson, I thought—I thought—I'd come—come—and try—and see if I could—get you to ride out to 8 ——this afternoon?"

"Why? Is there to be a meeting there?" asked Mr. Beecher.

"No, but (still stooping forward, with arms on his knees, and twirling his thumbs) I thought I'd come—and try—try and see—see—if you'd come to my house?"

"For what? Any of your family sick?"

"No (still in the same position, but I thought I'd try—and see—if—if—if you'd come and marry me."

come and marry use."
"Why, man," Mr. Beecher said, springing to his feet, "I buried your last wife only eight

"Wall, I know-but, purson. I have a large family-and-I must have some one to take care of them."

And Mr. Beecher went with him and mar-ried him to his ninth wife. Some years after leaving the west we saw in a western paper the marriage of this same man to his tenth wife, and not many years later the husband also died.

WHEN ON THE ROAD

WHEN ON THE ROAD

POR several years after Mr. Beecher began to lecture, I kept the memorandum of his engagements, but during the last thirteen years of his life Major James B. Pond had the entire control of making all engagements, traveling with him, and taking all thought or care for the morrow off his mind. But for such faithful supervision Mr. Beecher could not have accomplished half that he did in that line. From the hour he left for a lecture trip until his return he was as free from thought or anxiety about his work as a child. It is customary to consider a woman an incumbrance when traveling, especially on business, but even when I accompanied him, Major Pond relieved my husband from anxiety for my welfare if there was ever any occasion for it.

As in all lecture tours, there was little time for sight-seeing, or pleasant excursions—often forced marches to reach the next appointment being more in order—but Mr. Beecher was always observant of everything of interest while on the road.

He was not absent minded while travel-everything of interest while on the road. He was not absent-minded while travel-everything of interest while on the road.

He was not absent-minded while traveling, as he often was at home when thinking about his work there, so there was no need to fear interrupting him. If he preferred not to talk, we could talk enough to counterhalance his taciturnity.

For years Mr. Beecher used no notes for his lectures, for the subjects were clearly fixed in his mind. He had certain titles to each lecture, and the subject which came under that title was carefully developed. But his lack of verbal memory served him well in these lectures, for although giving the subject promised, those who heard it one evening could, the next time that lecture was given, find scarcely a similar sentence or illustration. Each fecture was like separate divisions of the same subject. Without a scrap of paper to prompt him, he always perservered to the end without let or hindrance. It was because each lecture seemed so different from the one has given under that one title, that I wanted a separate name given to each division, this being due to pride on my part, doubtless, as I disliked people to think they were to hear "The Reign of the Common People," or any other lecture was in any sense a repetition of one they had ever heard.

HOW HIS VOICE WAS TRAINED

FROM his infancy, Mr. Beecher's enlarged tousils produced a thickness of speech, and this had been a source of anxiety to his father, fearing if it could not be remedied that he would never be able to preach. But no better place could have been selected to overcome that treeble and to worke him faithful in his that trouble, and to make him faithful in his studies, than Mount Pleasant. His tencher that troube, see studies, than Mount Pleasant. His tencher compelled perfection in all his recitations.

Through the effects of another tencher the thickness of speech was overcome. He would the compensation of the compensatio drill the boy a whole hour on one word, make bim take a position on a line in the middle of the floor, and tone, pronunciation, emphasis and gesture were rigorously practiced. Every inflection of the voice, gesture and articula-tion, were repeated day after day, with such variations as his progress made necessary, until the pupil had himself, his voice and gestures trained and subdued to the right expression.

It will havely appear credible to those who knew Mr. Beecher only after he became a public speaker, that such drilling could ever have been necessary. Surely, his father must have been almost inspired to have selected such a school for one with Mr. Bescher's culiar characteristics. The place itself, culiar characteristics. The place itself, the surroundings, his teachers and associates were wonderfully fitted to build him up for the work that came to him in more mature life.

Entron's Nore.—As Mrs. Beecher has preferred that her special article in answer to many questions shall precise the choing article of the series, that unper will be printed in the July Journal. the closing article in the August Journal.

FLOWERS AT JUNE WEDDINGS

By H. H. Battles

ONCE heard a man about to be married cornestly ask the advice of a friend as to the most suitable necktic for the bridgroom. The friend laughingly reptied: "My dear fellow, that is not of the slightest importance. You need give yourself no uneasiness.

Nobody will look at you. Of course, it is necessary for you to be there, but I assure you that the interest of the occasion centers in and around the bride." The truth of this cannot around the bride." The truth of this cannot be questioned, and the little belongings necessary to a bride are, therefore, of importance,

FLOWERS FOR THE BRIDE'S BOUQUET

THE bride's bouquet should always be made of white flowers. In Engiand, excharis, gardenia, orange blossoms and stephanotis are frequently used; with us, very seldom. The most fashionable bouquet in America consists of white orchids, lity of the valley, or of white roses, following in the order named. Lily of the valley is frequently mixed with either orchids or roses, but orchids used to see any seldom used in the same bounder. They are rival queens that are happiest apart.
A pretty idea to arrange the bride's bouquet is to have it composed of several sections, that, to have it composed of several sections, that, after the bride leaves the house the maid of honor may distribute to those friends whom the bride may wish to honor. The ribbon can remain on the section intended for the bride's mother. At times the bride has a favorite flower, or there is a bit of romance or sentiment attached to some colored flower, such as a violet, or a Jacqueminot rose, and she wishes this included in her bouquet. When they are used let it be a small bunch, partly concealed. After the reception, it may be taken from the bouquet and worn on the traveling dress. The ribbon for the bouquet should be either three yards of three-inch ribbon to match the gown in tone and texture, or twenty or thirty yards tone and texture, or twenty or thirty yards of very narrow ribbon, with long bows, the ends extending down at different lengths, with delicate flowers attached to a number of these ends. Sometimes a large bow of ribbon is tied and arranged as though it were coming from the center of the bouquet. The ribbon thus used has no meaning, and is very apt to become soiled by the moisture on the flowers.

THE BRIDAL PRAYER-BOOK

SOME brides desire to carry a prayer-book in order to have a lasting souvenir. That there may be some personal association with flowers on that day, a few can be held in the prayer-book, and to prevent the stems and foliage from soiling the book the stems can be protected by silver foil or waxed paper,

THE MAID OF HONOR'S BOUQUET

THE bouquet carried by the maid of honor The bouquet carried by the maid of honor depends entirely on the complexion. If she is a decided brimette, there is nothing better than a big bunch of Jacqueminot, or Urich Brunner roses. If a blonde, let it be the delicate pink Catherine Mermets, or Mrs. John Laing roses. The arrangement of her bouquet should in some way differ from those carried by the bridesmaids.

FLOWERS FOR THE BRIDESMAIDS

THERE are a number of pretty and effec-tive ways that flowers can be arranged 1. Tive ways that howers can be arranged for bridesmaids. The conventional way is to make a round bouquet, arranged carelessly, using the foliage of the flowers of which the bouquet is composed. As the bride's bouquet is always white, those carried by the bridesmaids should, as a contrast, have some color. If the bride is observed because here If the bride, in choosing her attendants, has been fortunate in securing decided blondes and brunettes, strong and beautiful color contrasts can be obtained in both gowns and flowers. The flat cluster, or "rustic bunch," is often used. In arranging such a cluster it is wise to have it arranged carelessly, or rather not to interfere too much with nature. The effect should be as if the hand that carried the flowers was the hand that gathered them, with no thought of arrangement. The flowers should have long stems, and be allowed to fall as they will.

Baskets of various shapes filled with flowers are often used. Leghorn bats, drawn together in the shape of a basket, are among the pretriest arrangements. Draw the ribbon around the center, and tie a loop and bow on top. This can be carried either with the arm through the loop, or as a basket in front. The flowers in this case should be arranged very loosely, not only giving the impression that the hat is full, but flowers tumbling out.

The most picturesque arrangement for bridesunids to carry is the "Directoire stick." These sticks are about five feet long, made of wood, either polished or covered with silk or celluloid, with a knob on top and a large bunch of flowers fastened with a bow of on about a foot from the knob. A moon westling in the country is the most appropriate at which to use these. Old-fashioned and picturesque gowns and Leghorn hats add very much to the effect.

PAGES AND THEIR DUTIES

NO fashionable bridal party is complete without little children acting as pages.

Many little duttes can be assigned to them.

If ribbon is used across the aisles, they can be stationed there to lift it as the cabers pass.

One of the pages can build the bride's bouquet.

while the ceremony is being performed, another can carry a plush case for the prayer-book, if the bride wishes to use one, and, finally, they can gather up the ribbon, if it has been drawn the whole length of the aisle. As to the flowers these little folks should year, much describe mean the size and conwear, much depends upon the size and cos-tumes. If very little fellows dressed in white, get as large a rose as possible, a Bafoness Bathschild, or an Ulrich Brunner. Let the stems be fully eighteen inches long, and pinned diagonally on the breast with all of its beautiful foliage. If hads of between twelve and fifteen, bet them wear large buttonhole bouquets of some strikingly contrasting color to their custome. If little girls are to do the honor as pages, or maids of honor, let them carry very large or very small buskets; the carry very large or very small baskets; the smaller the child the larger the basket.

THE GROOM, BEST MAN AND USHERS

THE groom should wear a bittorhole.

The bouquet, not very large, made of the same kind of flowers as the bride's bouquet—possibly one rose and two or three sprays of lily of the valley. One white orchid, if this he very small, and several sprays of lily of the valley are very effective. Gardenias are much sought after, and have been the favorite flower in London for wedding boutonnieres for a number of years. Six surays of lily of the valley ber of years. Six sprays of lily of the valley also make a very pretty bouquet.

The best man should wear a larger bouquet than that worn by the groom, made of the same kind of flowers as the maid of honor carries. The ushers should wear very large, white bouquets—four carnations is more too large, often as many as six are used. Either twelve sprays of lily of the valley, or six sprays of Roman hyacinth, arranged compactly, make pretty bonquet. The mother of the bride can either wear or The mother of the bride can either wear or carry a cluster of flowers that will harmonize with the gown that she wears. If it be a formal wedding, to carry the cluster is preferable; it should be a little smaller than the bouquets carried by the bridesmaids. If the bride has sisters, and should they not be of the bridal party, let their bouquets be decidedly different from those carried by the bridal party. The father of the bride should wear a boutonniere bouquet much similar to that worn by the bouquet much similar to that worn by the

DECORATIONS AT THE RECEPTION

SEVERAL tall paints placed at the entrance These, with their graceful foliage, are combined so as to form an arch eight or ten feet high. It is then necessary to decide what is the most conspicuous point in the hall which the eye rests upon; make some effective grouping of palms here, mussive if the space permits. The newel post is a feature which should be carenewer post is a feature which should be care-fully considered, and made as effective as possible. Never put greens on the banister rail, as they interfere with its use in going up and down stairs. Unless the stairway is very wide, the outside is the most effective place. A line of laurel wreathing under the rail, with festoons of smilax caught up with several car-nations, is very pretty. If you use wire in fastening the greens, see that no ends stick out that may endanger the gowns of the guests. All the mirrors and chandeliers should have All the narrors and chandelers should have attention. Pretty effects can be had with fes-toons over doors and arches. A few of the very choice flowers on the dressing case in the ladies' room is in good taste. In the reception room is where the most beautiful effects should be studied. The end of the room in which the be studied. The end of the room in which the bridal party receive should be literally made a bower of flowers. A large canopy of white flowers is generally arranged over the place where the bride and groom receive. This can be made a work of art in the handling of delicate flowers. On either side of this, and extending from the ceiling to the floor, should be large curtains of asparagus or smilax, caught back with a bond of flowers. The mirror over the mantel can be framed with nax, caught ouck with a onno of nowers. The nairror over the mantel can be framed with flowers. Two heautiful vases on the mantel can be filled, one with exquisite orchids, the other with long-stemmed hybrid roses. The floral decorations in the room where the re-freshments are served depends entirely upon the size of the apartment. Often in country homes the porch is enclosed with canvas or bounds; these are covered on the inside with everyreen trees, laurel branches, or what large and effective greens can be had. The most valuable and inexpensive green called wild smilax has recently made its appearance from Vitta it you can which would be impossible to obtain with any other greens that are now on the market. It comes in long, beautiful sprays; all that is necessary for you to do is to hang it up; nature has arranged it for you. The porch thus en-closed and decorated, small tables placed there in addition to those in the dining-room, a few flowers, possibly wild ones, arranged in dainty receptacles on each table are touches that are always appreciated. In city houses, where the dining-room only is used, the table is simply used for refreshments. On this table some high arrangement of flowers should be placed. It is not practicable for anybody to it at it, consequently the escorts and waiters reg the ladies in different parts of the house very schoolie fashion at formal noon wed dings is to have a separate room where the briefal party may breakfast. In addition to the bridal party, if there be distinguished guests, from a great distance, they can be in cluded in this party. Nothing but green and white should be used in this room. The table decorations should be most delicate and dainty. Low effects only should be used, as there should be nothing to obstruct the view at the table as the bridal party are sented.

CHURCH ORNAMENTATIONS

THE interiors of churches differ so much 1 that it is difficult to by down rules that will apply to all. If the interior of the church is constructed of natural wood, and the churcel is constructed of natural wood, and the chartes decorated with dark colors, laured wreathing is best, and the broad-lenved latania berbonics is the most suitable palm. If the interior is more delicate in form and color, the finer and more graceful palms, such as areens latescens and occos weddellians are desirable, while for garlands smilax or cultivated asparagus plumosus are the most appropriate. In placing the plants the idea to have a background for the lighter colored costumes should be borne in mind. Care should be taken not to borne in mind. Care should be taken not to obstruct the view, and an unobstructed passage from the vestry-room must of course be left.
The font should be filled with large, white flowers; a few palms can be used with good effect on both sides of the aisles. Tall ones are placed so that they may form an arch, and they do not obstruct the view of the guests too much. A pretty way to designate the front seals, reserved for the families of the contractine tearties and enests of homer, is to tie tracting parties and guests of honor, is to tie large clusters of flowers on the ends of the pews thus reserved. Another and more com-mon way is to have broad ribbon, with balls inon way is to have broad ribbon, with balls or baskets of flowers on each end; this is drawn across the aisle with the ends thrown over the pews. Another pretty and useful way to use ribbon is, after the guests have been seated, to have the usbers or little pages draw the ribbon the whole length of the aisle, resting on the top of each pew. This serves as a gentle reminder, as well, that it is the wish of the bride that the guests remain seated until the bridal party murch out.

If you live at a distance from the city, and do not want to see to the expense of employ-

If you live at a distance from the city, and do not want to go to the expense of employing a florist to do the work, you can give some of your friends the pleasure of helping to decorate; often you can get the advice of a practical florist, which will be more valuable if he can see the house and know the material you have at hand. Many benutiful things can be found in the woods, and with time and willing hands the church and home can be decorated nicely. If there is a chancel milling two strips of wood about seven feet long, placing them perpendicular at each side of the entrance to the chancel. At the bottom fasten them to the rail, and on top fasten a heavy piece of wire or a barrel hoop, thus forming an arch; cover all with greens, including the rail, and you have a very pretty effect. If wild flowers can be had, use them effect. If wild flowers can be had, use them in large clusters tied here and there with white ribbons. If there is no chancel rail one can be made, with an arch in the center, at a very little cost. If it is practicable, get a lew palms; place them in the foreground, after making a background of evergreen trees. At an evening wedding, where lamps are used for illumination, you will add much to the effect by substituting many candles for a few lamps. Candelabra around the chancel are most ef-

THE FIRST YEAR OF MARRIED LIFE

BY CHRISTINE TERRUNE HERRICK

of the false ideas with which some we does drive by we'll-meaning story writers; hence, when the first novelty of the new relation has worn off, and the whilom bride and groom settle down into the routine of every-day life, there is almost always some little feeling of disappoint of the control pointment, lamlly even self-acknowledged, that creeps into the heart of one or both.

that creeps into the heart of one or both.

Of the two, the wife is more likely to feel the slight shadow, or chill. Her life has usually been so much less practical and bustling than her husband's that it has allowed her space for day-dreams, and she has an idealized conception of married life. Her occupations in her new home keep her hands busy and allow her thoughts free play; and unless she is exceptionally sunny in disposition she is prone to fall into the habit of contrasting ber anticipations of her married life with what she now finds it to be.

she now finds it to be.

It is not to be denied that there are trials incident to the new position. Take any two people who have led comparatively free and independent lives, and throw them constantly into each others' society, and one of the first things with which they will be impressed will be the points upon which their tastes, their independs, and their wills clash, and their judgments, and their wills clash; and to this enforced companionship the fact that they are bound together by a tie neither can break, and it will readily be seen that all the strong love, which should be the only basis of marriage, will be required to aid them in enduring patiently the tests of temper which will come to both.

The man will probably think he has the greater share of these annoyances; the woman will know that her worries are the harder to bear. He will, man fashion, shrug his should-ers and say nothing when things go wrong. She will possibly cry, and bemone herself to berself. To neither of them will the truism that this, too, will pass away, give much com-fort. If one has a toothache to-day, he derives little consulation from the thought that next week the pain will be a thing of the

The old, old principle of mutual forbranese The old, old principle of multim forwarance is the only one that offers any real help in the erises constantly arising in the first year of married life. And if but one will yield, that one should be the wife.

I know it is the fashion, in these days, to snear at this Grischla-like doctrine. All the same, in its bellef and practice lies one of the secrets of happy married life. A woman must know when to yield. By undue per-sistency in having her own way in trifles she so weakens her influence with her husband that if an occasion arises when she should stand firm upon some really important question of principle or expediency, her protest tion of principle or expediency, her protest carries no weight.

Many of a man's peculiarities are intensely trying to a woman. A man has a prejudice in favor of sowing his belongings broadcast over the house, of leaving his newspapers on the parlor sofa, his hat on the pinno, his overshoes in a prominent position in the front hall. His bureau dramers are generally in a condi-tion to furnish fresh ideas for a study upon chaos. Then, too, he will read his paper at the breakfast table while his wife is forced to sit silently behind the coffee urn. He lets his chop get cold, his muffin heavy and his coffee set seemly bearing the cone urn. He lets us chop get cold, his muffin heavy and his coffee lukewarm while he notes the state of the markets, or reads the reports of business or political events.

Now, all these things are very trying to the average woman. She may have observed the same pleusant little truits in her own father and brothers, but in her serret soul she had revolved that her husband should never be guilty of similar conduct. If she is a weak woman she nags—it is the only word which covers the ground—she nags her husband continually, makes him extremely uncomfortshie, and possibly succeeds in breaking him of a few of the objectionable habits, but at the some time she shatters a certain sweet, gentle ideal be had always cherished of what his home and his wife would be.

I do not nearn to say that a woman should submit anonyadistively to execution. Let

I do not mean to say that a woman should submit uncomplainingly to exercibing. Let her after her protest, if she will. Insieed, in many cases, it is her duty to exert her influence to check some trick or mannerism in act or speech that she sees is a disadvantage to her husband. But she should do this gently and tactfully, choosing some time when he is neither hurried nor flurried. If he takes her admonition in ill part, she should not give him the sharp or sarcastic retort that cuts and stings at the moment, and leaves a throbbing scar behind. Sarcasm is the most dangerous weapon that can be employed if one wishes to retain the love of another. Its use is a satisfaction at the time to the angry man or woman, but its wound is hard to forget or or woman, but its wound is hard to forget or Nothing better has yet been found for checking an incipient quarrel than the tradi-tional soft answer. It puts one's adversary so thoroughly in the wrong that I wonder it is not oftener used as an instrument of mild vengennee. Even the most intolerant hus-band is seldom proof against the retort gentle, and will often be moved by it to forgive his wife for his own display of temper, and magnanimously restore her to favor. The young wife should guard against ready and frequent indulgence in tears when she is wounded by some hasty speech from her husband. Crying subdues some men, while it only irritates others. In either case, it soon loses any efficiety it may ever have possessed as a means for touching the softer side of a number pattern and he is stirred to contenue. mun's nature, and he is stirred to contempt for the tears that flow upon so slight provocation.

cation.

A woman should not take offence too easily. Often, indeed, the words or manner she resents were not ill-meant by her husband. Some men have a lasty, brutal-sounding fashion of speaking that tries and burts a woman cruelly, and she should endeavor, by all gentle means in her power, to break him of the habit, by representing to him, in his calmer moments, the pain he inflicts upon her. The man who loves his wife will usually try to break himself of any peculiarity that is distasteful to her; but she may rest assured she will not better him by continual harping upon the sore subject.

she will not better him by continual harping upon the sore subject.

To harmless and inoffensive idiocynerasies the wife should shut her eyes. At the begin-ning of her married life let her make up her mind to one fact: that she cannot force her husband to resemble her in every particular of thought and feeling. He will have his preferences and his distastes, and she need not every to control or preparate him into not expect to coerce or persuade him into conforming them to hers; after all, he has a right to his own individuality, and she has no business to interfere with them. There will always be enough points of common sympa-thy to form a meeting ground, and upon not-ters of divergent opinion let them agree to

A potent aid to a wife's charity for her bus-A potent and to a wise's charity for her hus-band will be the reflection that, in all proba-bility, her faults are quite as trying to her hus-band as his can be to her. If he takes his share in the endeavor to preserve unity of feeling, there is little doubt that in time the fermentation will work clearness. Never should the fatal step be taken of asking the advice or sympathy of an outsider, no matter discords between husband and wife are comparatively uninportant while they are kept sacredly secret. Only when a stranger inter-meddles is the permanent peace and happi-ness of the home endangered.

FOR A GIRL'S SUMMER VACATION

Circles who love music will perhaps never That's who love music will perhaps hereo.

Thave a better opportunity offered them of gratifying their desire for a musical education than through the offers made by Tur. Lamis' Home Journal. Nearly forty girls are now at the New England Conservatory of Music, in Boston, being musically or vocally educated at the Journal's expense, and as the Boston "Journal" recently said; "These Beston "Journal" recently said; "These girls are receiving the very best the Conserva-tory affords, the most desirable rooms in the tory affords the most describe rooms in the building are theirs, and they have all their wants carefully looked after by a wealthy periodical." Every girl has here a splendist chance to improve her summer vacation and make it profitable to herself. She can learn all about these offers by simply writing to Targ Ladius' Hone Journal, Philadelphia

LIFE'S LESSON

BY GRACE PEARL MACOMBER

L IFE is a lesson. Count all joy, all pain, No more than part of what the soul must learn

In this great school, the workl. Though you should yearn For one brief, blessed gause; though you would Forego the tales of war and bloodshed vain, Remember-you were born to teach! Discern

Strange secrets with unshrinking eye, nor spurn One principle which makes the lesson plain; esson, so your training be complete. Herein lies life's deep truth, then hold it fast :

Failure and loss are better than they seem; No heart so brave as that which bears defeat! He acts the hero's part who wins at last In life-long battle with his vanquished dream.

*XVIII.-MADAME VICTORIEN SARDOU

BY LUCY H. HOOPER

HE family of the celebrated dramatist, Victorien Sardon, the author of "Theodorn," "Fedora," "La Tosca," and other plays all more or less famous and successful, is a singularly interesting one. His aged father still survives, and though the elder Sardon lebrated his ninetieth birthday has recently celebrated his ninetieth birthday he preserves his faculties unimpaired, and is never so happy as when he can enjoy the society of the children of his world-renowned son, and of that gentleman and his wife as well. The elder M. Sardon lives at the town

MADAME SARDOU

well. The elder M. Sardon lives at the town of Cannet, near Cannes, in one of the most beantiful sites of the Riviera, and he is the owner of the house in which the great tragic actress, Rachel, breathed her last, in 1858, after a long illness from which she had vainly sought relief in that delicious climate.

The marriage of M. Victorien Sardon was as charming a love episode as may be found in any of his plays. He was approaching middle age, and was considered as being wholly absorbed in his literary labors to the exclusion of any other passion, when the Parislan world was amazed by the announcement of his engagement to M'lle Anne Soulié, daughter of M. Eudore S-ullé, chief director of the galleries and the palace of Versailles, and also of the royal library and the national archives contained therein. M. Soulié became fomous in the literary circles of France by his discovery, in the last-named department, of a covery, in the last-named department, of a mass of documents relating to Moliere, which had remained unknown up to that moment, and which included the inventory of his possessions drawn up after his death. The crudite librarian was thoroughly versed moreover on every topic connected with Versailles and the age of Louis XIV. He published several works, comprising among others the memoirs of Herard, the physician of Henri IV, and of the Duke de Luynes and the Marquis de Dan-

In this series of pen-portraits of "Unknown Wives of Well-Known Men," commenced in the January, 1984, Jornand, the following, each accompanied with portrait, have been printed:

MISS. THOMAS A. EDDSON
MISS. P. T. HAENIDS.
MISS. W. E. GLADSTONE.
MISS. T. DE WIFF TALMADE
MISS. CHARNOCKY M. DEPEW
LADY MACRONALD
MISS. JOHN CHANDLEN HAURIS
LADY TENNYSON March April May June July August July
July
August
September =
Celeber =
November =
Licember =
Licember =
March =
Anell
May 18 MISS, JOHL CHANDLER HADRIS
LARDY TWINN YESS
MISS, WILL CARLSTON
MISS, MAX O'RELL
THE PRINCIPS HOWALKEY
MISS, JOHN WANABARER
MISS, LELAND STANDORD
MISS, COLOR OF STANDORD
MISS, ECHNENIS FIELD
MISS, ECHNENIS FIELD
ANY of these back numbers can be each by writing to the JOURNAL.

gean as well. He was one of the intimate friends of the Princess Mathilde, the first cousin of Napoleon III, and was a frequent guest at the brilliant soirces which that lady was accustomed to give during the palmy days of the Second Empire, and at which figured all the literary and artistic celebrities of the day. But the home of M. Soulié was at Versailles. There, in the old palace city, there grew up around him three charming daughters and two sons, and his house was noted for its sailes. There, in the old palace city, there grew up around him three charming daughters and two sons, and his house was noted for its simple but delightful hospitality.

The favorite residence of M. Victorien Sardou has always been his country seat at Morly, distant one hour by rail from Paris and within easy reach of Versailles. He was planning a grand historical drama, the scene of which was to be laid in the early years of the reign of Louis XIV during the troubled period of La Fronde. He afterward entirely changed the subject of his play, laying the scene in Italy and transforming it into his drama of "La Haine" (Hatred), which he rates very high among his own works, though it has never, when acted, achieved any success. But while working out his original plan he got into the habit of making frequent visits to Versailles for the purpose of consulting the erudite director of the palace on the different personages and events of the reign of Louis XIV. M. Soulié, on more than one occasion, took his celebrated guest home to lunch or to dim with him and presented him to his erudite director of the palace on the different personages and events of the reign of Louis XIV. M. Soulié, on more than one occasion, took his celebrated guest home to lunch or to dine with him, and presented him to his daughters, who were delighted to make the acquaintance of the famous author of "A Scrap of Paper" and of "Patrie."

The second daughter, M'lle Anne, was then in the first bloom of youth, and was a remarkably beautiful as well as a most intelligent girl. She had profited fully by the tenchings and the example of her learned father, and was well fitted to comprehend and to appreciate the brilliant talents of their guest. She was at that time a dazzling blonde, tall and striking looking, and remarkably graceful. Very soon the visits of M. Sardon to the home of the erudite director increased and multiplied in an astonishing ratio, and it specifilly became evident that the fair daughter, and not the learned father, was the magnet that drew him so often from Morly to Versailles. In fact, his historical studies were almost wholly laid aside in favor of the fascinating story that he read in the blue eyes of Madensoiselle Anne. And so it came to pass that one fine day, in the historic precincts of the chapel of the palace at Versailles, the lovely blonde and the famous dramatist were united in holy matrimony. The great drama of the reign of Louis XIV never has been written, but was replaced for the bridegroom and the bride by that episode in real life that is known as conjugal felicity.

The marriage took place in 1872. M. and Mms. Sardon have seen grow up around them four children—three sons and a daughter. The eldest, Pierre, is eighteen, and has passed his examination as Bachelor of Letters. He is now preparing for that of Bachelor of Science. The second child, and only daughter, M'lle Genevieve, is not quite seventeen. She promises to inherit much of her mother's benuty. Jean, aged fifteen, and André, who is just twelve, complete the family.

At present the health of Madame Sardou gives rise to a go been attacked, more or less severely, with the influenza. The last to succumb to the reign-ing epidemic was M. Sardou himself, and his devoted wife would yield to no one else the right of watching over him.

The Parisian residence of the Sardou family is a private hotel, situated in the fashionable Malesherbes quarter of the city, and is on the Rue de General Foy. In summer they take possession of the beautiful villa at Morly, where the great dramatist does most of his possession of the beautiful villa at Morfy, where the great dramatist does most of his literary work, preferring the calm and quiet of the country to the noise and distractions of Paris. He is very fond of Nice, and for some years past a spacious and sumptimous villa, which, after the custom of the place, he intends to call the "Villa Fedora" after his own favorite among all his works, has been in process of construction for him from designs furnished by himself. The delicate health of Madame Sardon has caused him to hurry the completion of this villa, which bids fair to be one of the most elegant on the Riviera.

Some five years after her marriage Madame Sardon lost her distinguished and tenderly beloved father. Of her two sisters, the eldest married Baron Schmitz, brother of the general of the same name, who died a short time ago, The younger one has remained single. Hereldest brother, Henry, became a surgeon in the French army, and died in Tunis. The second, Emilien, is a captain in the 11th regiment of Infanter, and is at present in Abiers Asiers.

Emilien, is a captain in the 111th regiment of Infantry, and is at present in Algiers devot-ing himself to topographical researches. He inherits his father's taste for study, and is a great favorite with Madame Sardon.

The training and example of M. Soulié in the early years of Madame Sardon's life have made of her a thorough connoisseur in historic art, furniture, brie-a-brac and especially in that of the eighteenth century. She takes great delight in her husband's unique collection of historical continues and of restreas tion of historical costumes, and of pictures representing the scenes and the festivals of past epochs. Her taste and her education in such matters were of great assistance to him in regulating the dresses and the accessories in regulating the dresses and the accessories of his later historical plays. In a word, she has always filled the position not only of wife and mother and lady of the house, but of his sympathetic and appreciative comrade in the literary labors of his brilliant cureer.

The portrait affixed to this sketch is a reproduction of a likeness in pastel, executed when Madame Sardon was in the bloom of youth and in the full radiance of her remarkable beauty. It is a fine work of art as well as an admirable likeness, and is at present one of the chief ermanents in the boundoir of the of the clule orniments in the boudoir of the original at Paris.

THE MUSIC OF SILENCE

BY HARRY ROMAINE

WHEN you leave the city and flee away, VV To rest in some country solitude.
It is not to hear the low brook play, Or the woodbird's musical interlude. It is not to hear the fantastic strains Of the symphony played by the wind on the trees, The hum of insects, the patter of rains,

For there is a music more soft than these.

stand on the crest of a lonely hill When the landscape lies in a sunset hush; When man is absent, and nature still, And the west is bathed in a tender flush; Let the notes of silence arise and meet, And fill your soul with their ecstacy, With a silent music, soft and sweet, With a grand and moving melody.

I.—MRS. AUGUSTA EVANS WILSON

BY T. C. DE LEON

ERHAPS from traditions— possibly from location and climate—Mobile's ways are climate—Mobile's ways are quiet ones; and her material progress makes less echo than that of her sisters north or west. As with her business, so the old Gulf City does with that culture now forcing its quiet way to recognition, notably in the works of several widely read authors.

of several widely-read authors.

Mrs. Augusta Evans Wilson—standing easily foremost among southern writers—has kept her personality more hidden than would seem possible. In her quiet, English-looking home near Mobile she leads a life as placid and happy as inborn domesticity, supplied in its every detail, can make it. "Ashland" is a quaint, high-gabled dwelling, with the spacious rooms and broad halls and galleries of southern taste and climatic need. It sits three miles westward of the city, on the Spring Hill dommy road, and facing the Convent of the Visitation to the north. Immediately around the bouse are hot-house

MRS. WILSON

Immediately around the bouse are hot-house dotted gardens, where flourish camellias, peroniums, begonias and ferns, which the loving care of their mistress make famous, even in this land of flowers. For on her simple Saturday receptions Mrs. Wilson's parlors, galleries and grounds show ferns of high caste, with germium and begonia blooms that divide, even with their gentle, unaffected mistress, the interest of stranger pilgrims to her shrine. And, to the sururise of same this noted authorses is to the surprise of some, this noted authoress is as simple in her tastes, and in her talk, as as simple in her tastes, and in her talk, as though classics and history had not been conned since school days. The topics of the hour, the little troubles and interests of her friends, the projects and pleasures of young people, ever welcomed about her, move this true woman as genuinely as do weightier affairs of state, of political economy or of literature, broached by more noted visitors.

If Mrs. Wilson's books sour above the comprehen-sion of the average reader ome of her critics insist, I can vouch that her conversation

*The first of a series of interesting glimpses of famous silterary women, which will appear in the Journal Properties to time. The series will present those thesary women whose home life has recaped a x casely a pertuing.

never overtops her listener. Naturalness and cordiality are her salient characteristics, and brief contact puts the most timorous visitor

In her intimate circle, Mrs. Wilson is univer-In her intimate circle, Mrs. Wilson is universally beloved, the result of her frank, honest acceptance of worth, and of her unfailing desire to be helpful at need. In her home life she is literally adored, and to her radiates its every detail, whether of love, sympathy, or counsel. For she is a notable housekeeper, and in her hands the bunch of keys is, perhaps, for daily purpose, mightier than the pen. To lavored intimates she talks frankly of her ventures in chickens, or her manigations in a new vestthirmates she talks frankly of her ventures in chickens, or her aspirations in a new yeast; and special ones taste buttermilk, fresh from her churning, with flaky bisenits, Generous beyond the wont of connoisseurs, Mrs. Wilson's chief delight is to share her floral triumphs with her friends, leading them about the grounds for personal intro-duction to an especially rich bower of Cherokee roses; to her womberful trees of analysis, that roses; to her wonderful trees of axaleas, that carpet rods of earth with vari-hued leaves, and to her favorite, the odorous camellia tree. In her green-houses she comes as near to gush as her quiet nature may over potted plants of as her quiet nature may over potted plants of rare lineage and rarer perfection, each an in-dividual with a name and a personality for her. Breaking a leaf here, a spray there, now a bloom, again a frond, she fairly buries her friends with flowers. I have seen her so carnest in this pleasure giving, when appre-ciated, that her reception dress and delicate hands were alike forpotten, as the latter probled into the mellow earth after some clusive root.

chards were alike forgotten, as the latter probed into the mellow earth after some clusive root. Yet social, genial and hospitable as she is under her own roof, or that of chosen friend, Mrs. Wilson is in no sense a woman of society. Her own receptions, lunches and dinners are her delight, but she cares nothing for bulls, parties, or public entertainments. The death of her husband last year has, of course, thrown her even more in seclusion. Where the public of her home city knows Mrs. Wilson best is in the fair field of charitable deeds, wherein she is as tireless as she is an intelligent reaper. To the orphans and the needy of her own and other denominations she is an erer practicul and patient almoner.

But "Miss Augusta," as near friends still call the placid matron, in their odd southern fashion, is a methodical business woman withal. Those who picture her stalking with upturned chin and eyes fixed on space, and careless of pebble and bog, would stare openmouthed at the calm, unwrinkled face peering beneath the light lace cap that crowns soft, natural waving hair into the resolutions.

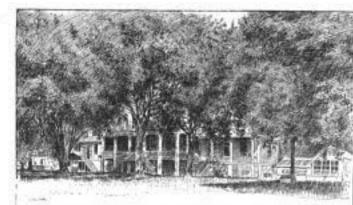

beneath the light lace cap that crowns soft, natural waving hair, into the reculcitant churn, or the unduly delayed nest of careless Sister Partlet.

churn, or the unduly delayed nest of careless Sister Partlet.

It is a thoughtful face, too, seen in any light; and at rest wears a cust of sudness that tells the gentle nature has been touched by trud. But this is evantescent, and quick erased by the smile of pseuliarly winning sincerity and the gleam of kindly, color-shifting eyes. The figure is of average beight and slight model, but no-wise spare; the hunds and feet of peculiar delicncy and symmetry; and the walk of quiet, easy dignity that has much of decision and energy in it. So the active mind in the healthy body carries her through varied avocations without jar or chafe, each baving its alloted time, and each going straight to completion under methodical babit.

Mrs. Wilson is singularly systematic in the distribution of her time. Each day she first attends to her housekeeping duties, arranging the various donestic details, and then comes the care of her plants. Returning to the house the mail is examined, and then comes study or writing until the dinner hour. The afternoon is generally spent going over the garden and farm fields, and inspecting the cartle and poultry. Once each week, on Saturday, the house is thrown open to visitors from ten until four o'clock, and the constant stream of visitors upon these occasions attests the popularity of the hostess.

Mrs. Wilson is not a rapid literary worker. In the writing of a novel she never begins the manuscript until the entire plot and characters stand out clearly before her. So clearly photographed is the story upon Mrs. Wilson's mind that she could as easily begin by writing the closing chapters of a book as the opening portion. In the case of her novel "Vashti," for example, the description of Mrs. Gerome's death was written before a word of the first chapter was penned. Mrs. Wilson's cure of details is shown in the fact that for several years before her last book, "At the Mercy of Tiberius," was published, she investigated electrical phenomena, especially freaks of lightning and collected eight well-a ticated accounts of electric photography. Among these were four remarkable instances of human faces photographed by lightning on window-panes. On this basis of fact Mrs. Wilson built her novel. In view of these facts, now printed for the first time, the ridi-cule of the literary reviewers touching the lightning photograph on the window-pane at "Elm Bluff" as "impossible, absurd and sensational," must have sounded rather strange and amusing to Mrs. Wilson.

" Ashland," the home of Mrs. Wilson, near Mobile

COMPENSATION

BY ABRAM S. ISAACS

WHEN Eve her paradise forsook, VV She cast a swift despairing look.
At Eden in its loveliness; Then, conscious of her sad distress, From heaven she stole a bit of sky To beam forever in her eye. A star that circled in a dance She seired to radiate her glance: A tiny rose that blossomed there She plucked to make her cheeks as fair, And snatched a trembling drop of dew To purify her heart anew And so, amid all hopes and fears, A bit of fiden woman bears.

THE WIFE OF YOUR MINISTER

By A. J. PARRY

I may be safely affirmed that while many of the earlier exactions of service from pastors' wives by their parishes have had their day and ceased to be, it remains true that clurches still expect their pastor's wife to act as their assistant pastor. This is true of country, and largely of city churches. It is as true to-day as it ever was,

It is the purpose of this article to inquire it is the purpose of this article to inquire whether this is a reasonable expectation.

There are undoubtedly women of exceptional physical strength and endurance whose bushands are in the ministry. When such women feel called to the duties of assistant paster, and can discharge them without detriment to the interests of their families, pasters and according to their families, pasters.

mout to the interests of their families, pastors and people alike should be profoundly grateful. But how many times have we all learn the remark from Tryphena and Tryphosa (by which names we will represent certain lay visiters): "What is the reason that ministers wives are always sick? I hardly ever knew one who was well!"

The truth of this remark must be admitted, and it is a fact for which I have lone sought and it is a fact for which I have long sought an explanation. Whether the clerical mind prefers the fragile and deliente organization in women, which in the wear and tear of mature life ineritably leads to ill health; whether religious women are apt to be unlealthy, or realizably women are not to be religious; or unlicality women are apt to be inhacting, or unlicality women are apt to be religious; or whether the ministers themselves are tiresome persons to live with, or the churches, with all their real kindness and sympathy, a little ex-hausting in their demands, I am as yet unable their real kindness and synapathy, a little exhausting in their demands, I am as yet unable to determine.

But when this remark of Tryphena and Tryphesa reaches the pastor's wife, who stands self-convicted of her own particular and especial "attacks," the thumb-arrews of which are perhaps at the very moment being tightened, you may be sure she winces under it, theing a quick-witted and somewhat sensitive woman it means to her: "Oh, dear, what a failure our pastor's wife is! Always sick when sine is especially needed! I have headaches mayed but I have learned not to give up."

Thus does the minister's wife interpret Try phena and Tryphosa. What does she do in consequence? What does the worn-out horse do under the spar that draws blood? He rallies his failing energies for one last quivering effort to do what is expected of him and then collapses, and, finally, if you inquire what has become of him, you will learn that he is dead, or turned out in a vacant lot to spend the remaining years of his uselessness. If you inquire concerning the pastor's wife who has attempted to respond to the spur of the congregation's criticism, you will find her also dead, or in a sanitarium.

However, the spur of the congregation's gregation's criticism, you will find her also dead, or in a sanitarium.

However, the spur of the congregation's criticism is not the only spur which urges on the pactor's wife. She knows that she is experted to act as assistant pastor; the thought of being a disappointment to her lusband and his people is intolerable to her. She cannot fall below the ideal set before her. Furthermore, her whole heart is in her husband's work. She sees the opportunities for doing grand, for comforting sorrowful hearts, and winning immountal souls, and a woo, she feels. winning fromortal souls, and a woe, she feels, is on her if she fails to do her part. She loves the people among whom she works, and gladly gives herself for them. None the less, for this reason, the demonds of life upon her inevitably become two complex.

Let me give you, for the sake of definiteness, a little sketch of one of my own friends, Mrs.

Dr. Dorner, and I will promise that the details of her life are facts, not fancies. Regarding her mans, I cannot, perhaps, take so strong ground. I choose Mrs. Dorner as a fair illus-tration of the conscientions pastor's wife of the day, neither below nor above the average.

The Rev. Dr. Dormer is a man of mineral energy and capacity for work. He is paster of a charch of eight hundred and fifty normbers, in a city of moderate size. He minires Mrs. Documer profoundly, and considers her capable of doing everything superlatively well. Like meet men, he overwhelms his wife one day with his solicitude for her, and the next day stimulates her in every liber of her being to averwork by his evidently "great expecta-tions." Mrs. Dormer has posel mental en-parity, is physically very frail, religiously fercent in spirit, with an especial interest in former anisotone. funcign missions.

furcine missions.

Mr. Pormer's salary is thirty-five hundred deliars, out of which he pays seven hundred for house rent, provides for his wife and four children, gives "the Lord's tenth" in charities, and stochases the plainty essential life insurance. It will be readily appreciated that Mrs. Domest can have very little sewing done under the thomasial conditions. A view of the domestic situation, then, shows as a large house to be kept in order—and in company order, lee, for there are frequent visitors at the log-mers'-chiefly ministerial-with the help of only one servant; the table to be furnished with appetizing but economical food; and three little girls, one boy, and one man to be sewed for, and mended for by one woman's hands, besides the aforesaid woman's own dressmaking to be "personally conducted." Please bear in mind the fact that Mrs. Dormer has the sich headsober and invested personal has the sick headaches and impaired nervous system of most American women of thirty-five, and that the little Dormers all have weak stomachs (the ministerial inheritance) and then tell me, dear sisters, has she not already enough to tax her vital energy to the utmost?

But now remember the social side of Mrs. Dormer's life. She receives on an average four calls a day, social or professional; she enter-tains her own and her husband's Bible classes once or twice a year; also the choir, and the denous, and the brother ministers of the city, and the Pastors' Club, and the visiting brethren who drop down all the way along. She must attend teas and receptions, and read papers on literary themes occasionally, and in every way seek to do her hydraud credit recially.

literary themes occasionally, and in every way seek to do her husband credit socially.

This brings us to her church life. Let me tell you what she described to me the other day, not stall in a complaining fashion, but as a summary of an average week's claurch work. On Sunday she attended morning service and taught a large class of young men; the afternoon was devoted to her children's moral and spiritual nature, which she feels is motions a little whaller, in the general and to the stall the stall the second stall the second service and the stall the second service and the second service are serviced as a service which she feels is serviced as a little whaller, in the general service as a service when the second service are serviced as a service when the service services are serviced as a service when the service services are serviced as a service when the service services are serviced as a service service service as a service service service and service services are serviced as a service service service service services are serviced as a service service service service services are serviced as a service service service service services are serviced as a service service service service services are serviced as a service service service service services are serviced as a service service service service services are serviced as a service service service service services as a service service service service services are serviced as a service service service service services as a service service service service services are serviced as a service service service service service service services are serviced as a service service service service services are serviced as a service service service service service service services services are serviced services as a service service service service service service service service services are serviced services as a service service service service services getting a little shabby; in the evening she at-tended a prayer meeting and a preaching ser-vice. Monday morning's mail brought a request that she attend a large missionary request that she attend a large missionary meeting on Wednesday at the other side of the city, and speak for fifteen minutes on a given theme. Two days already crowded with work in which to prepare for the ordeal, the thought of which made her tremble, and the faithment of which would be sure to make her ill, for Mrs. Dormer is a timid woman. In the same ustil came a letter from a lady in a former parish, five hundred noiles distant, asking her to send suggestions for the work and reading of her missionary society. Mrs. Dormer has a large correspondence of this character. Monday afternoon was devoted to calling on sick day afternoon was devoted to calling on sick persons whose cases had been mentioned to her on Sunday.

Thesday afternoon came an Aid Society meeting; Thesday evening a Pink Ten, Mrs.

Pormer's presence at both absolutely im-

Wednesday was free from church duties ex-cept a committee meeting of the King's Daugh-ters, and the calls to be made, which are always weighing heavily on Mrs. Dormer's spirit. There are three hundred names on her calling list, besides numerous sick and wounded but on the list and Traphena and Traphena for list, besides numerous sick and wounded but on the list, and Tryphena and Tryphosa fre-quently deplore that they "see so little of their pastor's wife in their homes."

Thursday was the afternoon of the mission-ary meeting, with a gathering of the Y. P. S. C. E. in the evening of which organization Mrs. Dorner is an active member. "But," you will say, "she is thirty-five." Yes, but she is young enough for Christian each aver, although add enough to precise over the methers in young enough for Christian endeavor, although old enough to preside over the mothers in Israel when they gather for missionary meetings. After the Y. P. S. C. E., occurred the weekly church prayer-meeting, which Mrs. Dormer must always attend.

Friday afternoon was the afternoon for the Mothers' Meeting, which Mrs. Dormer led, inwardly conscious while she talked with sweet serveix of training the little ones, that her serenity of training the little ones, that her own little ones were making a general training day at home, and quite possibly scandalizing Tryphosa, who lives next door. Saturday was left blank for a sick head-

Now, if you will consider that wherever Mrs. Dormer goes she is beset with requests for various services which I have not even suggested; that she is appenled to constantly for direction and nuterial by programme con-mittees; that she is sought after by benevolent societies outside of the church; that she must societies outside of the church; that she must write on an average ten letters a week; that she must read every missionary publication which comes into the house, you will, I think, begin to wonder how long before the grave or the sanitarium will claim its own.

And Mrs. Dormer is not one of the notable ministers' wives. She is only an ordinary, quiet little woman, trying " to do her best,"

What is to be done for Mrs. Dormer before it is enerlastingly too late?

I would mayself suggest a merciful economy in the use of the spar, and to this end I will tell you certain things not to do:

Do not say, "Mrs. Dormer has not been in my house in fourteen months."

Do not say is the does not come in fourteen years.

ber if she does not come in fourteen years.

Do not remind her every time you see her of her failure to attend this meeting, or that.

Do not allude more than is needful in her presence to the devotion and activity of your former pastor's wife, or of the wife of some other pastor in town. Do not make her president of all your socie-ties, or chairman of all your committees, Do not forget that she is a woman, and a wife, and a mother, before she is an assistant

Do not forget that her time is not paid for. Do not begrudge her the intimate friendship of a few kindred spirits. You have your own especial friends. Why should she, of all women, he called upon to forego this privilege?

And finally, if she is wise enough and brave enough to say, "I will not destroy the life which Got has given me by slow suicide. I will not break up my home and leave my husband and children desidate by overtaking myself in work which God does not exact, or he would have supplied the strength where with to meet it. I will content myself with the in-fluence I can exert as a good and happy Christian woman in my home, and will do in the church only that which I can do without the sacrifice of life and strongth." If the time comes when Mrs. Dormer has the courage to take this position, go to her, Tryphena and Tryphosa, and tell her she is doing right, and that you gbory in her independence.

WOMANHOOD

BY ELLA S. ELLIOTT

LIGHTLY slept she on the threshold of her five and twentieth year,

She had yet the world before her—maught of past to dread or fear. she looked with happy longing, as the years before her stood Richer, brighter, better, broader-heritage of womanhood.

Past the wavering, girlish fancies, past the future's fearful gloam,

For her heart had found its double-settled now no more to roam.

So she dreamed of happy home-life in tomorrow's fancy day-Home where she could sit in silence, sit and love her life away:

Where the joy of loving deeply brings no thought save that of bliss,

Where the sorrows born of living flee at touch of husband's kiss,

Where the strong arm is protector, and the weak heart strong alway, Where the cynic's snarl is vanquished by the sunburst of love's day.

Blessed thought of home-life, sweeter than ever thought beside could be where two shall build their heaven, loving ever perfectly. Would the home-life be kept empty, raught beside e'er enter there?

Are they fearful lest the heart-wealth scanty prove with three to share? Blessed thoughts of baby fingers, patter soft of baby feet. there's room for child and husbandwomen's hearts are wide and deep.

WHY OUR WOMEN FADE

BY FELICIA HOLT

ERE I a physician I should speak of heredity as a cause, but as Ibsen and other great teachers are so ably ex-pounding the evils thus transmitted to us, there is little reason for me to touch little reason for me to touch upon it, save to beg every thinking man and woman not to turn away in affected disgust from the plain consideration of an unwelcome truth, but to examine it carefully and earnessly, that they may learn and profit by the great morals these teachers bring before us.

Let us be willing to know ourselves, that the truth may make us free and able to guard our offspring from the dangers which the sins of our farefathers and their equally culpable ignorance of hydroic laws have entailed upon ignorance of bygienic laws have entailed upon this enfechled generation, ignorance of hygienic laws have entailed upon this enfechied generation.

I am requested to speak of my own country-women in this paper, and I must crave their pardon for instituting a comparison between them and their English sisters in the matter of complexion. Notwithstanding her beauty and charming grace, the young American is apt to be sallow-lened beside the young English girl, whose delicate and rusente coloring bespeaks both health and vitality.

Of course, climate has a large influence in this regard, but then one must have the proper exposure to climate and not exclude every particle of air, as is too often the case in our American nurseries; so I instance a want of proper ventilation, both by day and night, as a potent factor in bringing about the decay of youth and beauty. Some people I know gamed on the fresh air hobby, but I believe in neither extreme. Physicians and oculists would have less practice, the lungs would be better able to do the work their Creator intended, and youthful eyes could see the world and its heaviles without the aid of sucretaken. ed, and youthful eyes could see the world and its beauties without the aid of spectacles, which seem so out of place mounted upon the nose of childhood. We all contribute to the "Fresh Air Fund" for the children of the destitute; let us not forget the necessities of our own little ones, and remember that fur-nace-dried air and double windows sometimes do reviews damage. More light note of for do serious damage. More light, more air for the girls and boxs? All growing plants require them; why not these precious specimens who often droop and fade in the bot-houses of a too effete civilization?

Many grievous reasons confront me as to "why our women fade," but I shall touch use only a few of the strongest, I look at the many women of my acquaintance; I see lines on brows which can only be brought there by worry, and "worry" I take to be one of the greatest fees to a woman's youth.
There are dolls to be sure who never think There are dolls to be sure, who never think, work or act; I do not here discuss such creatures, but woman in her vocation as a sentient being. In this country, as in no other, do women have to struggle in the effort to keep up an appearance of great wealth they do not possess. It is an age of monopolics, and great possess. It is an age of monopones, and great fortunes are being absorbed by the shrewd financiers: hence, many for more cultivated and refined people must retire, "forgetting the world, be by the world forgot." or undertake a struggle which ends only in the grave. It would seem at the first an unworthy strife, and so it is, not only unworthy but herribly and so it is, not only unworthy but herribly degrading if entered into with the purpose of vying with the more fortunate for the mere possession of money; but alas, it represents to the fastidious and well-born woman all that to which by nature she is justly entitled: works of art, music, literature and the outcome of the ages. Can she see all these de-lights absorbed by the ignorant parvenu ngits attested by the apportant parvenus mitheut at least an effort to chilm some for her own? "Yes," you reply, "if she is a saint," So, but if she have children, what then? She cannot let them layer into unworthy parents, and he dragged by circumstances to a level with her inferiors. No?

every impulse of motherhood forbids; and so she enters the arena where all are against her, She has love and a woman's wit to pit against her foes, and the spectators are equally ready to applicate if she be victorious, or smile con-temptrously and forget her if she be van-quished.

The incomes of American men are more or less fluctuating; one year they may be ample, next year very mengre. The business man may make a fortune in '91 and lose it in '92; behind him are his wife and children, who must bear as best they can these changes of fortune. The wife rurely has the full confidence of her husband rarely has the full confidence of her husband as to his mercantile transactions and their re-sult, but is always expected to manage equally well on a small or a large income; and living under these conditions she grows old before her time. From early youth she has stood patiently by his side, she has been, let us sup-pose, a thoroughly good woman and has borne with him the burden and heat of the lay; he has neade mistakes which she with borne with him the burden and heat of the day; he has neade mistakes which she, with her keener insight, would never have been guilty of; but for better or worse they have taken each other, and she has been faithful to her contract. But it has aged her, the gentle charms of woman—her tender femininity—fade before these corroding cures.

What then is the remedy? Where shall it be found? I reply: Let woman enlarge her horizon. In the narrow sphere herefolore allotted to women their aims have been low, because there was seemingly little encouragement from there was seemingly little encouragement from their fellow men to be more than the creature of man's lighter moods. I do not mean to en-courage women to take up the study of law or medicine. Portia was a delightful study with Shakespeare's masterly hand to do the artistic touches, but we have little need of her now. The professions are already overcrowded, and The professions are airendy overcrowded, and unless we reverse the situation and educate our sons for housewives, there will be no vacancies for women. Do not cry me down and declare me an enemy to woman's progress; for be it from me. But I want progress in a woman's fashion. Let woman grow, read, enlarge her mind, study both literature and science that she may not only help her fellow mun but be his guide and inspiration. What greater spur for the masculine mind than the companionship of a cultivated woman? Her trenchant wit, her delicate perception, her clear intuition, are great aids to his slower and more judicial brain. He carries steadfastness which she has not yet demonstrated; it may come in time, but as yet she cannot bay fastness which she has not yet demonstrated; it may come in time, but as yet she cannot lay claim to the poise of his more logical mind.

The female, I hold, is the better partison, the male the more just judge, but the man and the woman make, as God intended, a splendid whole. So I would have woman work to this end—that of a perfect counterpart of the Creator's noblest work—a man, "after His own image." It is her beautiful mission to fill out and round as a whole that which he, with his less deft perception, can which he, with his less deft perception, can never grasp. He can build prisons for the criminal, but she can touch the criminal's heart and awaken his repentance is a way unknown to man.

He can erect hospitals, but she may be the ministering angel to the patients. With her pen, if she has ability, she can send her influence fur and wide. Everyone has one talent;

there are it for the good of others.

That rather subtle question which is embodied in the planes "woman's enfranchisement" is sure to intrude itself whenever we came to discuss the relations which women as wives and mothers hold toward society. But it ought to be possible to consider what is best for the happiness of both men and women without reference to matters of purely political significance. al significance.

The existing order of things may infringe certain abstract rights of woman, and yet it may remain true that the existing order of things is the best for the present moment, and under present conditions. Even reforms may come too soon, and we may rest assured that all changes which tend to a better and higher civilization will come when the time is ripe

What I especially wish to enforce is that it is better to do what is manifestly desimble in our present circumstances, rather than to go tilting at windmills which we have not yet reached.

If a woman is a mother she can make home an earthly paradise for her family; and if am-bilious, train citizens for the State. But in all cases I would have her begin at home; don't set out on a foreign mission whilst you don't set out on a foreign mission whilst you have a father and a mother who are old; or do not let your husband find some more agreeable companion to converse with; or do not let your children find their pleasure abroad because you are too much wrapped up in your-self to attend to their claims.

Why you should fide is a mystery to me when there is so much work for you to do. Keep abrenst of the times, spend yourself freely; your hair may, it is true, grow gray, but your heart cannot if you keep it filled with goodness and virtue.

but your heart cusmot if you keep it filled with goodness and virtue.
You will find your mentality grow with your years, if you give it proper food. Unless you are afflicted with some disease, you can keep up your long walks and put the young people to shame. Enter into other people's pleasures and you will have your own cup filled with joy; sympathize fully with their sorrows and your own will heal. Keep your lamp trimmed and burning, your mind clear of all that is narrow and roan, and people will call you a narrow and noran, and people will call you a young woman and prefer you in your matured brilliancy and gravious charm to the breadand butter miss who may, in netual years, be young enough to be your grand-daughter,

Any one who is a book-buyer and a book-reader will find it an advantage to address the Premium Department of The Lature Howe Joresal. It makes a feature of quoting prices on books which are not obtainable at ordinary book stores.

Handreds are making money selling Thompson's Forket Speller; we advertisement in Max number. If you have not ordered one, do so at once; it is a most valuable book. ...

"She was curiously light-hearted that day. Was it the fragrance of the spring air and the blossoming trees?"

PART FIRST

JUNE, 1892

ARY Fleming walked slowly along the street toward her home one hot aftermoon late in the month of May. Summer had come suddenly, as it always does in northern

New England, The small town itself had a northern look and, although the dooryards and the whole country were fast growing green, as you looked out past the village you eneght sight of stony hills, of dark woodland, and sterile soil.

Mary Fleming wore a thick winter dress, and the discomfort of it added to her discouragement of heart. It was one of the days when she felt like making herself as miserable as possible. Usually as you met and greeted her you were sure to notice a brightness in her face and something uncommonly pleasant, though she often had a puzzled look, a kind of sharpness and assumed authority such as of sharpness and assumed authority such as young teachers sometimes wear who think more of the self-importance than of the op-portunities of their position. Mary Fleming was charming to look at in her fresh girlish-ness when she felt satisfied and happy, but of late she had been so dissatisfied and thinking of herself and her troubles so much, that her very looks were changing. Sometimes her natural and investment and effectivateness force. very looks were changing. Sometimes her natural good temper and affectionateness drove these clouds away; she was far too young to be always dispirited. The very year of her life lent hope and she only feared disappoint-ment; there had been no time yet to prove that disappointment was inevitable. Our heroine opened the sagging side gate of a plain, small wooden house that stood close to the street and went along a weedy path to the street, and went along a weedy path through the side yard toward the kitchen door. through the side yard toward the attener abor.

In the yard there were two pear trees in whitest blossom and a good bit of open garden ground, but nobody had taken any care of it that spring, so that whatever had been thrown out or blown in littered the further side against the next house. There were even some old tin cans lying about, most hopeless of refuse, and Mary looked at them with dismay and disapproval, and wondered why her father and disapproval, and wondered why her father had not picked them up. She had noticed a neighbor's flower garden as she came up the street, where some daffolils were in Isloom by the path, and the empty flower bods were all put in order, with their brown for-laly-dug earth heaped smooth and high. She remem-bered with a feeling of impatience how neat and clean and promising it all looked. She stood looking about with a very disapproxing expression; then turned and went slowly up two or three wooden stens and opened the side two or three wooden steps and opened the side door of the house and went into the kitchen, door of the house and went into the kitchen, which was just like a great many other hitchens. The grained woodwork did not book like oak, but only like the worst of initations, and it gave a solled-booking, dincy color to the room, though the whole little place was really so clean and orderly. The paper was ugly too, and had been hung so badly that it looked the worse. Neither Mary nor her mother knew exactly why they disliked their poor little kitchen so much whore they spent so much of their time. People do not know how much good harmonious and pleasant colors can do them in their every-day life; there is something akin to a moral influouce in the uglinoss or the beauty width surround us in our houses. We may help to make us, roundings, but they also belp to make us.

Mary always looked eagerly for her mother's pleasant face at the sitting-room window, where she usually sat in the afternoon, but to-day Mrs. Fleming was not there. In the kitchen, however, was an unexpected but familiar figure; a thin little old woman in an odd, light-colored dress with a sprigged shawl over her shoulders, gay with a bright border. She wore on her head a flaring old-fashloned Shaker bonnet with a long cape and brown band over the top; from under this bonnet shoice a pair of piercing kindly brown eyes and a thin lock or two of white hair. She was a neat, knowing, delightful old visitor, and Mary's face lighted up like a child's with the pleasure of finding her.

"Why, where's mother?" she asked, "Do take off your things, Aunt Haumah; you've why, where's mother? she asked, "Do take off your things, Aunt Hannah; you've come to make us a visit, haven't you?" "Yes, dear," said Aunt Hannah, "I waked up this morning feeling I had got to come, so up this morning feeling I had got to come, so here I be. You know that's my way; I have had the beautifulest walk from over in Round Hill neighborhood. Twas protty far, but I rested me often, and Mis' Prescott put me up some bread an' butter an' a nice piece o' cake for luncheon, though I calculated to get here by dimertime. I can't walk as once I could; but there, I have to keep stopping to see things by the way. I believe I got me a drink o' water from every brook."

The old woman looked tired, but her face was so radiant with nleasure that Mary was

The old woman looked tired, but her face was so radiant with pleasure that Mary was pleased too. She put down her books and little basket, and looked at the stove, and then put two or three pine sticks into the inside and the ten-kettle with a little fresh water on the outside, before she sat down. "I'm going the nake you a next of ten Apret Hanto make you a good cup of ten. Aunt Han-nah," she said. "That il rest you, and per-haps mother'll like one, too, when she comes in. She said something this morning about going over the river to see old Miss Dunn who goes to our church. She's been very sick and nobody likes her very well; 'twas just like mother."

"Thank ye, durlin', about the tea," soid Aunt Hannah. "I know Ellen Dunn, I knew her mother, an' I just remember her grandmother. No, they aint likeable folks: they're too pleased with themselves an' always rushin without fear or wit to other folks' affairs, There was this Ellen that was some smarter than the others an' learned the tailoress trade an' then there was snother sister that stayed to home an' dried up—she looked as if she was a thousand years old when she got here. So Ellen's sick, is she? Well. I daresny 'twill do her good; she'll find how kind folks is an' be drawed to some she's been too ready to find findt with. Perhaps I'll go over an' see her myself some day. I may know of some-thing that'll be good for her ails; they're folks Fre always known."

Mary Flenning sat by the open window, sometimes looking out into the buddling grape vine and sometimes watching her old friend's face as she ramided on with her opinions and nice as she ramified on with her opinions and reminiscences. The fire was crackling in the stove and the tea kettle began to sing; present-ly she made the tea and pamed a capful for Aunt Hannah, which was received with grati-rade. The color same back to the pale old face and it was presently acknowledged that the walk had been over long for one of those first warm days. first warm days.

"Tis as good a cup o' tea as your ma could have mode, bless her heart!" said Aunt Hau-nub. "I expect you'll turn out as nice a cock an' as good a woman. Seens's to me you look kind of unpleased about smoothing, though, I thought so the minute I see you,"

"You always know everything; you're a witch?" Mary laughed, but the kindness of this old friend's tone touched her, and she could not say any more for a minute, but looked away out of the window,
"There!" exclaimed

"There!" exclaimed Aunt Hannah. "I've got no business to pry and question, but I hate to see young folks look down-hearted. Young folks often hasto make up some kind o' worry for them-selves if only to serve till the real case, come. the real ones come. I know most all the kinds of real trouble that there is, and there's bardly any but what there's help for."

Mary did not like this at least she may have liked it but did not wish to say so. Old people have such a preaching way and think they know all about everything, and this assumption young people always resent.

The ten seemed to have refreshed the old woman wonderfully. She took off the Shaker bonnet and folded her shawl carefully, and Mary took them from her and carried them

Mary took them from her and carried them into the next room.

"I expect you be most done going to school?" The question was put in a most business-like and friendly tone.

"Yes, I shall be done this summer; school ends the twentieth of June," said Mary fretfally, "I'm glad of it, I'm sure,"

"You'll be precious glad of every day you've been before you come to my age," responded Aunt Hannah. "What be you going to do afterward, dear?"

"Oh I don't know, it worries me to death!" said Mary in a plaintive tone. "I must do said Mary in a plaintive tone. "I must do something, but I don't know what. Mother's always hoped I should be a teacher, and she's disappointed because I know and she knows disappointed because I know and she knows that I never had the least gift for it. I can do sums and things myself, but I can't explain them to people. I don't believe I'm good for anything in the world."

"Yes you be, darlin'," said the old friend, calraly. "The end o' the world aint come yet for you; it's only the beginning; you don't know what you be good for yet, but you'll quick find out. I'm sick of everybody trying to keep school; 'tis one o' the scarcest gifts there is, but to get the chance seems to make the sigh candlestick for the worst of tallow-dips.
It aint what you do but how you do it that a nigh cancing the for the worst of tailow-dips.

It aint what you do but how you do it that builds folks a reputation."

"I can't do anything but what everybody else cun do," said the girl sailly. "I always wished I could sing beautifully or be good for something particular."

"You want to get talked about an' set up for land and set up.

I nint goin' to preach a word more. I aint goin' to preach a word more. You do the first thing you see to do, and don't you go an' be 'shamed cause it's that thing 'stead o' some other. Be open, an' have pride about it. My grandma'am used to tell a story about a woman that had come down in the world an' went to sellin' fish, an' they beard her goin' along the street a squeakin' out 'Sprats' sprats! I hope to mercy nobody'li bear me." bear me.

Mary laughed aloud with great delight.

Aunt Hannah's stories were the joy of all who knew her, and her homely wisdom and sympathy had stood many a discouraged friend in knew her, and her homely wisdom and sympathy had stood many a discouraged friend in good stead.

"I do love to keep house," said Mary at last after a season of deep reflection. "I suppose that's mother's giff and mine. I do like to do things about the house,"

"Have ambition then, an' make your gift serve you and other folks," said Aunt Hannah engerly. "There's lack enough of good house-keepin' in this world. Now, I'm beat out darlin', I've got to rest me awhile."

"You sit here and rest—no, go into the other room where the big rocking chair is and the lounge; mother'll soon be at home," said the girl. "I'm going to pick up some o' those things out round the yard. I've been scalding because father didn't do it, but I can clear up a little myself; be doesn't get home till most dark any of these nights. They've been cutting down his pay, too."

"That's real hard," said the guest, "hard for your mother, too; the worst always coners on the women. How's your father now?"

"He's pretty well most days," answered Mary, stopping to think with a little flush of impatience. "No, I guess he isn't, either, he's always talking about his back and his stomach, and thinking everything hurts him that nother makes."

"He's wore out," said the old woman compassionately. "He don't come of a strong race

"He's wore out," said the old woman com-passionately. "He don't come of a strong race and he's been a hard-working man. It upset him his signing for that first shoe firm an' losing most everything. You young folks don't know how hard them things be. He used to be the pleasantest boy, always a whist-lin' an' singin'."

in an' singin'."

Mary looked up in surprise. She never had had the least sentiment about her unlucky father; her mother had a certain dignity and lady-likeness which she admired, but as for her father he was a plain and rough-looking man, who was always gloomy and disapproving except at the rarest intervals, when the visit of some old acquaintance or an occasional holiday jaunt out into the country made him appear more cheerful. He was always very friendly with Aunt Hannah, as was everybody who knew her.

"Some nice brisk wornwood tea'll set him right up," soid the good old son!. "I had you all on my mind when I first waked up this mornin' as the birds were singin'."

mornin' as the birds were singin'."

"Neither of the two spoke until the silence became embarrassing a

" I'm glad you did, mother'll be so glad to see you. Now, I'm going out in the yard," said Mary, "and I'll have it looking better as quick as ever I can." She could not have told why she felt so light-

She could not have told why she felt so light-bearied and energetic at that moment. All the shadows had blown away. Annt Hannah, who really felt tired, went into the sitting-room to take a nap, and Mary only stopped to spread something over her and then with solden impulse stooped down and kissed the soft old cheek. "Dear heart, I thank ye!" stid Aunt Hannah gently. She was half asteep already with the comfortable case and habit of her many years. Then Mary pur on an old dress and went out to the shed and found a rake and a basket and began her work under the pear trees. She was curiously lighthearted. Was it the fragrance of the spring air send the blooming trees, was it the escape from the close and dulling air of school, was it the kind, wise talk of Aunt Hannah that had brought her to this better level of things? Nobody could tell. Mary herself did not try to think, but she had not enjoyed anything in a long time as she enjoyed picking up the neighbor's cans that had fallen through the broken partition fence, and the pieces of refuse, and raking their little garden clean and sweeping the path to the gate. She was just tying up the grape vine with a bit of string, an hour later, when her mother came bome looking tired and harried.

"Why, how nice everything looks," she tired and hurried.

"Why, how nice ererything looks," she said gratefully. "Did you do it yourself, Mary? I have been wishing our yard looked nice. I noticed everybody's else as I went along and thought they all were neat but ours. Your father has so little time." She besitated to say any more; she was always trying to ex-plain things to Mary about her father, but Mary was always bard and resentful. Macy suited now, and said that he would have a surprise when he came home, for once. "Aunt Hannow, and said that he would have a surprise when he came home, for once. "Annt Hannah has come," she added, looking in her mother's face and still smiling. "She was tired, and I made her acup of tea and then she went to sleep. There she is now!"

Aunt Hannah appeared at the window, and Mrs. Fleming hastened in. Somebody spoke to Mary from the sidewalk.

"Don't you want some help," said a person

"Bon't you want some help," said a person who might have been called either-a very young man, or a very old boy, just as the observer had closen.

"Yes, I do, John," said Mary, engerly.

"Why, where did you come from?"

John Abbott was already in the yard. "My, don't your pear trees look pretty!" he said.

"It's ever so much more like summer in town than it is up to our place." They stood near together, but they did not offer to shake hands, together, but they did not offer to shake hands, though their young faces were full of pleasure at seeing each other.

"I came down to spend the night at Aunt Esther's," explained John. "I had to get me some new clothes, an' our folks wanted some farming tools and so on, an' Mr. Haynes thinks o' raising a good deal o' poultry this year, so he's going to stay, too, an' see about that, an' we're going back early to-morrow. It's awfully busy on the farm now. We didn't see first how we could get away. We brought slown a yoke o' oxen he'd sold, and other things, so 'twas necessary for two of us to come."

John looked very sunburnt and important as if the spring winds and son and rain had weather-beaten him particularly—but his eyes were clear and bright, and he had an air of vast importance. Mary and he had always been neighbors and friends. It was known by all their acquaintances that John Abbott and Mary Floming "weat together," in school-mate fashion. They had really missed each other since he had left school the year before and gone up country to take a place on a large

"What were you doing?" demanded the lad, as if it were amusing flat she should be doing anything at all, and she showed him the graperine, and they stood talking while be pruned that and tinkered the trallis. It be printed that and tinkered the trellis. It was almost ten line when Mary's father staddenly appeared, and they both turned at the sound of his voice, a little shamefaced. He looked very pole, but he spoke very kindly to John—everybody liked John—and he had come from a part of the country where Mr. Fleming used to live himself. "Come in and stay to supper," he said with unwonted eagerness, but John said shyly that he must go back to his annu's, she would be sare to expect him. "I don't know's I ought to eat two meals in the same place, though," he added, "It's likely to frighten folks."

"You've mude the lot look as next as any-

"You've made the lot look as next as any-body's," said Mr. Fleming, standing on the steps and looking about.

"I haven't done mything except about the vine," said John, "Mary's been trying her bond at femalias."

vine," said John.
hand at farming."

"Mary?" asked her father with a puzzled

"Mary?" asked her father with a puzzled

"Mary?" asked her father with a puzzled "Mary?" asked her lather was a book, "Why, that's something new. I afraid she and her mother were out

Mary would naturally have looked surly at this, but, somehow, she did not feel surly for a wonder-perhaps because John was stand-ing by; perhaps because she pitied her father a little for almost the first time. She said that she had felt like working out of doors, it was so pleasant. Size even looked her father straight in the face with a smile, instead of evading him with a frown. They had not been on very good terms lately. It was one of Aunt Hannah's old proverts that it takes two to make a quarrel, but only one to end it, and Mary throught of this as her father went into the house. Something pleasant was at work with het; she felt differently roward recrybody. She was glad, beside, to see John. He would not stay to supper, so they said good bye, and she went in to help her mother. It was time to set the table, and her mother, it was time to set the table, and her mother would need her. They had one boarier, a quiet man, who was an old sequaintance of Mr. Fleming's. People said that he had a good deal of money, but nobody really knew; he was a cierk in the counting-room of a lamber firm. Mr. Davis came in as John Abbett went out, and Mary noticed as she set the table that he stood still in the path booking up at the old pear trees with the sun in their tops, and even bent down a blossoming branch and held it to his face. Aunt Hannah and her father were talking together cheerfully. her father were talking tegether cheerfully.

Mr. Fleming looked up again and again at Mary as she stepped about the room. She never had looked so pretty or so womanly before. He was sorry that he had left it for her to tidy up the yard. He remembered that he had seen some patted plants for sale down the street, and said to himself that he would get up early next morning and dig the borders for Mary and his wife, and buy them some-

When supper was over and cleared away, Annt Hannah got her knitting work out of the big handkerchief bundle which she always carried, and Mrs. Fleming brought some mend-ing and sat down by the window to eatch the last of the daylight. The bourder and Mr. Fleming got out the old checker-board, which always was a sure sign of their friendliness and good spirits. Mary heard footsteps along the side path. "There's John Abbott coming back again," she said, laughing. John came in, looking manly and a little about

"I thought perhaps you'd go and take a walk before dark," he said, and Mary rose with alaerity.

"We can get some of the rest of the girls to go," she suggested, but John said nothing by way of eager encouragement. Annt Hannah watched bim shrewdly as he stood in the doorwatched him shrewdly as he stood in the doorway. She had a wise old head on her shoulders, and she loved young people. She nodded her head two or three times as they departed, but the men were busy again with their game, and Mrs. Fleming was thrending her needle with intentness. "Tis real pleasant to see you. Annt Hamash!" she exclaimed, "I've been wishing you'd happen along."

"I waked up this morning just as the birds were singin'," repeated the old woman, "an' I felt that 'twas my opportunity to come."

The two young people were walking slowly along the road, not toward the center of the village, but out toward the quiet fields and

"Aunt Hannah's a lovely old woman," and Mary, with enthusiasm. "She always makes use feel so pleasant. She isn't a bit like anybody else. I've beard mother say ever so many times that she always had the gift of coming just when people wanted her. She surt of this slown out of the zir."

"Sie used to come to our house when my mother and father were alive," said the young man. "I didn't think much about her then, except that she was pleu-out, as you say, and she always used to be telling over her funny sid John, not without sentinger. "I don't said John, not without sentiment. "I don't know that anybody has missel me," "I did, a good deal," said Mary, frankly, "but of course I've got used now to not seeing you about. There are a good many that have left school this year. Sometimes I wish that I had. I think I ought to go to work and help father."

"He looks sick, doesn't he?" said John.

"He's too young to get so used up."

"He's over fifty," said Mary, from the short perspective of her eighteen years, "He solder than mother." than mother."

"He ought to be right in his prime," said the young man, soberly. "Perhaps it is bad for him to work in the shop. He stoops over more than he did, and coughs a good deal. I thought be looked all gone when I first saw him to-night. I'm thankful I didn't go into the shop hast fall; you know I thought of it?

Well I'm as stoop and now have a thought of it? the sloop fast fall; you know I thought of it? Well, I'm as strong a man now as there is in this county. A good, hard day's work just lines me enough to make me sleepy when night comes. I wish your father'd move up our way. I mean to talk to him. You'd like it, too, and your mother."

"Oh, I don't know?" exclaimed the girl, doubtfully, with a village-born person's uncertainty about the resources and charms of the open country. "Look at that cherry tree all in bloom!"

all in bloom!

You ought to see the trees up at our

"You ought to see the trees up at our place!" insisted her companion.

Mary stopped at that moment on a little bridge over a brook that plastied noisily down a slope through the pasture. The flowering cherry tree was just behind them on the opposite side of the road, and some fresh, young, willow twigs on an old, cropped stump pointed their fragrance to the cherry blossoms. They leaned over the milling and looked down at the head. Notified of the vocume results and to the brook. Neither of the young people spoke until the silence became embarrassing. Then Mary said gravely, "I ought to go to work just as soon as I can. I never thought about it so much as I have to-day. I've got to help mother and I've got to help father. But I won't go into the shop if I can help it, and I never should make a good teacher, and I can't think of anything else. Why won't you go into the shop?" asked John. His heart was beating so that he was afraid Mary would hear it. He could not remember the time that she had not been dear to him, and different from anybody else, longest to be a little older and to have the right to tell Mary all about it. He was sure —no, he was not sure that she remembered -no, he was not sure man and when they things he had said to her years ago, when they things he had said to grow up. Perhaps she were beginning to grow up. thought he had forgotten them.

Why not go into the shep! "It's better for girls than for men. There are nice girls there, and you could make pretty good pay right on, you are so quick to learn things."

"I suppose I might," said Mary, slowly, "but if you knew law I hate to be shut up all day.

"It shan't be for a great while if I can belo "It was all that John Abbott's honest and it." It was all that John Abbot's horest and loving heart could muster courage to say, and Mary did not make any ansaer. Presently she turned toward him quickly. "John!" she said, "I feel as if I were grown up to-day. I don't know why. Aunt Haumah said some things to me that made me think, and so have you. I'm only an every-day girt, and I never

you. I'm only an every-fay girt, and I never thought much about anything, and I needed a good talking to. Aunt Hannah says it isn't what we do, but how we do it that makes anybody worth anything. It makes me feel presty ambitious." 'So it does me," said John. Their young hearts were solered by a great vision of personal duty and responsibility. It surely meant something that they should have been brought together on such a day in Mary Fleming's life.

(Continued in next JOURNAL)

THE ART OF FINDING FAULT

By LILIAN FREEMAN CLARKS

T may seem superfluous to i may seem supermous to begin by saying, "Don't find fault at all when you can possibly avoid it." Nev-ertheless, this is a very im-portant first rule; for in order to make necessary fault-finding count, and be of any real use to yourself, to the delinquent individual, or to both, all needless, suto the delinquent individual, or to both, all needless, superfluous and almies fault-finding must be avoided. Three times out of four fault-finding is merely an expression of impatience, and the only good it does is to relieve the irritable feeling cassed by the carelessness, stapidity or other defects of those with whom we have daily intercourse. To begin with, on every occasion where there is no reasonable hope of doing good by fault-finding, seal your lips as with a bar of iron.

lips as with a bar of iron.

Next, almost always postpone fault-finding until there has been time for consideration. It not speak at the moment the fault has just been committed. However deserved, and even mild, the reproof may be the culprit's mind is not in a state to resolve and axion. mind is not in a state to receive and assimi-late it. When Bridget has just broken your hate it. When Bridget has just broken your best India china soup-tureen, she is so dis-turbed by the accident that she hears you say, "Bridget, do you not remember I have often told you not to carry that tureen on a tray with other dishes, but always to lift it with both bands," etc., with a vague sense that you are "scolding" her, and it is very disagreeable; you are fortunate if she does not reply with some fretful self-justification. When the mind is off its balance, and the When the mind is off its balance, and the nerves agitated, it is not the moment to irri-tate still further. The more childish, unde-yeloped and ill-regulated the character the less is the hope of doing good by such a method.

To simplify the case I will surpose that you are dealing with domestics only. To trent the question of finding fault with children would involve too many side issues.

Here, then, I offer two very simple rules. I do not pretend that they cover the whole ground, but they will be of great practical assistance. sistance.

First—Never go into the kitchen to find fault with Bridget. She is there on her own ground; and if she is fretted into impertinence by what you say you have no resource but an undignified retreat, which leaves her mistress of the field. Send for her to come to you, taking care not to choose a time when her work or other occupations will be interrupted work or other occupations will be interrupted by so doing. Leave her a margin as to time. Second—Begin by saying something kind, which will put Bridget in a good humor. It is easy to do this. Say a word of commendation of her breakfast caltes; or of her neat kitchen. She is now disposed to listen to you. Then go on something like this. "I like your work, on the whole, very much; you are (neat or a good cook, or very good tempered, as the case may be.) But there is one thing that troubles use. You stay out late at night. Now, if you were an elderly woman, perhaps it would not not real responsible. But for a young girl of your age it is not safe. I should not date to allow it. Your mother is not near you now to advise you; and a mother could not help being very anxious about you. could not help being very anxious about you under these circumstances. You know I told you when you came that my rule is to have my domestics at home by (such an hour.) You may not understand the importance of this, but any older person, who has had ex-perience, will tell you the same thing."

I have been obliged to suppose a case, but principle is of varied and d-natured, kindly feult-finding, administered when the mind is free to receive it, may do some good. Irritable expressions of displeasure, never; and moderate and just re-proof, if tactless and ill-applied, is almost as

There should be, however, a constant, gentle preparation of the soil, by judicious commendation. Judicious; not flattery, nor constant praise. Recognize all that is good; show that you perceive an attempt at improvement. With most people the tendency is the other Bridget borns her beend in the baking and her mistress says, "Bridget, your bread was not good to-day," Bridget knows that: alse knows, also, that she has made good bread ten times, and no notice was taken of it. The eleventh time she burned it, and that time she was blamed. Let me close with a true anecdate. A kindhearted old lady of my acquaintance em-ployed a young colored man to do Johs about her promises. One day Henry, in receiving orders from her, forgot to remove his hat. My friend's old-fashioned breeding could not put up with this. This was the form of her reproof: "Henry, if you were my son, I should say,' My son, where is your hat?"

THE WOMAN WHO IS NERVOUS

BY KATE UPON CLARK

MONG the character-istics of the time is a istics of the time is a strong benacity of youth smong the women of fifty or sixty and upward. By this remark is not meant the affectation of youthfulness in dress and appearance. The Mrs. Skewtons are less in favor now than ever before. But than ever before. there is now a striking prevalence of youthful vigor and activity among women at an age when they were, not so many years ago, thought to be past all active participation in the main affairs of life. If you are inclined to doubt this statement, count the gray-baired women, with freely been and observe whom you this statement, count the gray-haired women, with fresh faces and clastic step, whom you meet during a single day's walk on any favorite avenue. You will find that they bear a large proportion to the whole number. One reason why the faces of these elderly women are so rosy, unwrinkled and full of the zest of life, is that they have not allowed their nerves to go to pieces with every slight shock which they have experienced. The importance of this matter to both the outer and toner woman may be readily perceived by a simple illustration.

timer woman may be readily perceived by a simple illustration.

The other day a pale, weary-looking creature, in other words an exceptional woman among the throngs of strong and locality shoppers upon the street, was possing an engine, when it suddenly began to let off steam.

"Oh, mercy!" cried this poor woman to her companion. "Ea't that terrible! Oh, my!"

Oh, my!"

Her face was very much drawn as she said this, and she could not have shivered more miserably if she had seen a ghost.

Another woman who travels hundreds, if not thousands of miles in the course of every year, is never weary of descanting upon the "tire-conceness" of a journey. It is no wonder that she finds a ride in the curs "tire-cone."

She is never ill from the mostlert but she state.

"tireconceness" of a journey. It is no wonder that she finds a ride in the curs "tirecone." She is never ill from the motion, but she steps on board a train always with a settled determination to be wretched until she alights from it. She sits bolt upright nearly all the way, shudders at the creakings and the squeakings of the wheels, and here no opportunity for "ohing" and "ahing" during the whole course of the trip. It is not strange that she reaches her journey's end utterly worn out, and that she has grown old at the rate of six months at hour ever since she left hone.

A very simple way in which to avoid such a strain as this is to make up one's mind before leaving beone that one will take matters just as casily as possible. A deliberate attitude of mind should be assumed before setting forth on a day's journey, that one will waste no more of one's vital energy in worry by that way than is absolutely necessary. That wrinkle in your face, dear madam, which was visible when you heard a whistle blow just now, is fast making a permanent place for itself upon your constenance. Worse still, it is imprinting a corresponding mark upon your inner self. Why not follow the old Irishman's itself upon your countenance. Worse still, it is imprinting a corresponding mark upon your inner self. Why not follow theold Irishman's injunction about "taking things aisy," and smile at the whistles and jolts? Smiles, you know, are becoming, if not too pronounced and frequent, and they preserve youth and vitality. This fact, the fresh-faced ladies who have been alluded to, discovered long ago, or else they would not have that lovely color in their checks to-day.

Heir cheeks to day.

And why not lean back as comfortably as you may during your long, dusty ride in the cars? Chloroform your nerves with a good dose of will-power, direct your thoughts to the most agreeable subject that you can find, and take your trip as a providential rest from the amoving cares of your usual routine. There is a good deal of oft-forgatten truth in the trite lines which tell us of life, that it,

"However good, however had, depends on how you take it."

One of Henry Ward Beecher's most striking sermons was on happiness. Every man, he insisted, has a right to it, and should allow nobody to interfere with this right. We were made for happiness, and without our own collusion it cannot be stolen away from us, Losses, treason, illness, let them come, but let no neers external treable cheat us of our no more external trouble cheat us of our rights. With a clear conscience within us, even when the clouds are all about us, happi-ness may be still secure.

This wholesome counsel has been eagerly absorbed by woman. She no longer lan-guishes under the pangs of "disappointed love." She does not run shricking away from a harmless mouse. She does not fly into a dashes up the street. She knows oh, wise one—that she is only using herself up in such nonsense. She remains tronquil and un-troubled under all ordinary provocations. She has too much serious work on hand to spend her strength in useless spasses over nothing. In short, though there are still butterfiles, and drones, and foolish virgins among our women, the great mass of them are shaking off the abourd traditions of ages. They are determined to be confortable happy, and to keep off the wrinkles and infirmities of age as long as they can. Single or married, honsely or brautiful, clever or dull, women are surely acquiring the grace of adap-tation, and the joy and charm of a becoming acceptation of their environment.

Mrs. Kate Urose Clark, late associate editor of THE LADGE HONE JOYESAL, has become the editor of "Romanes," a monthly magazine publishing 15 to 20 complete stories in each issue. A sample copy will be sent for len cents by Romance Publishing Co., Clinion Hall, Astor Place, New York.

FOR A GOOD INVESTMENT, BUY GRIFFITH LOTS Griffith is the coming great factory suburb of Chi-cage, for an other has two oil pipes and four rail-roods. See impose our back cover and investigate, a

A PRIVILEGED PERSON

By Caroline Alwaler Mason

Author of "A Daughter of the Dune," "Mrs. Rossiter Lamar," "A Christmas Gerl," etc.

CHAPTER IV

STRENGTH IN TEMPTATION

HE fight which Kath-arine Math-er fought, beginning on that bit-February morning, was one wholly be-yond the ken of any human being save herself. Outwardly, there was nothing to alter. Martin Jameson had never sought her presence, nor she his. They worked, it is true, occasionally in the same room, but they did not work together. There existed between them absolutely no tangible relation. It was not explain and blood relation. It was not against flesh and blood that Katharine wrestled, it was against the inner, unguessed domination of her nature by his.

Her religious life had always been marked by simplicity and plain Puritanic reserve. Now she suddenly became a seeker of ritualistic devotion, craving the discipline of long prayer, fasting, and even secret spiritual penance, hoping ardently by these means, unknown to all but herself, to win back her peace of mind. all but herself, to win back her peace of mind. But it did not come. How could it come, when, no matter to what stern resolution of denial she had set herself, the sound of one step on the stairs, a word, however cusual or commonplace, a touch of the hand, a look, could have power to set her pulses in commotion, to quicken her breath, to fill her with a joy as insane as it was unconquerable?

There were days when, all her scruples thrown away. Katharine gave herself up to this influence, when she let herself po, and made herself as charming as she might. Martin Jomeson could not have been the man he was had he been insensible to the subtle witchery of the girl in hours like these. A change in his voice, in his way toward her, so slight that it could not have been described in words, responded.

in words, responded.

Thus it came about that while poor Kutharine, in her higher moods, was mortifying flesh and spirit to uproot the very thought of this man from her heart, he was all the while, by reason of her hours of weakness, coming more deeply into her life, and assuming fresh control of its very assigns.

more deeply into her life, and assuming fresh control of its very springs.

She awoke to this fact, with a strange mingling of exultation and terror, on a certain evening in early April, and yet it was the smallest, slightest thing which happened.

Mr. Jameson had remained to dinner. Katharine, leaving the three over their dessert, had stepped out upon the veranda, and on down one of the garden paths among the shrubbery, where the buds were bursting their shexilis. sheating.

shouths.

The sun had set, leaving a clear, primrose sky, with a crescent moon hanging low, and the evening star just above it like a great drop of light. The air was full of the exquisite suggestions of early spring—faint, evanescent fragrance, soft notes of birds, light pulsations coming, who knows from where?

Soon she saw Martin Jameson coming down the main walk from the house. He had taken leave of the corrects and was on his way house.

leave of her purents and was on his way home. Seeing her at a little distance, he crossed the turf to where she stood. This, from him, was an unusual attention. A brief how was all that Kathurine had looked for as he passed.

"Dues this seem to you the most wonderful

"Does this seem to you the most wonderful spring youever knew?" he asked, as be joined her.

"Perhaps; yes, in a way," sold Katharine, faltering a little.

There was no self-consciousness or hesitation in him.

tion in him.

"To me, of late, a night-like this is something divine in its revelation. It never touched me so before—this strange incommunicable sense of the life of nature. I believe it means more than I have ever dreamed."

"You have been reading Wordsworth!"

"No," he said, half smiling; "you are wrong. I know nothing of poetry, except the things I have beard you rend."

In the dark, damp mould of the carden hed.

things I have beard you rend."

In the dark, damp mould of the garden bed by which they stood a group of narcissus had come into blossom.

Moved by some indefinable impulse, Katha-

Moved by some innermant the flowers, pure rine bent and picked one of the flowers, pure its long slender stem. She and white, on its long slender stem. held it for an instant, and then, with a shyness which she had never known until she knew this man, said:

knew this man, said:

"This is a poem, this flower. I will give you this to take with you."

For an instant hand and flower were held in his strong grasp. Then, suddenly dropping them he said, almost coldly;

"Thank you; I do not wear flowers. I should not know what to do with it."

The hand which held the rejected blossom fell to Katharine's side: but even as it did so.

fell to Katharine's side; but even as it did so, she laughed on irrepressible, girlish laugh. "In all my life," she said, "I never saw a man like you!"

He looked at her earnestly, the smile which had sprung to meet her rippling laughter pass ing quickly from his face.

"And I never saw"— he began, stopped himself, was silent for an instant, his face growing stern, then merely adding "Good-night," turned and left her hight," turned and left her Katharine walked alone in the garden until dusk gave place to darkness. She had more food for thought than she wanted. Well she knew what he had started to say, and how much it meant from him. And there was hand Ensign! Only yesterday, in the study, he had spoken of the girl as if her re-lation to himself was perfectly understood, "This is playing with fire," thought Katha-

"Kate, my dear, can you drive a little way out of your way to do an errand for me?" asked Mr. Mather.

His daughter was about entering the coupé which stood on the broad grave! walk before the house door. He had followed her out more the store.

upon the steps.

"Why, to be sure I will. In what direction is your errand?" was Katharine's response.

"It is in a part of the city you do not know very we'l—Orchard Street, No. 63. It is very we'l-Orchard Street, No. 65. It is rather on the outskirts."

"Oh, yes," returned Kate, "it is Mr. Jameson's. I know the house."

"So much the better. I want you to see him, if possible. He has not been here in a week; has been out of town, they tell me, at his office, but he is expected home about six there, too, "Ensign, James, Book keeper," was the concise statement of the directory. A little more than this she knew of the Eusigns, through Mrs. Fisher, who always responded readily to her half-indifferent questions. Amy was the eldest of five children; she had been educated for a teacher, but a failure in health had turned her aside from teaching, and sew-had turned her aside from teaching, and sew-ing had been resorted to as a less exacting oc-cupation. They were "a lovely family," so said Mrs. Fisher.

Katharine Mather stood on the small porch of No. 63, and rung the bell, which had a very tiny tinkle; a light green paper, studded with gilt stars, lined the narrow windows on cither side of the door. These salient points were impressed on her percenwindows on either side of the door. These salient points were impressed on her percep-tions as she waited for a moment, and then the door was opened by Mrs. Jameson. Katharine knew at once that it was she. There was not a strong resemblance in her to her son, for she was a handsome woman with iron-gray hair, and fine, dark eyes, but some-thing in her form and presence assured Katha-rine of the relationship.

thing in her form and presence assured Katharine of the relationship.

"Is Mr. Martin Jameson at home?" The question came a little timidly.

"He is out of town, but I expect him in on the train which is due almost at this moment."

Mrs. Jameson had a clear-cut manner of speech, made attractive by a slight old country corons.

With her frank smile. Katharine explained who she was, and why she had come.

"For an instant hand and flower were held in his strong grasp."

this afternoon. It is very important that I should hear to-night whether he can go to Boston with me to-more w to see Morring. Will you see him, and ask him that? He knows all about the plan for going; we talked it over these he was hore her.

knows all about the plan for going; we talked it over when he was here last."

Having agreed to carry out her father's wish, Katharine entered the carriage and drove off, a little pale, more than a little troubled. She knew quite as well as her father that Martin Jameson had not come to the house for a week. A week ago that night it was that they had had their little conversa-tion in the garden. An emphasis, stronger than she liked, seemed put upon that inter-view by his unusual absence. And now she must seem to follow him, to seek him out in his own home! It did not sait her maidenly reserve to do this, and yet it would have been reserve to do this, and yet it would have been absurd to decline to do the small favor for her father, impossible to have let him guess that there was anything of self-consciousness or complexity in her feeling toward his good

She made her round of calls, and just before six drove into the dull, semi-suburban street where the Jamesons lived.

No. 63 was a tidy, well-painted habitation of comfortable aspect, as unpretentions and unadorned as its master, thought Katharine, as she viewed it from the carriage window, Next beyond it was a small, old-fashioned white house. Katharine knew who lived

"Come right in! come right in, my dear young lady," said Mrs. Jameson, with warm cordiality. "Martin will be most pleased to see you," and she led the way through a nar-row hall into a pleasant parlor. This room opened into a second, with a wide double doorway. A large stove stood between the two, with glowing mice windows. This stove especially struck Katharine's eye; she could bardly remember when she had seen one before, it seemed to mark a wholly different condition of living to that with which she was

In the center of the back parlor a round table, covered with shining linen, was set for an ble, covered with shining linen, was set for an evening meal, and upon it stood a student lamp, shedding a softened brilliancy upon gluss and silver. There was welcome in the warmth and brightness; a sense of cheer and confort in the atmosphere, "homely" as it

It is to this that Martin Jameson belongs. said Katharine to herself, "not to my world. While she was thinking this, and saying something very different some one knocked on a door in the back parior leading into the garden; and directly, without waiting, the door was pushed open. Katharine sat where she could see without being seen. A young lady, in a trim, dark dress and white apron, stepped lightly into the room, and this young oly she saw at once was Amy Eusign. She was carrying a plate with something on it, covered with a white markin. Katharine saw ber face distinctly. She had noticed its happiness before, but to-night it was fairly radiant in its expression, and bright with delicate color.

Mrs. Jameson hastened into the other room.

Amy stepped to the tea table, and set the plate she carried down upon it, saying, as she did so, in a voice like a bird's note: "Martin is not here yet, is he? I did bake him a cake for his supper! See; isn't it a nice one?"

one?"
"Very," replied the older lady, "and what a good child you were to do it, for I have been too busy for cake making. And then Martin likes your cakes better than mine."

"Does he? Perhaps, just a little," laughed the girl, removing her hat. Evidently she was to remain for tea.

Mrs. Jameson, in a low voice, now men-tioned the presence of a caller in the parlor, whereupon Anoy, with heightened color, and a little startled air, withdrew into a part of the room invisible to Katharine. At this moment the house door was opened with a lately key and Martin Language parts in homent the house door was opened with a latch key, and Martin Jameson came in.

Katharine rose and advanced to the center of the room that he might not fail of seeing her. She did not care to be a spectator any longer. He held out his hand and greeted her cordially, but gravely. She saw that he looked worn and more soler even than usual. In a few words her errand was given, and her "Good-evening" to mother and son said. The latter accompanied her to the carriage, and as-sisted her to enter it, but he did not speak as he did so. Katharine drove away with a great throbbing pain and possion in her heart, and with tears of which she was anconscious fall-

Such a pretty picture it had been; the sweet bright "homeyness" of it all, the vigor-ous, clear-eyed mother, and that girl with her happy face and pretty ways, and the name Martin on her lips!

Martin on her lipe!

Was it in her power to blight it all? And could she use such power? Never. God keep her from such a thought!

That night Katharine marked in a little book she read these words:

"Yes, this sin which has sent me weary-hearted to bed, and desperate in heart to morning work; that has male my plans miscarry until I am a coward, that cuts me off from prayer.

this can be conguered. from prayer . . . this can be conquered. I do not say annihilated, but better than that, r do not say annuments, but better than that, conquered, captured and transfigured into a friend; so that I at last shall say: My temptation has become my strength! for to the very fight with it I owe my force,"

CHAPTER V

A PARABLE IN THE FIRE

YES, Miss Mather, you have probably often heard before a bridge is not stronger than the strength of its weakest place." "As you say, I have heard that before, but I entirely object to the application of that principle in morals. I don't believe in it."

"But you must believe in it," returned Martin Jameson, quickly.
"Why must 1?"

"Because it is true, and it is childish to re-fuse to accept truth."

A vivid color came to Katharine's checks.

"Assertion is not proof," she cried. "You believe that a mun is no stronger than the weakest point in his character. I would not bear to believe that."

"But you must see that no matter how strong he may be in all other ways, the testing must come where he is weak."

"The weakert place must stead the string."

"The weakest place must stand the strain," put in Mr. Mather from his desk. The three were together in the study.

"Then all force and beauty and nobleness of character are less than nothing," said Katharine impetuously, "if in one point the man is weak and fails,"

"How is it with the beauty.

"How is it with the bridge?" asked Martin Jameson. "If it falls, all of the strength and beauty upon it merely adds to the greatness of its fall, so much more 'rubbish to the void."

weakness worse."
"Oh, what a horrible doctrine! Why should "Oh, what a horrible doctrine! Why should we try for goodness at all, then? For we all must fail in some one point. No one can be equally strong everywhere. Who is invulnera-ble? Perhaps you are, I am not."

"The doctrine may be horrible, as you say, but I believe we need to have it emphasized. It is too much the fashion for us to be indul-cent to our weaknesses, to live with them in a

Everything that adds to its strength makes its gent to our weaknesses, to live with them in a gent to our weaknesses, to live with them in a good degree of harmony, in fact."

"Then you would say," pursued Katharine,
"that if I, for instance, am upright, truthful, courageous, generous—I am not you know, we are supposing a case—and all other time things, but have a bad temper, I am no better morally than my temper? That is, to set the standard, is the basis on which I am to be estimated?"

"I should say of you" returned Mr. Lange.

"I should say of you," returned Mr. Jame-son, smiling, "that your character, otherwise of a high order, was weakened by your very bad temper Fun and fire flashed from Katharine's eyes, My temper, please understand, is not very bad. It is really particularly good. Isn't it, father?"

"Ob, in spots, 'Human warious," return-ed Mr. Mather, who was more occupied with his papers than with their conversation,

"Please, denr papa, don't open your mouth in dark sayings any more," cried Katharine;
"you are so disappointing. Mr. Jameson, say that my temper is good!" and she gave a little imperious stamp of her foot.
"I don't know about that Didn't I heav

I don't know about that. Didn't I bear you say last week that you were completely out of putience with some one who stepped on your gown and tore it?"
"Why, yes; but then I had reason to be

"But I did not suppose you would lose your temper without provocation. That would argue your intelligence defective."

"Which it isn't," retorted Kate, replied deliberately, "you are quick, "Thank you, sir."

"Thank you, sir,"

"But you ought to have more application."

"What do I need of application, when I can reach the result I want without it? I don't believe in work for the sake of work! I suppose for you, digging is its own reward," she added, audachously, but glancing up into his face, bull affaid of her own temerity.

He smiled. "I am not likely to do much of it." he remarked, "as long as you are in the room. I am afraid you are like other women after all—interested, really, only in personalities. See where this conversation be-personalities. See where this conversation be-gan, and where it is ending!"

Katharine hung her head a little like a childlen child.

childen child.

"Perhaps you would rather I would go down stairs, and leave you a better chance to work?" shemided, meekly for her.

"I would, indeed."

"That's right, Jameson," exclaimed Mr. Mather. "I wish you would send her away. I can't do anything while she is here."

But Katharine was already out of the room, having included them both in one parting glance made up of anger and fun, humility and pride.

A mouth lad passed since her visit to Orchard Street, a mouth which had seen what Katharine almost thought, at times, was final compaest and self-mastery on her part. She had held herself firmly in band; every thought was challenged, and if the countersign "remoneintion" was unknown to it, it was held guilty of treason.

Sheatomaticum russeed that Martin Januarou's held guilty of treason.

Shesometimes gue-sed that Martin Jameson's experience during those weeks was much the color of her own. He made no sign. The only difference in their bearing to one another from the cartier time was that their eyes sought not to meet, and that they spoke to each other only when it because necessary.

But the deal county when it because necessary.

Such other only when it became necessary.

But to-day, brought about by some unseen influence, a strong reaction was upon them both. In the conversation in the study each was moved by suppressed excitement; they did more than they dared, lifted out of themselves they knew not how. Perhaps with Katharine this impulse came from a sense that nothing barmful could happen now. It was too late for danger. Mrs. Fisher had shown her, in a visit she had paid to her rooms the day before, a bit of silk, "a piece of Anay Kusigu's weda bit of silk, 'n piece of Amy Kusign's wed-ding gown. It won't be needed just yet, but I have couxed her to let memake it for her—for love, you know—she has been with me so long." So she had said.

long." So she had said.

Katharine came down stairs to the library, which she found empty. A smouldering fire was on the hearth, the room was much darker than the study. Two half-barned logs, on fire to the core, but glowing, not biazing, had failen apart over the antirons. Katharine found the tongs and lifted these logs, placing them in close contact. Then she drew m ensychair up before the hearth and putting her feet on the fender, sat fully watching the study in black and red. She liked the dull, suppressed fire in those logs; she liked the stillness of the black and red. She liked the dull, suppressed fire in those logs; she liked the stillness of the room. She wanted a chance to think, to grow calm. Why did Martin Jameson book at her in just that steady, controlling way? Why did he speak in the tone which thrilled and stirred her so? If he were only like other men? They had always become thresome to her after a time. Soreer one had troubled her with after-thoughts like these. If he would only do or say something trivial, commonplace; if he would show her his weak side; if she could feel herself superior to him somewhere. Then, she thought, it would be easy to crowd him out of her heart, to become indifferent. im out of her heart, to become imlifferent. How strongly be laid spoken this afternoon! Was be thinking of a possible weakness in hinself, in her? Oh no-that could not be and yet— Just then, with a little burst of sound, a great flame sprang out from the glowing wood before her and enveloped both, the logs which had been smouldering apart.

It startled Katharine.

"There is a parable in the fire," she said softly, but about, a half smile on her tips. Beware!

With sudden restlessness she rose and walked about the room; then going into an alcove at its farther end, she seated herself at the piano, and began playing a song of Schubert's sofily.

While she played, some one entered the library and shoot before the fire. Katharine's fingers trembled on the keys. A slight shiver passed over her. She knew who was in the room as well as if she had seen him. No other person could move her after this sort. Martin Jameson showly crossed to the plans, and stood beside it. Katharine played on, not looking up, trying to stearly herself. She knew that the hour of crisis had come for them; the very air of the room seemed vibrating with it. What would come afterward? she ing with it. What would come afterward? she ing with it. What would come afterward? she wondered, in an odd, impersonal attitude toward berself. Was this to be an interpretation of the fire which had been a parable? Still she played, dizzy with dread of what might come if she paused, and yet longing wildly to look up into the face of the man begins of the start begins. side her. He was very patient; she knew that he would wait.

Then at last the music was still.
" Are you angry with me?" he asked, after a nature of inter silegue.

"No," she said, very low, not looking up.

"To talk of weakness in you?" he exclaimed bothy; "it was brutal! I could not leave it so. hotly; "it was brutal! I could not leave a se.
All I said of weakness was of my-elf-not of any other man, never of you. If I were as Mong as you?"—and he stopped.
Then she looked up, and meeting his eyes as in them samething which was more than saw in them something which was more than she had ever fearest, more than she had ever hoped. Each know then what had mastered them for what it was: "a mortal love," as the love of Launcelot and Guinevere has been Words could not have told it-that would have been treachery two obvious—but it was told. The hearts had been on fire too long, the flames had burst forth. Katharine rose from the piane, holding her chapped hands out as one who implores. There was a little rustle of silk in the room beyond them then, and they heard Mrs.

Mather's voice saying:
"Is that you, Kate? Why do you have so much fire in this room? It is more than we need on a night like this."

"I believe it is, -more than I meant to have," muranared Kate, coming forward.

CHAPTER VI

A DOWER OF INWARD HAPPINESS

THE night was far advanced, but Katharine Mather had not thought of sleep. Pully dressed, size walked the room or sat in her wide window-seat looking out into the silent garden, and the sky "throbbing with stars."

At times her mood was gentle and her fare meek; then the force of clear, close thinking would set its stamp upon brow and eyes, but assain a swift change would not over her, her again a swift change would pass over her, her head would be held firm and creet, her eyes would flash with dangerous light, while all the will and pride winds her usserted themselves.

"Renounce?" she asked herself, "Why should I—why should we?" and her color despensel. "For us—we belong to each other. We have a right to our life and our love. Shall the eagles surrender their freedom for the sake of a little homebred pigeon? What does that poor sewring girl, Amy Easign, know of love like this? How can she understand a man like Martin Jameson? But I understand him. I glory in his power! What he calls his weakness has mouther name. Oh, my love!" weakness has mouther name. Oh, my love!" and Katharine stretched out her hands as she

Ind done that other hour.

Even with the gesture and the thought came a burst of pussionate tears.

"He is not mine, and be can never be," she

"He is not mine, and be can never be," she told berself in the swift transition of her thought, "Nothing less happened, What was it but a look? and one can mistake a look. It shall be ignored by all our future. No harm has been done. We shall never yield to this strange influence again. We shall neet and speak as we used, and I can still know the rapture of his look, his smile, his thoughts of me, but no sign need tell it. There shall be no trouble, no heart break."

no trouble, no heart brenk,"
For Katharine had gone back in the thought to that evening when she had seen the bright interior of Martin Jameson's home; when she had seen the girl to whom his faith was pledged, in her innocent, trustful happiness, and her heart smote her. And now her better sense told her of the impossibility of life under the conditions she had just imagined. Tennyson's line " And faith, sudaithful, kept him faisely true' haunted her memory. She scorned hep-elf for the weakness which had admitted such a thought.

"No," she thought, her intellect regaining its balance, and her clear perception of things asserting itself, "that way lies death. It is for one of us, that girl who thinks she loves him, or for me, to be struck out of the problem—to renounce love, if it costs life itself. Then the question is simply; Shall it be Amy Ensign who will do this? or Katharine Mather? Which is better able to make the sacrifice?" Bringing all her quick imagination to bear upon the situation Katharine locked upon herself in contrast with Amy as if she had herself in contrast with Amy as if she had been another woman.

"I have had every privilege, every enjoy-ment that Gol gives to a human life," she told herself; "health, power, success, religion, moral and intellectual training and develop-ment, the wide life of art and poetry and music; travel; love beyond words to tell here at home, and much outside; all of grace and beauty that a human soul taught of God and love of its fellowmen can know. Every con-ceivable good influence has been brought to ceivable good influence has been brought to bear upon me for twenty-four years. What is the product? What am I? Great enough to do this thing?

"What is Amy Ensign? A poor book-keeper's daughter, struggling even for a com-mon school education under hard conditions.

mon school education under land conditions. Defeated by ill health, earning her living by sewing through long weary days upon the cistles that I and other women of my class wear. A life of weariness and painfulness, of much sacrifice and little outward beauty. But after all, what a happy face she has, as if a fountain of joy was always springing up in her heart. What does that mean? What, indeed, but Martin Jameson's love, and why shoold she not be happy, having that? And I, I with my overflowing fullness of life, and to take this from her? Her heart would break, of course, she is of that sort, but I hardly think she would die. The poor man of the parable lived after his ewe lumb was taken? She might even care for somebody eise. I never can," and with the hardness she bad tried to resume swept away in a torrent of sobs tried to assume swept away in a torrent of sobs Katharine threw herself upon her kness. knowing well that only God could save her in this hour.

The westling lasted until sourise, and then Katharine rose from her knees with her white face testifying of the hard fight she had fought. But her restless, fitful engerness was gone, Without he-station or nervoqueses she pro-ceeded to draw out from her closet a small trunk, and filled it, with clothing, which she carefully selected and folded. Then for an hour she rested, and at six rang for a cup of coffic to be brought to her room, and ordered the carriage to take her to the milway station at seven. At times there was a half smile upat seven. At times there was a half smile up-on her face; a prescure more than human seemed to be with her, and there were words of David's old song upon her lips:

"Our sent is escaped as a bird out of the strare of the footbeen."

The stars is broken and we are escaped, thir telp is in the name of the Lord, Walch made heaven and earth."

For in Katharine's heart at last had riven the perception that of all her privileges, the greatest, though the most terrible, was the privilege of renunciations

Just before seven she went to her mother's dressing room, calling her softly. Mrs. Mather threw a dressing gown about bersell, and came to see what Katharine wanted.

"Mamma, dear," she suid, "I have had a sudden impulse to go down to New York and see Consin Margaret before she sails. Don't you think it is a good idea?"

"Why yes, perhaps so. She will be glad enough to have you."
"Yes, and it seems too had to let her go without seeing her once more. I got to thinking of it in the night. You know Margaret does want me to go with her."

"She is to be in Switzerland through the summer,"

"Yes, she plans to spend most of August in the Engadine, I think. It begins to look very enticing, manna. Do you think you could space use if Margaret should be very persua-

"We might go over in July, you know." Mrs. Mather had succeeded in opening her eves by this time.

"So you neight. Well, if I should conclude to sail on the Britannic on Saturday, you will put the things I want in my rosset trunk, won't you? and you and papa will come down and see me off. Good-bye." Katharine sailed on the Britannic. She sent no word or message to Martin Jameson. He needed none. They understood each other, and he accepted the line she had last out for him. She was at interluken when a letter from him reached her in July, telling her of his tourrings, and of his removal to a distant city. There was nothing of great significance in his letter, but as it was the only one beever wrote her, Kathurine may be forgiven for keeping it as something sacred and precious. Only this scatence in it would have been hard for any one but herself to understand: "I thank or for all that your mobleness has made pos-de. By the grace of God 1 shall not full now, although sometimes the battle bas gone against me.

Years have passed. Martin Jameson, according to Mr. Mather's prophecy, has become a great man in his profession. Wealth and honor have come to him; he is a man of power and influence. The social world declares his wife influence. The social world declares his wife "a sweet little woman, and so charming in her own home.

Katharine Mather is unmarried. Her mother has even crossed to deplore this fact at least, finding "a daily beauty" in her daughter's life, which she would be ill able to forego.

Katharine's friends perceive that time or some other factor in human life has greatly changed her from her imperious girlhood. She is not less spirited now, or less enthusins tic in taking her part in the many-sided work which comes to Christian women in our day. It is a spiritual change which has passed upon her, almost indefinable. She is not occupied with herself as she used to be; she exacts less of the world and receives, in a high sense, far more than of old; she is at once stronger and gentler as a woman than as a girl, and upon her maidenhood there has fallen "a dower of inward happiness."

POT-POURRI OF ROSES

BY LAURA WHITTEN

ATHER the rose petals ATHER the rose petals in the early morning, and place them in a cool, slandy place for an hour to dry. Toss them lightly, and then put them in layers, with salt sprinkled freely between, in a large covered glass in a large covered glass dish. You may add every morning. When fresh petals to this every morning. When you have a sufficient quantity, let the whole stand ten days, shaking thoroughly every morning. Now, in the bottom of a glass fruit jur place two ounces of whole allspice, crushed, and two ounces of stick cinnamon, broken coursely. Fill the jar with the rose petals and salt. This must now stand six weeks, or even longer, when it may be prepared for the per-manent jar. During these six weeks the jar should be perfectly air tight.

Mix together one onnee each of ground

alix together one ounce each of ground cloves, allspice, cinnamonand mace; one ounce of orris root, shredded and bruised; two ounces of lavender flowers. These are the proportions to be used to one quart of the rose petals. Place this mixture in alternate layers with the contents of the glass fruit jar, in the noise organizated for that is to be travel. in the more ornamental far that is to be used permanearly. If you choose you may add a few drops of the oil of your favorite flower, rose, gerations or violet, and pour over the whole one-quarter of a pint of good cologne. This put-pourri will hat for years. From time to time you may add a little lavender water or any nice perfuse. The fragrant odor from a rose jar filled with leaves and fragrant spices is very penetrating, and is particularly pleasant in large drawing rooms and halls. The odor is not only refreshing but delightful as well. A rose jar filled with a good stock should never be allowed to remain constantly open; if the covers are removed for an faour at a time twice a day, your rooms will become permeated with a sweet, reviving orbor, that will be a delight to all who enter

Now, one word. When you select your rose jur, the best are those with double covers without perforations in either cover. You will find them with a single cover; with a double cover, the inner one perforated and with a double cover, the outer one performed; and the best of all is the one which I have mentioned. My jar is of imported Japanese ware with such a cover, and the Japanese peo-ple may be said to be composeers in all things that delight the olfactories. In conclusion, let me say, if you own a rose bush, by all negets have a rose jar. It is not only a delightful thing to prepare, but once prepared, you will find it

"A thing of beauty, and a joy forever,"

AS IT IS TOLD IN OUR FACES

By G. S. LEE

F1 could not have both 1 had

F I could not have both I had rather have an attractive face at fifty than at twenty-five might marry me, but the one at fifty would show that I was worth marrying. With a homely face at twenty-five the fair ones might vote me into single blessedness, but the fine face at tifty would show them what a mistake they had made. My face at twenty-five is the one God has given me. My face at fifty is the one that I have furnished myself. The old man's face is a history; the young The old man's face is a history; the young man's face is a prophecy—a kind of conditional prophecy. The old man's face is a fact about himself; the young man's is a theory—a dream in feature, one of nature's vague guesses drenm in feature, one of nature's vague guesses of what he can do with himself.

I love old faces; they are always true. The old man's face is his autobiography; it is his life in miniature. A face is the scenery of the soil, the camera of our thoughts; although we have not really seen a face until our hearts have followed the whole repersoire of its expressions, yet each man's habitual face, as a fair general expression of himself, is as if a composite had been taken, and the soul had had a thousand sittings, each negative differcomposite had been taken, and the soul had a thousand sittings, each negative differing in its way, but all combined resulting in this one. Why should a man be salamed of his wrinkles? It is being aslamed not of what he seems, but of what he is. Wrinkles in a nam's face are a kind of orthography, nature's handwriting, the shorthand of features, in which the nam ideas of a man's life are set down without his knowing it, and in anits of himself, and in the very midst of his spite of himself, and in the very midst of his denials. It is a language without a grammar, denins. It is a iniginge without a grammar, and only the vaguest sort of a lexicon, but every man can read it. It is German to the German, and Indian to the Indian; the universal language of the globe, the instinctive Volapuk of mankind! These faces of ours, or rather these histories of ours, bound into our rather these histories of ours, bound into our being, and printed on our very presence for public circulation.

There is a story in every face. The spirit keeps a diary in our faces, a kind of journal for hindy reference among the sons of men; but as she writes on the same page every day she does some crising, and she has so much to put in so little that though all the details are considered, only the point rather are not considered, only the main points are put down; and, inasmuch as one point will often exactly contradict another, they are paired off down; and, inasmenth as one point will often exactly contradict another, they are paired off like members of Congress, and the vote of either cancels the other; and so this microcesm of eyes and nose and mouth and wrinkled meanings, that the old man calls his face, is the sum total of what he has been thinking all these years.

What is sadder in all the world than the old age that has lived for itself, and the face with love left out of it? Such a face is full of deaths to me, of thoughts and impulses that were born and lived a little and then were stifled; a face full of the spirit's graves, of noble possibilities, that died in her infancy, and have all been sacrificed, like the babes of Indian mothers, to the Juggernaut of selfishness. I had rather die to-day myself than to live to be an old man accusing myself with such a face as this! A face like a gate to a cemetery, saying, "All within here are dead; this man hable lived for himself."

What, on the other band, is more joyous than the face of a grand old man? It's a kind than the face of a grand old man? It's a kind of God's approval, heaven's benediction of a true life, the unconscious eulogy of the years! Let the faces of the old men prophesy in hopes and feurs to us younger ones. God never rubs anything out!

I care not for my face at twenty-five. It is as if faces were walled about among the souls as a paces were wanted about among the sounds of men like seeds in the unreasoning winds. Seeds of thistle and seeds of flowers seeking for their homes; and because, perchance, the thistle-down clung to me, and the flowers sped on to alight in the lives of others, I grave not. It is only a wind that knows no better—the large measures of its wanterings—and the luzy guesswork of its wanderings—and there it ends; but when I amold, and the face that has happened to me has been my own for seventy years, wedded by a thourand thoughts, and the loves and hates of every heart-beat, to what I am, then may God grant that it be a face that draws the love of bearts, a face with face that draws the love of bearts, a face with poems and trugedies, purities and victories dramatized within it! and, as for beauty, I only ask that the beauty God may grant within may steal softly o'er the plainness without, now and then, as though the spirit, wandering in its sleep like a drawn of light, had lost its way in the features, and woke up to find itself on the outside of the plain old face that ever brought in their gifts, and the last one comes to offer eternity in the gray-baired waiting time, God grant me the beauty then that takes presession of a homely face in the name of its immortal soul, and stamps it with the ma-jesty of God's thoughts! The beauty of youth is a spring sonnet, and the song of it fills the world with promise, but the beauty of old age is a life epic, and the promise thereof belongs to another world!

HOME STUDY, being and middle-aged thorough and particul instruction by thorough and practical instruction by Maria, at their own Blustes, in Book-keeping, Business Farms, Penmanship, Campage and Arithmetic, Letter Writing, Business Law, Shurthand, eec. Adapted to all agree and both series, Sindenis from every State. Distance to objection. Law raises and satisfaction gaterianteed. Trial lessons sont five. Weite to navant a State Business. Belief. Colorado. Colorado.

Decorate your home Exposition mode of says with a beautiful Exposition mode of says with a beautiful Handsons design worked in colors and peture of World's Fair brildings. By mail, 50 cents. Address J. Revan & CO. If sixth Street, Pittsburg, Fa.

FRUIT and GARDEN TRACTS NICE HOMES, Good Schools. $2000 to $5000 a year income. Basy payments. Write for information. THE BAIR BROTHERS, Income, Week.

Digitized by Google

THE QUEENS OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY

By Miss E. T. Bradley

DAUGHTER OF THE DEAN OF WESTMINSTER

IN THREE PAPERS-CONCLUDING PAPER

PON the death of Edward IV, his widow with all herchildren took sanctuary in the Abbey. The old sanctuary door, perhaps the same to which those royal suppliants clung is still in the Deanery. A guard was set round the Abbey by Richard's orders, and even after the princes had been induced to leave by their uncle's trencherous promises the widowed queen and her daughters remained there under the care of Abbot Esteney.

THE FAIR ROSE OF YORK

A Tlast, March, 1484, after ten months' indies to trust him, giving a written promise to make suitable provision for them all, and to marry the young princeses to "gentlemen born." Now it was that Princese Elizabeth was treated with such marked favor at Court that rumors arose of Richard's desire, should his ailing wife die, to marry her. But she had been expressly commended by her dying father to the care of the Earl of Derby, and now that she was living in his household under the wing of Henry Tudor's mother, there is, little doubt that she spurned Richard's proposals and secretly looked on Henry as her betrothed husband. In character Elizabeth was gentle and yielding and entirely governed by her strong-minded, energetic mother-in-law. Her marriage with Henry was deferred till five mouths after Bosworth Field, and finally took place before the expected dispensation from the Pope, on the 18th of January, 1486. "Which day of the marriage," says Lord Bacon, "was celebrated with greater triumph and demonstrations, especially on the people's part, than the days either of his entry or coronation, which the King rather noted than liked. And it is true that . . . he showed himself no very includent husband toward her though she was beautiful, gentle and fruitfal." The Queen's coronation did not take place for two years after the King's and was a more splendid ceremony, since his had been celebrated in haste in order to consolidate his then precarious title. On the 23d of November, 1487, Elizabeth, accompanied by the civic authorities, in grand barges. One, called the "Bachelors' barge," had a rod dragon spouting fire, a delicate compliment to the Tudors' claimed descent from Arthur Pendragon. At the Tower the King received his wife, and the next day, after dinner, she went in great state to the litter in which she was borne to Westminster Abbey for the magnificent ceremony of her coronation.

Sixteen years later this last queen of the House of York was borne again to the Abbey, but no longer in a gaily caparisoned litter, attended by the shouts of her subjects. She died February 11th, 1503, having given birth to a daughter on the 2t, who did not survive her mother. The death of her eldest son, Arthur, the year before, had given a shock to Elizabeth's system from which she never recovered, and she had been ill ever since. Now that his gentle, uncomplaining young queen was dead, Henry appreciated her worth, and she was carried to her grave with all the pomp and parade of a royal burial. She died in the Tower, and her body was conveyed through the streets, not by water, to Westminster Abbey, followed by a long procession bended by eight ladies on white palfreys. The hearse was covered with black velvet fringed with pobl and ornamented with a cross of gold. An efflay of the Queen in royal robes, with hair disheveled, was placed upon it, a crown upon its head, a scepter in its hand and rings on its fingers.

OUSEN MARY, WIFE OF WILLIAM HI

White banners dedicated to the Virgin, signifying that she died in childbed, waved above the hearse. So through the torch-lit streets was she again carried to Westminster. At Charing Cross, as at Eleanor of Castille's fameral, the procession was met by the Abbot and Convent of Westminster, also by the Abbot of Bermondsey, and in the Abbey itself another samptitions hearse was prepared. The foundation stone of Henry's new chapel had only been laid a month before, and Elizabeth's coffin was therefore temporarily placed in one of the side chapels till the beautiful tomb was ready, which her husband left minute directions in his will should be prepared for himself and his wife. This tomb was not finished till Henry VIII had been king nine years (1518), and it was fortunate indeed that at that time the Monastery still flourished, for had it been later very likely the repacious Henry would have confiscated the money left for his parents' monument to his own pocket. The effigies recumbent on the tomb are by the hand of Pietro Torrigiano, that trascible Italian artist, who, the story goes, once broke Michael Angelo's nose in a fit of jenlousy. He also undertook the beautiful effly of Margaret, Countess of Richmond, in the south aisle of the same chapel. The old Countess had the grief of losing her beloved son, Henry VII, but fortunately for her peace of mind she died herself (June 29th, 1509) before her grandson had had time to touch her beloved monasteries. Rumors, however, of approaching changes had not been wanting, and her con-

and her confessor, Bishop Fisher, afterwardsexecuted
by Henry VIII, had advised her to found coffeges at Cambridge, and to have their property securely tied up, rather than to leave all her money to Westminster.
At Westminster
At Westminster
at Gant Stiff sarvives under the name of the Dean's Gift, a weekly dole of bread and meat to twelve old women of the neighborhood. Margaret lived the last years of her life, separated from her husband, as a cloistered nun, though not immured in a convent.
Rather she felt her mission to be in the affairs of the kingdom. Her son rarely took an important step without her counsel, and had she lived she might have controlled her unruly grandson.

"Everyone that knew her," said Fisher in his funeral sermon, "loved her, and everything she said and did became her." She loved Westminster, and by her own wish and with money left for the purpose her tomb was placed in her son's new chapel. The inscription around it is by Ernsmus, the second professor who filled her divinity chair at Cambridge. In the careworn but still beautiful features of the offigy, the wasted hands joined in prayer, the nun-like dress, the character of one who lived in the world but not of the world may surely be traced. She rests in pence, hers being one of the few tombs spared by the ruthless hand of after ages.

THE REPUDIATED ANNE OF CLEVES

The only one of Henry VIII's six wives who was boried in the Abbey is the repudlated bride, Anne of Cleves. Fortunate indeed, was it for her that she never wore the queenly crown, since there is little doubt that had not the king been allowed to free himself, he would have had no scruple in treating her as he did Anne Boleyn and Katherine Howard. Henry afterwards justified his conduct to the foreign princess by affirming that he had been trapped into a marriage with her, having been shown a beautiful portrait of her, and heard much praise of her appearance. It was a comic rather than a tragic situation, the only element of comedy in connection with any of King Hal's unfortunate wives. One is irresistibly reminded also of the plain Flemish Philippa, and the very different welcome she received from Edward III. We are told of Anne that she was neither handsome, nor had any of the ordinary accomplishments experted from hulies of her mak; she could not play or sing or work needlework, nor was she learned, but she had an anniable character, and was much beloved by all her friends and dependents. She had an anniable character, and was much beloved by all her friends and dependents. She had an anniable character, and was much beloved by all her friends and dependents. She had an anniable character, and was much beloved by all her friends and dependents. She handed at Drai, December 27th, 1539, and had a private interview at Rochester with the King, to whom she was married with great pomp and ceremony at Grouwich a few days later. Henry soon openly showed his discontent with his new bride, and in June, on the pretext that it was more for her bealth to have "open ayre and pleasure," sent her off to Richmond. Meantime he got his servile parliament to granthim a divorce on the plea that the marriage was not lawful, nor had ever been consummated. Anne was allowed some of the estates forfeited by the attainder of Cromwell, through whose advice Henry had wedded her, and on condition that she should not retire beyond the seas was permitted to live wherever she liked. Sixten years she spent in quiet and honorable retirement, emerging occasionally to take part in some ceremonial, as at Mary Tudor's coronation, when she drove in the same chariot as Elizabeth, and dined at the great dinner afterwards in Westminster Hall. She died on July 16th, 1557, at Chelsen, and, as though to atone for Henry's neglect for so estimable a lady, she was by Mary's orders buried in Westminster Abbey, where the remains of her tomb may be seen on the right of the high siltar, facing the ambulatory. There is an elaborate account of her funeral printed in the "Excerpta Historica," from a MS, in the college at Arms; also a copy of her will. Between the altar and choir "a sumptuous hearse" was set up, and the coffin was brought to the Abbey in an open chariot drawn by four horses, escorted by (an eyewitness, Henry Machyn, has recorded) the twelve bedesmen of the Abbey, all dressed in new black gowns for the occasion, Anne's household, the children of Westminster, i. e., probably of the monastery school, all carrying torches. The Abbet Feckenham and all the monks went in procession to fetch the corpse, and all along the route as they returned to Westminster they were met by other priests bearing crosses and lights. Bonner, bishop of London, and the Abbot rode together. At the west door of, the Abbot rode together. At the west door of, the Abbot rode together. At the west door of, the Abbot rode together. At the west door of, the Abbot rode together. At the west door of, the Abbot rode

QUEEN ELIZABETH

THE next funeral in the Abbey was to be that of Qoeen Mary herself. The Monastery was much indebted to her, and she seems to have always had a special love and veneration for the Abbey. She restored the monks, who had been dispersed by her father, and appointed a good and boly man. Feckenham, as abbot, the last to hold that office. She gave all the jeweis and gold, which she could afford to buy, to adorn the plundered shrine of Edward the Confessor, and did all she could to restore the Abbey to some of its former splendor. At her coronation (October 10th, 1553) she refused to sit in the ancient chair, since she feared the touch of her Protestant brother Edward had polluted the holy sent, and she therefore had one sent from Rome and blessed by the Pope, which is now shown at Winchester Cathedral. Both the Archbishop and the Bishop of London were in the Tower, so that the ceremony was conducted by the Bishop of Winchester, who afterwards married Mary to her Spanish husband in his own Cathedral. We are all familiar with the years of blood and fire which elapsed before the unfortunate queen was borne to her tomb in the chapel of Henry VII, the first person buried in the north nide. By Elizabeth's special orders ber funeral was conducted with all the usual magnificence, her body was brought in a chariot in great state from St. James' to the Abbey on December 13th, 1538. Four bishops and the Abbot met the procession at the west door, and the body and wax effigy, were horne up to the choir. On the following day Bishop White, or according to an old MS., Abbot Feckenham, preached a touching funeral sermon, conscious, as he extolled the virtues of the dead queen, that the hearts of more than three-quariers of her subjects were bursting with the joy of Elizabeth's accession. Before the coremony was over the people tore down the black cloths with which the church was dripped, and as soon as the queen was in her grave the clergy and monraces went to a collation with the Abbot.

THE TOMB OF "THE MAIDEN QUEEN"

GREAT was the rejoicing in the city at the coronation of Elizabeth, which took place January 15th, 1559, a day fixed by her astrologer as one of good luck, and which Dean Stanley says was long observed as a soleman anniversary in the Abbey. This day for the last time the Abbot of Westminster, so soon to be deposed for a dean, took part in the service. The litany was read in English, and as a protest against Elizabeth's right to the suc-

QUEEN MARY ("BLOODY MARY")

cession and Protestant principles, only one out of the whole bench of bishops attended. The Bishop of Carlisle, since Canterbury was vacant and London in prison, officiated, having to borrow his brother of London's robes. Thus in spite of pageants, in spite of pomp and ceremony, there were usury signs to warn the new queen of the difficulties she had to face. That she faced them and conquered we know, and whatever her faults, as a queen and ruler she won the love of her subjects. It is enough to turn to the numerous accounts of her funeral to see her popularity. When the last dreary days of lingering death had dragged away, when the great queen lay in the calm of death, no longer distraught by bodily weakness and forebodings for the future, then the universal sorrow, pent up while the nation watched their sovereign's last hours, broke out tunnultuously. She died March 24th, 1603, but the funeral did not take place till April 28th. The body had been brought by water from Richmond, where the queen died, to Whitehall, where it lay in state, and Westminster was the scene of more vehement popular mourning than it had ever witnessed. So numerous and detailed are the accounts of it that time and space would fail were one-third of them#10 be quoted. The chronicler Stowe's quaint description must suffice us. On the funeral day be says, "the citie of Westminster was surcharged with multitudes of all sorts of people in their streets, houses, windows, leads and gutters, that came to see the obsequic, and when they beheld her statue or picture lying upon the coffin set forth in royal robes, having a crowne upon the head thereof and a ball and scopter in either hand, there was such a generall sighing, gronning and weeping as the like hath not been seene or knowne in the memory of man, neyther doth anie historic mention any people, time, or state to make like lamentation for the death of their sovereign." The charioupon which the body and its "counterfeited" image lay, was drawn by four "great horses," followed by 1600 mourne

QUEEN ANNE

ter among the Cecil papers it seems that Nicholas Hillyarde, the famous miniature painter, either had, or desired to have had, a hand in it. The monument was practically finished by 1905, while that of Mary, Queen of Scots, upon which James naturally lavished more cost and trouble, was not completed for several years more. On April 19th, 1907, payment is made to Cornelius Cure, master mason, of 1825,10.0 and all other sums as shall be due for the marble, etc., while as late as 1611 there is an unsigned note that: "the pattern for the tomb of the queen of Scots I have ready finished the which you and I will show the king, the charge thereof is estimated at £2000." This must have referred to the cost of the convented of the convented to the cost of the completed touch, since it certainly was entirely finished by 1611. We have spoken of Elizabeth's waxen figure above; unfortunately this fell to pieces in the Eighteenth Century and the one shown at present, in the Islip Chapel, is only a copy of the old one. The coronation robes had long fallen to pieces, and, realistic as the present tigure is, it must not be taken for the original one.

QUEEN ANNE OF DENMARK

FOR his own wife James I did not attempt to erect any memorial, and Elimbeth is the last of the English sovereigns who has a monument in the Abbey. The later kings and three lie beneath the pavement in the chapel of Henry VII, their names recorded on the pavement by the care of Denn Stanley.

Anne of Denmark was buried in a little side chapel on the north of the tomb of Henry VII is whose wall her bushand James I's side chapel on the north of the tomb of Henry VII. in whose vnult her husband James I's body was discovered by Dean Stanley, who sought for it with uncessing care till be found it. Queen Anne was ill for some time before her death, which took place at Hampton Court March 2d, 1618. Her husband was laid up with the gout at Newmarket and unable to be with her at the last. Prince Charles was there, and also the Bishop of Loudon. She died, it is said, declaring herself to be "free from Popery." Her end was very peaceful, "she gave five or six little moans and had the happlest going out of the world that anyone ever had." The body was embalmed and lay in state at Somerset House till May 13th, when teappeat going out of the world that anyone ever ind." The body was embalmed and lay in state at Somerset House till May 13th, when the funeral, deferred for want of money, at length took place. An eye-witness says it was "a drawling, tetions sight, and though the number of locks and ladies was very great, yet they made but a poor show, being all apparelled alike in black, and they ususe lagging, fired with the length of the way and the weight of their mounting, every private lady having their mourning, every private lady having twelve yards of broadcloth about her and the tweive yards of broadcloth about her and the countesses had sixteen yards of the same, a great weight to carry at a walking foneral in May." Another spectator describes it: " as better than that of Prince Hal's," but it fell short of Elfanbeth's; " the chariot and six horses, in which her efflagy was drawn, was most remarkable." The queen's palfrey was led behind the hearse by her master of the horse, and before it went the chief mouraer, Prince Charles, with the Archbishop of Canterbury, who preached the Archbishop of Canterbury, who preached the funeral sermon. The king was too ill to funeral sermon. The king was too ill to come. Two fatal actidents took place among the spectators—a gentleman standing on a scaffold erected under Northumberland House was killed by a huge letter from an inscrip-tion above falling on his head, and a scriven-er's wife died from the heat and excitement on her return home. The hearse stood over Anne's grave for many years, and was finally destroyed during the Commonwealth.

ELIZABETH, THE "QUEEN OF HEARTS"

ELIZABETH, daughter of James I and Anne, and wife of the "Winter King" of Bohemin, Frederick, Elector Palatine, lies of Bohemin, Frederick, Elector Palatine, hes in the vault of Mary, Queen of Scots, in the south aisle of the same chapel. She died at Leicester House, London, February 13th, 1662, having found peace at last "after all her sor-rows and afflictions," for the poor "Queen of Hearts," as she was called, had no other king-dom but in the hearts of her many friends, first and chief of all, Lond Craven. The burial took place at midnight, Primes Rusert, Elizatook place at midnight, Prince Ropert, Eliza-beth's favorite son, following as chief mourn-er. But we must not limor even over the fascinating "queen of bearts."

LATER QUEENS IN THE ABBEY

WE must pass on to the last queens buried W in the Abbey, contenting ourselves with but cursory nations of each, since the early coronations and funerals have taken so much space.

ANNE, DAUGHTER OF LORD CLARENDON

THE first wife of James II, Anne Hyde, daughter of the great historism, Lord Clarendon, who did not live to be a queen, lies with Marr, Queen of Scots, her coffin, as Dean Stanley points ont, beneath that of Elizabeth's, whose line was to supplant her own, father, James Γs house in the times to

THE TWO LAST STUART QUEENS

THE two last Stuart queens, the sisters Mary and Anne, lie in the same vault at the east end of this southern aisle of Henry Vil's chapel. Mary and her husband, William III, were the first joint sovereigns of Eng-land, and for Mary the other coronation chair, now to be seen side by side with the ancient one, was made. Their wax efficies, William one, was made. Their wax effiges, William propped on a stool to bring him nearer to his wife's height, belp one to realize how strange the short king and tall queen must have looked as they walked, with the sword of state between them, up the Abbey. Mary died December 28th, 1694, at the early age of thirty-three, to the inconsolable grief of her husband. Her funeral is chiefly remarkable because both House of Parliament, "with their maces the luris much in souther and expanse. came toth riouse of Farinament, "with their naces, the lords robed in scarlet and graphe, the commons in long black mantels," attend-ed her to her grave. Till now no parliament had ever assembled at a royal funeral, for "till then the parliament lead always expired with the sovereign. The pall was borne by the chiefs of the libestrious houses of Howard. Seymour, Grey, and Stanley." For a full and striking account of the ceremony we must re fer our readers to Macaulay's history, for no pen can attempt to vie with his in a description of such an imposing ceremony. The heurse, as usual remained some time in the Abbey. Tradition speaks of a robin reducesst which was often seen perched upon it, and was cherished for the sake of the dead queen, who had won the hearts of all her subjects who had won the hearts of all her subjects. Her good-natured sister, whose huge and smiling effigy is also among the wax figures, was crowned only ten days (April 23d, 1702) after the death of her brother-in-law, William III. Her gons was 30 bud that she had to be carried from the Tower to the Abbey. This time there was no joint coronation, but Anne's husband, George of Denmark, lad to perform homage to her, like one of the English nobles. In the Abbey lie buried their eighteen children, all of whom, except William of Gloucester, died in infancy; with William's death (July 30th, 1700) the last hopes of the Stuart dynasty were extinguished. Overcome with thready were extinguished. Overcome with political troubles and with physical misery, Anne's last days were pain and heaviness. "I believe" her chief physician wrate of her, "that sleep was never more welcome to a weary traveller than death to her." Though death had long been approaching, yet the queen left her will unsigned, and a contemporary writes of her "poor servants like so many poor orphans exposed in the streets." Her funeral took place August 24th, 1714, but nothing of special interest is recorded of this, the burial of the last Smart queen.

WALTER SCOTT'S QUEEN CAROLINE

WALTER SCOTT'S QUEEN CAROLINE

OF one more given we must speak before we close. Queen Caroline of Anspuch, wife of George II, is a familiar figure to the renders of the "Heart of Midlothian." The wise counsellor of her husband, the friend of that great minister, Sir Robert Walpole, the patroness of learning and philosophy, was worthy of the famous anthem; "When the car heard her then it blessed her," which Handel composed for his patroness's funeral. While the minute gins outside were booming, and the words "How are the mighty fallen," echoing through the Abbey, her coffin was lowered into the vault prepared for it in the center of Henry VII's chapel. As if it were in remorse for his shortcomings toward his faithful and long-suffering wife, George II onleved that when he died his dust should be mingled with hers. The sides of both coffins were therefore taken out, when his body was placed beside hers and their scepters crossed.

I HAVE thus attempted to give some idea to the readers of The Ladies' Home Journal of a few of those mighty pagesists formerly so frequent within the Abbey Church. Of the queens of our own century I have not spoken, though within the memory of some now living, the Abbey was the scene of a coronation which vied in splendor with those in past days. There are many others, too, to whom the jubiles service is a living memory. But I must leave the recent ceremonies to pens more graphic than mine, and conclude these necessarily brief records of past greatness in the words of the dramatist Beaumont, himself buried in Poets' Corner:

Mortality behold and fear:
What a change of flesh is here!
Think how many coyal boxes
Steep within this heap of stones.
Here they lie, but realms and lands
Who now was streagth to sit their hands.
Here are sands, iznoble things
Foug from the buried side of Kings.
Here's a world of pump and state.
Buried in dust, ongo dead, by face.

A TRUE IDEA OF REVERENCE

BY CORA LANN DANIELS

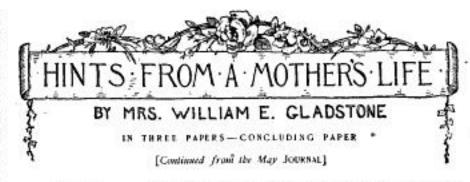

HENEVER I have attended the Catholic or other ceremonthe Catholic or other ceremonial church I have always tried to take part as intelligently as possible in the service, bowing kneeling crossing myself, etc., as the others did, and paying strict attention to the ritual. So many people have criticized this action that I can but express my conviction that to do atherwise were boorish and un-action that I can but express my conviction that to do otherwise were boorish and unministry. If one were to attend the service of a Russian princess at Moscow, and she offered you a cigarette I doubt that any lady would be so awkward and insulting as to refuse. In Russia ladies smoke, and to refuse a cigar or cigarette is to cast contempt upon the custom of the country. When you are in Rome do as the Romans do. When a funeral procession passes along the street in Paris, every gentleman removes his hat until the cortege has passed. One would hardly care to be so conspicuous as to keep the hat on just because in America we are not so recemental because in America we are not so reverential as are the Parisians!

What is such an action as that but reverwhat is such an assion as tout rever-ence? What is politeness at all but reverence? Reverence for the desires, opinions, customs, education, projudices, weaknesses, misfor-tunes, sorrows and aspirations of others is the root, sarm and blossom of courtesy!

So, in visiting any church, the least one can do is to enter into the feelings and opinions of the worshipers for the time being, and humbly putting aside your own ideas assume the position of one who can worship the Heavenly Father anywhere, in any way, at any time, and with more or less ceremony, so long as the adoration is in our hearts, reverential and sincere. To sit like a post in the midst of an audience who are praising God in their own peculiar way is to show in that way an implied contempt. If you do not like it what are you there for? Curiosity? One does not go to church as one goes to the theater, simply to be smused. We do not buy a ticket; we are given a free sent. Then the only return we can show a free sent. Then the only certain a cansing for this toleration of us as outsiders is to join, as far as possible, in the decont exercises we are allowed to witness. In any case, God is being weeshiped. It can hurt no one to kneel before Him, or to bow the head appropriately. reverently.

MISS. GLAPPTONE

WHEN we the subject of the clothes of infants, the most importborne in mind is to have the cloth-ing light, soft, and warm, very-ing with the seaing with the sea-sons—so adapted that it may be put on and taken off easily. This latter point should always be borne in mind when either porchasing or making an infant's clothing, so that the child may be saved as much discom-fact as possible while its clothing is being

THE DRESSING OF AN INFANT

EVERY mather should see that the dress of an infant will admit of expansion of chest and stomach, with perfect freedom for timbs and joints. Much irritation, as Dr. Squire says, "is produced by keeping dampelothes close to the skin, and more when caustic sods has been used in washing, and is left from careless rinsing and drying. All impervious wraps are to be avoided; there must be frequent changes of linen." The supply of animal heat in a buby being small, the dress should be chosen with a view to warmth, but while taking every care to maintain a comfortable and equable warmth, do not loading it with too many clothes, and of covercoddle or overheat the child; bewere or loading it with too many clothes, and of cover-ing the neck with warm shawls or tippets within doors. All that is wanted is to keep the upper part of the dress sufficiently high to protect the chest and arms, for over-heat-ing is bad and relaxing.

Exceptional circumstances, of course, de-mand exceptional care; for instance, in a case of premature birth the preservation of vital heat is the one thing to be attended to; it is safest to wrap the beby is flannel, or, as has been done with good effect, to imbed it in a bas-ket of cotton wood, and not to except it to air been done with good effect, to limbed it in a basket of cotton wood, and not to expose it to air at all—at all events not till the doctor comes.

Never overlook the tendency in young children at the period of teething to nervous excitement. Keep the head cool. Avoid oversoft pillows, close wrapping up of the head, and heavy bonness or hats. How often, from affection and pride, a velvet hat is chosen, laden with feathers or trimmings, which oppresses the poor little head. Such things are objectionable both in winter and summer. I would also warn mothers against the tarned-up hat; it is almost sickening to see the poor children in perambulators, with the sun's full glare beating upon the susceptible head and eyes. head and eyes.

ON THE USE OF PERAMBULATORS

HERE I must allow myself a short digres-I sion upon the misuse of perambulators. Very valuable in themselves, when used Very valuable in themselves, when used with proper attention and common sense, it is difficult to speak with any patience of the cruel fully so often seen in the use of them. There are the sudden jerks, the rushes at dangerous crossings, the poor babies left to sleep in every variety of unwholesome posture; these and other beedlessnesses expose children to the risk of chills, with all their train of cell consequences, sunstrukes and even sainal evil consequences, sunstrokes and even spinal Nurses should exercise common sense, both out-doors and at bonne, to guard against the opposite dangers of heating and chilling chil-dren. How often does the former practice lead to the latter result?

Short contact with quite cold air or water, truly remarks the wise Dr. Squire, is injurious to infants; and prolonged exposure to the low temperature of a cold house or chamber still more so; most so when the air and not prolonged but down to be a cold to the cold and the distribution. chamber still more so; most so when the air is not only cold but damp. In bouses other-wise benithy, the coset of acute disease in children, of inward congestions, glandular swelling, tubercle, dropsy, has started from the occurrence of unusually low temperature in their rooms during exceptionally cold weather, when the means of obtaining suffi-cient warrath have here, undeed or audied cient warmth have been neglected or applied with difficulty. Children are also to be guard-ed against sudden changes of temperature. After some days in a well-warmed room the first promenade should be short. A chile A child four or five years old cannot bear a long walk in cold weather, but soon tires, and is then still more liable to suffer from cold. Out of doors, children passing from a sheltered to an exposed position, the turn of a street, the draught in a passage, may get a chill: or returning indoors hot and excited from running or play, the wraps are removed, though the room to which they have returned is only half warned, pechaps has become too far coded from open windows or neglected fire, they catch cold more on coming indoors than on going out. An infant in arms is often chilled in this way; closely muffled at starting out, carried near the nurse's body under warm coverings, or shut in a carriage with closed windows, it is brought home but and perspir-ing, and haid down asterp (its loud of clothes removed) on a rold, cot in the chill quiet of the bedroom, while the other children prepare for dinner; no wonder the youngest suffers first. Not only should the woolen clothes and coverings not be removed at once, but the chamber thermometer should be consulted. Prevention of illness is better than cure, and for both objects a thermometer in the chilfor both objects a thermometer in the children's room is indispensable.

Enroya's Nove-Mrs. Gladstone's series, concluded with this article, was commenced in the April Joya NAL, and togles of that and the May bester can be held for 20 cease such by sending to the Joy KNAL office.

HABITS OF ORDER AND MORAL TRAINING

I WILL now dwell shortly upon the importance of training the children themselves by means of good order and rule, and quiet, gentle discipline.

Children imitate before they can reason, hence the importance of setting them a good example from the first. How will it be, if instead of this they get used to seeing articles left about, drawers open, untaliness in little daily matters?

On the other hand, what a picture of bright-

On the other hand, what a picture of bright-ness and happiness is the well-ordered nursery? "A place for everything, and everything in its place"—cheerful faces, freshness, innocent mirth. In these little ways the training for the future, both of mind and body, is begrowth. A notion seems sometimes to pre-vail that attention to trifling matters such as these should be set aside for the sake of more important considerations, but strely "these ought ye to do, and not to leave the others undone." undone.

Our first notions of home start from the nursery. Here, where all the wants of early life are met, healthy development soon leads to conscious comfort. The youngest child has this happy knowledge. Rooted in the nursery, it grows and gains upon us there. Children come to feel that food, rest, quiet and pleasant ease belong to the place to which they are always brought back after all the changes that excite or tire, where some one shows them care and love, and the greeting of another self is sure. This kindly attention, with all around orderly, clean and cheerful, not only makes childhood happy, but lends to strongth, good nature, trust, courage and virtue.

virtue.
Such elements of comfort and completeness in a house are always serviceable; no better accommodations could be offered to friends or visitors than what is designed for the most cherished members of a family. If happily peopled by children, this part of home be-comes to them the desirest spot on earth. It may afterward be the delight of children's children, the rallying point or center of a fam-ily, that shall attract its many members and hold them together, knitting the generations each to each.

each to each.

It is the wise and loving discipline of nur-sery days which lays the foundation of all that is pure, and good, and lovely, and strong, in the character of man or woman. Upon the foundation given to a house much dethe foundation given to a house much de-pends, almost everything in fact, and the same is true of a human being.

A FEW CLOSING WORDS

A FEW CLOSING WORDS

A ND thus we are led, before closing these that most serious and vitally important subject, the moral influence of the nursery. Total ignorance upon this aspect of our little children's lives is only too common; and mothers, who anxiously "get up" all needful facts about the matters referred to above—ventilation, drainage, warmth, wholesome food, and clothing—never think of the watchful care necessary from the first, to train aright the natural instincts, and what may be called the moral germs of the little being whose immortal soul is unfolding in the midst, alas! of a world of sin and evil. Unutterable is the mischief that may be brought about by wicked, mischief that may be brought about by wicked, coarse-minded, or grossly ignormat nurses and nursery-girls. This is not the place to go in-to details upon so painful a subject; let it suf-fice to draw the attention of mothers to this matter, and carnestly appeal to them, as t love their little ones, to be on their guard.

In conclusion, we could scarcely do better than to carry away with us the wise words of Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell;

The youth who has grown up from childhood under the guardianship of really wise parents, in a true home, with all its ennobling influences, and has been strengthened by enlightened religious instruction, has gradually grown toward the natural human type." And again, and I am content that these shall be the clusing words to this brief series of articles the closing words to this brief series of articles for American mothers:

"The mother's eye, fall of tenderness, must always watch over her children. Self-respect cannot be too early inculcated.

Every thoughtless breach of delicity should be checked with a gentle gravity, which will not repel or abash, but impress the child.

In work or in play, in infancy or youth, the parent should be the first natural friend."

Instead of shrinking

in disgrace, Each one will want the highest place."

A fourth exclaimed: "There's fame, no doubt,

THE BROWNIES THROUGH THE YEAR

A NEW SERIES OF 12 ADVENTURES OF THE FUNNIEST LITTLE MEN IN THE WORLD

By Palmer Cox

Or glances on the flood to throw That lay so dark and far below.

Said one: "I've heard

Have come upon this bridge, and when them stand,

To interfere with schemes on hand.

They reached the center beam,

or rail,

And jumped, and lived to tell the tale."

No officer did near

it said that men

NUMBER NINE

THE BROWNIES

IN JUNE

0 0 night in June, when skies were clear The Brownies sought a city near. Right well their plans had all been laid To reach the town at evening shade, And spend the night in sporting there Upon a bridge so high in air That ships from every country ran In safety underneath its span. They reached it when the lamps' bright glare ... Revealed its bowed proportions fair, With ends well anchored either side In cities spreading far and wide.

From roofs of buildings standing nigh, The Brownies got a chance to eye The structure stretched with graceful sweep Across the river, dark and deep.

Said one- "We here can sport and play Upon this bridge till break of day, Of seeing wonders never tire, Nor lack a chance to climb a wire; In fact, each member here can find

A rope to suit his hand or mind, On which to climb, or swing at ease Like monkeys on Brazilian trees." Now here and there the Brownies went, On seeing all the bridge intent; Some had the nerve and strength to craw! At once upon the towers tall, And right and left their glances threw, Of distant points to gain a view, Or gaze upon the sea of light That through a city spreads at night.

Then on the foot-path, long and wide, For half an hour their speed was tried;

Sometimes in squads of eight or nine

They took their stations in a line, And back and forth between the piers From those who climbed on cables high

To watch them as they scampered by. At times, while climbing ropes of wire, The topmost Brownie's And slipping back, his weight would bring No small distress to all the string That clung below with might and main To hold their own against the strain. Then down they'd sit to rest, or chat In Brownie style, of this or that,

To not be turned away in air. But strike the water plumb and fair," A third remarked: "You argue well And show your sense, for truth to tell

We may, if we but manage right, Immortalize ourselves to-night. One man may jump d still Without a hurt of any shape, Yet he is only one in all The millions on this turning ball,

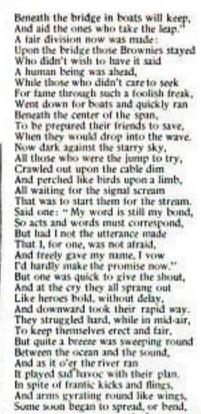

But where was ever seen a crowd Like us with fortitude endowed. That makes us in a body go Through greatest dangers one can know.

We've gone through many startling woes. And trying scenes as history shows. If people doubt, let them but read And learn how we take little heed Of dangers that go hand in hand With all the doings of the band, And even now you'll find that we Are valunt in a high degree.

In such a jump, if well worked out, But I, for one, here let me say, Won't look for fame in such a way Let those who want to feed the fish, Jump from the structure, if they wish. But be assured the lowest plate, Or wire, on this bridge so great, Will high enough from water seem Before you souse into the stream. Now those with me who do not show A crazy wish to famous grow,

Another said: "We cannot let A human being ever get The start of us in any way Through daring deeds, let come what may. Now to the selfsame place we'll go, And take our places in a row, And at a given signal, spring Like birds when taking to the wing, And keep feet downward, if we can, According to the jumper's plan

And some were turned nigh end for end, While more, through luck, or extra skill, Kept going down feet foremost still. Few words were passed between them there, for little breath they had to spare; But judging by the look they wore, if they were on the bridge once more They'd hardly take that daring spring For all the fame the world can bring While striving for a balance good. where they could, And once that nervous grip was gained, Through fear or friendship it remained, And thus uniting firm and fast, As rapidly they downward passed, A chain was formed, while one could wink, Composed of many a twisted link, That lengthened as the flood they neared And still unbroken disappeared. Brownies in the boats below Had twenty eyes apiece, I know They hardly could keep track of game As through the air. they whirling came;

They splashing fell on every side, All disappearing in the tide, Those who had spread their very best Going quickly under with the rest. But first to rise again And signal boatmen left and right. Some stayed so long beneath the wave Friends feared the river was their grave. But in a while a distant yell Told they were up and swimming well. They went so deep that when they rose Some pounds of mud came with their toes, And to the surface quite a few Brought shedder crabs and lobsters, 100,

Which clearly proved to friends around That they the river's bed had found. Though Brownies may mishaps sustain That cause some fear, if not some pain, They seldom fail to carry through The work laid out for them to do; And though a few were somewhat sore, And vowed they'd take that leap no more,

Still not a broken bone was there, Or garment torn beyond repair. Each was in trim to quickly crawl. In waiting boats that took them all Away as fast as oars could guide The party to the nearest side. And then the band had barely time To quit the place ere morning prime.

HOME JOURNAL

ily Journal with the Largest agazine in the World.

d Monthly by

'UBLISHING COMPANY Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

it 401-415 Appletree Street

dited by RD W. BOK

ARROTT INDRES! SOTTOME SURDETTE WOOD NAMOO ALLON AC. (FORD ROBENSON SCOVIL WITT TALMAGE, D.D. ATT WOODS ory and Contributing Editors.

One dollar per year, payable in advance. Single copies ten cents.

es at London and Paris.

Five dollars per Agate line each insertion before (this) editorial page; three dollars per Agate line on succeed-ing pages and all covers. Reading Notices, six dollars per Nonpareil line. These rates are net.

ANCH OFFICES: r Building, 38 Park Row npie Piace, Cor. Tremont St. Chickering Hall Building

scisco: Chronicle Building

NDON OFFICE: lings, Ludgate Circus, E. C. Subscription Prices: ; per year, 6 shillings, post-free

lphia, June, 1892

WITH THE EDITOR

E were talking together the other evening—a friend from across the ocean and myself. She had been spending nearly a year in our country, and her social advantages lind given her opportunities to see the four American domestic life. our American domestic life, a chatting, this foreign gentle.

'There was but one unpleasant in my visits into your homes, a suggestion in the children of ving that fine sense of respect their parents that we are accusurone. It meaned to see curope. It seemed to me as if independence born in every and boy was in danger of en-rit of carelessness of talk and i parents. In other words, your to me to rule the parents, in-0

o me, as this woman was speak-had beard other visitors to our this same criticism. I remen-ummer a foreigner of excellent observation remarking: "Why, , that American children are sitively rude to their parents, way of what you call, I think, to their elders that is almost or homes across the water. I k to her mother which sounded ons in its impertinence to other is would decidedly jar upon me father or mother. In France, aught that the word of father or In Russian families, children t in domestic conversation un-outgrown their childhood and the age of discretion, which is, of that country, decreed as be-In Holland and in England so strictly drawn, perhaps, but shy, bless you, the daughter of as large a part in the table talk her or mother. This particular ith you may be conducive to out I have noticed in some cases of t have noticed in some cases in the reverse; it gives the ce is her own opinion as against lers which is perfectly sublings in its sense of the ridiculous se. It is all well enough to tain amount of liberty to chilprestion that has occurred to me rica, is whether you are not givmuch rein." inic to time I have beard from ther foreigners practically the ats which I have quoted above.

THERE is just enough truth in all this criticism to give it color—as any one will concede who has been privileged to visit into a sufficient number of our American homes to accurately judge. We have all, at times, been jarred at some remark made by a young daughter to her mother, or a son to his father, which left an unpleasant impression with us. It is true that regret invariably follows such a remark upon the part of the girl or boy who makes it, but the error was made, and many a false impression has been carried away from such a domestic circle. For it is an unfortunate truth that these little "breaks" are almost invariably made in the presence of others. The poorest impressions are very often made when we are most anxious the best ones should be effected. The little "slip" which never occurs when the family is alone is some to be a presence of contract to be the contract of the presence of the part of the presence of the pr which never occurs when the family is alone is sure to happen when "company" is pres-ent. And then it has such a perfectly tantalizing manner of occurring just at a moment when it stands out with a perfect robust dis-tinctness that simply defies any effort to cover it up. Then the dear sensitive mother won-ders "what Mr.——will think," and she conjectures and supposes as to the impression left upon his mind as to ber ability to train a child. And after Mr.—— has gone, there is a dark closet conference over which it is charitable to draw the curtain.

THERE is no member of the human body so difficult to control as the tongue. This is as true of the full-grown man or woman as it is of the child, but the child has no mind with which to direct its unruly member. Later with which to direct its unruly member. Later in life we are supposed to acquire a discretion which is intended to act as a guard upon the tongue, although—well, but that is another story, as Rudyard Kipling would say. It is undoubtedly unwise for any parent to allow too much freedom of speech in a child, and if mothers would concentrate more of the earlier training of their children upon that one point, I think it would be better for the future happiness of both teacher and scholar. Because a child is presceious, a retort, however pert, is piness of both teacher and scholar. Because a child is presceious, a retort, however pert, is mone the less out of place. With a child it is particularly true that "give it an inch, and it will take a yard." The slightest encouragement of what a parent knows is not a good tendency in a child undoes menths of training. The saucy answer of a child, no matter how "cutely!" said, may be laughed at by the guest because politeness allows him no alternative but we are often convenient to cut ward. intro, but we are often compelled to outwardity appear other than we are prompted by our inner feelings. Much as I dislike the corporal punishment of children, I would rather see a child soundly whipped at the table than to see it encouraged in the unfortunate habit of heims as much heard as seen. Early habits being as much heard as seen. Early habits are very hard to shake off, and the precedious child, apt at retort, is simply the budding of the sarcastic young woman. And of what type of girlhood can we more honestly say: "Good Lord, deliver us!"

THE American girl is by her very nature sancy. She believes that spice not only gives variety to life, but that it lends piquancy to conversation. And it does. No girl can talk so well as can the American girl. Without half trying she can hold three men in conversation at the same time, and direct the course of her talk and her pretty glances so as to include them all. If the English girl is an expert whip, the American girl is a perfect to include them all. If the English girl is an expert whip, the American girl is a perfect master of the art of conversation. She knows just where a dash of pepper will fit best, and no creature on the globe can in a drawing-room serve such a palatable conversational salud of rinegar and cress. I have often stood in perfect admiration of some bright, fresh American girl holding the interest and attention of a whole knot of clever men with a perfect stream of explosive eigenfations which perfect stream of explosive ejaculations which were simply delicious in the fact of their meaning apparently so much in action, and yet conveying so little in substance. Those of us who are more sedate may sucer and make us who are more sedate may sneer and make little of what is known as "society small talk," but the correct handling of it is an art which very few acquire. To say a good deal and mean very little is not an easy thing to do, and at this the American girl is an expert. I do not mean to infer by this that the American girl is superficial. She is not. As a rule, she can handle a brainy, ethical topic with almost the same dexterity as she can a passing morsel of society gossip. But she has the art of adaptation. What has given the American woman a reputation of being the best-dressed woman in the world is that she always knows the exact gown that will fit the occasion she the exact gown that will fit the occasion she is going to ornament. And the American girl possesses this same tact in conversation.

OUR young men and young women are un-doubtedly given a greater degree of license in family conversation than is extended in any country on the globe. And the license is a good one-conducive to the acquirement of knowledge and of easy converse. But the practice can become harmful to good disci-pline. Youth is impetuous and all-knowing, especially in these times. Now-a-days young people know far more than do their elders that is, they think they do. Perhaps it has always been so, but it seems that knowledge comes quicker to the young in this rapid century. The young woman of to day—and I use the feminine gender because it naturally applies more directly to my audience, although these references can be applied with equal force to the modern young man-grows very fast. She is taught that progress is the order of the day. She must know more at twenty to-day than did her mother at twenty. Now, progress is a good thing, a very healthy and necessary quality in the life of the girl of the nineteenth century, but there is such a thing as progressing too fast. One trouble with pro-gression is that it never turns backward, and chasing it too fast is as dangerous as it is to follow it too slowly.

WHEN progress can be hurtful to the young woman of to-day is when she thinks that she knows more than does her things that she knows more than does her father or mother. It is no indication of prog-ress on the part of a girl when she loses that respectful deference to the safer counsel or wiser judgment of her elders which is always the most heautiful trait of girlhood. However much she may think she knows, she must never overlook the fact that there are some who knows a listle mass than the safer. never overlook the fact that there are some who know a little more than she does, and it is just as likely as not that those superior minds should belong to her parents. She may sometimes grow impatient at the caution of her mother, she may get nettled and say to herself "Papa is so old-fashioned," but she is wise when she ever bears in mind the fact that caution is a very safe guide, and that to be old-fashioned in some of our modern tendencies is exceedingly prudent. We young people are apt to turn up our noses at old-fashioned things, and declare them "out of date," but there are one or two sterling principles of the things, and declare them "out of date," but there are one or two sterling principles of the by-gone times which are worth clinging to. Upon those "old-fashioned" ideas were modeled the fathers and mothers of the present day, and I think the majority of girls will agree with me that they are pretty good pro-ducts, even though the soil was a trifle old.

T is a difficult thing for youth to under-stand that mature age is its best protector. Young people are so apt to "know it all." The girl with spirit dislikes restraint. She The girl with sparst distikes restraint. Site tunnot see any possible harm in something size would like to do, yet which her parents prefer she should not do. "Why, it is perfectly correct, namma," is her defense, and it is, so far as she can see. But, as the homely old saying has it, "Youth looks only as far as its nose." A girl of sixteen cannot be expected to know as much as the woman of forty, but what she can do is to listen to the advice of the latter. can do is to listen to the advice of the latter.

It is always well for a daughter to remember that her mother acts only for her own best interests—and this truth holds good first, last, and all the time. At the time when she is counseled not to do this, or to go there, or to have a certain girl as an associate, she may not have a certain girl as an associate, she may not be a certain the content of methods are defined the have a certain girl as an associate, she may not understand the parent's motive or define the reason, but after awhile, as she gets a little further along, she will be able to look back and see that her mother was not so wrong after all. Because a mother does not always give a reason for a certain action gives no license to the daughter to conclude that none exists. A mother's instinct, when it concerns the welfare mother's instinct, when it concerns the welfare of a son or daughter, is pretay certain to be right, and a young man or young woman will never go scriously astray in relying upon that maternal intuition. What may seem very misty to young eyes is very clear when seem through experienced eyes. A thorough confidence in the advice of a good father or mother on the part of a child is never misplaced, no matter whether that child is ten or twenty years of age, and even at thirty the advice of sixty has often proven itself of distinct value and superiority. A son or daughter never grows too old to learn from its pareot.

THE accusation that American girls are given to the habit of "talking back," to their clders is one which applies only to a certain type of young woman—a type which calls more for sympathy for the few, than it does for lamentations as regards its number. No true American girl, born and brought up in a refined home, can ever forget her self-re-spect to that extent. She may seem petulant at a correction, she may chafe under a rebuke, but the real American girl yields to no one in but the real American girl yields to no one in her inner respect and devotion to her parents. Instances are without number where that quality has been demonstrated. And even where the trait of retort in a young girl's character develops itself, she cannot be held solely to blame. Such a trait as a child's disrespect to parents implied either in speech or action, is one which rests in the hands of the parents for-correction. Except in rare in-stances, where an adverse character develops despite careful training, a disrespectful atti-tude of a son or daughter toward a parent re-flects far more discredit upon the parent than flects far more discredit upon the parent than it possibly can upon the child. You cannot always bend the twig in the way you would like to have it grow, but with some of us the trouble lies in the bending.

NOR is it true, I think, that American children rule their parents. If it were so, this would indeed be no unlappy land of ours. The only approach to a semblance of truth to this assertion, lies in the spoiled children we occasionally meet. I always feel sorry for a spoiled child, for, as a rule, she is a greater hunden, to be self-than also is to these stars. meets. A house with a spoiled child in it is a place I always like to avoid. To have to listen to the whimsical prattle of a boy or girl who has been accustomed from its birth to have his or her own way is a maddening process to me. Those children undoubtedly rule their parents—and they find it out very much to their discomfort. Next to an ungrateful child. their discomfort. Next to an ungrateful cities, give me one of those spoiled darlings (?) to make miserable the life of a same man or a good woman. A spoiled child is never satis-fied. It has a thirst for things it shouldn't have compared to which the unsutiable thirs of a fever-racked potient is positively mild and not worth mentioning. No house is large enough for it; no purse deep enough to satisfy its wants. Not that it actually needs so much room, or that it really wants one-tenth of the things it asks for; satisfaction comes in the more "having" and not in the enjoying. Such a child rules not only the parents, but absolutely controls a house, and the souls of the other occupants are not their own. There is no surer way of wrecking the life of a human being than to spoil it as a child. Pampered children never amount to anything, except when their ways can be made the ways of others, and that is not always easy in this

TAKE our American bome-life as a whole, bowever, and the foreigner will find in it no greater or sweeter charm than the beauti-ful love and devotion existing in the Ameri-can son and daughter for the parent. It is characteristic of the American mother that she makes a companion of her daughter, and by this method the mind of the girl is more speedily and more safely developed than if her relation was that simply of a child. The interests of the American father and son are interests of the American father and son are more often closely allied than one can find in any other nation. While in other nations generation succeeds generation, in America the son's interests are identical with those of the father during lifetime, and two genera-tions stand shoulder to shoulder. The most successful business houses in America to day are those which are comented by filial interests, and where a family unite in perfect lear-mony in business or in society there is pre-sented a strength that few things can successfully combat,

THE American man is typical of all that signifies devotion to her who gave him life and being. He believes that God gave him a wife to love but a mother to revere. His most manly quality is his homage to his mother. I remember an instance where in a house occupied by two families a point of disagreement came up.

"Is it not pessible that your mother may have been wrong?" asked one of the dispuhave been wrong?" asked one of the disputants of the other.

"My mother, sir," was the rejoinder, "Is incapable of doing wrong in anything."
What room was there for further argument with such an answer? Going to the extreme, you say. Perhaps; but it was beautiful, nevertheless. It was the answer of a typical American can man.

can man.

My own family is foreign born and bred, and I remember that one of my father's first observations in this country was the devotion of American men for their mothers. Not that it is an unknown quality among European men, by any norans, but if there is one word that seems to mean more to an American man than any other it is: mother. Let him marry, let him have family cares without number, but he never finds that his duty to his mother is done until her life has run its end, and then she becomes even more to him as a frathen she becomes even more to him as a fra-grant memory than she was as a sweet reality

THERE is no greater or deeper satisfac-tion to a good man than to be able to have his mother live to see him fairly launched on a successful career of usefulness. H his father dies before he has made his mark in the world he does not seem to feel it so keenly. But somellow he always wants his mother to live long enough to see for herself that she did not give him life for naught, and that the world is a little better off for the being which she gave unto it. There wells up within a man's nature a peculiar sense of pride when some day his mother comes quietly to him, and cutting her arms around his neck says. some day his mother comes quietly to him, and putting her arms around his neck, says, with all the tenderness of a mother's love: "You have done well, my boy. Now, I am content to go," No matter how hard a man may have worked, such approval comes to him as his sweetest and richest reward. The applaanse of the world is little compared with much a motherly beneficiar. such a motherly benediction, and more pre-cious to him is the remembrance of that little sentence in after years than all the honors which can be showered upon him or the riches that may be his. It has been my privilege to hear this sacred thought from the lips of more than one of the most famous of American men—men who are to-day leaders in their professions: others who have gone to their graves crowned with the ripest honors and fullest laurels of the world.

W E men are, after all, but grown-up boys.
The fond stroke of a mother's hand is as welcome to us at forty as at fourteen.
The world never looks so bright to a man as when be sits at his mother's side with her arms around him. Women never seem so gentle to him as when she fondly strokes the recreant lock from his brow, after a trying day, and says in that voice, so familiar but eversweet: "You are tired, are you not, dear?"
Ab, these mothers who come into a room ever-sweet: "You are tired, are you not, dear?"
Ah, those mothers who come into a room when a man is almost worn out, and bring new life, new hope and new spirits with them.
Those field-inspired women who say so much in a smile, who speak so lovingly to us in a look, who send a thrill of confidence through a man in a tender pressure of the hand. They know us so well. They knew us when we were children, but how much better they know us when we are men! We try to convince them that we are no longer only a quiet little smile and a fond little pet-ting shows us the fallacy of our own words. They stroke our cheeks, and somehow the mind seems more restful, and the brain coases to throb. The things we try to hide from them are the very things we tell them all about. They know with a single look just what is troubling us, and although they never ask us we pour out to them our worries just as we did when we were children. The quarrels of the play-ground have only become the worries of business life. Oh, those mothers who will never learn to speak of us by our more mature names, who niterly refuse to recognize that mock dignity that we so like to assume. That sweet and tender little woman, in whose creation God used such a rare piece of exquisite texture, who will never speak of her "boy" but as "my Eddie!" She will know him by no other name. All efforts at dignity are lost upon her; the baby of the cradle has simply become the baby of her heart. It is getting to be an old baby now, but time alters not the object of that mother's eye.

She knows how foud he is of her careses, How like a great, hig boy is he; The lab has great hos small for him to rest in But, oh; how well his head rests on her breast!"

"Perbaps it may turn out a song. Perhaps turn out a sermon.

HIS month the bride is abroad in the land—on the water; down by the restless sen, out on the boundless sen, out on the boundless ocean; skinming across limit-less prairies; climbing the mountain paths; huanting the hotel piazzas; nestling in Pullman cars; in the ball-room; on the promenade; where tennis spreads its nets for wary men as yet un-smared; in the cabin; on deck; en, pilot houser—here, there.

for wary men as yet unsmared; in the cabin; on deck;
in the forbidden pilot-house—here, there, everywhere. When she isn't in sight you can hear her cooing. When you can neither hear her nor see her this blessed, happy, heavenly mouth, you may know then that you will never see nor hear anything again in all your life. It is her innings; she is creating a part; nobody is on this scene except her fascinating, all-sufficient, lovely seif. Oh, there is a young man with her; the most insignificant man in the world—and he looks it—but nobody has eyes or ears for him, Once in a while the men honor him enough to wonder "what on earth ever possessed her to marry that chump?" But that is all the notice he gets. Well is he called the groom; nobody looks at him or knows that he is; it is the filly whose groom he is that rends the throats of the grand stand with prolonged vivas of admiration.

AGE CANNOT WITHER HER

AGE CANNOT WITHER HER

A BRIDE of sixty sweet summers would a still be a bride. She declares herself by bur disguises. When she would shun the soft dove-like "bridey" effects in colors, and wears a truveling dress designed by the loftiest flight of womanly gentus to declare the wearer an "Old Married Woman," she might as well have embroidered across the shoulders thereof, in latter of claring contrast four inches long. have embroidered across the shoulders thereof, in letters of glaring contrast, four inches long, "Bride." Because every button on that sait a month shouting in trumpet tones to every glancing eye: Bride! Bride! Bride! The baggageman looks up as he receives their trunks, which are unlike any other baggage on the train; he grins at the abject man who is waiting for the checks, and says to his assistant as he turns away: "Third lot this morning, Bill." The brakeman assumes an expression of supernatural respect, and bows low as he touches her elbow with his flugers, by which light and airy gesture, it is a pleasant fiction of the brakeman, a female passenger is at once lifted bodily from the platform and deposited inside the car. The porter knows her on sight, albeit he aever saw her before, and his fice shines like the Naulahka as he bovers about the pair, brushing invisible dust from dastless things, for he knows in his beart that the young man for he knows in his beart that the young man is good for a dollar or nothing, and he is going to play a strong game for the dollar. The con-ductor, with the anxious frown of grave responsibility deepening on his face with the hurry of the first collection, feels his face re-lax into smiles that break through all the clouds of his care as he reaches for their tickets. He ignores—as does everybody else—the rooms num—and bends down to the bride with a fatherity air that is most becoming to litm, as he gives reasouring and confident answers to her amazing questions about unheard-of connections at utterly impossible junctions a thousand miles beyond the end of his run.

The passengers buy no books that day. They study the bride. And she is well worth read-ing, although a poet who knew Moore about her than I do, sings

"My only books Were woman's looks, And folly's all they've taught me."

THERE'S LANGUAGE IN HER EYE NAY, her foot speaks." When she remem-bers that she is a bride and doesn't cure who knows it, she is irresistible to everybody except a few dusty-hearted old bachelors or some other people who hever were brides, When she remembers where she is, straightens, up and assumes the look of a matron to whom weslding journeys were novelties perhaps when her second daughter was married, nechug themselves with delight, and grand-mammas smile till their dear old faces are sweeter than the bride's. The porter vanishes into the smoking room lest if he remain in sight a minute longer he will lose that muchsight a minute longer he will lose that much-coveted dollar. I said a moment ago nobody noticed him. Nobody? Everbody. For she does, and to him there is no omeelse on board this planet. When, ofter an elaborate re-ad-justment of his necktic, she glances quietly around and enteles you staring at her, you look and feel as guilty as though she had caught you picking a pocket. And when at the dining station an impetuous baggageman calls him "Sonny," how the beautiful anger of the goldess transforms her face. "Sonny!" He, her own and only; he, radiant and nervous He, her own and only; he, radiant and nercous in the awful glory of the new, high, glossy, shiny, slick slik hat, which is his sole distinction; which at times be awkwardly rules the wrong way, and every time it gets a bump, which is every time be puts it on, his heart breaks with a bollow groon. Away with him; what have we to do with the man in the moon when we can look upon the queen of the con-stellations herself?

AGE IS NOT ALL DECAY

SOME seven thousand or twenty millions SOME seven thousand or twenty millions of years ago, I have forgotten which, this world was made for just these two. And if ever they go out of it, it will close the shop, put up the shutters, take down the sign, and go out of business. Why, just now there came into the car a woman forty years old if a day and she said: "Oh, Orlando, dear Orlando, I will never be old and wrinkled and gray like that woman, will I?" And Orlando marmors endearing consolations, and assures her, with many protestations, that make the recording angel think seriously of hiring a stenographer if this month lasts much longer, that she will grow younger and fairer the longer she lives. Some women do grow old so gracefully and sweetly. Now, his mother—she will grow like her. Silence that speaks, but says it in a language strange to Orlando. Unhappy man. She once sawa photograph of his mother. She had 2 neck like Annie Laurie's, and, however benutiful and graceful a neck twenty-eight inches long may be on a swan it is contributed. and, however beautiful and graceful a neck twenty-eight inches long may be on a swan it is out of proportion on a woman well stricken in years, with a countenance like a wooden nut-cracker. Pity, oh ever youthful Hebe! She will grow to be like Orlando's mother, then? Has she no mother of her own to grow-like? She has, as Orlando will learn one of these long days, when he has nothing else to do.

COME LIKE SHADOWS, SO DEPART EVERYBODY sees at once the little cloud that hides the warm sunlight that all day long has made her face a day of perfect June. And the last man in the car to see it is

June. And the last man in the car to see it is Octando. Then he wants to know with sin-cere anxiety and concern, "What is the matter, darling?" "Oh, nothing." Now then, Or-lando, gird up the loins of your mind and be patient and strong. You have a piece of work cut out for you that would make a man who has been married four times roll up his sleeves and draw a long breath before grappling with the problem. It is had enough when she has a headache which was not there ten seconds has been married four times roll up his sleeves and draw a long breath before grappling with the problem. It is had enough when she has a headache which was not there ten seconds ago. But when there is "Nothing" the matter; just absolutely "Nothing," als, then weak man, prepare for defeat.

By and by the attack of "Nothing" passes away as suddenly and mysteriously as it came. As she endured it like a martyr, so she comes out of it like an angel. He doesn't understand the grand transformation at the close of the fifth act any better than he did the development of the plot in the acts preceding. Only this he knows—she makes him feel it most deeply—that it was all his fault, and that she forgives him. What for he doesn't know, but heaven knows, and that is enough for him. She loves him still, and so she "hugs the offender and forgives the offense; sex to the last." You can see that Orlando is perplexed. Oh, much puzzled young husband, gray and thin will be the locks which will cluster above the thoughtful brow whereon old Time will write his annual nutographs with many wrinkles, before you get through the study of this feminine enigma. In occasional moments of acute dementia you will think that you understand her at last. These will be pleasant, although transentillusions for you. Orlando. Worse than that; sometimes you will try to puzzle ber, even as she has perplexed you. Employ your time in something which possibly you can do, but don't try to puzzle your wife. Your skull, when she looks at you, is of fine French plate glass, through which she calmly contemplates the action of your brain and silently reads your thoughts. What she closu't know about you, God bless her laughing penetration, you will never find out.

As IT is in THE BEGINNENG

AS IT IS IN THE BEGINNING

In your summer loiterings at some quiet place by the sex-although there is no such place now anywhere in the world-how many times have you observed, when two people will take a little sail on a quiet day, that all their troubles occur at the start. There is no breeze down under the great piles of the wharf. The amosteur sailors are awkward, the boat is obstinate, the laxy breeze fitful and perverse. The boat noses around every way except the right one; it taugles itself up with other eraft; its unhappy crew is bombarded with sarcastic advice and scofling bombarded with sarcastic advice and scoffing encouragement from the battery of loungers on the wharf. The sallors jibe, and luff, and stand by, and fall off, and do all the other nantical things they can think of, but there they stay, floundering about under the fire of the battery, which grows more impid as the crew loses first its patience and then its temper. But by and by they get out where light-winged zephyrs can kiss the swelling sail, the little craft responds to the sense of life in wave and wind, there is a joyous life in wave and wind, there is a joyous naumair about the how as though the sea were laughing with the crew, and graceful as a dream and real as life the tiny back careens just enough to look most charming, and sails away in a faint cloud of pursuing cheers. Where the crew wish to go they bend their course. Clouds will come across the skies, waves there will be to buffet, winds to meet, tides and currents to oppose and overcome, but there will be life, action, the joy of doing something, and the exhibitation of going somewhere all the rest of the voyage. just enough to look most charming, and sails

BEST LAID SCHEMES GANG AFT A-GLEY
IT is always harder work getting out of the slip than the young folks are apt to imagine. Happy, indeed, the crew of the good ship "Housekeeper," if the paternal tug is willing to tow them out into mid-stream, set them in the channel, and give them a maternal pilot until they make a good offing. But when they must get out the sweeps and make their own way as best they enn until they "raise the wind" they may look out for many surface perplexities. The welding journey costs more than they estimated. The only actual expense that didn't vary from their estimates was the milway fare, which should never be counted in among the liabilities of a railway journey. There is very little difference in expense between traveling on a free pass and paying full fare. But everything else astonishes the youngsters. The baggage, the carriages, the humble bus, the plebean street car, the parter, the waiter, the useless things they luy, not because they want them but because the vendors appeal to them so earnestly they can't help it. And they are so happy on their wedding journey they can't bear to be repellant to any human creature.

PLEASANT SUPPRISES ALL ROUND BEST LAID SCHEMES GANG AFT A-GLEY

PLEASANT SURPRISES ALL ROUND

SOME surprises, not down on the bills, wait for both of them as the pluy goes on. He learns that as a builder of plain, substantial pie, whereof the upper crust is callous and the lower strata impervious to the action of heat, she is original both in design and execution. She is surprised to learn that he isn't so good a manager as also flourable and more learn to the strategy of She is surprised to learn that he isn't so good a manager as she thought, and wonders how he managed to get his salary mised every year by the house, forgetting that all this is a new business to him. He discovers that the sweetest tempered little woman in the world carries a concealed temper on her person, not noticing how sorely and in how many new ways she is daily under trial. She is surprised to note that she is, little by little, becoming the waiter of the establishment, and not the head waiter, either. She remembers how he used to waiter of the distancements and not be head waiter, either. She remembers how he used to spring to pick up a glove, weighing less than a kies, and now she raises his overcout, weigh-ing eight pounds, from whateverchair he may cast it upon and hangs it up for him. Once or twice he catches her with her halo off, and she is inclined to think that the one he used or twice he catches her with her halo off, and she is inclined to think that the one he used to wear when she saw him three times a week, was a borrowed one. All there is of all this, is, they are learning that each of them married, not an angel, as they supposed, but a human being of the opposite sex. That's all.

And they will be far happier with each other than either could be with an angel. That would be a mesalliance, indeed. I never knew a man in my life who was fit to marry an angel, or who could live happily with one on this earth. And a sweet time the angel would have of it, trying to live even with the worst of us. Angels have been cast into the pit for their wickedness, but none of them were ever so bad that they were sentenced to marry human beings. Why, you know what kind of a man your brother Ben is? Well, Orlando is just about that sort of a man. Orlando isn't quite so considerate as Ben, but you can train him. He's as good as other men, and that gives you a foundation upon which to build the best man in the world.

GOOD MATCHES OF IMPERFECT PEOPLE

GOOD MATCHES OF IMPERFECT PEOPLE

WHAT a picture of wemanly grace and queenly beauty is the figure of Rebeksh, as she comes down to us in the soft light of a true love story, nearly four thousand years old, and yet as sweet, as tender and as new as the sonset last evening. The good God arranged that wedding and blessed it. Aren't you satisfied to be as fair a bride, as good a wife, as devoted a mother as was the beautiful daughter of Nahor? And yet, I wot that Isaac found his helpmate a "lee-tle" trying at times. She fooled him, and she fibbed to him, and she made no end of counity between her own children, did Rebekah. And nevertheless, my daughter, I hope that your memory will be as fragrant, and as sweet in the bearts of men four thousand yearn hence as is that of this bride of Mesopotamia.

And your husband; I hope he is as good a man as that other lover in a true love story, nearly as old as the race of man, who wrought at hard labor fourteen years for the girl he loved, and to whom his second term of seven years of servitude "seeneed but a few GOOD MATCHES OF IMPERFECT PEOPLE wrought at hard labor fourteen years for the girl he loved, and to whom his second term of seven years of servitude "seemed but a few days, for the love he had for her." You can't expect to find a man much more devoted than that. And nevertheless Jucob had occasion to scold Rachel right sharply after they were married, and she got him into a scrap with his father-in-law, and I fancy that Jacob was pro-bably not a very easy man at all times to her bably not a very easy man at all times to live with in a small tent. Yet how he loved her. How tenderly, with what pathos of fidelity does his mind go bask, when he is old, and blind, and bed-ridden, to the time in their blind, and bed-ridden, to the fine in their journeying, "when Rachel died by me in the land of Cansan in the way, when yet there was but a little way to come unto Ephrath." You don't expect to be happier than these people, do you? You don't want a better husband than that? You won't get a better one.

MAN IS MAN, AND WHO IS MORE?

You understand, then, that you have mar-ried a man? If it pleases you to think that he is "a combination and a form, indeed, that he is "a combination and a form, indeed, where every god doth acem to set his sent, to give the world assurance of a man," why, all right. We gladly grant you that privilege, and in your presence we will agree to agree with you. But you must not complain if, taking advantage of the blessed secrecy of the Australian hallot system, we quietly "nong-wump" on the ticket and vote for the candidate whom we esteem so highly; we dare not proclaim him openly? Your bushand, we admit, is just about as near perfection as a man can be. How near that may be is, as Kipling can be. How near that may be is, as Kipling says, another story; and a long one.

Robert & Burdette

THIS World Renowned is a solid extract Dietetic Preparation derived from most superior growths of wheat-nothing more.

It combines the Greatest Quantity of Nourishment with the Least amount of Labor Necessary for its digestion, and stands to-day Unrivalled in the ROOM Of the SICK OR CONVALESCENT.

Pure, Soothing and its value in fevers, in inaultion, and in all gastric and enteric diseases,—especially in Cholera-Infantum, Cholera-Morbus, Diarrhua and Dysmlery has been incontestably proven;—often being the only food the stomach will tolerate when life seems depending on its retention.

Always Uniform it is the safest food for and Reliable Nursing Mothers, Infants and Children; an incomparable aliment for dyspeptic, deficate, infirm and aged persons; a most delicious and whole-some article of diet for the strong as well as Universally by physicians, pharmacists, Recommended the public and the press, its sales and popularity are constantly increasing; and it will have satisfactory results in nutrition far into the future because it is based on MERIT and proven success in the past.

SOLD BY DWUGGETS. SHEPPING DEPOT, JOHN CARLE & SONS, New York.

Tooth-Food.

This medicine for babies prevents and cures pains of teething and resulting diseases, not by putting children to sleep with an opiate, for it contains no harmful drugs, but by supplying the teeth forming ingredients which are lacking in most mothers' milk and all artificial foods. It is sweet and babies like it. $1.00 a bottle, at all druggists. Send for pamph-let "Teething Made Easy."

THE REYNOLDS MFG. CO., CINCINNATI, O.

For Heating Dwellings, Public Buildings, etc., by Hot Water Circulation, the

Gurney Hot Water Heaters

AND RADIATORS

are the original and best. They have never failed to take the highest awards wherever shown. Send for our illustrated book " How Best to Heat our Homes. a work of art on the subject of house-warming.

GURNEY HOT WATER HEATER CO., 153 Pranklin St., Boston, Mess. Selling Agents for Middle States, 47 So. Carrol St., Chicago, St.

Do you want a new plane? Do you want to exchange an old square plane or an organ on a new upright? If you do, we want your name and address. To get them we will send you free the "College Album of Yoral and Instrumental Moste by Standard Compowers," if you will mention where you saw this advertisement and enclose a two-cent stamp for postage,

THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CENCERNATI, O.

Everett Planes are carefully made, their tone is per-fect, they contain all desirable improvements, and each plano la warranted for seven years.

The purpose of this Department is to bring the members of the Order of The King's Daughters and its President into closer relations by personal and familiar "Talks" and "Closs." All letters from the "Daughters" bearing upon this one and special purpose only, should be addressed to Mrs. BOTTOME, care of The Labtes' Home JOURNAL, and she will be glid to receive them. Please do not, however, send letters to Mrs. BOTTOME concerning membership in the Order, or business communications of any nature. All such should be addressed direct to the headquarters of the order, 158 West Twenty-third Street, New York city, and prompt attention will be given.

HEART TO HEART TALKS

UNE! The month of "more abundant life" —the month when the flowers are given away, the month when the June roses are so abun-

June roses are so abundant that you can even ask your neighbors to give you a few. O, for more natures with such abundant life! Such generosity! Such sympathy that you can even go and ask them for the flowers—the perfume you sorely need. Now, if the outward will only suggest to us the inward. Many years ago I committed to memory a few lines that come to use so often when I see people who have so much of outer life, and yet are not rich in thought and feeling:

Man's bliss comes never to him from without, The rich man buys his pleasures all for maight: The lefthest off stands bullow as the poer; Laves this the soul, and keeps it full of belp For others; sweet refreshment to itself. The good man has life's fountain in himself."

I hope the young Daughters will commit these lines to memory. Oh, how many times have I said, in the years gone down into the past:

" Man's bliss comes never to him from without," "Man's bits comes never to him from without," and I have said to myself, for I have a way of talking to myself, "There is no use in your thinking if your circumstances were different you would be different! If you cannot be happy now, you would not be happy then.
You carry the machinery of happiness or unhappiness in yourself." Of course, she wanted to talk back, but I would not listen to her, I simply kept repeating:

"Man's bliss comes never to him from without."

THE BODY AND THE SPIRIT

THE BODY AND THE SPIRIT

I NEVER go to a new place, or see things that are new to me, but I get some lessons, and then I want to give them to my circle. Since we last came together I have been at a Sanitarium for rest, and so much interested me there in the way of illustrations. I shall never forget the first morning I went into the room where I was to avail myself of "the movement cure." The hum of machinery was all over the room; a machine for each part of the body. All that was necessary was adjustment; for if the adjustment was not properly seen to you might get hurt. In that moment I seemed to see all the machinery of life, all the domestic machinery that we have to get adjusted in order to get the benefit from life. I suppose if we could only see that all that is painful in our life is for our benefit, and we have but to put ourselves in right relations to it, we might be constantly enriched. I have a dear friend who felt at one time in her life that the grant need with low were and we have but to put duresves in right relations to it, we might be constantly enriched. I have a dear friend who felt at one time in her life that the great need with her was patience. She was a remarkably quick woman. She executed her thoughts rapidly. At the time she felt she needed patience she had a nurse for her children who was painfully slow. One day it suddenly flashed over her that this girl was providentially sent to teach her patience. She needed that piece of machinery. As she afterward said: "I made a cluriot of her and rode into patience!" Perhaps the "incompatibility" we hear so much of nowadays might be used for the perfection of the hasband and wife if we read character deep enough. I heard of a wife in answer to a question, "I don't see how you can love a man so cruel as your husband is to you," replying, "I see not what he is, but what he will be some day." Maybe there is something for us still to learn in that wonderful 13th Chapter of 1st Corinthians! and the ful 13th Chapter of 1st Corinthians! and the lesson it teaches us in its "hopeth all things!"

THE LESSON I LEARNED

BUT I started to tell of lessons the Smita-rium taught me. We all took exercises in physical culture, and our teacher said: "There are very few women who know how to walk currectly." Then she added: "Don't think you have an easy task before you; you will be so apt to fall back into your old ways," and I was startled when she said: "If you intend to have how to stand straight and walk correctly. was startled when she said: "If you meend to learn how to stand straight and walk correctly, you need to think of it every hour of the day, and dream of it at night." In that moment I seemed to see what purpose was necessary in life to stand upright, and, in the deepest sense, to walk correctly. For the moment I forgot all about physical culture in the thought of what was required in accircula culture. all about physical culture in the thought of what was required in spiritual culture, and yet health of body and health of mind go together. "I beseech you" said St. Paul, "present your bodies." The body is the vehicle for the spirit. It never seemed more desirable than now to have good healthy bodies for healthy spirits to live in. Take any light that comes to you and act on it for the perfection of the house you live in—your own body.

THOROUGHLY DISCOURAGED

NE writes me after coming home from her meeting with her circle where, apparently, nothing had been accomplished: "I am thoroughly discouraged. I think how much of life has been so unsatisfactory, so unsatisfying, one's best effort seems lost; friends so disappointing, circumstances so different from what one would choose; so much of loss; so little gain." Now, this is by no means an unusual meditation. Only we must not indulge in it. As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he. Stop thinking sad thoughts. You can if you put your will into it. I shall always be indebted to the friend who told me that all disdebted to the friend who told me that all dis-couragement was from the devil, and we must couragement was from the devil, and we must fight the devil. I think each one has a partic-ular devil to fight. With some it is the devil of discouragement. Resist, and he will flee; always and forever choose the bright side. If my sister had said to berself: "Well, I must be patient, I think it will be better next time," and then had turned to some fresh duty, she would have saved herself, and saving self is no little thing. no little thing.

I WILL DO RIGHT

I WILL DO RIGHT

I WISH those that put on the cross would wear it to help them in the fight with whatever devil is especially theirs. I have not so many people of late that have told me of sins they were indulging in and to which they had become slaves, though their nearest friends did not suspect them, and I have said to them: "Nothing less than very heroic treatment will do in your case; you will have to make a trensendous fight to get your freedom. You will have to say "I will be free if it costs me my life." I like a tremendous "I will" and "I will not." It is not in the power of Satan to make me sin if I will not do it. I have the power of choice in my own hand, and God will respect it. If he had made us machines, of course he would make us run on the right track. Now, dear Daughters, I speak to you earnestly, as a mother to her children, do heed my advice. "Use your will on the side of right. Say, "I will obey God; I will do the thing I know is right."

I know lovely girls, lovely to look at, who have had all the advantages that wealth and education could give them, yet with wills so weak that in the presence of temptation they yield. You must not; you must have a will that says "No, I will never do wrong." And now is the time to form the habit. I have been so sick at heart of latg in finding wrong habits formed, and they have become like iron, so that when I said: "Promise me that you will not do the thing your conscience tells you is wrong," the sad answer has come: "I can promise, but I know I shall break it." It really seems to me we have yet to wake up, at least many have, to the fearful power, or glorious power, of liabit. Sowing and resping—ah, what shall the harvest he? Let your little cross mean victory over every wrong habit! No quarter to the enemy! And do not forget the little foxes that spoil the vines. John Wesley need to say in the morning when the disposition was to turn over and have another nap: "You can stay there if your little cross mean victory over every wrong habit! No quarter to t to obey you. There are few words so grand as obedience. Obedience to God makes you mas-ter of yourself.

THE STORY OF AN OLD UMBRELLA

WAS reading a story the other day that I made quite an impression on my mind. It is well known that the Queen of England It is well known that the Queen of England loves to go about in simple guise among the cottages of the poor. One day the Queen was caught in a shower and she entered the dwelling of an old woman; the old dame's sight must have been dim for she did not recognize her sovereign. "Will you lend me an umbrella?" said the roval lady, who did not happen to have one with her. The old woman granted the request gradgingly. "I hae two umbrellas; said the dame, "ane is a good one, t'other verra old. Ye may take this; I guess I will never see it again." And she proffered a ragged concert whose whale-hone ribs neight be seen here and there through the coarse form cover. England's Queen quietly took the umbrella, which was better than nothing, and went forth into the rain, not by one word betraying her rank. The next day one of Her Majesty's servants brought back the wretched umbrella, and then the cottager knew to whom she had lent it. "Ay, ay, had I but keenned who it was that asked for the loan, she wad hae been welcome to my lest, to a' that I hae i' the world." exclaimed the mortified old woman, shocked and grieved at having missed such an opportunity of winthe mortified old woman, shocked and grieved at having missed such an opportunity of winning a smile from the Queen

GIVE OF YOUR BEST

A RE we not in the greatest danger of not recognizing our King from day to day? We are apt to think of Him as above us in the Heavens, seated on a throne. The teaching of the New Testament is that He is in our poor humanity, and inasmuch as we do kind deeds to the least one off these, He said, "ye havedone it unto nae." Now, if we give but little, only little will return to us. I think if the old woman had given her best, not only would the best umbrella have been returned but some token of appreciation that she had given her best; but she gave her old umbrella, and her old umbrella came back. He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly. I remember being at a camp neering once when a collection was taken up, and after the collection a quaint old sister prayed for those who had given five cents might receive a five cent blessing; and for those who had given a dollar did side of the sear and ollars, give them a ten dollar blessing; "and oh, Lord," she said, "if anyone has given ten dollars, give them a ten dollar blessing; "As the years go by, the one passage of Scripture my mother repeated oftener than any other, has a deeper meaning to me because I see it fulfilled—" Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Give your best and you get the best; give your poorest and it comes back to you, not always in the same coin, but you get paid. I remember hearing my father chidded for giving so much to the church, and he was reminded that much richer men than he was gave less. My father would answer: "I have nothing to do with them, I give what I think is right." Ah, after a lapse of thirty years, his nobility, his generosity is a priceless gift to us who remember laim; no money could make up for the loss of such a memory. If you live long enough you get where you see how things come out. The reasing time comes here. I do not think erosity is a priceless gift to us who remember him; no money could make up for the loss of such a memory. If you live long enough you get where you see how things come out. The resping time comes here. I do not think that old woman ever got over the mortification of lending that old umbrella to her Queen. Would it not be well for us to really face the fact that we are giving or withholding from our King? Do you know I think that in many minds at this time, when the Sermon on the Mount seems at last to be coming to the front, there are grave doubts whether we have been Christians after all? And so I am glad that in our Order we continually emphasize doing all the little things that make up our life "In His Name," as muto Him. And yet we have, it seems, to me, hardly touched the outer edge of the glorious truth that we can do all things as if we did them for the Lord Jesus. O what a revelation will take place in this world when the Sermon on the Mount is lived out, and the forward movement is simply taking that road. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." The words of the King will have to go burning down into all our hearts during these coming days when nothwill have to go burning down into all our hearts during these coming days when noth-ing less than the Christ spirit will at all avail for bringing this world back to God.

FROM MANY HEARTS

S I read the package of letters this month As I read the package of letters this month some made me smile, and some made me cry. I smiled when one letter said: "I have joined the Order and the Margaret Bottome Circle, and now I want to join your Shut-In Circle." My first thought was all who join my circle become Shut-Ins, that is, I shut them in my heart and have a good time with them there. But maybe this dear child meant she wanted to be numbered with the Shut-Ins to whom I write in the JOHNAL. child meant she wanted to be numbered with the Shut-Ins to whom I write in the Journal. I had not thought of you in any distinct way, there are so many Shut-Ins in my circle. A letter from one is before me now, in which she says she has known God as her Father for thirty-five years, but adds that God and Heaven have been more real to her since she joined our sisterbood. For nearly thirty years abe has been a Shut-In, and the day she wrote me was the anniversary of her marriage. She had been married forty years, and they had been such happy years that she gave as her testimony that in her case marriage had been no failure. The letter concluded with, "All's well, whichever side the grave the morning light may break." Life is no failure, dear daughters, with those who know the many letters received this month was one from a little son of our King who lives in North many letters received this month was one from a little son of our King who lives in North Dakota, and, of course, he asked me questions, and among them this, "Do you live in New York? You do not tell me in our Journal where you live." I thought till then that I had told you. "Have you any little boys in your house?" Ah, me, I once had, and I miss them; and yet I ought to be very thank-ful, for they have all grown into men. Now your house?" Ah, me, I once had, and I miss them; and yet I ought to be very thankful, for they have all grown into men. Now I suppose some little daughter is saying, "Have you any little girls?" My sweet little Mambe does not live with me here. She is with Jesus, where so many little darlings have gone to live. I thank my little five year old friend for asking me questious, and all the little daughters and sons I shall be glad to have write to use. I only wish you could all see the beautiful type letter that my little friend in North Pakota wrote me. It was the nicest letter I ever received from a little boy; and let me tell my young friends, he is a real son of the King, for he helps his mother, and loves and amuses his little sister, and he has a missionary box in which he puts some of his pennies that he earns for the heathen, and he sends his love to all the little King's Sons in our order (and there are many) and a hig love to me. All the girls and boys will sone he women and men, so be loving and unselfish now, and you will be splendid men and women by and by. women by and by.

Mugard Bottome

B. & B.

If you want DRY GOODS to buy of any kind, write us for

SAMPLES

And if you want to save money in your buying, you ought to have a copy of our Catalogue and Fashion Journal. It is a great Money-Saver, and is to be had for the asking.

Very large and elegant lines of

DRESS WOOLENS

so cents 75 cents 85 cents 81.00 81.95 Yare

Serges
Mixtu 28
Plain Bedford Cords
Funcy Bedford Cords
Chevlots
Chevrons
Jucquards
Camel Hairs
English Suitings

and a host of others.

SILKS

20-inch Faille Francaise (50 colors). 756-21-inch Faille Francaise. 50 colors, 51.35, 55.00 21-inch Crystal Rengalines, all colors, 51.35, 55.50 22-inch Black Francaise. 50.00 22-inch Black Faille Francaise. 50.00 22-inch Black Crystal Rengalines, 52.35 to 50.50

All the very best obtainable for the

Your "Letter Orders" solicited. We make a specialty of this order business, and know we can serve you to your satisfaction and profit.

BOGGS & BUHL 115, 117, 119, 121 Federal Street ALLEGHENY, PA.

FOR CARPET RAGS Peerless Turkey Red

IS ABSOLUTELY PAST. Something new. Single package 10c. Write for Sample Card to

PEERLESS DYES, ELMIRA, N. Y.

Special Adjustment, also, for Trained Skirts G. H. LANGE & CO., ENGLAND NEW YORK OFFICE, 108 WORTH STREET, CITY

CROCK CROCK

IN SHEER INDIA LINONS PRINTED EFFECTS

WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY FAST

UNDSTREETEDLY the sheapest place to have related Ring Goods. Bangs of material courty hair, small size, $1.50; modium size, $2.00; m $2.00. Switches, Wares and Bangs in amount drab and gray shades a specialty.

Hautmard Catalogue stem free. Goods seen

S. C. BECK, Importer and Manufacture HAIR GOODS, 20 North Eighth Street, Philade leiphia, Fa

"PARTED BANG."

FARTED BANG.

Hade of narrai CURLY HAIR guaranted bounding is ladies who went their hair parted. 56 up, according to site and color. Benafflying Made, with proporation. 52. Bair Goods, Conscales, vie., west C. 0, 0, anowhere, Send to the manufacturer for Hustrated priceties. 8. Eff EMIA, 7, 18 state 84, Central Storie Halt, Chirage.

Natural Carty Bangs, B. Parted B. or Waves, for Etherly Ladies, $5.00 to B. dwitter, $5.00 to

FASHIONABLE HAIR.

We will mail goods to reliable parties throughout the United states for approval. The new states for approval. The rest styles and best of good lowest prices. No money quired until they are reced No obligation to keep g if ursulisfactory. Send circular.

JOHN MRDINA,

DO not wonder that poets have imbued the fragrance of the tields of May, and the carols of the the carols of the June woods into their verses. With me the spring and early summer are among the most beautiful times of the year, a time when every leaf is fresh and clean, when every flower is brighter than the dew on its petals! The earth awakens. Winter has fallen dead at the feet of spring, and every tree branch at this moment is telegraphing the news ahead, writing on the air "Spring has come, and the summer is nigh." Everything in nature points to the truth that "the time of the singing of birds truth that "the time of the singing of birds has come!"

LISTENING TO NATURE'S ORATORIO

Do you ever realize, my reader, the mercy of the Lord in the dominant color of the springtime? He might have covered the earth with a dull brown, depressing all nations into metancholy; or He might have covered the earth with a crimson, wearying the eye with its strong blaze. But no; He touches the eye with the color most appropriate for a long while—the color halfway between the long while—the color halfway between the blue and the red, the green, in which is so kindly and lovingly mingled the mercy, the goodness of our God.

As sea monsters, struck by harpoon, shove quickly away at sea, so the winter storm-cloud, struck by lances of light, swims off the quickly nway at sea, so the winter storm-cloud, struck by lances of light, swims off the sky. The trees, at this moment, are pulling on their sleeves of foliage, and their roots their boots of sod; buds burst like harmless bombshells, scattering arosna on the fields. Joy of fishes in the water, joy of insects in the nir, joy of cattle in the fields, joy of wings in the sky. Gracious and blessed God, all the sunshine Thou hast shaken from Thy robe, all the werdure is only the track of Thy feet; all the music is struck from Thy harp. At early sunrise nature goes to morning prayers, read-ing the one hundred and forty-eighth Psalm: "Praise the Lord, mountains and all hills! ing the one hundred and forty-eighth Psalm:
"Praise the Lord, mountains and all hills! fruitful trees and all colars!" Fowl in the yard: flocks on the hill: insects drinking dew from cups of hyacinth; jasmine climbing over the stone wall; martins come back to build their nest in the rafters of the harn, or becoming harmless cavesdroppers at our roof. All the natural world accordant, and filled with the praises of God! Have you praised Him? The winds thank Him, humming amid the tree branches; the birds thank Him, and for the drop they dip from the brook fill all the sky with roundeday; the honey-suckles praise Him, burning incense of fragrance before the throne; the occans praise Him with open dispasson of tempest. Is our voice silent? Is this the snapped harpstring? In the human heart the only broken instrument in the orchestration of earth and sky and sen!

THE SEASON OF BIRD ANTHEM

POOR children, barefooted, and with no mother with her needle to earn them shoes, have longed for the springtime. Farmers, the crits empty, and the cattle looking up mountingly to the bay lying thin on the poles of the mow, have longed for fresh pastures, and the plowboy's song and the rattle of clevises over the sod turned by glistening coul-ters. Invalids, with their forelends pressed against the window-pane, have for months been looking out and seeing the storms shak-ing down their cold blossoms on the ground, and the plowboy or have wrapped around them tighter the shawl as they beard the winds beating a dead march among the hills, and have longed for the sweet serenade of May and June, that they unight sit at hoisted window, or on the porch on a sunny afternoon, or walk among the violets after the dew had gone up from the gross. Gladness on all sides that spring has come and summer is nigh. Certainly, "the time of the singing of bink is come."

Again and again has the season been defeated. Marching up the mountain side, ever and anon hurled back and driven down the and anon hurled back and driven down the rocks, but climbing up again, until it will plant its green standards on the topmost cliff, led on by bands of music in the tree tops. Now let the plowmen sharpen their coult-ers, and charge on the tough glebe, and the harrows with iron teeth chew up the clods, and the waters clap their hands with glastness, and the trees put bridal blossoms in their hair, and the pomis with multitudinous life make the bogs quake, for "the time of the singing of birds is come." THE GOD OF NATURE

THE GOD OF NATURE

DR. PALEY, the Christian philosopher, wrote a very brilliant chapter about the wonders of a bird's wing. Musicians have listened in the woods, and they have written down in their portfolio, in musical score, the song of the birds—the libretto of the forests. Oh, the wisdom of God in the structure of a bird's wing! Oh, the wisdom of God in the structure of a bird's wing! Oh, the wisdom of God in the structure of a bird's voice! Could all the artists and artisans and philosophers of the earth make one dandelion! In one cup of china aster enough wine of wisdom for all nations to drink? Where is the architect who could plan the pillar of one pond hily? Break off the branch of a tree, and see in the flowing sap the divine chemistry of the alum, the sugar, the tamain, the pointsh, the carbonate of lime. Let scientists try to explain the wonders of an artichoke or radish. Let them look at a vegetable and tell the story how it has lungs, and how it has feet, and how it has an ancestry as old as the ages, and how it will have descendants as long as time. Galileo in prison for his advanced notions of things was asked why be persisted in believing in God, and he pointed down to a broken strue on the floor of his dangeon, and said: "Sirs, if I had no other reason to believe the wisdom and the goodness of God, I would argue them from that straw on the floor of this dangeon." Behold the wisdom of God in the construction of the seeds from which all the growths of the springtime come forth—seeds so wonderfully constructed that they keep their vitality for hundreds and thousands of years ago, planted now come up as luxuriantly and easily of corn, sound in the ecrements of the Egypt-ian nummics, buried thousands of years ago, planted now come up as luxuriantly and ensity as grains of corn that grew last year planted this springtime. After the fire in London in 1606, the Sisimbrium iris, seeds of which must have been planted bundreds and hundreds of years before that, grew all over the ruins of the fire. Could the universities of the earth the fre. Could the universities of the earth explain the mysteries of one ruta-baga seed? Could they girdle the mysteries of one grain of corn? Oh, the shining firmament in one drop of dew! Oh, the untraveled continents of mystery in a crystal of snow! Oh, the gorgeous upholstery in one tuft of mountain moss! Oh, the triumphal arch in one tree bessels! Oh the God is no stern! branch! Oh, the God in an atom!

SINGING WITH NATURE'S STRAIN

Singing with Nature's Strain

In a little while there will be no pause in the melody of the woods. Whether it be a warble, or a chant, or a carol, or a chirp, or a croak, God will be praised by it as the songsters of the forest clutching a leaf as though the notes were on it send forth their joy, answered by a score of applauding echoes. Shall not we, more intelligent appreciators, sing? I tell you it is as much our duty to sing as it is to pray. Let parents educate their children in this art, this holy science; let Sabbath-schools resound with it; let the churches of Jesus Christ be faithful in this department of worship, and let the word of Christ dwell in you carrist be faithful in this department of wor-ship, and let the word of Christ dwell in you richly, in all wisdom, teaching and admonish-ing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your heart unto the Lord. When we have so much to sing about, how can we be silent?

PRAISING THE LORD IN SONG I HAVE noticed that sailors going out of port have a sadness in their song; I have noticed that sailors in mid-Atlantic have a weariness in their song, but I have noticed that when sailors are coming into port they have an eestacy in their song. So many of ing nearer to the haven of everlasting rest, shall we not be jubilant in our nusic? Oh, the importance of this exercise! If this part of the service in church be dall, everything runs down to the same temperature, songs and dull sermons are twin brothers this part of the services, do not act as though you were mumbling a mass. Take the min-strelsy of the woods, and sing out. All the young, whose puises bound with health, let the house of God be filled with your pmise; all business men, let them drown their care and the chink of dollars, in a song of praise all worried housewives, let them drown their worries in a melody to God; ye aged ones, so near the song of Moses and the Lamb, ready for the music. "Oh!" says some one, "there is no music in my ear, there is no music in my is to music in my car, there is no music in my voice, and therefore I am silent." Did you ever hear a quail, putting its head under its wing, say: "I can't sing, because I am not a lark, and I am not a nightingase; at the best I can only whistle?" Ah, my friend, the world may laugh at you, but God will not large, and I am not a regular to the second of the second laugh at you; and the most tremulous tone of the humblest Christian will be more musical as it reaches heaven than the most artistic display of elaborated organ.

THE SEASON OF THE SPARROW

W HERE is the loom in which God wove the curtains of the morning? Where is the vat of beauty out of which he dipped the crimson and the gold and the saftron and the blue and the green and the red? Where are the montas in which He ran out the Alps and the Pyrenees? Where is the harp that gave the warble to the lark and the sweet call to the robin, and the carol to the casary, and to the robin, and the carol to the canary, and the chirp to the grasshopper? It is the same God who has all your affairs, and mine, under His care and guidance; the same God who pairs the birds in this springtime gave us our companions; the same God who shows the chaffinch how to take cure of her brood will protect our children; the same God who shows the sparrow in the springtime bow to shows the sparrow in the springtime how to build its nest will give us a habitation; the same God who gathers the down for the pheasant's breast will give us apparel; the same God who this day feeds the squirrels in the wood will feed us; the same God who swung a bridge of gossamer for the insect to walk over has marked out all our pathway. Praise His name! None of us so insignificant as to miss His care. Oh, ye who are worried about your health, and worried about your reputation, and worried about your children, and worried about your property, and worried reputation, and worried about your children, and worried about your property, and worried about everything, in these springtime days, go out and listen to the song of the English sparrow! Are ye not of more value than many sparrows? Behold the fowls of the sir; they gather not into barns, yet your heavenly Father feedeth them, oh, ye of little faith!

BUILDING THE HOME NEST

THIS season always suggests to me the wis I dom of right building of the home nest. I have noticed that birds build always with reference to safety; safety against the ele-ments, safety against intruders. But the trou-ble with us is that we are not so wise, and some of us build too high, and some of us build too low. God anys in Obadiah: "Though thou exalt thyself as the engle, and "Though thou exait thyself as the edge, and though thou set thy nest among the stars, thence will I bring thee down, saith the Lord." The edge constructs its nest at an inaccessible height, from rough materials and large sticks, by strong claws gathered from great distances. The eider-duck takes its own feathers to belp make up the nest; the magpic surrounds its nest with briars to keep off invaders; the blackbird covers its nest with loam. I have, hour after hour, studied the structure of a blackbird covers its nest with loam. I have, hour after hour, studied the structure of a bird's nest; a structure baving more than mathematical accuracy, and more than human ingenuity. Sometimes built in trees, sometimes built in rocks, sometimes built in the caves of dwellings, but always in reference to safety; safety for themselves and safety for their young, safety from the elements and safety from intruders. Wiser than some of us, for we are apt to build too high, or build too low. He who tries to find his satisfactions in the pleasures of this world, the appliance of this world, the emoluments of this world, will come to disturbance, and will come to dethis world, the emoluments of this world, will come to disturbance, and will come to destruction. Applause is pleasant to our ears, but it does not satisfy the soul. That only God's approval can do. There are weasles, there are foxes, there are hawks of temptation ever hunting for prey; and the only safe place in which to build a nest is the tree of the cross, and the only safe rock on which to build a nest is the Rock of Ages.

THE CHORUS OF A NATION

OME now, each one for herself (the two reaches each month) and each one for all, one beart and one voice, let our songs on the Sabbath day be like an acclamation of victory. Our songs on earth are only Saturday night rehearsals for the songs of the Sabbath morning which shall dawn on the hills and the crystals of heaven. And mark you, if the song here is so sweet, what will be the anthem of heaven when all the redeemed break forth into music? In this world it is sometimes very difficult to sing; the voice is muffled with the cold, or the heart is depressed with some fresh sorrow, and it is hard to sing; but when we are all free, what an anthem? Oh, what a doxology! Every hand on a harp, every foot on a throne; every voice taking the key of rapture. Songs soft as sumbers, but loud as storm. Chorus of elders! Chorus of saints! Chorus of martyrs! Chorus of chernblm! Chorus of seraphim! Chorus of morning stars! reaches each month) and each one for all, one

7. be with Talmage

GIVES A GENUINE OXPORD TEACHERS BIBLE, Containing, 1450 Pages, and measuring open, thus included, 7x11 inches,

It is Leather Bound, Gilt Edge, Overlapping Edges, and Contains ALL THE HELPS, Including CONCORDANCE, 40,000 References, Subject Index 16,000 References, TWELVE COLORED MAPS, and Other Valuable Helps.

7. De Nitt Talmage 91, 92, 93, 94, 95 BIBLE BOUCE, NEW TORY CITY.

You can't get AN IDEA of our stock Mantels, Grills Fret Work unless you ill write for our CATALOGUE which we will mail

FREE Address BRIGGS & LEIBIUS 311 Summit Street, Toledo, Ohio

The Best in the Market.

Simple of manipulation. The shutter is always set. Plates or films are used. Covered with leather.

> Size 4 x 5. Price, $18.00.

Send for catalogue and copy of Modern Photography.

RochesterOpticalCompany, 21 S. Water St., Rochester, N. Y.

66 Designs for Dwellings are shown, ranging in cost from 80 to $1000. Many cheap cases. More and better ideas ob-setful and economical building can be statistical from this book than from acquising yet published. Sent prepaid for $1.

FRANK P. ALLEN, ARCHITECT, 61-62 Old Houseman Bik., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

HOME COMFORT Steel Hot Air FURNACES

Guaranteed Free from GAS, SMOKE OR DUST! MADE ONLY BY

WROUGHT IRON RANGE CO. Paid up Capital, $500,000.

St. Louis, Mo. Katablished 1864.

SOLE MANUFACTURERS OF HOME COMFORT STEEL RANGES

******************

For Breakfasts, Lunches and Teas, use

C-O-W-D-R-E-Y'-S

DEVILED HAM

SEND POSTAGE STAMP FOR TIDBIT RECEIPTS

E. T. COWDREY Co., Boston

******

CHAIRS and CRIPPLES

or he pushed about easily, and of the stamp for catalog all styles and sizes. SHITH WHEEL CHAIR COXCERN, 120 William Street, New York

CHORT-HAND Send for Catalogue of Books and below DELF TAUGHT FOR THE PHONOGRAPHIC INSTITUTE, CINCENSATI, 101311.

This Department is conducted and edited by RUTH ASHMORE, who cheerfully invites questions uching any topic upon which her young women readers may desire help or information. idness all letters to RULH ASHMONE, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

has not been such a very long time ago, a year or two, since she was married, and yet you are asking in your beart whether, fond of her as you are, you shall give her your confidence. The young married woman is very apt to rget that she has no right to tell her husband rget that she has no right to tell her husband e secrets of others. And so she goes with the ery of your grief or joy, whispers it to him, it as he does not look at it as she does, he is bit apt to longh, and, it is just possible, peat it to some one clae. Now, this may thappen, but experience has taught me at it is very apt to. And yes, I cannot say: wer go to the married woman with your ses and grievances, because sometimes she ty help you, indeed, may prove the best of ends. That seems contradictory, don't it? rst I say do not, and then I say do. But in dity what I mean is, I would rather you and take an older married woman to whom a can tell your great secrets; and I like a can tell your great secrets; and I like ter for that older married woman to be ar mother. Because a girl is married you ink she does not lose her interest in her girl ink she does not lose her interest in her girl ends; but she does to a certain extent, that if she is a good wife. Then, too, I am not re that young mairons are always good aders; they cannot put themselves in a girl's see again, and so they cannot look at a girl's hirs with an unprejudiced eye. What Charsays and thinks is bound to overshadow it what one little woman would conclude, dies you are not petting the opinion that d so you are not getting the opinion that u think you are. Now, I wonder how my of you will do as I advise; do not need confidante at all; let your life be open d clear enough for the secretive feeling never come into it; and if it should be necessary consult somebody who is near and dear to u, let it be your mother or your older sister.

WHAT THEY CALL FRIENDSHIP

OU are just eighteen years old; you think OU are just eighteen years old; you think you have found in another girl who is at eighteen the woman friend of your life; at are not imppy unless you are with her or saving from her; you neglect your own people r her, you rend what she reads, admire hat she admires, get your gowns and hats here she gets hers, and write her notes in hich "adore," "love," "lifetime adoration" id "everlasting devotion" permeate every se like a perfume. But it is not a pleasant ritume. It is a bit like musk, it is in bad ste and is heavy.

ste and is heavy.
Some day the friend of your heart spends thour with another girl friend; this gives to an opportunity to weep for three. Anher day she takes another girl with her to some her bonnet, and you walk around oking as if all the good things in life had owing as it all the good things in the man it you were a feminine Ham-t moralizing. Now, my dear child, it seems and to throw a bucket of cold water on you, if you and the other girl know as much rout friendship as you do about Sanserit. Friendship does not spring up in a night like word; friendship does not used word words.

Friendship does not spring up in a night like weed; friendship does not need sweet words of centinual demands upon it to keep it ive, and friendship, unlike love, seldom appears at first sight. The way to get a friend to wait; that is, to gradually discovernous your circle of acquaintances who is at who is not congenial, who is and who is a loyal, and who does and who does not ake you the better for being with herricodships have been formed in the most acceptal ways, friendships that lasted all rough life, but they seldom express themtees in the exaberant fashion which I have en describing. Do not waste yourselves on en describing. Do not waste yourselves on only sentimentalities that have no meaning, id which only tend to make you jealous and aspicious. Be as charming and as pleasant you can to everybody, and when the life-og friend comes along she is sure to find you it, or else you will discover her by that mugic and tipped with the great gift, intuition.

THE SNOW-BALL OF SCANDAL

T began at the top of the hill in a very small way. Somebody said: "I think," rolled along, collecting bits as it went, until mebody said: "I believe." It went further of further, until somebody said, "I know." and then it rolled and rolled, until it was a cast his hell that his straight at somebody. out hig hall that hit straight at somebody's out because somebody clas said, "I saw." and though the snowhall looked fair and hile, though there seemed nothing wrong yout it, it was a great, harrible lie. It began Ith bills goodp; it grew with silly chatter util it reached its full size, fed by scandal. here is only one way to fight a snow-hall, gain I say, Wait. Wait and live out your to honestly and truly, and the sunshine a good shods will place down upon the snowall of scandal mutil it melts away, and even sexistence is forgotten. It is true it is hard tire things down sometimes, but it is workor two ways, as by your goodness you are fix-ing down the wrong-doing of others, so by the one positions you are living up to that high-s life which ends in the g-l-len world where annialmongers can never enter.

WHEN HE IS AWAY

SHE is a girl after my own heart; she is loving and loyal. Sometime next antumn she is going to be married, but in the meantime she is in one city, and the dearest fellow in the world is in another, and she is a little bit perplexed. She says: "Because my betrothed is away, am I to refuse the merely polite attentions of every other man? Am I, by my actions, to say that my sweetheart is by my actions, to say that my sweetheart is afraid to trust me? What shall I do?" Well, first I would think it over a bit. If the so-called attentions mean calling on you, taking called attentions mean calling on you, taking you to a place of annaement when other people are along, sending you a new book, or a few flowers, I think they might be accepted, provided you tell the dearest fellow in the world. I do not think, if I were you, that I would go alone to places of amusement, that is, just with one man, and I certainty would not go out driving with him; but no matter what I did, the dearest fellow should know it right away, and there should not be a posysent me, a book about which my approval was asked, that I would not have him share. "But he is away," you say. Very well, put a recebud in the letter, and after you have read the book and marked it, send it to him, so that he may see exactly wherein you and he differ. Won't you be careful about something eise? that is, about what you write. I do not differ. Won't you be careful about something else? that is, about what you write. I do not mean that you must not write him pleasant mean that you must not write him pleasant things; I mean that you must not write him those which leave him in doubt. Black and white is cruel and hard, and the hit of coquetry permissible by the lips, which the eyes deny, looks bitter when it stands out in the colors of the magpie. And do not let anybody tell you that you need not be so careful, because you can be pretty sure the dearest fellow is doing what he pleases. People who say such things are rude and vulgar, and are simply trying to teach you to be as coarse and low-minded as they are themselves. Believe the dearest fellow to be loyal and true; let loyalty and truth govern all your actions, and even when he is away you will be the happiest little woman in the world.

YOUR TRIPS ABROAD

No matter where they may be, on the boat down to see the great ocean coming in and bringing news from the mermuids, or out in the country to look at those gossipor out in the country to look at those gossiping creatures, the buttercups stare at you so pertly, and tell the latest story about the love of the rose and lily—no matter where you may go, whenever you take your walks abroad, just notice how many people there are who are absolutely poor in fact. Notice them, decide whether you lack this great virtue, and having seen the bad example, reform. Look at the woman who, determined to get on the shady side of the boat, has moved around and around until every place is crowded, and she is exactly where the man who ought to know has told her she would be, that is, in the broiling sanishine. Look at the woman who will push her way through a crowd to be first at the gate at the station; and after she has been rude, and had herself forn and tattered, arrives there only to berself forn and tattered, arrives there only to discover that the gate will not be open for ten minutes because the train is not ready. Look at the woman who, from the beginning of her journey, wants something; first, a drink of water, then to take her controlf, then to pat it on again, then to buy a book, then to inform the world at large that the book is stupid, until she becomes a perfect hore to everybody around her. Look out for this woman, and don't imitate her. Remember that an your trips abroad you want to be the embodiment of tact, which means do not larry, but allow yourself plenty of time; which means the not talking loud, or pushing, which is vulgar, and which also means berself torn and tattered, arrives there only to ing, which is vulgar, and which also means the conducting of yourself in such a way that every memoer of your own party will consider you the real, only and original joy

THE MASCULINE FAVORITE

If you ask a man, "What is his favorite If flower," it is more than likely that he will tell you it is the violet. And if you ask him why, he will say, "It is because it is sweet of perfone, benefiful to look at, and it never seeks to be gathered. It does not stare one in the face and claim recognition like the gamby tulion it these not notk up its benefined look tulip; it does not perk up its bend and look impedent like the daisy; it does not demand your adoration like the rose, nor is it as cold looking as the Hly. It seems to me like a sweet, modest, young girl worthy to be sought

Now, that is what a man says, and if you want to get a good opinion about what girls ought and ought not to do, noise is so sincere and honest as that of a man who stops to think. A beautiful face is a great joy, but an offsetionate, lowing pature, and a quick perception, will make the most ordinary face broatiful. Think over this little story of why a man likes a violet, and them make yourself the violet among women, so that you may be worthy of the honor of a good man's love—the best thing in all this world that can come to a

WHAT YOU WANT * * TO KNOW * * *

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any question I can, sent me by my girl readers-RUTH ASHMORE.

S. 1.—A dark blue flanned wrapper is the most desir-able garment to wear in a steeping car during a long ride.

A. A. A.—A bride would have her trouvens nurked with her maiden same. She does not use that or her has bard well she tas a legal right to it.

M. E. G. and OTHERS—The kid reliers for the hoir can be gotten at almost any store where a specialty is made of the little belongings of the tellet.

BEATER: E-The only method of introducing yourself to some others is to say: "I believe I have the pleasure of speaking to Mrs. Brown—I am Miss Jones."

Two Onvicass—It is always improper to first, and girls of fine feelings would not think of putting them-selves in the positions that may result from this bable.

M. T. H.—I should advise your asking your physician. for comething that will done your blood, for that is un-doubtedly the cause of the breaking out which you describe.

LOUISE K, W.--I know nothing whatever about in-struments for shaping the test, but I do know that lengthing it very much will tend to make it smell and grow larger.

Motorra.-Common usage has made "gliber" escreed. It is pronounced alther, with the assent about even. The address should be in the law or left-hand corner of the visiting eard.

M. B.—In evening dress, a very large bouquet fastened on the corsage is not considered in good taste. It should be carried in the hand. Kid gloves are always most destroite for evening wear.

A LITTLE GREE.—A ping dog that I know bears the family name of "Pungs;" another branned "Wrinkle," while a very lagb one is catted "Lupid." Won't one of these little matter picture yes?

K.—Unless you wish it, it is not necessary to offer any refreshments on your "at bone" day, but the giving of a cup of tea and a bit of take is so general that it would seem a little odd not to offer it.

ELAINE—If the braces do not prevent your stooping, still I would continue to wear them with a positive deser-polucion that you will hold yourself up straight. Never forget this, not you will be surprised to find what good will come of it. M. M. S.—When one is not using one's kulfe and fork they should be placed across the place beside each other. Cliff you are going to spend the night with a friend, you would earry your bag in which was your own night dress and tallet belongings.

A READER-Simple suggestions for the care of the skin are given from time to time in this colonia. Bothe your eyelide in very had water, being careful not to rut them. If you can rest for an boar every day, close your eyes and let soft clothe dipped in but water be had over the life.

Ella-As your complexion is not clear, your bair brown and your eyes grey, I do not think you would be quilted a bloods. As you are a sister of the institute, there would be no impropriety in asking her to intro-duce to you seems of the young men to whem you are not acquainted.

J. J. G.—Bathing the best with cold water and then rubbing it with colve off is undoubtedly the shaple mode of development to which you refer. Ten animates rub-bing should be given every right, and this rubbing should be gentle and rost rough; it should be continued until there are evidences of its having done good.

However,—Washing your hair regularly and brushing well-every day will do much to keep it in good color, cannot answer your question, "Does love come to very girt?" There are a great many base initiations to love, and con mind burn by the use of that divining of, inscinct, to decide which is true love and which is

N. R. W.—A ten gown may be worn in one's own-house is the afternoon; and it would be quite proper to wear it in the evening if one were quite alone. A ten gown is never worn in the public rooms of a hotel, and is really only settable for the sectuation of one's own room, or the semi-pervacy of one's parior when a quiet has is being served.

CATHARINA—Options differ very much in regard to customs after a death. Personally, I think the house shrutit to made as cheerful as possible, all the must that one might wish be beard, and the living and their happiness considered first. I do not think there is any role governing the length of time that a plane should be cheed after a death.

M. C. W.—If you found that the young man had asked two others beside yourself to marry him, you did per-fectly right to break the engagement. From the tone of your letter I am afraid you are regretting your action, but if you will think what sert of a husband a man of this kind would make it is protable you will realize that you have acted in the most disculted manner and in a way best suited to your own interest.

M. E.—Put vascine on your evel-traws every night, relating it in gently with your fireflaget. I cannot advise dyeing the eye-brown, which would be the only method of making them darker, tasks busies, you used a crayen pencil, and, of cause, this would have to be applied each time after hathing your face. But only or sinawberry cream well into your handsevery night and skep in busing books, it is will lead to make them while and soft.

A. I. R.—There is no impropriety in your accepting as an except the gestileman who was visiting at your friends house when you were there, and who is known to your our people. I do not advise any of my girls to seld a man for his photograph, unless indeed, he should be her real excepteast, another I do not believe he will have to be acked. You inquire, "how shall I gain and retain a friendship?" I can outly say by being thoughtful and kind and being as battured as possible. An affected girl bears about her a possible stand of originally, and I content to absolutely object to the who affects to be anything that she is not.

